Contract—Condition precedent—Stipulation in restraint of trade—Contract Act IX of (1872), s. 27—Arbitration—Estoppel.

The plaintiffs, on the 4th August 1881, entered into a contract with the defendant, for the sale to the latter of a quantity of goods of a certain description "to be delivered up to the 31st December 1881." The plaintiffs stipulated that they would make no sales of goods of the same description to others before the 1st December 1881; and the contract contained an arbitration-clause to the effect, that, "if the buyers object to accept all or any of the goods offered to them by the sellers in fulfilment of the contract on the ground of any variance, difference from the sample or muster, inferiority in weight or quality or colour, or damage or defect or any other ground whatsoever," such objections should, in case of disagreement, be referred to two arbitrators, one to be named by the sellers, and the other by the buyers. Such arbitrators to decide "whether the buyers' objections were valid, and, if so, what allowance on the whole contract price will be a reasonably adequate compensation to the buyers for such variance, difference, inferiority, damage or [810] defect, if any, and such decision shall be final and binding on both parties." If either buyers or sellers failed "to name an arbitrator within two days after being requested by the other to do so, the decision of the arbitrators named by the buyers or sellers, as the case may be, shall be final and binding on both parties." The goods arrived in Calcutta between the 4th and 24th November 1881. On the 15th August the plaintiffs entered into other contracts with other buyers for the sale of the same description of goods at a lower price than that at which they had sold to the defendant: these contracts were on the terms that the goods were not to arrive in Calcutta until after the 31st December 1881. The defendant refused to accept the goods on the ground that the plaintiffs had committed a breach of the contract by entering into other agreements for sale of the same description of goods before the 1st December, and refused to pay the difference between the contract price and the market value which the plaintiffs demanded from him. The plaintiffs thereupon appointed an arbitrator, who (the defendant declining to appoint an arbitrator) proceeded to act in the matter, and finding that the plaintiffs had not committed a breach of the contract made an award in their favour for Rs. 850, the difference in price of the goods at the contract and market values. The plaintiffs sued to recover the amount due to them under the award, or in the alternative for Rs. 850 as damages for non-acceptance of the goods.

Held, that the defendant was not estopped by the award from setting up the breach of the stipulation not to sell other goods of the same description before the 1st December 1881 as a defence to the suit.

Per GARTH, C.J.—The question whether the plaintiffs, by making the other contracts, had committed a breach of the stipulation was not properly a subject of reference to the arbitrator under the arbitration-clause. The general words in that clause "or any other grounds whatsoever" mean any other grounds of a like character, and do not include a pure question of law.

Held also, that the stipulation itself amounted to a condition precedent to the defendant's obligation to accept the goods.

Held further, a stipulation in a contract prohibiting any sales of goods to others during a particular period, of a similar description to those bought under the contract, is not a stipulation in restraint of trade under s. 27* of Act IX of 1872.

ON the 4th August 1881, Carlisles, Nephews and Co. entered into a contract with Ricknauth Bucktearmull for the sale to the latter of 136,000 pairs of 'animal-bordered dhooties,' to be delivered up to the 31st December 1881: the important clauses of the contract were as follows:—The plaintiffs stipulated that they would make no sales of 'animal-bordered dhooties' to others before the 1st of Decem-[811]ber 1881; and that should any dispute arise between them as to certain matters, the question should be referred to arbitration. The arbitration-clauses (cls. 9 and 10) of the contract were as follows :—(9) "If the buyers object to accept all or any of the goods offered to them by the sellers in fulfilment of the contract, on the ground of any variance, difference from the sample or muster, inferiority in weight or quality or colour, or damage or defect, or any other ground whatsoever, such objections shall (in case of disagreement) be referred to the arbitration of two English persons connected with any respectable firm of this city, one to be named by the sellers and the other by the buyers, with power to appoint an umpire, who shall decide whether or not the buyers' objection is valid; and if so, what allowance on the whole contract price will be a reasonably adequate compensation to the buyers for such variance, difference, inferiority, damages or defects, if any, and such decision shall be final and binding on both parties." (10) "In the event of either sellers or buyers failing to name an arbitrator within two days after being requested so to do by the other of them, the decision of the arbitrator named by the sellers or buyers, as the case may be, shall be final and binding on both parties."

The goods arrived in Calcutta between the 4th and 24th November 1881.

On the 15th August 1881, one of the members of Carlises, Nephews, and Co. entered into four other contracts with four other buyers for the sale, in all, of 64,000 pieces 'animal-bordered dhooties' at Rs. 1-6-6, a price lower than that at which they had sold to the defendant; these contracts were on the terms that the goods were not to arrive at Calcutta until after the 31st December 1881.

On the 10th November 1881 the defendant wrote to the plaintiffs, stating that as other sales had been made by the plaintiffs to persons other than himself, in direct contravention of their contract, he declined to accept the goods and considered the contract cancelled. On the 26th January 1882, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant, informing him, that as he had refused to pay to them Rs. 850, being the difference between [812] the price at which he, the defendant, bought 136,000 pairs of animal-bordered dhooties, and the market-value of the same, they appointed Mr. John Morrison to act in the matter as their arbitrator, and called upon the defendant to name an arbitrator within two days.

The defendant declined to appoint an arbitrator, and Mr. Morrison, on behalf of the plaintiffs, proceeded with the arbitration, and found that no time for arrival was specified in the contract, and that the arrival of the goods, which took place between the 4th and 24th November, was consonant with the terms of the contract, which allowed up to the 31st December, for delivery; that, as the objection that sales had been made to others, for delivery after the present contract had expired, he found that the practice and custom in Calcutta sanctioned such a proceeding, the object of such a stipulation, that no goods should be sold to other dealers during the currency of the contract, being that the buyer should have a monopoly for the time being; and he, therefore, gave his award in favour of the plaintiffs, giving them Rs. 850 as damages, together with Rs. 32, the cost of the reference.

The plaintiffs then sued the defendant in the Calcutta Court of Small Causes to recover the amount due to them under the award, or, in the alternative, they claimed Rs. 850 as damages for breach of contract, inasmuch as the defendant had failed to take delivery of 136,000 pairs of animal-bordered dhooties, that sum being the difference in the market-rate at the time of the breach of contract and the rate at the time they were sold.

Upon the facts of the case there was no contest save as to the market-rate, but the defendant contended that the stipulation "that no other sales should be made to others before the 1st December 1881 " was a condition precedent to his being bound to accept the goods, and that, as the condition was broken by the plaintiffs, he was at liberty to rescind the contract and to refuse to take any of the dhooties.

The fourth Judge of the Small Cause Court was of opinion that the stipulation " no sales of animal-bordered dhooties to others before the 1st December 1881 " was a condition precedent, and [813] that the breach of the stipulation by the plaintiffs justified the defendant in rescinding the contract. He further was of opinion that the award was bad, the question submitted to arbitration not being one which it was contemplated by the parties should be submitted to arbitration : he therefore dismissed the plaintiffs' suit, making his judgment contingent on the opinion of the High Court on the questions of law raised, viz. : —(i) " Whether the defendant was estopped by the award from setting up the breach of the stipulation in question as a defence to this suit? (ii) whether the alleged breach affords a good answer to this suit, and whether the stipulation itself amounts to a condition precedent to the defendant's obligation to take the dhooties? (iii) whether such a stipulation as prohibits any sales of the same sort of goods being made by the plaintiffs to other persons during a particular time is a stipulation ' in restraint of trade ' within the meaning of s. 27 of the Contract Act."

Mr. Allen (Mr. Phillips with him, for the plaintiffs) contended, that the clause was not a condition precedent, and referred to Benjamin on Sales, chapter on ' Conditions,' Book 4, Part I; and Cutter v. Powell (Smith's L. C., 1). As to whether the stipulation prohibiting other sales was a stipulation in restraint of trade, he cited Gravelly v. Barnard (L., R., 18 Eq., 518), Jones v. North (L. R., 19 Eq., 426), Altman v. Royal Aquarium Society (L.R. 3 Ch. D., 228), Jones v. Heavens (L. R., 4 Ch. D., 636), Rousillon v. Rousillon (L.R., 14 Ch. D., 351), Collins v. Locke (L. R., 4 App. Cas., 674).

Mr. Hill for the defendant was not called upon.

The Opinions of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and WHITE, J.) were as follows :—

Garth, C.J.— I think that the Court below is quite right. The decision of the learned Judge appears to me to be what, I am very glad to say, his decisions almost invariably are, both good sense and sound law.

The suit is brought to recover damages from the defendant for not accepting a quantity of Manchester goods, called ' animal-bordered dhooties,' which were sold to him by the plaintiffs [814] upon certain terms, and to be delivered up to the 31st of December 1881.

The main defence to the claim is, that there was a stipulation in the contract that the plaintiffs were to make no sales ' of animal-bordered dhooties ' to others before the 1st of December 1881. It is admitted that the plaintiffs did, before the 1st of December, make sales of a large quantity of similar dhooties to other dealers, but upon the terms that the goods were not to arrive at Calcutta until after the 31st December.

The defendant contends that this stipulation was a condition precedent to his being bound to accept the goods ; and that as the condition was broken by the plaintiffs, he (the defendant) was at liberty to rescind the contract, and to refuse to take any portion of the dhooties.

The plaintiffs, on the other hand, say that the stipulation was not a condition precedent, but only a term of the contract, the breach of which (if any) might have been compensated in damages ; and they also say that there was an arbitration-clause in the contract, which provided for the settlement of questions of this kind, and that, under that clause, this question has been duly referred to an arbitrator, who has decided it against the defendant. The arbitration clause referred to is contained in cls. 9 and 10 of the contract. (After reading cls. 9 and 10, his Lordship continued):—

The point raised by the defendant as to the stipulation in question was one which the plaintiffs thought was a proper subject of reference under this arbitration-clause; and they accordingly named an arbitrator to decide it. The defendant, taking a different view, and considering that the point was not one which could be so referred, declined to name an arbitrator, and consequently the arbitrator named by the plaintiffs proceeded to decide ex parte. The point referred to him, so far as it concerned the present question, he describes as this: "Whether the plaintiffs committed a breach of the contract by selling similar goods to other dealers during the currency of the contract, and against their express stipulation not to do so."

Upon this point the arbitrator in his award says as follows:—"As to the second objection taken by the buyers, the sellers [815] admit that they sold goods for delivery after the present contract had expired. They contend, however, that the practice and custom in Calcutta sanctions such a proceeding; and my own experience confirms that view. The object of the buyer in making the stipulation that no goods will be sold to other dealers during the currency of his contract is, that he may have a monopoly for the time being, but selling for subsequent delivery in no way harms him, and I have never heard it objected to. My award must, therefore, be against the buyer on this point."

The first question, therefore, that arose in this suit, and one which is now referred to this Court by the learned Judge, is, whether the defendant was estopped by that award of the arbitrator from setting up the breach of the stipulation in question as a defence to this suit?

I am of opinion that he was not. It seems to me, in the first place, that the question was not one which was intended to be the subject of reference, and was not properly referred under the arbitration-clause. That clause appears to me to apply to a class of objections which might be raised by the buyer, which would be more especially within the province of a mercantile arbitrator to decide; as for instance, whether there was any variance between the goods delivered and the goods sold, or between the goods delivered and the sample, or whether there was any inferiority in weight or quality or colour?

It is true that the general words "or any other grounds whatsoever" are added, but I agree with the learned Judge that these words mean "any other grounds of a like character," and are not intended to embrace a pure question of law, such as arises in this case, which would be quite out of the province of a merchant, and essentially a question for a Court of Justice to decide.

One very cogent reason which induces me to take this view consists in this: We find in the latter portion of the clause, that the arbitrators, in the event of the buyer's objection to the goods being considered to be valid, "are to enquire what allowance, on the whole contract-price, would be a reasonable compensation to the buyer for such variance, difference, inferiority, damage or defect." The objections, therefore, which are intended to be the [816] subject of reference are such as, if found valid, would empower the arbitrators to make to the buyer an allowance by way of compensation. But the objection which is here made by the defendant is not one which admits of compensation. The objection, if valid, would enable the defendant, in point of law, to rescind the contract altogether. I think, therefore, that it neither comes within the letter nor the spirit of the arbitration-clause, and was not, therefore, properly made the subject of reference. But even if it had been so, I agree with the learned Judge that the arbitrator has given no decision upon the real point raised by the defendant. He says nothing as to whether the sale of the dhooties to other persons justified the defendant in rescinding the contract. He only deals with the question whether the usage of merchants in Calcutta justified the plaintiffs in making the sales, and whether the defendant was entitled to any allowance in respect of the plaintiffs' alleged breach of contract. He says that selling for subsequent delivery in no way harms the buyer, and that he never heard it objected to. But he does not decide the question, which is purely one of law, whether, what the plaintiffs did amounted to such a breach of the stipulation as enabled the latter to rescind the contract?

The defendant, therefore, not being precluded by the award from setting up the breach as a defence in this suit, we have now to consider the main point in the case,—namely, whether the alleged breach does afford a good answer to this suit; and whether the stipulation itself amounts to a condition precedent to the defendant's obligation to take the dhooties?

The learned Judge, as it seems to me, has dealt with this question very properly. The obvious meaning of the stipulation is, that the defendant, the buyer, was to have a monopoly up to certain time, so far as the plaintiffs could secure it to him, in the sale of these particular goods. In order to give him this monopoly, we must presume that the 1st of December was fixed upon by the parties as a reasonable limit within which the plaintiffs were to make no sales to other dealers; and whatever the limit was, I think it clear that the plaintiffs were bound by it. It is not a question of usage or custom in the Calcutta market; nor whether the defendant was or was not actually damaged by the [817] sales made by the plaintiffs. The question is, what do the words of the contract mean?

Mr. Allen has suggested, that the word 'sales' must mean "sales for delivery before the 1st of December"; and that a contract of sale for delivery in future is not a sale. But this is not so. A contract for the sale of goods is in itself a sale; we all know that a large proportion of such sales are for delivery in the future; and if in this instance it had been intended only to prohibit sales for delivery before the 1st of December, the contract should have said so. It seems obvious that if the plaintiffs, immediately after their contract with the defendant, had gone into the market and effected sales to other persons of a large quantity of the particular goods at a much lower price than that given by the defendant, although the delivery was not to be made until after the 1st of December, the natural result would have been, that the value of the goods would have been depreciated in the market. One can quite understand that a buyer, if he has, by a stipulation of this kind, secured a monopoly during the time that the contract is running, would be willing to give a higher price for the article than he would if he were subjected to competition; and hence we find that, in this instance, the sale to the defendant was effected at Rs. 1-7, whilst the subsequent sales to other persons were at Rs. 1-6-6.

Then, as to the question whether the stipulation made by the plaintiffs was a condition precedent to the performance of the contract by the defendant, there are certain rules laid down in the notes to Cutter v. Powell (2 Smith's L. C., at p. 13, 6th edition), which will, generally speaking, be found pretty sure guides in solving such questions. Where a promise made by one party to a contract goes to or affects the whole consideration moving to the other party, or to adopt the language of Justice BLACKBURN, "where it goes to the root of the matter, so that a failure to perform it by the one party would render the performance of the rest of the contract by that party a thing different in substance from what the other party has stipulated for," then the promise by the one party is a condition precedent to the performance by the other party; but where it only partially affects it, and may be compensated in damages, [818] there it is not a condition precedent— see Bellini v. Gipe (L. R., 1 Q. B. D., 183), Graves v. Stegg (9 Exch., at p. 761), per Baron Parke.

Now applying that rule to the present case, is the breach of the stipulation in question one which affects the whole consideration moving to the defendant? It seems to me that it is. It does not affect the price of any particular bale or bales, or any particular part of the plaintiffs' contract. The stipulation is intended to protect the buyer's whole interest in the goods which he has bought, and the breach of it is calculated to affect the value to the buyer of the whole of those goods.

I was at first under the impression that a part of this contract had been fulfilled before the sales to other people had been made. But I find that this was not so. Even if it had been, the result would have been the same; because the breach of the condition would have had the effect of deteriorating the value of the whole of the goods which at the time of the breach remained undelivered.

An instance of this occurred in the case of Withers v. Reynolds (2 B. and Ad., 882), where the defendant had agreed to deliver to the plaintiff certain loads of straw every month upon condition that each load was to be paid for on delivery. Some of the loads had actually been delivered and paid for; but upon further loads being delivered, the plaintiff, the buyer, said that he would not pay for them on delivery; upon which the Court held, that the defendant was justified in rescinding the contract and refusing to deliver any more loads. The payment on delivery was a stipulation which affected the whole of the seller's interest in the contract, or, at any rate, his whole interest in the unfulfilled portion of it.

The only remaining point to be considered is one which was not taken by counsel for the plaintiffs in the Court below, but appears to have been suggested by the learned Judge himself. It arises under s. 27 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872); and the question is, whether such a stipulation as this, which prohibits any sales being made by the plaintiffs of goods of this description to other persons during a particular time, is a [819] stipulation in restraint of trade within the meaning of that section. Mr. Allen has referred us to a case decided by the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice PONTIFEX—Madhub Chunder Poramanick v. Raj Coomar Dass (14 B. L. R., 76). This case was of a very peculiar character; but assuming that case to have been well decided, we think it has no application to the present. The language of s. 27 is no doubt somewhat general and unsatisfactory; but I am clearly of opinion that it was never intended to prohibit such a stipulation as that with which we are now dealing in contracts for the sale of goods. If we were to hold that it did, I think we should not only be stultifying ourselves, but the Legislature who passed the Act.

In my opinion, the learned Judge was quite right in dismissing the suit; and I think that the plaintiffs should pay the costs of this reference.

White, J.—I entirely agree with what has fallen from my Lord on all the three points which are raised in this reference. I also agree that the judgment of the Small Cause Court should be affirmed with costs.

Suit dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 29th March, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE WHITE AND MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.

Jibunti Nath Khan and others.....Defendants

Shib Nath Chuckerbutty.....Plaintiff.*

Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877), s. 43—Splitting remedies—

Suit for declaration of title and for possession—

Subsequent suit for possession.

Where a previous suit for a declaration of title and confirmation of possession of certain land has been dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff was not in possession at the time of filing the suit, a subsequent suit on the same [820] title for recovery of possession of the land is not barred under s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonissa Begum (11 Moore's I. A., 551) discussed.

THIS was a suit brought by one Shib Nath Chuckerbutty through his mother and guardian, Mrinmoyi Debia, for the purpose of recovering possession of the estate of one Promotho Nath Sannyal, whose heir he claimed to be. His mother, Mrinmoyi, claims to be a step-sister of Prosunno Nath Sannyal who was the father of Promotho Nath Sannyal. It was not disputed that if Mrinmoyi was the step-sister of Promotho Nath's father, the infant plaintiff as her son was entitled to succeed. The disputed question on the merits was whether Mrinmoyi was in fact the step-sister of Prosunno Nath.

The plaint alleged that Mrinmoyi was the daughter of one Shibu Soondry, who was one of the five or six wives of Raghu Nath Sannyal, the father of Prosunno Nath. The defendants, on the other hand, alleged that she was the daughter of one Haradhono Sannyal who was the uewan or principal officer in the service of Raghu Nath Sannyal ; and that, having lost her own mother, she was taken charge of by Shibu Soondry and brought up as her foster-daughter.

It appeared from the evidence that, on the 25th January 1879, a previous suit against the same parties had been instituted by the minor, by his mother and next friend, in which he alleged that he was entitled to and had succeeded to the properties left by Prosunno Nath, as heir to the latter ; that he had always remained in possession of the said properties, and he had claimed a declaratory decree, with further and other relief. That previous suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the plaintiff not being in possession was not entitled to a declaratory decree, as he should have instituted a suit for the recovery of the land. The present suit was thereupon instituted, when the defendants contended that the suit was barred under s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure as res judicata. The Subordinate Judge overruled the objection and having found for the plaintiff on the merits, decreed the claim with costs. The defendants appealed.

[821] Mr. Evans, Mr. P. O'Kinealy, Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Grija Sunker Mozoomdar for the Appellants.

Mr. Evans.—This case is barred under s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff sued previously for a declaratory decree only, when he should have sued not merely for a declaratory decree, but also for recovery of possession, for it was found by the Judge that he was not in possession, and never had been. The case of Kalidhun Chuttapadhya v. Shiba Nath Chuttapadhya (ante, p. 483) does not apply, as that was decided under Act VIII of 1859. At the time the previous suit was instituted, the plaintiff could have claimed and was entitled to all the remedies he claims at present, and he omitted to sue for them; he cannot, therefore, bring the present suit. Whether the omission was accidental or voluntary makes no difference—Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (11 Moore's I. A., 551).

Mr. H. Bell, Baboo Sreenath Dass, and Baboo Gurudass Banerjee for the Respondent were not called upon.

The Judgment of the Court (WHITE and MACPHERSON, JJ.), was delivered by White, J. (who, having stated the facts and reviewed the evidence, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's case on the merits had been clearly proved. His Lordship then continued):—But it has been argued for the defendants that the suit is barred by the third clause of s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code, which prohibits the splitting of remedies. This clause apparently introduces a new provision into the Code. It is not to be found in the Original Procedure Code of 1859, the 7th section of which prohibited the splitting of claims, but contains no provision, or at any rate no express provision, against the splitting of remedies. The circumstances under which it is sought to raise this defence are these:—On the 25th January 1879, the present plaintiff, through his mother, brought against the present defendants a suit, in which, claiming under the same title to succeed to Promotho Nath's property, he prayed only for a declaration that he was the heir to that property. The plaint alleged that [822] the property was then in the possession of the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge took no evidence on the question of possession, but in consequence of certain proceedings that had been previously had between the parties under s. 530 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and under the Land Registration Act (Beng. Act VII of 1876), which he held to be conclusive as to the fact of possession, the Subordinate Judge decided that the plaintiff was not in possession, and that the possession was in certain parties under whom the defendants claimed. Accordingly, under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, which provides that no Court shall make a declaratory decree "where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so," the Subordinate Judge held, that he had no jurisdiction, or at all events no discretion, to grant the declaratory decree demanded, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The present suit is to recover the possession of the same lands as are mentioned in the former suit. In deciding the question whether this suit is barred by the former suit, we must see if the cause of action is the same in both suits. A cause of action consists of the circumstances and facts, which are alleged by the plaintiff to exist and which, if proved, will entitle him to the relief, or to some part of the relief, prayed for, and is to be sought for within the four corners of the plaint. The allegations in the plaint in the former suit were the death of Promotho Nath, the alleged heirship of the plaintiff to his estate, the possession by the plaintiff of that estate, and the proceedings under the Criminal Code had in the Registration Court which threatened to result in a disturbance by the defendants of the rights enjoyed by the plaintiff. These constituted the cause of action in that suit, and the relief asked for was a decree declaring the plaintiff's title as heir, the effect of which would have been to quiet him in the possession of his estate. Upon such a cause of action a declaratory decree was the only remedy he could sue for. How then can it be said that he omitted to sue for any remedy in respect of that cause of action when he was entitled to no other?

In the present suit, although the plaintiff sets forth the same title, he complains that the defendants, and those through whom they claim, have, on the strength of the proceedings under the [823] Criminal Procedure Code and the Registration Act, sued and obtained decrees against some of the tenants of the estate, and that there has consequently been an active disturbance of his possession, which entitles him to pray for a decree which shall not only declare his title but also award him possession. The cause of action in the present suit is, in our opinion, distinct from that in the first suit. We have been referred by the defendants' counsel to the case of Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (11 Moore's I. A., 551); but we think that case supports our view as to what is and what is not the same cause of action. The Privy Council were there dealing with s. 7 of the Code of 1859, which prohibited the splitting of claims. Their Lordships say, "the correct test in all cases of this kind is, whether the claim in the new suit is, in fact, founded on a cause of action distinct from that which was the foundation of the former suit, and they have accordingly considered whether the present suit can be maintained on that ground. But the cause of action in the former suit of the respondent seems to them to be the refusal by the husband to restore, or his misappropriation of, the wife's property, which she says he entrusted to him. There is nothing to distinguish the deposit of this particular Company's paper from the deposit of those which she deposited with it, and has recovered in the former suit. It was a mere item of her demand, and is admitted on the face of her present plaint to have been omitted from it for no other reason than the very insufficient one before mentioned. If she was justified in instituting a separate subsequent suit for this particular Company's paper for Rs. 10,000, she would have been equally justified in making each one of the Company's papers, which are comprised in the 'property suit,' successively the subject of an independent suit."

But Mr. Evans contends that the Court must not confine itself to the claim made in the two suits in judging whether the 43rd section of the Code has been infringed, but ought to travel outside the statements contained in the plaint and see how the facts stood upon the finding of the Court in the first suit. The argument is this, that, inasmuch as the cardinal allegation [824] was disproved upon which was grounded the plaintiff's title to the limited relief prayed in his first suit, and inasmuch as the Subordinate Judge held the plaintiff not to be in possession at that date, it follows that the plaintiff ought, in his first suit, to have brought a suit praying not only for a declaration of title but also for an award of possession, and that not having done so he has split his remedies. I cannot agree that this is the correct test. The question to be determined turns not upon what was the proper suit for the plaintiff to have brought, or the proper remedies for him to have applied upon having regard to the facts as found upon the trial of the first suit, but upon whether the causes of action in the two suits are one and the same, or are distinct.

It is contended that, in the case of Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoon-nissa Begum (11 Moore's I. A., 551), their Lordships, in deciding that the plaintiff had omitted in her first suit a portion of his claim, founded their judgment upon the evidence in the suits and not upon the facts alleged in the pleadings. But this does not appear to be so. The omission of a portion of the claim from the first suit became apparent from comparing together the complaints in the two suits. It was then perceived that the causes of action in the two suits were the same, and that the Government paper sought to be recovered in the second suit was merely an item omitted from the plaintiff's demand in the first suit. Furthermore, the fact of the omission was expressly stated in the body of the second complaint, but sought to be excused on a ground which was held to be untenable.

On the whole, we are of opinion that there has been no splitting of remedies in this case within the meaning of s. 43 of the new Code of Procedure, and that this suit is not barred in consequence.

I must say for myself that I am exceedingly glad that we are able to come to this conclusion. Possession is a question which from its nature would seem to be very easily determinable; but in practice it is found to be one of the most difficult issues to decide in this country where great facilities are afforded to litigants of procuring perjured testimony, and [825] where, in the case of lands under lease or in the occupation of ryots, it is a common occurrence for the lessees or ryots to become the partisans of one or other of the rival claimants, and sometimes to avail themselves of the dispute to combine and withhold their rents. In the case before us, if we had felt ourselves obliged to yield to the objection that this suit was barred, the infant plaintiff, whom upon the merits we find to be the heir and entitled to succeed to Promotho Nath Sannyal's property, would have been positively excluded from his inheritance without any judicial enquiry as to his title having been held; and I may also add, without any proper enquiry having been made in the first suit as to which of the rival claimants was at its date in possession of the estate. We affirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTE.—This decision was followed in the case of Komola Kaminj Debia v. Lokenath Kur (appeal from appellate decree, No. 1867 of 1880), decided by CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ., on the 2nd of May 1882. The judgment is as follows:—'The plaintiff in this case sues to establish his right to, and to be placed in possession of, a half share in a zamindari, of which he says that he has been dispossessed by the first defendant, who, on the ground that it belonged to his judgment-debtors, the second and third defendants, attached and put it up to sale and purchased it himself on the 15th March 1877. Learning of the intended sale a few days before it took place, the plaintiff objected, but his claim was disallowed as filed too late. The plaintiff then brought a suit, No. 138 of 1878, for confirmation of possession, but it being found that the first defendant had obtained possession from the Executing Court, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed on the 27th of August 1878.

The question raised in special appeal is, whether the plaintiff's present suit is barred by his former declaratory suit, No. 138 of 1878.

In that suit no decision on the merits was given. It was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff was not in possession, and that, therefore, his action, in the form in which it was then brought, was not maintainable. It is now urged that as he was, when he brought his first suit, entitled to the remedy which he now seeks to enforce, and chose to omit to sue for it, he cannot now sue for it under s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. We concur in the view taken by the Courts below that the present case does not fall within s. 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure: there was not any intentional and voluntary [826] abandonment by the plaintiff of any portion of his claim or of any remedy to which he was entitled. He believed himself to be in possession, and as to this the Court found against him, and, without considering the merits of the case, held, that it was precluded by s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act from entertaining the suit. That section enacts, that "no Court shall make a declaratory decree where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so"; and the Court, accordingly finding that the plaintiff might have asked to be put in possession of the property, refused to make a declaratory decree of his right. This refusal to allow the plaintiff to sue in the form in which his plaint was then couched, was not in any way such an adjudication as would, under s. 13, preclude a subsequent suit; nor do we consider that it could have the effect, under s. 43, of barring a subsequent suit for possession.

This view of the meaning of the section we find to be in accordance with that taken by a Division Bench of this Court in Jibanti Nath Khan v. Shib Nath Chuckerbutty (ante, p. 819), lately decided by WHITE and MACPHERSON, JJ. In the case of Kalidhan Chuttapadhya v. Shib Nath Chuttapadhya (ante, p. 483), the question was, whether a person who, being in a position to ask for a declaration of right and immediate consequential relief, asks for and obtains a declaration of right only, can afterwards sue for the consequential relief which he might have obtained in the former suit. This question cannot arise under the present law, as s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act forbids such a suit; but we cannot think that where a plaintiff, mistakenly believing himself to be in possession, sues merely for a declaratory decree, and where, in accordance with this rule, the Court finding him not to be in possession dismisses his suit on this ground, without any inquiry into his rights, he is precluded from subsequently suing for his entire cause of action. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

The 4th April, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Hakim Khan.....Plaintiff

Gool Khan and others.....Defendants.*

Mahomedan law—Joint Mahomedan family—Joint acquisition—Presumption.

When the members of a Mahomaden family live in commensality, they do not form a 'joint family' in the sense in which that expression is used with regard to Hindus; and in Mahomedan law there is not, as there is in Hindu law, [827] any presumption that the acquisitions of the several members are made for the benefit of the family jointly.

Abraham v. Abraham (9 Moore's I. A., 195) and Jowala Buksh v. Dharum Sing (10 Moore's I. A., 511) cited. Rupchand Chowdhry v. Latu Chowdhry (3 C. L. R., 97) doubted.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1049 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Kristo Mohun Mookerjee, Second Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganas, dated the 22nd March 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Dwarkanath Mitter, Munsif of Sealda, dated the 27th June 1879.

THE judgment appealed from was as follows:—"The plaintiff and the defendants are three brothers. The plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of a one-third share of a house at Gora-bazar in Dum-Dum, and a tank in Italgacha, on the allegation that they were the joint property of the brothers. The defendant Kassim Khan supported the plaintiff's case. Gool Khan pleaded limitation, and contended that he acquired the properties with his own funds after separation from his brothers in 1260 (1853). The Court below has thrown out the case on the point of limitation and the question of title. Upon the evidence on the record, I am of opinion that the Court below is wrong in holding that the properties in suit were acquired by Gool Khan alone after separation from his brothers in 1260 (1853). In one part of its judgment the Court below was bound to opine 'that Hakim Khan and Kassim Khan were most likely connected with the karbar in early days.' If that were so, the land on which the house is situated was purchased soon after the commencement of the karbar, and the first storey was built thereon for carrying it on. This appeal has been transferred to this Court for the purpose of hearing it along with the original case of this Court (No. 118 of 1878). I have held in my decision of the original case that the brothers lived in the same mess up to 1271 (1864), and their mother died in 1268 (1861). Upon the evidence on the record of the appeal case, I cannot but come to the same conclusion. The Court below is wrong in holding that the parties being Mahomedans, the presumption of the Hindu law in favour of joint acquisition and joint family does not arise in this case. This opinion is in direct contravention with the Privy Council case of Abraham v. Abraham (9 Moore's L. A., 195), which has been followed by the High Court in the case of Rupchand Chowdhry v. Latu Chowdhry (3 C. L. R., 97). It is now settled law that when Mahomedans live in the Hindu country, [828] the presumption of joint family arising from commensality would, under the circumstances of the case, arise, and the onus of proof would lie upon the defendants to prove separate acquisition. It appears that the brothers lived in the same mess; they had some income of the ancestral joint property which served as a nucleus, and the karbar, which improved their position in life, was joint. Under such circumstances the plaintiff is under the cover of the presumption, and the onus lay on the defendants to rebut it; but to my mind they have not satisfactorily discharged it. There is no doubt in my mind that the first storey of the house was built during commensality with the joint funds. The second storey might have been erected by Gool Khan alone after separation. But this won't further his case. An addition made to a joint property partakes of the nature of a joint estate—Vellai Mira Ravuttan v. Mira Mordin Ravuttan (2 Mad. H. C. Rep., 414). For the above reasons I dissent from the finding arrived at by the Court below on the question of title. On the question of limitation, however, the defendants are entitled to succeed." The learned Judge, having discussed the latter question, dismissed the appeal with costs. The plaintiff appealed, and the defendants filed a cross-appeal under the provisions of s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Mr. Bell (with him Baboo Rashbehary (ghose) for the Appellant.

Mr. Ameer Ali (with him Moonshee Serajul Islam) for the Respondents.

Mr. Bell.—The Subordinate Judge has clearly held that the properties in dispute were acquired with joint funds. A Mahomedan family living in commensality is subject to the same rules as a Hindu family—Rupchand Chowdhry v. Latu Chowdhry (3 C. L. R., 97). Limitation, therefore, does not bar the plaintiff's claim. The member of a joint family ought to be treated on the same basis as a partner under the English law—Lindley on Partnership, vol. i, p. 642.

[829] Mr. Ameer Ali for the respondents contended, that the case of Rupchand Chowdhry v. Latu Chowdhry (3 C.L. R., 97), being between mugs, had no application to Mahomedans. Besides, that case was decided on the basis of Abraham v. Abraham (9 Moore's I. A., 195); but Abraham v. Abraham (9 Moore's I. A., 195) certainly did not decide anything of the kind, and, Jawala Buksh v. Dharum Singh (10 Moore's I. A., 511) is a direct authority against it. This being so, and the Courts below, having concurrently held that the plaintiff was not in possession within twelve years, the suit is barred.

Baboo Rashbehary Ghose in reply.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by O'Kinealy, J.—In this case the plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, sued for possession of property which he said formed part of a joint family property. The defendants denied the title of the plaintiff, and asserted that the plaintiff's claim was barred by the law of limitation. In the first Court, the Munsif, it seems to us, dealt with the case on a proper basis. He said:—"It must be borne in mind that the parties to the case are Mahomedans, and the presumption of Hindu law in favour of joint acquisition and joint family does not arise in this case." He, therefore, proceeded to deal with the case as a case of partnership between ordinary individuals not subject to Hindu laws and customs, and he dismissed the suit both in regard to the question of title and the point of limitation. In appeal the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the lower Court was wrong, and applying the principles of Hindu law relating to joint families to the case, he decided that, inasmuch as the members of the family lived in commensality they formed a joint family, and the property which forms the subject of the present suit must be presumed to form a portion of the joint property.

Now it seems to us that the Subordinate Judge, in dealing with this question, was, undoubtedly, influenced by the case of [830] Rupchand Chowdhry v. Latu Chowdhry (3 C. L. R., 97), in which it has been laid down as settled law that, with Mahomedans living in a Hindu country, the presumption of joint family and commensality arises. In that case it does not appear that the Judges had their attention drawn to the case of Jowala Buksh v. Dhara Sing (10 Moore's I. A., 511, at p. 538), in which their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, referring to the case of Abraham v. Abraham, (9 Moore's I. A. 195), said:—"Whether it is competent for a family converted from the Hindu to the Mahomedan faith to retain for several generations Hindu usages and customs, and by virtue of that retention to set up for itself a special and customary law of inheritance, is a question, which so far as their Lordships are aware, has never been decided. It is not absolutely necessary for the determination of this appeal to decide this question in the negative, and their Lordships abstain from doing so. They must, however, observe that, to control the general law— if, indeed, the Mahomedan law admits of such control—much stronger proof of special usage would be required than has been given in this case." As in that case, so in this, it is not absolutely necessary for us to decide whether the Mahomedan law of inheritance can be controlled by the usages of the country in which the individual may happen to reside, but the present inclination of our minds is, that if it were necessary to decide that point, we should feel some difficulty in following the case of Rupchand Chowdhry v. Latu Chowdhry (3 C. L. R., 97).

The Mahomedan law of inheritance is based on Sura-i-Nissa in the Koran, which was revealed in order to abrogate the customs of the Arabs, and on the Hadis or traditions of the Prophet. According to the principles of Mahomedan law any attempt to repudiate the law of the Koran would amount to a declaration of infidelity, such as would render the individual concerned liable to civil punishment by the Kazee in this world, and to eternal punishment in the next.

No custom opposed to the ordinary law of inheritance, which was created to destroy custom, would be recognized by the Doctors of the Mahomedan law, and in our opinion it follows [831] as a natural consequence, that no such custom should be recognized by our Courts which are bound by express enactment to administer Mahomedan law in questions of inheritance among Mahomedans.

In this case the Subordinate Judge has, we think, erred in deciding the question of title according to the principles of Hindu law, and so far as he has set aside the decision of the lower Court, we are compelled to reverse his judgment. On this point the decision of the first Court will stand. But in regard to the question of limitation there has been, we find, a concurrent finding of both Courts, and we see no reason to set it aside. We affirm the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTE.—The question as to the presumption of joint family relations amongst Mahomedans was also raised in the case of Jaker Ali Chowdhry v. Rajchunder Sen (Reg. Ap., No. 261 of 1879) decided by McDONELL and FIELD, JJ., on the 27th of February 1882. In delivering the judgment of the Court, Mr. Justice FIELD made the following observation: "The appellant's vakeel, in one part of his argument, contended, that the brothers Mahomed Daim and Asmutoolah lived together in coparcenary; and he further contended that the presumption of the Hindu law, that all property acquired by members of a coparcenary must be presumed to have belonged to the family jointly, although such property may stand in the names of individual members of the family, ought to be held to apply to this case. In support of this contention the case of Abraham v. Abraham (9 Moore's L. A., 195) has been relied upon, and the appellant's vakeel has contended that the effect of that decision is, that persons of a different religion, while retaining such religion, may, by custom or by themselves adopting the Hindu law, be governed by that law in all its essential particulars. In the present case we think that there is not proof of any custom applicable either to the Mahomedans of Chittagong generally, or to this particular family. Then assuming, for argument's sake, that a Mahomedan can, without changing his religion, adopt that part of Hindu law which regulates the acquisition and enjoyment of property, we think there is no proof that this has been done in the present instance. We may further observe that the case of Abraham v. Abraham (9 Moore's L. A., 195) is not, in our opinion, an authority for the position contended for. In that case the individual concerned was formerly a Hindu, and the question was whether, in adopting the Christian religion, he had cast off so much of the Hindu law as applied to the acquisition and enjoyment of the property. In dealing with that question their Lordships of the Privy Council made certain general observations, the purport of those observations being that a Hindu may, while adopting a new religion, retain so much of the Hindu law as governs his temporal affairs; but we do not think that their Lordships of the Privy Council ever intended to give sanction to the other proposition, that an individual may, while retaining his own religion, adopt so much of a system of law governing another class as applies to temporal concerns only. In the present case we think that the general statement of witnesses that all the members of this particular family lived jointly and in commensality is not enough to introduce into a Mahomedan family a parcenership which, as their Lordships say in the case of Abraham v. Abraham (9 Moore's L. A., 195), "as expressing the rights and obligations growing out of the status of an undivided family, is the creature of, and must be governed by, the Hindu law." From the mere fact, if proved, of Mahomedans living in t c same bari, or family-dwelling, and messing together, it appears to us that no presumption arises that property standing in the name or names of an individual member or members of that family is joint in the sense in which this term is used in Hindu law.

[832] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th April, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE WHITE AND MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.

Aubinash Chunder Mookerjee.....Plaintiff

Appeal—Second Appeal—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 588, 622.

After a decree had been made ex parte, the defendant applied to have it set aside. The Subordinate Judge refused the application, but his order was reversed by the District Judge.

Held, that the order of the District Judge was final under s. 588, and that no second appeal would lie: nor would the Court interfere under s. 622 of the Code.

Baboo Bhoirub Chunder Banerjee for the Appellant.

Mr. McNair for the Respondent.

White, J.—This is a second appeal against an order of the [833] Judge, reversing an order of the Subordinate Judge refusing to set aside an ex parte decree, which the latter Judge had passed against the respondent. The decree was, undoubtedly, made by the Subordinate Judge ex parte in the sense that he decided the case solely upon the evidence produced on the part of the plaintiff and without any cross-examination by the defendant. The fact that the defendant came into Court shortly before the case was closed and had some conversation with the Subordinate Judge, not indeed with reference to the merits of the case, but simply as to whether he was in time or not for putting in a defence, does not prevent the decree from being an ex parte one. The application by the defendant was made under s. 108 of the Code on the ground that he was prevented from appearing at the commencement of the trial by some sufficient cause. The Subordinate Judge, holding the cause to be insufficient, refused to set aside the decree, and dismissed the application.

* Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 311 of 1881, against the order of W. E. Ward, Esq., Judge of Assam Valley District, dated the 13th of August 1881, reversing the order of Colonel A. K. Comber, Deputy Commissioner and Subordinate Judge of Tezporo, dated the 30th April 1881.

The District Judge, in reversing the order of the Subordinate Judge, has done so on the ground that the circumstances connected with the appearance of the defendant in Court were such that the Subordinate Judge ought not to have proceeded to pass an ex parte decree. The Judge has mainly come to that conclusion by putting a different interpretation upon the conversation which took place between the defendant and the Subordinate Judge, before the decree was passed, from that put by the Subordinate Judge himself. It is true that the Judge does not expressly reverse the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the defendant showed no sufficient cause for not appearing when the suit was called on for trial. But it is unnecessary for us to pursue the matter further, as we are of opinion that no second appeal lies against the order made by the Judge. His order is final by virtue of s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code.

We also think that there is no want of jurisdiction or excess of jurisdiction on the part of the Judge, nor is there any such irregularity as would induce us to interfere with his order under s. 622 of the Code. We make these observations, because it has been suggested on behalf of the plaintiff, that even if he had not a right of second appeal, he might succeed on an application [834] under s. 622, and if so, that the present second appeal might be converted into or treated as if it were an application under that section.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th April, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE BOSE.

Bhadeswar Chowdhry and others.....Plaintiffs

Gaurikant Nath.....Defendant.

Jurisdiction—Under-valuation of suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 57—Return of plaint—Dismissal of suit.

A Munsif, after hearing the evidence on both sides, found that the suit had been undervalued ; but, instead of returning the plaint under s. 57 of Act X of 1877, he dismissed the suit. Held, that the provisions of s. 57 were imperative, and might be put into force at any stage of the hearing ; and that such dismissal of the suit was a matter which affected the merits of the case, and formed a proper subject for an appeal.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree. No. 1077 of 1880, against the decree of A. C. Campbell, Esq., Deputy Commissioner and Subordinate Judge of Goalpara, dated the 22nd March 1880, affirming the decree of H. H. Metcalfe, Esq., Extra Assistant Commissioner and Munsif of Goalpara, dated the 8th November 1879.

THIS was a suit brought to recover possession of six cottas of bastu land from the defendant, who, the plaintiffs alleged, had taken possession of the same without their permission. The property was valued at Rs. 700.

The defendant, amongst other things, contended that the land was mokurari istemrari, and that the value of the land was understated, and that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

The Extra Assistant Commissioner, vested with the powers of a Munsif, after hearing the evidence, found that the property had been undervalued, and held, that as the issues had been fixed, and the evidence on both sides closed, he could not return the plaint to the plaintiffs under s. 57 of the Code; but that he was bound to dismiss the plaintiffs' suit.

[835] The plaintiffs appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who affirmed the decision of the lower Court.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Bahoo Durga Mohun Doss for the Appellants.

Bahoo Amarendra Nath Chatterjee for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and BOSE, J.) was delivered by Garth, C. J. In this case, an objection that was made in the Court below by the defendant was that the property was undervalued, and that, consequently, the plaintiffs had brought their suit in the wrong Court. That question was gone into by the first Court, which found that the property was undervalued, and that, consequently, the suit should be dismissed.

Upon that the plaintiffs appealed, apparently upon the ground that the finding of the first Court was wrong upon the question of valuation. That was a point which, of course, went to the merits of the question. But they also contended that the first Court, finding as it did, ought not to have dismissed the suit altogether; but should, under s. 57 of the Code of Civil Procedure, have returned the plaint to the plaintiffs to be presented to the proper Court.

The lower Appellate Court found, that the first Court was right in saying that the suit was undervalued; and the Subordinate Judge also held, that the lower Court was right upon the other point,—viz., in dismissing the suit and not returning the plaint. Both Courts seem to have thus decided upon the ground, that, according to the proper construction of s. 57, a plaint cannot be returned to the plaintiff after the defendant has been called upon to state his case. That is as much as to say, that a plaint cannot be returned to the plaintiff under that section after the defendant's written statement has been put in.

We think that, in this respect, the lower Court's were clearly wrong; s. 57 says nothing of the kind; and the good sense and reason of the matter is certainly against that view.

[836] Any objection upon the ground of valuation would naturally come from the defendant. The objection would not appear upon the face of the plaint itself; and the Court would have no means of knowing whether the suit is undervalued or not until the objection had been pointed out in the defendant's written statement.

If, therefore, the Courts below were right in the view which they have taken, the provision in s. 57 for returning the plaint to the plaintiff would be virtually useless.

We think, therefore, that the plaintiffs were perfectly justified in coming to this Court to have the matter set right.

I had at first, I confess, some doubt whether the question was one affecting the merits of the case; but I think it is, because, as regards limitation, it might affect the plaintiffs' rights very materially, whether they had their plaint returned to them or are compelled to bring a fresh suit.

Moreover, the provisions of s. 57 seem to be imperative. The words are —“ the plaint shall be returned to be presented to the proper Court.” The section, therefore, leaves the Court no option; and if, instead of returning the plaint, the Court dismisses the suit by its decree, that is undoubtedly a matter which affects the merits of the case, and becomes the proper subject of an appeal.

We think, therefore, that the case must go back to the first Court in order that the plaint may be returned by that Court to the plaintiffs; and we also think, that the plaintiffs ought to have their costs in this Court. In the Court below we leave the order as to the costs as it was, as we find that the Court has given no costs to either party.

Appeal allowed, and case remanded.

Special Appeal - Revisional jurisdiction - Death of sole defendant —

Survival of cause of action - Legal representative - Limitation —

Act (XV of 1877) sched. ii, cls. 171 B, 178.

In a suit for the recovery of land against a sole defendant, the latter died before the hearing. Sixty-three days after the death of the defendant, the plaintiff applied to the Court to enter on the record the legal representative of the deceased defendant. On the 22nd of November 1880, the Court rejected the application under the provisions of Act XV of 1877,

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 350 of 1881, against the orders of Baboo Amirtollah Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Nudden, dated the 22nd of November 1880 and 20th of September 1881.

sched. ii, cl. 171B, and ordered the suit to abate. On the same day the plaintiff applied to the Court to set aside the order directing the suit to abate, but this application was also rejected on the 20th of September 1881. On appeal to the High Court—

Held, that no appeal lay against the order of the 20th of September 1881, and that an appeal against the order of the 22nd of November 1880 was out of time; but that the High Court would take cognizance of the case under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Held also, that the application which was rejected on the 22nd of November 1880 was an application under s. 372, and not under s. 368 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the applicant was entitled to make the application within three years, as allowed by Act XV of 1877, sched. ii, cl. 178.

THIS was a suit in ejectment for the recovery of land. The sole defendant died on the 5th September 1880, before decree, and the plaintiff, on the 8th November 1880, applied to have the name of his legal representative entered on the record. Upon that application the Judge of the Court below, treating the application as one under s. 368 of the Civil Procedure Code, as amended by Act XII of 1879, held, that it was out of time under [838] art. 171B of sched. ii of the Limitation Act; and, on the 22nd November 1880, made an order that the suit should abate.

On the same day the plaintiff applied that the preceding order should be set aside; and on this application the Judge, on the 20th September 1881 delivered the following judgment:—"The present applicant brought a suit in forma pauperis against one Radha Madhab Dey Chowdhry. Pending the suit Radha Madhab died, but the right to sue survived against his legal representatives. More than sixty days after the date of his death, plaintiff made an application to the Court specifying the name, description, and place of abode of the present opposite parties, alleging them to be the legal representatives of the deceased, and asking the Court to make them defendants in the place of the deceased. The Court refused this application, because it was not made within the period of sixty days as prescribed for it by art. 171B of the Indian Limitation Act, and ordered that the suit should abate. The plaintiff then made the present application for an order to set aside the order for abatement, on the ground that she was prevented by a sufficient cause from continuing the suit. The opposite party questioned the sufficiency of the cause set forth in the plaintiff's application, as also the competency of the plaintiff to come in under s. 371 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the question whether the present applicant was prevented by a sufficient cause from filing the application within the period of sixty days from the date of Radha Madhab's death, I am satisfied upon the evidence that she was. But upon the other question, however much I may regret the result, I agree that the present application cannot be entertained under s. 371 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section only enables the person claiming to be the legal representative of the deceased, &c., and the plaintiff to apply for such an order. It does not enable the plaintiff to make an application like the present, in a case where the defendant is dead and the plaintiff is prevented by a sufficient cause from continuing the suit. The express mention of the one case in s. 371 of the Code implies the exclusion of the other case. I tried to bring the present case within the provisions of s. 623 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but I failed, because when the order for abatement was made [839] the present plaintiff was aware of all the facts which she now alleges as her ground for not making the application earlier. In the present case there was no discovery of new matter or evidence, which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within her knowledge, or could not be produced at the time when the order for abatement was made. Act VIII of 1880, which makes an amendment in art. 171A of the Indian Limitation Act, makes no amendment in art. 171B, which relates to the present case. I was much pressed with the argument that an extension of time was the more needed in the case of the death of a defendant than in that of the death of a plaintiff, and I see that the argument has much force, for the defendant may be residing at a place some thousand miles off from the place where the plaintiff resides, and the news of the former's death may not, in many cases, reach the latter within sixty days from the date of his death. It will indeed be very hard for the plaintiff if, in such a case, he has no remedy. But as I find s. 171B of the Indian Limitation Act and s. 371 of the Code of Civil Procedure stand, I cannot grant the application. Seeing that I cannot grant the application, I must reject it; but I must reject it under the circumstances of the case without costs."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court on the following grounds :—

(i) that the suit having been commenced before Act XII of 1879 was passed, the learned Subordinate Judge erred in applying the provisions of the said Act as to procedure and limitation to the present case; (ii) that the application for making the representatives defendants in place of the deceased Radha Madhab, having been made on the 8th November 1880, i.e., before the day fixed for final hearing, the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in directing, on the 22nd November 1880, that the suit should abate; (iii) that the Subordinate Judge had erred in holding that the provisions of s. 371 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply to the case of an order for abatement under s. 368 of the Code; (iv) that, having found that there was sufficient cause preventing the plaintiff from making the application for substitution within sixty days, the Court below should have set aside the order that the suit should abate.

[840] The Advocate-General, offg. (Mr. Phillips) and Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter for the Appellant.

Baboo Kali Mohun Dass and Baboo Nil Madhub Bose for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (FIELD and O'KINEALY, JJ.)

Field, J.—This was a suit to recover land, and was brought against a sole defendant. That sole defendant died on the 5th September 1880, after the institution of the suit. On the 8th November 1880, that is, sixty-three days after his death, an application, which purported to be made under s. 368 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was made to the Subordinate Judge for the purpose of having the son and heir of the deceased defendant made a defendant in his stead. On the 22nd November 1880, the Subordinate Judge, considering this application out of time, because it was not made within the sixty days allowed by art. 171B of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, XV of 1877, rejected it, and made an order that the suit do abate. On the same day, that is, the 22nd November 1880, a further application was made to the Subordinate Judge that this order, directing the suit to abate, might be set aside, on the ground that the plaintiff was prevented by sufficient cause from applying within the sixty days. There appears to have been some delay in dealing with this application, which was not disposed of till the 20th September 1881. The Subordinate Judge then found as a fact, and his finding on this point has not been questioned before us on appeal, that the plaintiff was prevented by sufficient cause from coming in within the sixty days allowed by art. 171B of the second schedule of the Limitation Act; but being of opinion that the law allowed him no discretion in the matter, he rejected the plaintiff's application although he considered the case to be a very hard one, and if he had thought himself empowered by law to grant the application, he would have granted it. The present appeal has been preferred against both orders,—that is, the order of the 22nd November 1880, as well as the order of the 20th September 1881. So far as the first of these orders is concerned, the appeal is out of time, as the appellant did not obtain the [841] permission of the Court to file the appeal, regarded as an appeal against the order of the 22nd November 1880, after the time allowed by the law, on the ground that she was prevented by sufficient cause from presenting such appeal within the period allowed by law. The appeal may, however, be regarded as an appeal against the order of the 20th September 1881, and so regarded, it is in time. Then it is contended that no appeal will lie against the order of the 20th September 1881, because it cannot be regarded as an order under s. 371, and if it be regarded as an order under s. 372, no express provision for such an appeal is to be found in s. 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears to us that the order of the 20th September 1881 cannot be regarded as a 'decree' within the meaning of the amended definition in s. 2, and there being no express provision in s. 588, the present appeal will not lie. Considering, however, all the circumstances of the case, and the hardship, which, in our opinion and the opinion of the Subordinate Judge, will be inflicted on the plaintiff, if the order of the Subordinate Judge is allowed to stand, while we are strongly of opinion that he had jurisdiction to make the order which he would have made did he not feel himself debarred by the language of the Code, we think that the case is one in which we may properly exercise the jurisdiction vested in us by s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and we proceed to exercise this jurisdiction accordingly.

Turning now to the essential question which has to be decided, we must first observe that s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), which allows an appeal, or an application for review to be admitted after the period of limitation when the appellant or applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not presenting such appeal or making such application within such period, has no operation in respect of applications other than an application for review. Section 371 of the Code of Civil Procedure enacts, that when a suit abates, no fresh suit shall be brought on the same cause of action; but the person claiming to be the legal representative of the deceased may apply for an order to set aside the order for abatement, and if it be proved that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from continuing the suit, the Court shall set aside the abatement upon such terms as to [842] costs or otherwise as it thinks fit. Now, this section applies only to an application by a person claiming to be the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, and who seeks, as plaintiff, to continue the suit; but it does not apply to an application by a plaintiff as against the legal representative of a deceased defendant, such plaintiff seeking to continue such suit against such representative. The section has therefore, no application in the present case. The result is that if the present case falls within s. 368, the plaintiff may lose the property to which it may happen that she has a good legal title capable of being enforced in the suit instituted by her, and this merely because she did not apply to have the representative of the defendant substituted within sixty days after such defendant's death, although she was prevented by a reasonable cause from making her application within that time. It is possible to conceive many instances in which this reasonable cause may amount to absolute impossibility, and the result may be that considerable hardship and injustice will be done by this stringent provision which leaves the Court no discretion whatever in applying it. It can scarcely be supposed that the Legislature contemplated this result, and we are unwilling to put upon the provisions of the Code a construction which necessarily involves the imputation of such an unreasonable intention to the Legislature. It must be borne in mind, that the provision contained in s. 371 of the Civil Procedure Code, that when a suit abates no fresh suit shall be brought upon the same cause of action, is a wide departure from the principles which have been held applicable to abatement in the Courts of Common Law and of Equity in England. In the Courts of Chancery a suit, though perfect in its institution, becomes defective by the death or marriage, or by some change or transmission of the interest or liability of some of the parties. In such case the suit is said to have abated or become defective. As a general rule, no proceeding whatever can be taken in it, until an order to revive the suit or carry on the proceedings has been made. Such an order is in many cases obtained on motion of course. Where the abatement is total, that is, caused by the death, bankruptcy, or insolvency of a single plaintiff, or the marriage of a single female plaintiff, the [843] case is completely suspended and cannot be proceeded with until it has been revived or the defect caused by the abatement cured. Where the abatement is partial merely, as where it is caused by the death of the defendant, it prevents those proceedings only by which the interest of the deceased may be affected, for the death of the defendant makes an abatement quoad himself alone. Thus abatement, although it suspends the proceedings in a case, does not put an end to them. Therefore, where process of contempt has been executed and the defendant is in custody upon it, and afterwards the suit abates, the defendant has been held not to be thereby entitled to his discharge out of custody. But so far as we are aware, an abatement, either in a Court of Common Law or in a Court of Equity, has never had the effect of being a bar to a further suit upon the same cause of action. One of the essentials of the principle of res judicata is, that the matter must have been determined, and when a suit has abated before judgment, nothing has been determined in such a suit. Having regard, therefore, to this very essential difference between the procedure introduced in this country and the procedure of the Courts of England, we think that it cannot have been the intention of the Legislature to apply the provisions of s. 368 of the Code, read with art. 171 B of the Limitation Act, more stringently than the provisions of the Limitation Act as to the filing of appeals and reviews of judgment. We have seen that s. 5 of the Limitation Act allows an appeal and an application for review of judgment to be admitted after time when the Court is satisfied that there was sufficient cause for not presenting it within time. We may further observe that, in s. 368 of the Amended Code, XIV of 1882, which has just been passed by the Legislature, but which comes into force on the 1st of June next, words have been added which, if they had existed in the section of the present Code, would have rendered this appeal unnecessary. We are, therefore, led to examine very carefully the provisions of ss. 368 to 372 of the Code of Civil Procedure in order that, if possible, we may put upon these sections read together a construction which will prevent that hardship which does not appear to have been intended by the Legislature. We may observe that if the present case does not fall within [844] s. 368, it must fall within the provisions of s. 372, and as no express time is provided by the Limitation Act for applications under s. 372, the general provisions of art. 178 of sched. ii will apply; and the plaintiff will, under this article, have three years as the period allowed for making this application.

Having given the matter our best consideration, we come to the conclusion that the present case is one which does not fall within the provisions of s. 368. That section, in so far as it deals with the case of the death of a sole defendant, provides that where the right to sue survives, the plaintiff may make an application to the Court to have the legal representative of the deceased defendant made a defendant in his stead. Now, what is meant by the 'right to sue surviving,' and what is the difference between this case and the cases provided for by s. 372, that is, "other cases of assignment, creation or devolution of any interest pending the suit"? If we turn to Order L, rule 1 of the Rules made under the Judicature Act, we find the following provisions:—"An action shall not become abated by reason of the marriage, death or bankruptcy of any of the parties, if the cause of action survive or continue, and shall not become defective by the assignment, creation, or devolution of any estate or title pendente lite;" and rule 3 is as follows:—"In case of an assignment, creation or devolution of any estate or title pendente lite, an action may be continued by or against the person to or upon whom such estate or title has come or devolved." Now, these two rules seem to draw a distinction between (i) the cause of action surviving or continuing, and (ii) the assignment, creation, or devolution of any estate or title. We think it will be found that the term 'cause of action surviving' was before the passing of the Judicature Acts generally used of cases in the Courts of Common Law, and that the idea of the assignment, creation, or devolution of an estate or title pendente lite is a familiar idea in the Courts of Chancery. In the Common Law Procedure Act, 15 and 16 Vict., cap. 76 s. 138, we find the following language:—"In case of the death of a sole defendant or sole surviving defendant, where the action survives, the plaintiff may, &c.," and this, we may observe, is pretty nearly the language of s. 368 with which we have to deal, and in which the term 'cause of [845] action' was used instead of 'right to sue' before the Amending Act of 1879. In the Chancery Amendment Act, 15 and 16 Vict., cap. 86, s. 52, we find the Legislature speaking of 'the change or transmission of interest or liability,' and the same language will be found used in several passages in Chap. XXXIII of Mr. Daniell's Work on Chancery Practice, which chapter deals with 'revivor and supplement.' At page 1388 of the 5th edition, Mr. Daniell says:—"Where a defendant, whose interest ceases on that event, dies, the suit may, it seems, be revived against the person who thereupon becomes entitled to his interest. Thus, where a defendant, a tenant-in-tail, died, the suit was revived by the common order of 'revivor and supplement' against the next tenant-in-tail. And where the interest of a defendant, a tenant-in-tail, ceases in consequence of the birth of a tenant-in-tail, whose interest precedes that of the former defendant, the suit may be revived against the new tenant-in-tail;" and at page 1381 and the following pages will be found a large number of instances taken from decided cases of this transmission or change of interest. In the Courts of Common Law, the general rule of law was actio personalis moritur cum persona; and under the principle of this rule came all actions for injuries merely personal; executors and administrators were the representatives of the temporal property,—that is, the debts and goods of the deceased, but not of their wrongs except where those wrongs operated to 'the temporal injury of their estate [see the remarks of Lord ELLENBOROUGH in Chamberlain v. Williamson (2 M. and S., 408); see also the remarks of BRETT, L. J., in Twycross v. Grant (L. R., 4 C. P. D., 40, at p. 46).] "Whenever a breach of contract or a tort has been committed in the lifetime of a testator, his executor is entitled to maintain an action, if it is shown upon the face of the proceedings that an injury has accrued to the personal estate." The cause of action did not, therefore, survive in actions of assault, battery, false imprisonment, deceit, or the like; and in the case of a sole plaintiff, his death put an end to the action. Then with respect to the cause of action surviving as against the legal representative of a deceased, [846] see the case of Peek v. Gurney (1 L. R., 6 H. L., 377, at p. 393). Lord CHELMSFORD there said: "This is not like the cases referred to in argument of the Bishop of Winchester v. Knight (1 P. Wms., 407), and the Marquis of Landsdowne v. Marchioness of Landsdowne (1 Madd., 116), where the wrong complained of benefited the estate of the testator, and on that account the executors were made liable. The same liability arises and on the same ground in Courts of Law." As Lord MANSFIELD said in Hambly v. Trott (7 Hare, 67):—"Where property is acquired which benefits the testator, there an action for the value of the property shall survive against the executor. As for instance, the executor shall not be chargeable for the injury done by his testator in cutting down another man's trees, but for the benefit arising to his testator for the value or sale of the trees he shall." And Lord CHELMSFORD proceeded to hold that as the estate of a certain Mr. Gibbs, a party to a suit before the House of Lords, derived no benefit from the misrepresentation in which he assisted, his executors could not be made liable for the wrong done by that misrepresentation. It would not be very easy, without writing a treatise on the difference between the jurisdiction of the Courts of Common Law and the Courts of Equity in England, to define exactly those classes of cases with reference to which the use of the term 'cause of action surviving' was familiar to the English lawyer. But it may perhaps be said in a general way that this term was used more especially with reference to personal actions for damages, for breach of contract, and in some cases, for tort. The term 'change or devolution of interest,' or the more exact language 'assignment, creation, or devolution of any estate or title pendente lite,' used in rule 3 of Order L was, we may say, in the same general way applied to those classes of cases in which the interest in the subject-matter of the litigation passed into the hands of some other person between whom, and in the case of a defendant, the deceased defendant, there existed a legal privity. If no such privity existed, there could be no order of revivor in the Court of Chancery, and there must have been an original bill, or, as we should say in this country, a fresh suit. Applying these observations to [847] the present case, it appears to us, that it was the intention of the Legislature, in adopting the language of the rules made under the Judicature Act, which language had an accepted meaning in English practice, to limit the application of s. 368 of the Code of Civil Procedure to cases similar in their nature to those cases in which the cause of action would have been regarded in the Courts of Common Law as surviving; and that the more general provisions of s. 372 were intended to apply to cases similar in their nature to those cases in which the Court of Chancery would have considered that there was such a change or transmission of interest as would entitle the plaintiff to an order of revivor on motion of course. The present suit, being for the recovery of land, in our opinion, falls within the latter class of cases, and the provisions of s. 372 are, therefore, applicable. In this view we are of opinion that the plaintiff has the period of three years allowed by art. 178 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act within which she can apply to substitute, instead of the deceased defendant, the person upon whom the interest of such defendant devolved upon the death of the latter.

The order of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 22nd November 1880, directing the suit to abate, must be reversed. We think that this is not a case in which we should make any order as to costs.

O'Kinealy, J.—I concur in the judgment delivered by my learned brother, and consider that the application in the lower Court was an application properly falling within s. 372 of the Civil Procedure Code and not under s. 368. Looking at the manner in which a legal representative can be put on the record under the provisions of s. 222 of Act X of 1865, and s. 38 of Act V of 1881, I am of opinion that s. 368 does not necessarily imply that there has been any transmission of interest to the person whose name is put on the record.

On the other hand, s. 372 refers to cases of assignment, creation, or devolution other than those mentioned in the preceding sections, when the interest devolves on the person whom it is sought to make a party—Sham Lal Mullick v. Sreemutty Monmohinee Dasse (unreported, but referred to in 5 C. L. R., 109). And the application is made while the [848] suit is pending—Gocool Chunder Gossamee v. The Administrator-General of Bengal. (I. L. R. 5 Cal., 726, at p. 731 ; s. c., 5 C. L. R., 519). In the present case both these conditions have been fulfilled. An interest different from that referred to in the sections preceding s. 372 has devolved on the person resisting this motion, and the application to place his name on the record was made in a pending suit.

At the first blush it might appear that s. 372 only referred to cases of assignment, creation, or devolution of interest when all the parties on the record were in existence at the time that the application was made ; but in the case of Gocool Chunder Gossamee v. The Administrator-General of Bengal (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 726, at p. 731 ; s. c. 5 C. L. R., 519) a Division Bench of this Court held, that this section applied to cases where neither party on the record was alive when the application was made. Following this decision, which is binding on me, it appears to me that, as in the present case the only party on the record consents to the application, s. 372 does apply, and that the petitioner has three years within which to make her application to the lower Court.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[I. ABATEMENT OF SUIT—APPEAL FROM ORDER REFUSING TO SET IT ASIDE—

After this decision, the C.P.C. 1882 allowed appeals by sec. 588 cls. 18, 19, 20, 21. In the C.P.C. 1908, O. 43. r. 1 (K), appeals are allowed from orders under r. 9 of Order XXII refusing to set aside the abatement or dismissal of a suit. Revision proceedings are, therefore, not the appropriate procedure now.

II. APPLICABILITY OF THE LIMITATION ACT, SEC. 5—

After this decision, the Limitation Act 1877, sec. 5 was extended by the Legislature [VII of 1888 sec. 32 (4)] to these cases. These provisions are retained in the Code of Civil Procedure 1908.

III. LIMITATION APPLICABLE TO THESE CASES—

The Indian Limitation Act 1908, Art. 177 has provided six months from the date of the death of the deceased defendant or respondent, in cases under the C.P.C. to have the legal representative of a deceased defendant or a deceased respondent made a party. It was first introduced into the Act of 1877 by Act XII of 1879 as Art. 171 B. It then applied to applications by a plaintiff to have the representatives of a deceased defendant made parties to a suit. As amended by Act VII of 1888, s. 66 it applied to the case of the death of the defendants and respondents, and the time was extended from sixty days to six months.

IV. THE AUTHORITY OF THIS CASE—

The foregoing statutory changes since the date of this decision have affected its value considerably, and further it was dissented from in the following cases on the ground that such a case as this properly came within sec. 368 and not sec. 372 of the C.P.C. 1882 :— (1890) A.W.N. 21 ; (1884) P.R. 76 ; (1891) 16 Bom. 27 ; (1891) P.J. 30 : 9 Bom. 151.

N.B.—The similar case of 8 Cal. 420 is justified by Starling (Limitation (1911) fifth edition) on the principle of this case, see p. 473 ; 483—and not on the ground there assigned of the suit being a pending one.]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th April, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

In the matter of the Petition of Protap Chunder Ghose.

Kally Churn Dutt and others

Protap Chunder Ghose.*

Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 38—Ex parte orders—Proceedings for measurement of land.

In proceedings under s. 38 of the Beng. Rent Law, Act VIII of 1869, the Collector should, as a rule, pass no order ex parte, without previously giving timely notice to the other party or parties sought to be affected by the order.

THE facts of this case, which was an appeal from an order passed by the Collector of the 24-Parganas on an application by a zamindar under s. 38 of the Beng. Rent Law, Act VIII of 1869, are set out in the judgment of the Court.

[849] Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Appellants.

Mr. Evans and Baboo Gurudas Banerji for the Respondent.

Prinsep, J.—In this case Protap Chunder Ghose, the proprietor of certain property in the 24-Parganas, applied, under s. 38 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, to the Civil Court in that district, to have a survey made and the tenures and under-tenures recorded according to the provisions of the Rent Law.

This application was admitted, and a copy of the order was transmitted to the Collector, directing him to undertake the survey. When the papers came in from the Ameen, an objection was raised by Jadub Chunder Ghose, one of the tenure-holders, as to whether the record was such a record as was contemplated under the Act, and it was urged that, before the record could be considered complete, a khatean should be prepared, from which the parties interested could obtain knowledge of the amount of land recorded in their names, so as to enable them to raise any objection that they might deem necessary against the survey. Several orders were passed on this subject, but it is only now necessary for us to refer to the order of the 2nd of June 1881. On that date the Collector reported to the Subordinate Judge, that the Court Ameen had run away; that he had not made the khatean; and that, until such khatean was prepared, he, the Collector, was of opinion, that no order could be passed under s. 38. Subsequently, on the 15th June, the zamindar appeared before the Collector, and though he offered to pay the amount necessary to write out the khatean, at the same time he raised several objections to the decision at which the Collector had arrived. On the 23rd June following, the Collector sent a copy of this petition to the Subordinate Judge, asking for his instructions. The Collector then changed the opinion he had previously expressed on the 2nd June, and stated to the Subordinate Judge that the chittas and map were the only papers necessary for the survey and record of rights. On the next day, the Subordinate Judge answered that he concurred in the opinion expressed by the Collector. In [850] pursuance of an order of that date, the Collector forwarded the papers to the Civil Court on the 30th June following.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 303 of 1881, against the order of D. R. Lyall, Esq., Officiating Collector of the 24-Parganas, dated the 30th June 1881.

All these orders were passed ex parte, and no notice was given of the application of the 15th June to the other side, and we may observe that the orders of the 2nd June, which were also passed ex parte, are open to the same objection. It appears to us that this is not the procedure which should be adopted by the Collector in deciding the objections raised to his order in proceedings under s. 38 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869. We are of opinion, that whenever objections are raised, unless they are at once disallowed, they cannot be dealt with in the absence of any party likely to be injuriously affected by the order sought for. The order of the Collector of the 2nd June, holding that a khatean was necessary, was clearly one of this description and should not have been passed in the absence of the zamindar: and a portion of the order of 15th June, revoking the previous order, should not have been passed without notice to the tenure holder, whose application for information of the result of the survey led to its being passed. We accordingly set aside the proceedings of the Collector and remand the case with directions that he shall procure the papers from the Subordinate Judge and then fix a day and decide in the presence of both parties, whether in his opinion a khatean is necessary for the record of rights under s. 38, and whether the proceedings of the Ameen ought to be sanctioned. If the Collector is of opinion that no khatean is necessary, and he sanctions the proceedings of the Ameen, then the date of such order, will be considered the date on which the survey proceedings are sanctioned, and the parties will have fifteen days from that date to object. But if, on the contrary, he thinks that the preparation of a khatean is necessary to carry out the provisions of the law, then the date from which the fifteen days will run will be the date on which he sanctions the entire proceedings taken under the orders of the Civil Court, after receipt of this khatean or on conclusion of any further enquiry that he may think necessary. Under the circumstances we make no orders as to the costs of this appeal.

[851] CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 20th April, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 47, 491—District Magistrate—Withdrawal of case—Act XI of 1874, s. 6.

The provisions of s. 47 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act X of 1872, as amended by s. 6 of Act XI of 1874, are wide enough to empower a District Magistrate to withdraw a case falling under s. 491 of the same Code.

THE terms of the reference in this case were as follows :-—"The Joint Magistrate of Serajgunge, proceeding with reference to s. 491, Code of Criminal Procedure, issued summonses against the petitioner Dinendro Nath Shanial and others to show cause before him why they should not give 2,000 rupees bail and 2,000 rupees recognizance to keep the peace for one year. The date of the original summons is 17th February 1882. Subsequently, in a vernacular order of the 11th March 1882, the Joint Magistrate, no reasons being assigned in his order, directed the defendants each to give 200 rupees bail to appear before the District Magistrate of Pubna on the 20th of March. It does not appear from the record that there was any order from the District Magistrate withdrawing the case, or directing the Joint Magistrate to send the papers to him. The case is now pending before the Magistrate of the District.

"In this case it does not appear to me that s. 47, Code of Criminal Procedure, should be held to apply. I find from the District Magistrate's letter of the 15th April, which accompanies, that he withdrew the case from the file of the Joint Magistrate by a letter, of which a copy, as it appears, has been sent by the District Magistrate with his letter to me. But I am doubtful whether the proceedings would be legal. It does [852] not appear clear that the withdrawal of proceedings under s. 491, Code of Criminal Procedure, especially after summonses have issued, is contemplated by s. 47, Code of Criminal Procedure. The summons mentions one Magistrate, one time, and one place; the order of the 11th March directs bail to be given for appearance before another Magistrate, on another date, and virtually at another place. In this case the case was not withdrawn, it appears, by any order, but by memo. signed by a Deputy Magistrate for the Magistrate. The explanation of the Joint Magistrate was called for through the District Magistrate, but the District Magistrate has given his reason in his letter for not calling upon him to give it.

I am of opinion that the proceedings should not be allowed to go on before the Magistrate of the District, and that the vernacular order signed by the Joint Magistrate should be considered null and void, and beg to recommend accordingly."

No one appeared on the reference.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by McDonell, J. We are of opinion that the provisions of s. 47 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as amended by s. 6 of Act XI of 1874, are wide enough to empower the Magistrate of the District to withdraw a case falling under s. 491 of the same Code.

Were it otherwise, it is not suggested, and we are unable to see, that the person concerned has been in any way prejudiced by the course which has been taken; and we think that this reference in the matter of an interlocutory order was unnecessary in the interests of justice.

Land Registration Act (Beng. Act VII of 1876)—Co-Proprietors—Registration of shares in land—Evidence of possession—Evidence of title.

Registration of land under Beng. Act VII of 1876 is not only not conclusive proof, but no evidence at all, upon the question of title of a proprietor so registered.

* Civil Reference, No. 17 of 1881, under s. 617 of Act X of 1877, made by J. Tweedie, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Gya, dated the 11th November 1881.

Such registration does not relieve a plaintiff from the onus of proving his title to land claimed by him.

Quere.—Whether, in a suit founded upon possession alone, or in which the relief sought depends solely upon possession, such registration ought not to be treated as prima facie evidence of actual possession at the date when the registration was effected?

THIS was a reference to the High Court under s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The suit was brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants, who were their co-sharers in a certain zamindari, to recover a certain quantity of grain or its value. The plaintiffs alleged that they were the proprietors of a certain share in a mouza, and under that title were in separate possession of a certain share in some land held by a common tenant of themselves and the defendants, and they claimed to have the corn-rent payable by that tenant divided between themselves and the defendants in the proportion in which they alleged the land to be separately possessed by themselves and the defendants.

In support of their claim the only evidence produced was the record of shares in the estate, which set out the shares in which both themselves and the defendants had been respectively registered under Beng. Act VII of 1876.

[854] The Munsif was of opinion that the registration of shares was "at most a relevant fact of little or no import."

The Judge took a different view, but referred the following questions to the High Court:—

First.—Whether for the purpose of settling the de facto rights and interests of co-sharers as amongst themselves (for example, the proportion of grain-rent receivable by each sharer out of the total amount paid as grain-rent by a common tenant) registration under Beng. Act VII of 1876 of specific shares is "conclusive proof" (so long as the registration remains unaltered by a civil suit) of the de facto rights and interests of co-sharers amongst themselves?

Second.—If the said registration is not "conclusive proof" of the matter before set forth in detail, is it sufficient to place the onus of proving the correctness of the share claimed on him whose allegations are contrary to the registered shares?

No one appeared before the High Court.

The Opinion of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and WHITE, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—The plaintiffs in the case referred to us allege in their plaint that they are the proprietors of certain shares in a mouza, and under that title are in separate possession of a certain share in some land held by a common tenant of themselves and the defendants, who are the proprietors of the remaining shares of the mouza. The plaintiffs claim to have the corn-rent payable by that tenant divided between themselves and the defendants in the proportion in which the plaint alleges the land to be separately possessed by them and the defendants.

The suit is, therefore, not based upon the plaintiffs' possession only, but also upon their title, and their right to succeed depends upon their proving such title.

The first question, on which our opinion is solicited, describes the questions of right which have to be determined between the parties to this suit as de facto rights and interests. But the law knows nothing about de facto rights in such a case as the present. Suits relating to property are sometimes founded on title, and sometimes on possession alone; and in the latter case, title is not [855] enquired into. In the present case the suit is of the former description.

With these preliminary remarks we proceed to give our decision on the two questions submitted to us, which are: (i) that the registration under Beng. Act VII of 1876 is not only not conclusive proof, but no evidence at all upon the question of the title of the plaintiffs to the share which they claim; and (ii) that the registration referred to does not relieve the plaintiffs from the onus of proving their title to these shares.

Whether, in a suit founded upon possession alone, or in which the relief sought depends solely upon possession, such registration ought not to be treated as prima facie evidence of actual possession at the date when the registration was effected is a question unnecessary to be decided upon the present reference.

We may add, that, if the plaintiffs are unable to give any evidence of title, their suit must fail, unless it is shown that the defendants have deprived them of the share or some part of the share of the corn-rent which the defendants admit to belong to them, or unless the District Judge thinks fit to permit further evidence of title to be given by the plaintiffs, and they satisfy the Court from the further evidence adduced that they have a good title to the share which they claim in the land.

We observe that the Munsif did not try the question of title, but only that of possession; and it would therefore seem only fair, that the plaintiffs should have an opportunity of adducing fresh evidence if they can upon the question of title.

As neither of the parties was represented by counsel in this Court, we make no order as to costs.

NOTES.

The 26th April, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Sreegopal Mullick

Ram Churn Nuskur and another.

Vendor and purchaser-- Conditional contract "Subject to approval of title by purchaser's solicitors"-- Rescission Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17, cl. (b).

An agreement for the purchase and sale of certain immoveable property provided that the completion of the contract should be "subject to the approval of the purchaser's solicitors", (naming them), and that if they should not approve of the title, the vendor should refund the earnest-money and pay all costs incurred by the purchaser in investigating the title. The purchaser's solicitors disapproved of the title, and the purchaser rescinded the contract. The agreement was not registered.

Held, in a suit to recover the amount of the earnest-money and costs, that, assuming the objections to be reasonable, the purchaser was entitled to rescind the contract.

Held further, that the agreement did not require registration.

THIS was a suit to recover two sums of Rs. 500 each, and the sum of Rs. 328-8, the costs of investigating the title to certain immoveable property. The plaint stated that, on the 2nd of April 1878, the defendants Ram Churn Nuskur and Doyaram Nuskur agreed in writing to sell certain premises at Ghosery to the plaintiff, and on the same day, the plaintiff deposited Government securities of the value of Rs. 500 with the defendant Doyaram Nuskur by way of earnest-money. The agreement contained, among others, the following provisions :—

2. "The sale and purchase shall be subject to the approval of the purchaser's solicitors, Messrs. Dutt and Mitter, and subject to the vendors satisfying the purchaser that the said premises, hereby contracted to be sold, yield the monthly rent of Rs. 1,183.

3. "Should the purchaser's said solicitors not approve of the title, then the vendors shall refund the earnest-money hereinafter mentioned, and shall pay all costs which the purchaser may or shall incur in respect of these presents and the investigation of the title.

[857] 4. "The vendors declare that their tenure is a permanent maurasi one, not liable to enhancement of the rent payable to the zamindar or Government in respect thereof; and that their (the vendors') tenants have no sub-maurasi or other permanent holding; and that the aggregate area of the two plots of land, hereby contracted to be sold, shall be at least 35 bighas.

5. "The vendors shall forthwith deliver, or cause to be delivered, all the title-deeds, documents and writings in any way relating to the said premises to the purchaser's solicitors, Messrs. Dutt and Mitter.

9. "The purchase shall be completed within one week or such further time as may mutually be agreed upon from the date of delivery of all title-deeds documents and papers, subject however to the approval of the title as aforesaid."

The plaintiff alleged that, on the 18th of April he paid another sum of Rs. 500 to the defendants, and a subsequent payment of Rs. 5,000 was made: this latter sum had, however, been recovered. The plaintiff's solicitor disapproved of the title, and on the 8th of June 1878 the plaintiff declined to carry out the agreement. He now sued to recover the two sums of Rs. 500 each, and for the payment of Rs. 328-8 incurred on account of costs.

The defendants denied receipt of the second sum of Rs. 500; they contended that the title disclosed was a good one, and that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the earnest-money.

Mr. Jackson and Mr. Bonnerjee for the Plaintiff.

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. Phillips) and Mr. Palt for the Defendants.

Mr. Jackson. —A similar proviso to that contained in this agreement was considered in Hudson v. Buck (L. R., 7 Ch. D., 683), where it was held, that in the absence of malu fides or unreasonableness on the part of the purchaser or his solicitor, the vendor could not enforce specific performance of the contract if the purchaser's solicitor disapproved of the title. That case was approved of [858] by the Court of Appeal in Hussey v. Horne Payne (L. R., 8 Ch. D., 670). There is a dictum of CAIRNS, L. C., in the same case on appeal to the House of Lords (L. R., 4 App. Cas., 311), which might seem to militate against the decision of the Court of Appeal; but that decision was affirmed. There is nothing unreasonable in such a stipulation as this.

The Advocate-General. —The objection to title must be reasonable. An objection based on mistake or on ignorance of the law cannot justify the purchaser in refusing to complete his contract. The cases cited do not go to the length of saying that the purchaser is entitled to rescind merely because his solicitor objects to the title. In Hussey v. Horne Payne (L. R., 8 Ch. D., 670), CAIRNS, L. C., said: "Such a term would virtually reduce the agreement to that which is illusory. It would make the vendor bound by the agreement, but it would leave the purchaser perfectly free. He might appoint any solicitor he pleased, he might change his solicitor from time to time. There is no discretio personarum; there is no appointment of an arbitrator in whom both sides might be supposed to have confidence. It would be simply leaving the purchaser, through the medium of his solicitors, at liberty to say from caprice at any moment, we do not like the title, we do not approve of the title, and therefore the agreement goes for nothing."

Mr. Jackson in reply.

Mr. Bonnerjee tendered the agreement in evidence.

The Advocate-General objected on the ground that it was not registered under s. 17 of the Registration Act. [WILSON, J. If a document only entitles a person to a future right in immoveable property, it is not within the section. There was something to be done under this agreement, namely, the payment of the purchase-money on one side and the execution of the conveyance on the other. The document is admissible.]

WILSON, J.—This case is practically before the Court under somewhat peculiar circumstances.

[859] The main question is one relating to title, and I am not really in a position to say what the title is. Naturally one would suppose that the defendants would produce all the title deeds, and lay before the Court full information on the subject, but from what fell from the defendants one can see that they are not in possession of the title-deeds.

The case arises in this way. The plaintiff entered into a contract with the two defendants on the 2nd April 1878, for the purchase from them of certain property at ghosery, comprised in two plots described in the contract. The material parts of the contract are these (after reading the portions set out above his Lordship continued):

It is not necessary to go into the details of what happened afterwards, except, on one or two points. Rupees 500 in Company's paper was paid at the time of the agreement. There is a conflict of testimony as to whether another 500 was paid to the vendors' solicitor. Rupees 5,000 was also paid, but that is recovered back. The present suit is brought to recover the two sums of 500 and costs incurred by the present plaintiff.

The transaction fell through by the plaintiff's advisers refusing to proceed.

The question is whether the plaintiff was entitled to do this. If not, he is not entitled to recover the two sums of 500, nor the costs. But if the terms of the contract are such as to entitle him to decline to carry out the purchase, he is entitled to recover, subject to proof of the payment of the second 500.

As to the 2nd paragraph it is contended that it made the decision of Messrs. DUTT and MITTER conclusive, unless there were some want of good faith or unless their objections were distinctly unreasonable. With reference to this point three cases have been cited, the first of which was Hudson v. Buck (L. R. 7 Ch. D., 683). In that case the document relied on as containing the terms of the contract was this:—"Received of Mr. S. Buck (the defendant), this day, the sum of £20 in respect of Arkley Copse, near Barnet, as a deposit on the purchase of the lease, with possession upon completion, for the sum of £680, and subject [860] to the transfer of the mortgage now upon the property, and also the approval of the title by Mr. Buck's solicitor."

Now the effect of the words "subject to the approval of the title by Mr. Buck's Solicitor" was much considered by Mr. Justice FRY, before whom the case came, and he held, that the words did not leave the parties as they would have been without them, but he says: "It appears to me that it is not unreasonable to suppose that the purchaser should desire to preclude the possibility of such a protracted litigation, and that he should intend to stipulate that the opinion of a particular person, his own solicitor, should be conclusive as to the sufficiency of the title deduced, and that in the absence of compliance with that condition, the contract should not be capable of being enforced." Then the learned Judge says: "It is not necessary to decide that the absence of approval by the purchaser's solicitor would be conclusive, if the purchaser himself had acted unreasonably, as for instance, if he had declined to appoint any solicitor, or if the solicitor whom he appointed had insisted upon utterly unreasonable objections to the title."

The actual conclusions were that the objections taken by the solicitor were not utterly unreasonable, and therefore the decision of the solicitor was conclusive.

The subject came before the Court of Appeal in Hussey v. Horne Payne (L. R., 8 Ch. D., 670). The matter turned on the correspondence, and the question on which the Court of Appeal decided the case was, whether certain words in a letter—"subject to the title being approved by our solicitors"—introduced new terms into the proposal requiring acceptance by the other side. The Court came to the conclusion they did.

The Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice COTTON gave their opinions. The Master of the Rolls said, "the only question which we are called upon to decide is, whether that additional term so expressed amounts in law to an additional term, or whether it amounts, as was very fairly admitted by the counsel for the respondents, to nothing at all, that is, whether it merely expresses what the law would otherwise have implied. The expression [861] 'subject to the title being approved by our solicitors' appears to me to be plainly an additional term. The law does not give a right to the purchaser to say that the title shall be approved by any one, either by his solicitor or his conveyancing counsel, or any one else. All that he is entitled to require is what is called a marketable title, or as it is sometimes called, a good title. Therefore, when he put in 'subject to the title being approved by our solicitors,' he must be taken to mean what he says, that is, to make it a condition that solicitors of his own selection shall approve of the title.

"The matter has been recently and fully discussed by Mr. Justice FRY in Hudson v. Buck (L. R., 7 Ch. D., 683), and as I entirely agree with his observations on the nature of the condition, it is unnecessary for me to repeat them. The result therefore is, that there is no contract."

Lord Justice COTTON said: "Now, is there not a new term introduced by the last words of the letter of the 6th of October, 'subject to the title being approved by our solicitors?' The argument on behalf of the respondent is this, that these words are merely surplusage, and express nothing but what the law would itself have implied. In support of that view, Mr. Pope relied upon observations made by Mr. Justice FRY, that the objection taken by a solicitor to a title under a term of this sort, if it is agreed to by both parties, must be a reasonable objection, but that by no means shows, that it is not a new term. Putting this term in the way in which Mr. Pope suggested it ought to be read, 'subject to the solicitors, provided they act reasonably, being the judges whether there is a good title or not,' it is something entirely different from the rule of law, which is, that the judge, subject to the ordinary right of appeal, is the person to decide whether or no a good title can be made. That is what the law provides independently of stipulation, but this stipulation would make the solicitor, provided he acted reasonably and bonâ fide, the sole and absolute judge as to whether there was or was not a good title. If he acted reasonably and bonâ fide, the Court (assuming that the term had been assented to and made part of the contract) would not inquire whether his [862] objections were well-founded in law; that being so, these words introduce a new term, and the letter is not an acceptance pure and simple of the offer contained in the previous letter."

That case went to the House of Lords, and the decision was affirmed by the House of Lords, but on another ground: and one of the learned Lords, Lord CAIRNS, expresses a doubt as to the view taken by the Court. He says (L. R., 4 App. Cas., at p. 321): "I have not desired to put the opinion which I have offered to your Lordships upon that ground, and I should doubt very much myself, if it were necessary to decide it, whether the opinion of the Court of Appeal in this respect could be maintained. I feel great difficulty in thinking that any person could have intended a term of this kind to have that operation, because, as was pointed out in the course of the argument, it virtually would reduce the agreement to that which is illusory. It would make the vendor bound by the agreement, but it would leave the purchaser perfectly free. He might appoint any solicitor he pleased, he might change his solicitor from time to time. There is no discretio personarum; there is no appointment of an arbitrator in whom both sides might be supposed to have confidence. It would be simply leaving the purchaser, through the medium of his solicitors, at liberty to say from caprice at any moment, we do not like the title, we do not approve of the title, and therefore the agreement goes for nothing. I have great difficulty in thinking that any person would agree to a term which would have that operation. But it appears to me very doubtful whether the words have that meaning. I am disposed rather to look upon them as meaning nothing more than a guard against its being supposed that the title was to be accepted without investigation, as meaning in fact, the title must be investigated and approved of in the usual way which would be by the solicitor of the purchaser. Of course, that would be subject to any objection which the solicitor made, being submitted to decision by a proper Court, if the objection was not agreed to."

These are the authorities in the matter, and I conceive it is the duty of the Court to follow the decision of the Court of [863] Appeal until it is overruled. These are the views of the Lord Chancellor, and they must raise doubts in every mind, but still they are not the grounds of the decision.

The other Lords did not refer to the question.

I think, therefore, that it will be my duty to follow the decision of the Court of Appeal rather than the observations of the Lord Chancellor which were not strictly ratio decidendi.

After all, every document must be construed by its own terms. The document before him was an expression used in the close of a letter, and Lord CAIRNS construed the words as meaning a reservation of rights.

But the document here is a formal document containing in one instrument the whole of the terms between the parties, and the phrase "to the satisfaction of the purchaser's solicitors" occurs frequently in separate contexts. In the second paragraph it appears first. In that paragraph the solicitors are mentioned by name as the persons to be satisfied, and it goes on "subject to the vendors satisfying the purchaser as to the rent." When it deals with the question as to title, the solicitors are to be satisfied, and when it deals with the facts, as to which any one can judge, the solicitors are not mentioned. On the other question as to collateral matter as to costs, the contract says: "should the purchaser's solicitors not approve of the title." I think this means "should the vendors fail to make a good title." Again the same thing occurs in paragraph 9, where it is to be "subject to the approval of title as aforesaid."

Taking the authorities and documents together, I am disposed to say, I am bound to follow the decision of the Court of Appeal. I do not think it can be a pure question of law. On looking at the whole of the circumstances, the only construction I can put upon them is, that the parties did intend that the decision of the purchaser's solicitors was to be conclusive as to whether the title would be accepted or not, subject, however, to what Mr. Justice FRY says in his decision.

It is necessary, therefore, to inquire whether the objections were proper and real. It seems to me they were. It is not necessary to go into the reasons. Any attorney wishing to advise his client safely would rightly refuse this title.

[864] (His Lordship then considered the facts of the case and decided that the objection to the title was valid.)

Messrs. Pollock and Mulla (Indian Contract Act (1913) p. 45) criticise this case as follows:—"This case seems, however, of doubtful authority, as WILSON, J. did not feel free to follow the opinion expressed by Lord CAIRNS in Hussey v. Horne-Payne in the House of Lords which would presumably be upheld by the Judicial Committee. It would be a misfortune to Indian jurisprudence if English decisions made with regard to the very peculiar English conditions of land, title and transfer were to be followed literally and indiscriminately by the Indian Courts.

In (1890) 17 Cal. 919 the words "on approval of the title by the purchaser's solicitor the purchase-money should be paid" were construed to indicate the time of payment and not to impose a condition precedent.]

Will—Lost will—Administration with will annexed—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 208-209—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 2.

The fact that a will has been lost is not, if its contents be satisfactorily proved, any bar to obtaining a grant of letters of administration with will annexed.

Sections 208 and 209 of the Succession Act (X of 1865) apply to the cases of granting letters of administration with will annexed to the estates of Hindus, where the will was executed after the 1st of September 1870.

THIS was an application for administration with will annexed to the estate of one Gunga Gobind Surmah, who died on the 9th of November 1877. The petition stated that the testator had made and published his last will and testament on the 31st of July 1877, whereby he left all his moveable and immoveable properties to his wife Sarbamangala Debi, his two daughters, Doyamoye Debi and Shibosoondari Debi, and the petitioner Ishur Chunder Surmah. The petitioner stated in his petition that the will was in possession of Sarbamangala, whom he charged with suppressing the will for the purpose of destroying it. Petitions of objection were put in on the part of Doyamoye, Shibosoondari, and Sarbamangala, which were to the effect that the alleged testator had made no will; that he had made a will but destroyed it (with intent to revoke it) before his death; [865] and that he had been insane for a long time previous to his death. The first and third defences were in no way supported. After the evidence on both sides had been given, the Judge dismissed the application saying: "I consider that there was no necessity to call any evidence in this case. By Act XXI of 1870, the provisions of s. 209 of the Wills Act do not apply to the will of a Hindu that has been lost, as Act XXI says, that only as regards applications with the will annexed do the provisions of Chapter XXX apply."

The applicant appealed to the High Court on the grounds—(i) that the Court was wrong in rejecting the application on the ground that the will had been lost; (ii) that there was no evidence to show the will had been lost; (iii) that, even supposing the will had been lost, the Court should have granted the application; and (iv) that the Judge, was wrong in holding that s. 209 of the Succession Act did not apply to the wills of Hindus.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 78 of 1881, against the order of H. Muspratt, Esq., Judge of Sylhet, dated the 30th of December 1880.

White, J.—This is an appeal against a decision of the District Judge of Sylhet, dismissing an application of the appellant upon a preliminary ground and without going into the evidence.

The appellant's application is contained in a petition which states that Gunga Gobind Misser died on the 9th November 1877, having previously made his will on the 31st July 1877. The testator is alleged to have bequeathed by that will all his moveable and immoveable properties to the petitioner, who is a sapinda and kinsman to the testator, and also to the testator's widow and two daughters. The petition further alleges that the will is in the possession of Sarbamangala Debi, the widow. The petition was accompanied by a copy of the will, but of course not by the will itself. The application was two fold : first, praying that the original will should be called for from [866] Sarbamangala Debi; and secondly, that letters of administration under the Act should be granted to the petitioner.

The petitioner claims, indeed, to be only one of the residuary legatees beneficially entitled to the testator's estate. But, supposing the will not to have been revoked by the testator, and that the will is either produced and proved, or if not produced, its contents can be satisfactorily proved, and the petitioner upon such proof appears to be one of the residuary legatees, he, failing executors named in the will, may obtain a grant of letters of administration either jointly with the other residuary legatees, or solely if the latter are unwilling to join in the grant, and such grant would be either with the will annexed or with a copy of the will or its proved contents annexed, as the case may be.

The answers put in by the widow and the daughters of the deceased were also in the shape of petitions. They admit that the deceased did make a will giving the petitioner certain rights in the deceased's property, but allege that the will was, by the orders of the deceased, torn up and destroyed as being contrary to his intentions. The widow further denies that she has with her any will of the deceased.

The judgment of the lower Court is very brief. The District Judge disposed of the case without going into evidence, considering that it was unnecessary to do so; and he did this upon a ground which it is not easy to understand. His words are these: "By Act XXI of 1870, the provisions of s. 209 of the Wills Act do not apply to the will of a Hindu that has been lost, as Act XXI says, that only as regards applications with the will annexed do the provisions of Chap. XXX apply." After making these remarks, the District Judge proceeds to dismiss the case with costs to be paid out of the estate of the deceased.

We think that the Judge was in error both in the construction which he has put upon Act XXI of 1870, and also in dismissing the application without going into the evidence.

We may observe in the first place that the District Judge assumes that the will was lost. The petitioner asserts that it is still in existence. And this, which is the first question in [867] dispute between the parties, can only be decided by hearing the evidence. Again, neither party asserts that the will has been lost, but one of them, the widow and daughters, pleads that it was destroyed by the deceased with the intention of revoking it.

The question whether s. 209 of the Indian Succession Act applies to Hindus does not really arise until it has been decided that the will has been destroyed. Supposing that to be proved, and it also is shown that the destruction was not caused by the testator or his orders with the intention of revoking the will, we have no doubt but that s. 209 may be applied.

The will was executed after the first of September 1870, and the 2nd section of the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) enacts, that so much of Part XXX of the Indian Succession Act as relates to probates and letters of administration with the will annexed shall apply to such a will. Section 209 is one of the sections in Part XXX, and so also is s. 208, which, supposing the will to be destroyed but unrevoked, is the section more applicable to the present case, for the petitioner has annexed a copy of the will, and according to the latter section limited probate may be granted of the copy.

We must reverse the decree of the lower Court, and remand the case to that Court for retrial. In trying the case the first question to be determined will be whether there was a will of the testator in existence at his death. If there was such a will, and it is proved to be in the custody of the widow, or under her control by being in the hands of her servants or agents, she must produce it, and the further hearing of the applicant's petition must be adjourned to allow of its being produced. If the will is produced, the question raised by the widow and the daughters as to its revocation by destruction, will be disposed of, and if the will does, as the petitioner alleges, bequeath the property to himself and the widow and daughters, the Court should grant letters of administration with the will annexed to all the residuary legatees, or if the others refuse to join, to the petitioner alone.

If the will is not shown to be in existence, then the Court will have to consider whether it had been destroyed by the [868] testator, or by his orders with the intention of revoking it as alleged by the widow and daughters (see s. 57 of the Succession Act). If it has been so destroyed, of course there will be an end of the matter, and the petitioner's application must be dismissed. But if the destruction of the will was not intended by the testator to be a revocation of it, the petitioner will be at liberty to prove that the copy, which he has annexed to his application, is a true copy of the will, in which case he alone, or jointly with the widow and daughters, if they are willing to join him, will be entitled to grant of letters of administration with a copy of the will annexed, limited until a properly authenticated copy of it is produced (see s. 208).

The lower Court will take evidence on the issues that are raised by the petition and the counter-petition of the parties, and, having regard to the observations now made by this Court, decide these issues and dispose of the petitioner's application upon the merits.

We observe that some evidence has been already recorded in this case, but it appears to be directed chiefly to the proof that testator executed a will before his death, a point upon which both parties are agreed. The real points in dispute are as to whether that will is in existence, and whether it has been revoked. Both parties will be at liberty to adduce such further evidence as they may be advised.

The costs of this appeal will abide the result of the remand.

Appeal allowed, and case remanded.

In the matter of the Petition of Nobodip Chunder

Certificate of Administration—Act XXVII of 1860—Object of Act—Trustee.

The object of Act XXVII of 1860 is, not to enable parties to litigate questions of disputed title, but to enable debtors to pay the debts due by them with safety to the representatives of deceased Hindus and others ; and to facilitate the collection of such debts by removing all doubts as to the legal title [869] to demand and receive the same. In other words, the objects of the Act are to enable debtors to get sufficient acquittances when they pay money due to the estate of a deceased ; and to preserve that estate from loss by giving some one the right to collect the debts, lest they should be lost, e.g., by the operation of the law of limitation. The holder of a certificate is a trustee liable to account for the moneys received by him to the legal heirs or representatives of the deceased.

Baboo Doorga Dass Dutt for the Appellant.

Baboo Gurudass Banerjee for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), which was delivered by McDonell, J.—This is an application for a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860. The two petitioners, and the objector Prankisto Biswas, are, as the Judge says, admittedly in the same degree of affinity to the deceased, Bungshi Dhur ; and prima facie therefore they would inherit equally. But Prankisto Biswas contends that he is entitled to have the whole property,—first, on the ground of reunion ; secondly, on the ground of a verbal gift ; and thirdly, on the ground of adoption.

It is urged before us that Prankisto Biswas merely said that he was a palak-pootro and did not set up adoption ; but in the view we take of the case, it is unnecessary to enter into this matter.

The Judge, having examined one of the witnesses on the 17th December, adjourned the case till the 23rd December for the examination of the remaining witnesses cited by Prankisto Biswas ; but on the 19th December he disposed of the case without examining those other witnesses. We think that this mode of proceeding was unfortunate, because it enables Prankisto Biswas to come up here in appeal, and say that the case has been decided without hearing his witnesses.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 17 of 1882, against the order of C. Dickens, Esq., Judge of Nuddoa, dated the 19th December 1881.

The object of Act XXVII of 1860, as has been pointed out in many cases decided by the Court, is not to enable parties to litigate questions of disputed title. The object of the Act is clearly stated in the preamble, and is two-fold,—first, to enable debtors to pay the debts due by them with safety to the representatives of deceased Hindus, &c. ; and secondly, to facilitate the collection of such debts by removing all doubts as to the [870] legal title to demand and receive the same. In other words, the objects of the Act are to enable debtors to get sufficient acquittances when they pay money due to the estate of a deceased ; and to preserve that estate from loss by giving some one the right to collect the debts lest they should be lost, e.g., by the operation of the law of limitation or otherwise. This latter object is also contemplated by the provision that security is to be taken from the person who obtains the certificate. In effect, the holder of the certificate is a trustee, liable to account for the moneys received by him to the legal heir or representative of the deceased.

Now, in this case, we think that if the Judge, having pointed out that both parties were prima facie equally entitled, had stopped there and declined to enter into the question of title raised by Prankisto Biswas, referring him to a Civil Court for the decision of that question, and saying that the object of the Act would be sufficiently attained by granting a general certificate to the parties, there would have been no ground of objection against the proceeding of the District Judge. But the District Judge did not do this : he entered into the title set up by Prankisto Biswas, and expressed his views thereupon. We think that, as he did not hear all the evidence which Prankisto Biswas was prepared to produce, this course was not fair to Prankisto Biswas : and it is now with some reason contended before us, that from the fact of the Judge having expressed his opinion upon Prankisto Biswas's title, it may be, that when that title comes in question in a Court having jurisdiction to deal therewith, the Judge's observations may operate to influence the mind of the Judge of the Court.

Admitting the reasonableness of those arguments, we think, that the interests of justice will be sufficiently met by striking out and setting aside all that portion of the District Judge's judgment in which he discusses or remarks upon, or may be supposed to have expressed any opinion as to, the exclusive title set up by Prankisto Biswas.

We do not think that this is a case in which we ought to give costs to either party.

Appeal allowed.

[871] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 5th May, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Mukhoda Soondury Dasi.....Defendant

Ram Churn Karmokar.....Plaintiff.

*Appellate Court, duty of — Changing nature of suit— Case made in plaint — Withdrawal of suit - Execution of decree —Sale under subsequent attachment—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of s. 1859),
 s. 97; and (Act X of 1877) s. 373.*

When a plaintiff sues to recover possession of property on the allegation that he had purchased it with his own money, and the suit is dismissed in the Court of First Instance, the Court of Appeal is not justified in giving the plaintiff a decree for a portion of the property, on the ground that the whole was the property of a joint Hindu family in which the plaintiff was a co-sharer.

A claim to attached property made under Act VIII of 1859, s. 246, was dismissed, and the claimant, in the year 1875, instituted a regular suit against the decree-holder under the provisions of that section. The decree-holder then released the property from attachment, and the plaintiff withdrew his suit. The same property was afterwards, in the year 1878, attached again and sold in execution of the same decree.

Held, that a subsequent suit for possession of the property against the purchaser at the execution-sale was not barred under s. 97 of Act VIII of 1859.

Eshen Chunder Singh v. Shama Churn Bhutto (11 Moore's L.A., 7) cited.

IN this case the plaint stated that the plaintiff purchased with his own money a jimaai right in certain land, together with the brick-built wall and tiled-huts standing thereon, under a kohala dated the 27th of November 1865, for a consideration of Rs. 125, "and held and owned the same after gradually constructing the pucca building now standing on it with his own money;" that, in the year 1875, one Prem Bibi attached the said property in execution of a money-decree obtained by her against one Muddun Mohun Karmokar, the plaintiff's nephew; that the plaintiff put forward a claim to the property under [872] s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, which claim was dismissed on the 4th of May 1875, it not having been preferred in time; that the plaintiff thereupon, and in the same year, brought a regular suit for a declaration of his right to the property; that, pending that suit, Prem Bibi, in consequence of an arrangement entered into with her judgment-debtor, released the property from attachment; that thereupon the plaintiff withdrew his regular suit; that afterwards Prem Bibi executed her decree against the property and sold the same to one Bungshidhur Roy on the 2nd of July 1878, and he sold it to the present defendant Mukhoda Soondury Dasi.

In the fifth paragraph of the plaint the plaintiff said:—"The property above alluded to belongs to the plaintiff himself. As Muddun Mohun Karmokar was the son of a brother of the plaintiff, and as plaintiff's two other brothers lived in the same mess as members of the same joint family, they all lived together in the house alluded to, that is all. The plaintiff did not give up his right or interest therein, nor did he make over any right to Muddun. The property was not liable to be sold for satisfaction of any debt of Muddun. As Prem Bibi caused the property to be sold, stating falsely that it belonged to Muddun Karmokar, neither the auction-purchaser, nor the defendant who claims the disputed property by virtue of a purchase made from the auction-purchaser, got any right, and the defendant had no right to keep the property in her possession." The plaint was filed on the 4th of April 1879.

The Court of First Instance held, that the suit was barred under s. 97 of Act VIII of 1859, corresponding to s. 373 of the New Civil Procedure Code, Act X of 1877. He also found that the property was, in fact, the property of Muddun Mohun Karmokar, and not that of the plaintiff. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge held, that the two suits were not for the same matter, as the causes of action were different—Ram Chander Chowdhry v. Kashee Mohun (21 W. R., 57), Jardine Skinner v. Ranee Shama Soonduree Dabia (13 W. R., 196), and Watson v. Pokur Doss Paul (4 W. R., 2);—and on the merits he held, that the plaintiff was entitled [873] to a share in the property sued for, the claim being, in his opinion, one for a share of the property as joint estate—Watson v. Pokhur Doss Paul (4 W. R., 2), Lalla Prag Dutt v. Bandi Hossein (7 B. L. R., 42; s.c., 15 W. R., 225), Ram Coomur Singh v. Dewan Ram Jeelun Singh (5 W. R., 165).

The defendant appealed to the High Court on the following grounds:—(i) that the lower Appellate Court ought to have held that the present suit was barred by s. 97 of Act VIII of 1859 and s. 373 of Act X of 1877; (ii) that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in giving the plaintiff a decree on a title different from that which he put forward in his plaint; (iii) that the plaintiff having claimed the property as one purchased by himself, the lower Appellate Court was wrong in giving him a decree on the ground of his being a member of a joint Hindu family.

Baboo Troylokho Nath Mittra for the Appellant.

Baboo Mohney Mohun Roy and Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter for the Respondent.

Prinsep, J.—The circumstances out of which this suit has arisen are as follows:—In 1874, one Prem Bibi obtained a money-decree against one Muddun Karmokar for Rs. 1,210; and, in execution of that decree, attached the property which is the subject of the present action. The plaintiff intervened under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, alleging that the house was his sole and exclusive property. This application was rejected. Subsequently, the plaintiff instituted a regular suit against Prem Bibi and another, to establish his exclusive title to the property; and, after the suit had been pending for some time, he withdrew it without obtaining permission of the Court to bring a second action for the same matter. After the suit had been withdrawn, the attachment fell through; but the property was re-attached and sold in execution of the same decree, and was purchased by the defendant on the 2nd July 1877. The [874] plaintiff did not appear to contest the second execution-proceedings after his suit had been withdrawn. On the 4th of April 1879, the plaintiff instituted the present suit against the purchaser to recover possession of the property, on the ground that it was his own separate property purchased by his own money. In the fifth para. of his plaint he said the property belonged to himself, and in the first he asserted that he had purchased it with his own private money. It is, therefore, evident that, from the year 1875 up to the year 1879, the plaintiff continually asserted that this property was not joint property, but belonged to himself exclusively, and that no other member of his family had any interest in it.

In defence the purchaser said that the judgment-debtor of the former suit was the real owner of the property in dispute; that he and the plaintiff lived separately; and that the latter had no claim to the property. The Munsif dismissed the suit. He was of opinion that the plaintiff was not only barred from instituting a second suit on the ground that he had not obtained the sanction of the Court to its institution when he withdrew the former suit; but that he had no title to the property. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif and gave plaintiff a decree for what he had never asked,—namely, a one-fourth share as a member of a joint and undivided Hindu family.

Before us several grounds have been raised. First, it has been contended that the present suit is barred by s. 97 of Act VIII of 1859 and s. 373 of Act X of 1877. We think that this contention is unsound. There is nothing on the record to show that the judgment-debtor was a party to the previous action. If he had been a party, the question would have assumed a different aspect, and it might have been fairly contended that the effect of that withdrawal would be to prevent any litigation between the plaintiff and the judgment-debtor in regard to the title to the property in dispute. But in the present case it cannot be shown that the judgment-debtor was a party, and it is impossible to hold that the present suit is barred.

Then it is said that the lower Court was wrong in giving plaintiff a decree on a title different from that which he put [875] forward in his plaint. The general rule is that any amendment allowed must be such as is either raised in the pleadings or is consistent with the case as originally laid, and that the state of facts and the equities and ground of relief originally alleged and pleaded by the plaintiff should not be departed from. This is the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Eshen Chunder Singh v. Shama Churn Bhutto (11 Moore's I. A., 7), and this rule has been followed in numerous decisions of our Courts.

In the present suit, as we have already stated, plaintiff, from the very beginning of the dispute, asserted his exclusive right to the property. It is not a case where an amendment may be asked for on the ground that the matters connected with the suit were not known to him, but it is a case where plaintiff speaks exclusively from his own personal knowledge to the facts which go to constitute his cause of action. In our opinion the plaintiff should not have been allowed to have started a case which does not arise on the pleadings.

We accordingly set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the first Court, dismissing plaintiff's suit with costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

In the matter of the Petition of Ram Lall.

The Empress
Ram Lall.*

District Magistrate, Power of—Reference to High Court—Order of Appellate Court—Jurisdiction—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 295, 296, and 297.

A District Magistrate, being of opinion that the Sessions Judge had, on appeal, improperly set aside a conviction made by a Cantonment Magistrate, referred the matter to the High Court under s. 297 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Held, that the Magistrate had no power to make such a reference.

[876] IN this case Mr. Hastings, the Cantonment Magistrate of Dinapore, convicted Ram Lall of having poisoned a bullock, and sentenced him to two years' imprisonment under s. 429 of the Penal Code. The prisoner appealed, and on appeal the Sessions Judge held that the prisoner should have been convicted and sentenced under s. 428 of the Penal Code, and not under s. 429, and he reduced the imprisonment awarded to one year. Thereupon Mr. Hastings wrote to the Magistrate of Patna, giving his reasons for thinking that the Sessions Judge was wrong, and asking that the record of the case should be transmitted to the High Court for revision under s. 297 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate did so, and in his communication to the High Court, endorsed the opinion of the Cantonment Magistrate.

No one appeared on the reference.

Prinsep, J.—This reference has been made because the Cantonment Magistrate, who tried the case, and the District Magistrate, are of opinion that the Sessions Judge, as an Appellate Court, has improperly reduced the sentence passed.

The powers of the District Magistrate, in referring cases to this Court as a Court of Revision, are described in ss. 295, 299 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 295 declares that the District Magistrate "may at all times call for and examine the record of any Court subordinate to him for the purpose of satisfying himself as to the legality of any sentence or order passed, and as to the regularity of the proceedings of such subordinate Court"; and s. 296 adds that, if the District Magistrate "is of opinion that the judgment or order is contrary to law, or that the punishment is too severe or inadequate, he may report the proceedings for the orders of the High Court." But s. 296 is controlled by s. 295, and it was certainly never intended that a subordinate Court should have the power of questioning the propriety of an order passed by a Court of Appeal, and should refer the order of an Appellate Court to the High Court [877] for revision, because it considers that the original sentence was a proper sentence and should not have been reduced. If this were possible, every order of this description would most probably come before the High Court on revision, and there would be no finality, such as the law contemplates, in the order of an Appellate Court. We, therefore, decline to interfere.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 11th May, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Nobo Gopal Sircar.....Plaintiff

Suit for arrears of rent— Payment of patni rent by darpatnidar to save patni from sale under Reg. VIII of 1819.

In a suit by the purchaser of a patni against a darpatnidar for arrears of rent of the year 1285 (1875), it appeared that before the plaintiff's purchase the darpatnidar had paid the amount of arrears of patni rent for the year 1281 (1877), in order to save the patni from being sold under Reg. VIII of 1819, and that the amount so paid considerably exceeded the darpatni rent due at the date of suit.

Held, that the defendant was entitled to deduct from the rent claimed the amount paid under the Regulation in excess of the darpatni rent due up to the end of 1284.

THIS was a suit for arrears of rent for the year 1285 (1878). It appeared that the plaintiff was the execution-purchaser of a patni mehal consisting of seven mouzas, and that the defendant was a darpatnidar of three of these mouzas for an annual jama of Rs. 1,840. The plaintiff's purchase was in Bysack 1285 (April 1878), and he sued the defendant for the rent due by him, including cesses and interest, for that year. Previous to the plaintiff's purchase, the zamindar had taken measures, under Reg. VIII of 1819, for the realization from the patnidar of the rents in arrear for the last half-year of 1284 (1877),

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1913 of 1880, against the decree of J. P. Grant, Esq., Judge of Hoogly, dated the 24th June 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Sreenath Roy, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 23rd September 1879.

[878] amounting to Rs. 2,071; and in order to save the patni from sale under the Regulation, the defendant had paid these arrears. He applied to be put in possession of the patni tenure, but though the Collector made the order, it never had effect, and the defendant never had possession of the patni as a whole. The defendant contended that as the amount paid by him was a charge upon the mehal, the holder of the mehal could not recover rents from him until the amount so advanced should be fully recouped by the rents due by him, and that he was entitled to set off the amount paid by him under the Regulation against the amount claimed. Both the lower Courts admitted this contention, and the suit was dismissed.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Uma Kali Mookerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Rushbehary Ghose and Baboo Bondo Nath Dutt for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), was delivered by Field, J.—The plaintiff in this case purchased, at a sale in execution of a common money-decree, the judgment-debtor's interest in a certain patni. The defendant holds a darpatni within this patni. Before the plaintiff's purchase, the patni was about to be brought to sale under Reg. VIII of 1819 for arrears of rent for the last half-year of 1284. The defendant, as darpatnidar, prevented the sale by paying the amount of arrears of the patni rent. This amount so paid considerably exceeded all the darpatni rent then due by the defendant to the patnidar. The present suit has been brought to recover the rent of 1285, and the defendant contends that he is entitled to deduct from the rent so claimed the amount so paid into Court by him under the Regulation in excess of the darpatni rent due up to the end of 1284.

Both the lower Courts have admitted this contention, and it is now argued before us that, having regard to the express language of cl. 4, s. 13 of Reg. VIII of 1819, "such deposit [879] shall not be carried to credit in, or set against, future demands for rent," the defendant is not entitled to deduct the amount, although he may pursue the remedy allowed by the clause of the Regulation, that is, treat the excess as a loan advanced upon mortgage, and apply to be put in possession of the patni tenure in order to recover the amount so advanced from the profits of such tenure.

It has been said that the defendant is seeking to 'set off' this amount against the plaintiff's claim for rent; and that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as to 'set off' cannot apply. But it appears to us, that this, is not the proper way of looking at the matter, and that the principle of 'set off' has no application.

If we had to construe the language of the clause of the Regulation, we think that it is impossible to read the words "such deposit shall not be carried to credit in, or set against, future demands for rent" as standing alone, and intended as a prohibition merely. This construction would be repugnant to the intention of the whole section, which is clearly to enable undertenure-holders to protect their undertenures, and, when they do so by advancing money in excess of the rent due by themselves, to give them ample security for its recovery. The words must be read with the other words which follow—viz., "but shall be considered as a loan made to the proprietor of the tenure preserved from sale by such means, etc." And the proper construction to be put upon the whole sentence is probably this, that, in respect of money advanced by the undertenure-holder in excess of the rent due by himself, his remedy is enlarged to meet the exigency of the case. If he could merely deduct the amount from future rent, it might be very questionable if he could do this as against a person who purchased the patni at the following half-yearly sale, or who purchased at an execution-sale; but his security as against either of those purchasers is assured by giving him a lien on the patni and putting him in the position of a mortgagee.

Apart, however, from any construction to be put upon the mere language of the Regulation, we think that the Subordinate Judge has taken a very sensible view of the matter. [880] The darpatnidar did apply to be put in possession of the patni tenure. The Collector made an order that he should be put in possession, but he has not succeeded in obtaining possession of the whole portion. There can be no reasonable doubt that if he has not succeeded, the present plaintiff is the person who has prevented him from succeeding, and so far as regards the darpatni, for the rent of which the present suit is brought, we think that the defendant is under the circumstances entitled to say, as against the plaintiff, that he is in possession of the patni-right, which right substantially consists of the very rent claimed in this suit. Qui prior est tempore, potior est jure, who is prior in time is superior in right, is a maxim of equity: and we think that, inasmuch as the defendant, before the plaintiff's, purchase, was, by virtue of the provisions of the Regulation, in the position of a mortgagee entitled to possession for the purpose of realizing the amount advanced by him from the profits of the whole patni, the plaintiff cannot, as against him, enforce an assignment by operation of law without discharging an incumbrance created by law before such assignment.

Under these circumstances we think that the decisions of the Courts below are substantially correct, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Revocation of Probate—Procedure—Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 234—Onus Probandi.

Upon a petition under s. 234 of the Succession Act, praying that the probate of a will alleged to have been made by the petitioner's husband should be revoked upon the grounds that no citation was duly published, that the petitioner was a minor, living under the care of the person to whom probate had been granted, and had no opportunity of understanding his mala fides and improper acts, and that the will was a forgery, the District Judge [881] held, that the burden of proof in respect of the whole case was on the petitioner, and dismissed her petition.

Held, that the District Judge ought to have given the petitioner an opportunity of proving that she had no knowledge of the previous proceedings. If satisfied that she had no such knowledge, then he should have ordered a new trial as to the factum of the will, when the person propounding it would have to prove it in the ordinary way.

Baboo Anurendro Nath Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Rush Behury Ghose and Baboo Golup Chunder Sircar for the Respondent.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (MCDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), which was delivered by Field, J.—This was an application under s. 234 of the Indian Succession Act X of 1865, for revocation of probate of a will granted on the 8th December 1876. The will purports to have been executed by Rojoni Kant Roy Chowdhry, the late husband of the petitioner, Dintarini Dabi. Jogesh Chunder Roy Chowdhry, the brother of Rojoni Kant, obtained probate of the will, and himself died a few years afterwards. He executed a will before his death, and one Doibo Chunder Roy obtained probate of that will. The present petitioner, Dintarini, subsequently applied for a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860, and was opposed by Doibo Roy, who, as executor of Jogesh Chunder Roy, relied upon the grant of probate of Rojoni Kant's will which Jogesh Chunder had obtained. The present petitioner alleges that it was on this occasion that she first became aware of the alleged existence of the will said to have been executed by her late husband; and she thereupon made an application to the District Judge, asking that the grant of probate be revoked on the following grounds:—First, that no citation was duly published; secondly, that she was, at the time of her husband's death, a minor, living under the care of Jogesh Chunder, and so had no opportunity of understanding his mala fides and improper acts; and, thirdly, that the will was spurious and forged.

[882] The former District Judge, Mr. Brett, having examined two witnesses, made an order that Doibo Roy should prove the will. The case then came before Mr. Peterson, who seems to have been of opinion that the burden of proof in respect of the whole case was upon the petitioner Dintarini.

Now, it is contended before us that the District Judge, Mr. Peterson, is in error in laying the burden of proof upon the petitioner, and so calling upon her to prove that the will is a forgery; and an argument has been addressed to us as to the rule which should be observed with respect to the burden of proof in a case of this nature. We do not propose to lay down any general rule, but we shall deal with this case upon its own merits.

The Code of Civil Procedure is expressly made applicable to contentious probate cases. By virtue of the provisions of s. 647, the same Code is to be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in all Courts of civil jurisdiction other than suits and appeals. The Code must, therefore, so far as it can be made applicable, govern non-contentious cases also. Now, according to the Code, if an ex parte decree or order is made in any proceeding pending in Court, and if the person against whom such ex parte decree or order has been made comes into Court and asserts that he had no notice of the proceedings, and was, therefore, unable to appear and answer, the ordinary course is that such defendant is called upon in the first place to satisfy the Court by giving prima facie evidence that he had no notice of the proceedings.

The other party is then allowed an opportunity of rebutting this evidence ; and if, after hearing both sides, the Court is satisfied that the defendant really had no notice of the proceedings, the case is re-opened, there is a new trial, and at such new trial the burden of proving the issue in the cause is governed by the ordinary rule. It appears to us that this course of procedure ought to be followed in the present case. If the petitioner is able to satisfy the District Judge that she had no notice or knowledge of the previous proceedings, the proper order to make will then be that there be a new trial as to the factum of the will, and upon such new trial, the burden of proving the factum of the will under the ordinary rule, will lie upon the person who propounded it.

[883] We think, therefore, that the proper course in the present case is to set aside the order of the District Judge and to remand the case with the following instructions :—The District Judge will first give the petitioner an opportunity of proving that she had no notice or knowledge of the previous proceedings, and if she can give prima facie evidence of this, either by her own testimony or otherwise, the representative of the person who propounded that will, will be allowed to rebut that evidence. The District Judge must bear in mind the petitioner's allegation that she was a minor at the time of the previous proceedings and will consider how far the citation which was issued was sufficient to give her notice of these proceedings. If, upon the whole evidence, he is satisfied that the petitioner really had no notice of the previous proceedings, the case will then follow the course already indicated, and there will be a new trial as to the factum of the will, and on that new trial, the party who now represents the person who propounded the will, will have to prove it in the ordinary way. The costs of this Court and of the Court below will follow the result of the remand.

Case remanded.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

In the Matter of the Petition of Issur Chunder Nath.

Issur Chunder Nath
Kali Churn Nath and another.*

District Magistrate, Power of—Withdrawal of case—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), s. 521.

Where a Magistrate, in a proceeding under s. 521 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, satisfies himself that there is no necessity for proceeding further under that section, he is competent to let the matter drop.

In re Shonai Paramanick (1 C. L. R., 486) followed.

IN this case the terms of the reference were as follows:—"A complaint was laid before the Magistrate that one Kali Churn Nath and others had closed a public road used by men and [884] cattle. After taking a report from the police, the Magistrate issued an order to the accused to open the road, or show cause to the contrary under s. 521, Criminal Procedure. Kali Churn appeared and showed cause on the 24th March, and three days later Ramananda Adhikari, who was one of those against whom notice had issued, appeared and claimed a jury under s. 523. These two persons' interests appeared to be opposed. They made contradictory allegations, each charging the other with obstructing the road. On the 31st March the Magistrate appointed a jury, but on a petition made next day by Kali Churn, he cancelled the order, as he considered the case was not one for the application of the provisions of s. 521, the two defendants having conflicting interests; and he therefore referred the complainant to the Civil Court. Kali Churn's objection is, that the matter has been already decided in his favour by a decree of the Munsif's Court, which would show that the road was not a public one. The decree is one under s. 9 of Act I of 1877. I think the order for a jury ought to have been allowed to stand, because it would have been for the jurors to decide how far Kali Churn was protected by his decree. If things are allowed to remain as they are, complainant will have no remedy, for a civil suit will not lie for obstruction to a public road. Besides, I do not think the contradictory allegations of the opposite party can affect complainant's position. If the jury decides in his favour, he can force either or both of them, if necessary, to remove the obstruction. For the above reasons, I think the order cancelling the order for a jury should be set aside, and the jury directed to proceed with their deliberation."

No one appeared on the reference.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—We see no reason to interfere. We agree with the judgment of another Division Court in the case of Shonai Paramanick (1 C. L. [885] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 18th May, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BOSE.

Protap Chunder Banerjee and others.....Plaintiffs

Krishto Kishore Shaha and others.....Defendants.*

Plaint, Verification of—Allegation of fraud—Practice.

In a case where the plaintiffs set up gross fraud, and where the case depends mainly upon the personal knowledge of the plaintiffs, it is imperative on the plaintiffs, or one of them, to verify the plaint.

THIS was a suit to set aside a sale in execution of a decree, duly confirmed under s. 257 of Act VIII of 1859.

The plaintiffs stated that they, with the defendants Nos. 5, 6, and 7, were joint owners of 107 bigas of land, paying an annual sadar jama of Rs. 21-10; that, in 1875, defendant No. 1 brought a suit for contribution of rent against the plaintiffs and others, and obtained a decree against them, without the knowledge and in the absence of the plaintiffs; and that, in execution of his decree, the right, title, and interest of the plaintiffs in this land was put up for sale, and was purchased by defendant No. 2 on the 19th November 1877; but that no attachment was ever taken out, nor was the proclamation of sale duly made. Defendant No. 2, on becoming the purchaser, sold to defendant No. 3.

They further stated that they knew nothing about the original suit instituted by defendant No. 1, and had not been served with parwanas in connection with the execution of the decree. They therefore brought this suit to set aside the sale, making defendants Nos. 4, 5, 6, and 7 pro forma defendants.

The defendants alleged that the plaintiffs had been summoned in due form; and that the property was sold after attachment and notification of sale had been duly issued; and that the objection should have been taken in the execution-proceedings.

[886] The Munsif found that the plaintiffs had been served with summonses in the original suit; and that, as the plaintiffs had been unable to make out that fraud had been practised upon them in the original suit, or in the execution of the decree, they were not entitled to relief in the suit, and therefore dismissed it with costs.

The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge, who held, that the plaintiff's case rested solely on an allegation of fraud, and that they had entirely failed to make out fraud; and that they, moreover, had not themselves signed and verified their plaint, but had left this to a person styling himself 'their agent'; that the most that the plaint could be taken to allege was irregularity in the proceedings preliminary to the sale, and that such irregularities could not support a suit to set aside a sale once confirmed, especially when the property had passed into the hands of third parties; and further finding that the purchaser at the sale had purchased bona fide and for value, dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Bahoo Ishur Chunder Chuckerbutty for the Appellants.

Bahoo Mohiney Mohun Roy for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and BOSE, J.) was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—We think that this appeal must be dismissed. The plaintiffs, in order to establish their case, were bound to prove that the irregularities mentioned in the plaint had been committed with a view to defraud them. Those irregularities might have been as well the result of mistake as of fraud. It was necessary, therefore, for the plaintiffs to prove the fraud, and fraud has been negatived by both the lower Courts. They also find that the purchaser at the sale was a bona fide purchaser for value.

The Judge's decision, therefore, was quite right.

We also entirely agree with what he says at the commencement of his judgment, and as that is a matter which concerns [887] Civil Courts generally, we think it right to add a few words upon the subject.

The suit was brought to set aside a sale in execution of a decree, upon the ground that the land, the subject of the sale, was in part the plaintiff's property. Their case was, that they had been fraudulently and collusively kept in ignorance of the proceedings in the suit and of the execution and sale which followed, and that all the defendants were either parties or privies to the fraud. In fact, if the plaintiffs were right, the fraud that was practised upon them was undoubtedly a very gross one.

Now, this is precisely the sort of case in which the plaintiffs should have been required, in the absence of some very good reason to the contrary, to verify the plaint themselves; one of them, at any rate, should have done so. Instead of this the plaint was not even verified by a pleader or authorized mooktear. It professes to be verified by a person who calls himself "an agent of the plaintiffs," but who acts apparently without any mooktear-nama, and who, according to the finding of the Judge, was an entire stranger.

This certainly ought not to have been allowed by the Munsif. In a case where the plaintiffs set up a gross fraud of this kind, and where the case depends mainly, as the Judge considers that it did, upon the personal knowledge of the plaintiffs, it was only right that the plaintiffs, or one of them, should have been required to verify the plaint.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM.

Golam Yassein

The Official Trustee of Bengal.

Revocation of trusts—Voluntary settlement.

A, being at the time unmarried, executed a voluntary settlement, by which he created trusts for himself for life, and after his death for his issue and widows (if any) with ultimate trusts over. The deed contained a provision [888] empowering A at any time, with the consent of the trustee, to revoke the trusts, and to declare any new or other trusts. A subsequently married, and, after his marriage, executed a deed of revocation, declaring that the trust-property should be held for himself absolutely. The trustee refused to hand over the trust-property, and A thereupon instituted a suit to have the trust set aside. His wife was a minor and there was no issue of the marriage.

Held that, although there might be cases in which, where no other person but the settlor was interested, the deed might be regarded as a mere direction as to the manner in which the settlor's property should be applied for his benefit, and as such revocable by the settlor, yet that, in the present case, there being an infant beneficiary, the deed could not be revoked.

By an indenture, dated the 18th of September 1880, Shahabzadah Golam Yassein declared that the Official Trustee of Bengal should hold a sum of Rs. 6,000 upon trust to pay the interest to the settlor for his life, or until certain specified events should happen; and it was provided that, after the death of the settlor having issue, the Official Trustee should hold the trust-fund upon trust for the widow or widows and for the lawful lineal descendant of the settlor according to certain shares with ultimate trusts over in default of issue.

The deed also contained a provision that it should be lawful for the settlor at any time, with the consent of the Official Trustee, by deed, to revoke all or any of the trusts declared, and to declare any new or other trusts, and that the Official Trustee should be at liberty to give or withhold his consent to any such revocation or new appointment at his absolute discretion without being answerable or called upon to answer for the exercise of such discretion.

At the date of the execution of the deed, the settlor was unmarried; but in the month of August 1881 he married the defendant, Shahabzadah Kumroonnissa Begum; on the 20th of February 1882 the settlor executed a deed of revocation, by which he directed that the trust-fund should remain and be for the sole and absolute benefit of himself and should forthwith be paid over to him by the Official Trustee. The Official Trustee, however, declined to part with the trust-fund except under the direction of the Court.

The settlor now instituted a suit against the Official Trustee and Shahabzadah Kumroonnissa Begum, to have it declared that [889] the deed of the 18th September 1880 was invalid and inoperative in law and void; and for an order that the Official Trustee should pay over the trust-fund to him, alleging that he was induced to execute the deed by the influence of certain relatives, and that it was executed without due consideration. He also alleged that a recital in the deed, that he was not indebted at the time when it was executed, was false.

The plaintiff's wife was at the time of the institution of the suit a minor, and there was no issue of the marriage.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. Ameer Ali for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Handley and Mr. Dunne for the Defendant, the Official Trustee.

Mr. Souttar for the Defendant, Shahabzadah Kumroonissa Begum.

Mr. Bonnerjee referred to Kanje Dass Byrgee v. Rangopal Ghose (16 S. D. A., 23) and Ellison v. Ellison (6 Ves., 656).

Mr. Handley referred to Bill v. Cureton (2 M. and K., 503) and Phillips v. Mullings (L. R., 7 Ch., 214) and 21 Geo. III, c. 70, s. 7.

Mr. Ameer Ali in reply.

Cunningham, J.—In this case the plaintiff sues the Official Trustee to have it declared that a deed of settlement executed on the 18th September 1880, is invalid and void; and that the plaintiff is entitled to require the Official Trustee to make over to him Rs. 6,000, which, under the deed, have been placed in the hands of the Official Trustee.

The deed provided that the Official Trustee should, subject to certain conditions, pay the interest of the Rs. 6,000 to plaintiff for life, and after plaintiff's death, provided he should have lawful issue, the trust-fund should be for his widow or widows and lawful lineal descendants, as specified: and if there should be no lawful issue, then, after deducting the widow's share, for brothers, sisters and others.

The plaintiff married in August 1881: his wife is an infant. Her guardian remains neutral in the suit: the Official Trustee declines to give his assent except subject to the orders of the Court. The plaintiff alleges that the statement in the deed that he was at the date thereof in no way indebted was false.

The Official Trustee was, in my opinion, right, and exercised a wise discretion in refusing his assent to the revocation of this deed.

The plaintiff is now seeking to put the Court in motion on the grounds—1st, that a deed which he deliberately executed was void under his personal law; and 2nd, that one of its principal recitals was untrue.

If I considered, which I do not, that there is anything in 21 Geo. III., c. 70, s. 17, or any other law now in force, to warrant the assertion that a Mahomedan cannot legally create a trust such as the present, I should still regard the present plaintiff as precluded from urging that ground for setting aside his own act, nor of course can the plaintiff rely on the untruthfulness of his recital as a ground of relief against his own deed.

There may be cases in which, as in the case of Kanje Dass Byrgee v. Rangopal Ghose (16 S. D. A., 23), since no other person but the settlor is interested, the deed may be regarded as a mere direction as to the mode in which the settlor's property should be applied for his benefit, and as such revocable by the settlor. Any question of this sort is, however, removed in the present instance by the existence of an infant beneficiary, which brings the case clearly within the rule laid down in Bill v. Cureton (2 M. and K., 503) and the other authorities.

The suit must be dismissed with one set of costs for the Official Trustee. No costs for the guardians of the minor.

Suit dismissed.

[891] CRIMINAL MOTION.

The 23rd May, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

In the matter of the High Courts' Criminal Procedure Act (X of 1875).

In the matter of the Petition of J. Wood.

J. Wood

The Corporation for the Town of Calcutta.*

Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act (Beng. Act IV of 1876), s. 77—License—Assessment—Fine—Boardinghouse-keeper.

In order to obtain a conviction under s. 77, Beng. Act IV of 1876, for keeping a boarding-house without taking out a license, it must be shown that the accused held himself out to the public as one whose business or profession it is to receive boarders for profit.

In order to pass a proper sentence of fine under s. 77, Beng. Act IV of 1876, evidence should be given of the amount of assessment on the accused's house or place of business, and of the amount payable on account of the license which the accused should have taken out.

THE judgment of the Honorary Magistrate in this case was, as far as material, as follows :—

“ In this case Mr. J. Wood is charged by the Corporation of Calcutta for keeping a boarding-house at No. 5, Wood Street, without having taken out a license as required by s. 75, Beng. Act IV of 1876. This case has occupied the attention of the Court for some days; nearly all the facts of this case have been denied. I think that, in cases of this nature, the Municipality should provide the prosecuting officer with legal assistance which would save a deal of time and trouble. A License Inspector can hardly be expected to understand law, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses in a contested case such as this. The case, however, seems to me not to be one of much difficulty. The charge is, as I have already [892] stated, for keeping a boarding-house without having taken out a license, the keeping of a boarding-house being a trade within the meaning of the Act for which it is compulsory to take out a license. No attempt has been made before me to give any legal definition of the term ‘the keeping of a boarding-house,’ and it has not been attempted to be denied, that persons other than members of the defendant's family did lodge and board in his house; but it is contended that they were personal friends :

* Criminal Motion, No. 112 of 1882, against the order of H. M. Rustomjee, Esq., Honorary Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 1st April 1882.

that no strangers were taken in ; and that the monthly sums they paid to the defendant were only their shares of the monthly expenses. A good deal has been said about a board having been hung up outside the house with the words ' Rooms to let ' on it, although the fact of a board with these words upon it would in no way go to prove that the owner or occupier of the house kept a boarding-house ; still in the present case it would go some way to disprove the evidence that all defendant's lodgers were his personal friends, for he would hardly invite his friends to lodge with him in so public a manner. I do not, however, lay much stress on this fact, for several of the bills put in clearly show that the defendant did keep a boarding-house, as they are expressly stated to be for ' board and lodging.' The witness Mr. Brown states that he shared expenses with the defendant, but he also admits having paid Rs. 90 a month during the months he stayed at defendant's house. The witness Mr. Rymer says, that he shared the expenses and paid Rs. 70 a month ; he also, on being questioned by the Court, says, that he paid Mrs. Sandeman, who kept a boarding-house in Lindsay Street, Rs. 80 a month for a room upstairs, and Rs. 70 for one in the lower floor. Mr. Burroughs, a witness for the defence, stated, that he frequently visited the defendant at his house last year—two or three times a month. He did not know to his knowledge that Mr. Wood had friends living with him, while it has been admitted that Mr. Wood had friends staying with him. Mr. Burroughs says he knew the defendant for thirty-five years, and was on visiting terms. He went to defendant two or three times a month last year, and yet he says that he had no friends boarding and lodging with him to his knowledge. The defendant in his statement to the Court says that he kept no regular accounts, but charged the friends living with him so much as their share of expenses, but it seems strange that such monthly expenses did not vary. The witnesses Brown and Rymer, it may be presumed, are men of business, and if the arrangement was that they were to share the expenses of the house, it is unlikely that they would have accepted the defendant's estimate of their share of the expenses without making some enquiry as to how such a share was arrived at. It has not been shown to the Court what the defendant is doing. Taking all the circumstances of this case into consideration, I hold that the defendant did keep a boarding-house during the year 1881 without having taken out a license as required by s. 75, Beng. Act IV of 1876, and I [893] convict him under s. 77 of the said Act, and sentence him to a fine of Rs. 75. The unstamped bills to be impounded and sent to the Collector of Stamps."

The defendant applied for, and obtained in the High Court, a rule to show cause why the conviction should not be set aside and the fine refunded.

The Advocate-General, Offg. (Mr. Phillips) showed cause against the rule.

Mr. Mitra in support of the rule.—I understand the learned Advocate-General is going to question the jurisdiction of this Court under s. 147 of Act X of 1875 over Justices of the Peace. [The Advocate-General.—I don't contend that.] The prosecution is under Beng. Act IV of 1876, s. 75, which requires every person exercising certain trades, etc., specified in the third schedule of the Act to take out a license ; the third schedule gives three classes under which such persons may be assessed, and before a person can be called upon to take out a license, the class to which he shall belong must, under s. 78, be previously determined either by the Chairman or by some one authorised by him for that purpose. Now in this case there is no evidence to show that Mr. Wood was assessed at all, nor is there any evidence to show that information of such assessment was given to him as required by s. 99 of Beng. Act IV and s. 10 of Beng. Act VI of 1881. Moreover, a person cannot be fined under s. 77 as amended by s. 9 of Act VI of 1881, unless and until the requirement of ss. 78 and 79 have been fulfilled; because, under s. 77, the penalty for not taking out a license is not to exceed three times the amount payable by the licensee. Therefore, the amount payable by the licensee not having been fixed, the Magistrate could not impose any fine under s. 77 of the Act.

[Mr. Mitra was going into the evidence to show that no case has been made out against Mr. Wood, when the Court called upon the Advocate-General to show how there could be any prosecution and fine without having the amount payable for the license previously ascertained.]

Cur. ad. vult.

Prinsep, J.—The petitioner Wood has been convicted under s. 77, Beng. Act IV of 1876 (the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act) of having, during 1881, exercised the profession of boardinghouse-keeper without the license required by s. 75, and has been fined Rs. 75.

Several questions have been raised before us on the merits of the case, and of these the most important is, whether or not petitioner Wood keeps a boarding-house within the meaning of the Act. The term 'boarding-house' is not defined in the law. Looking, however, at the manner in which it is used in Calcutta, we think that, in order to obtain a conviction, it must be shown that the accused held himself out to the public as one whose business or profession it is to receive boarders for profit. In the present case there is evidence on the record sufficient to justify the finding of the lower Court, that the petitioner Wood kept a boarding-house. Nevertheless the sentence of fine cannot be upheld. The law (s. 77) limits the fine in such a case to three times the amount payable in respect of the license which has not been taken out. There is absolutely no evidence on the record to show what is the amount payable on account of the petitioner's license, nor is there any evidence regarding the amount of assessment on petitioner's house or place of business on which any calculation of the amount payable on account of such business could be made.

Under such circumstances, we set aside the order passed, and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded. We altogether agree with the remarks of the Magistrate regarding the result of such prosecution being left in the hands of an inexperienced Municipal officer. Much valuable time has been wasted in this Court on arguments arising from irregularities and omissions which would not have taken place if the prosecution had been properly conducted; and we consider that the employment of the Advocate-General in this Court to defend the conviction would in all probability have been avoided, if some legal practitioner, even of the lowest grade, had been retained to appear before the Magistrate.

Rule absolute.

High Court, Power of, as a Court of Revision—Order of acquittal—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 296

The High Court, as a Court of Revision, will not interfere with an order of acquittal.

IN this case it appeared that the accused Hingoo Raj had applied to the Municipal authorities of Dacca for permission to make an excavation, and permission was refused; but, notwithstanding that, Hingoo Raj proceeded to make the excavation. For this he was charged before a Bench of Honorary Magistrates of Dacca; but he was acquitted, as it did not appear to the Magistrates why permission to make the excavation had been refused. The Magistrate of Dacca referred the matter to the High Court under s. 296 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

No one appeared on the reference.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—It is a rule of this Court that, as a Court of Revision, it cannot interfere with an order of acquittal.

Let the papers be returned.

Witness, Examination of Commission in criminal case—High Court's Criminal Procedure Act (X of 1875), s. 76.

The High Court refused to issue a commission in a criminal case, on the ground that such a course would be unsatisfactory and dangerous to the interests of the prisoner.

IN this case an application, on petition, was made by Mrs. Dunne, a resident of Darjeeling, one of the witnesses for the prosecution, that she might be excused from attending the Court as a witness, and that the evidence should be taken by Commission on interrogatories. The accused had been committed by the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling to take his trial at the June Sessions of the High Court on a charge of criminal breach of trust as a public servant.

Mrs. Dunne's petition and affidavit in support of the application stated, that she was sixty-three years of age, and for the last thirty-two years had not been to the plains ; that she was examined as a witness on behalf of the Crown before the Deputy Commissioner ; and that she was suffering from congestion of the liver, and was advised by her medical attendant that her present state of health was such that it would be unsafe for her, and dangerous to her life, to go to Calcutta for the purpose of being examined as a witness or for any other purpose.

The affidavit of Dr. Joubert, Civil Surgeon of Darjeeling, stated, that Mrs. Dunne had been, and was, under his treatment for congestion of the liver ; and that, considering her age and state of health, it would be inadvisable, if not dangerous, for her to go to Calcutta at this time of year for examination as a witness.

The affidavit of Mr. Hume, Solicitor, conducting the prosecution, stated, that Mrs. Dunne was a material witness for the [897] Crown, and that without her evidence it would not be safe for the Crown to proceed to a hearing of the case.

The Officiating Standing Counsel (Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, with him Mr. J. G. Apcar) for the Crown submitted, that the petition and affidavits showed sufficient ground for the issue of a commission to examine the witness, Mrs. Dunne, under s. 76 of Act X of 1875, the High Courts' Criminal Procedure Act.

Mr. M. P. Gasper for the prisoner opposed the application, and contended that s. 76 had no application to a case like this, inasmuch as it did not provide for inconvenience to a witness subpoenaed to attend ; that the illness alleged was not sufficient to cause inability in the witness to attend the High Court ; and that to cross-examine her on commission by interrogatories would be a most unsatisfactory mode of proceeding and prejudicial to the interests of the prisoner. In the interests of the prisoner the witnesses ought to be before the Court and jury for cross-examination in a criminal case.

Wilson, J., refused the application, saying that, in a criminal case, the issue of a commission would be a most unsatisfactory course of proceeding, and one dangerous to the interests of the prisoner.

Application refused.

Umbica Prosad Tewary and others.....Plaintiffs

Ram Sahay Lall and others.....Defendants."

Hindu Law—Mitakshara Law—Sale of joint family-property—Debts legally contracted by father.

There is no foundation either in the Mitakshara law itself, or in any decisions passed by the Judicial Committee, for the broad proposition that in all cases under a sale in execution of a money-decree against the father in a joint family, consisting of a father and sons, whether adults or minors, nothing but the father's share passes.

The result of an examination of the leading cases on the subject is, that in each such case, the question as to what was sold in execution must be first determined (the mere circumstance that a decree was obtained against the father alone is not conclusive upon the point); and it should further be enquired whether the father was sued in his representative capacity or not, and if not so sued, then whether the sons are entitled to set aside the sale qua their shares.

The decision of the Privy Council in Deen Dayal Lall v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (L. R., 4 I. A., 247; S. C., 1 L.R., 3 Cal., 198) in no way conflicts with the principle laid down in the case of Muddun Thakoor v. Kanto Lall (L. R., 1 I. A., 321; S. C., 14 B. L. R., 187).

IN this case the plaintiffs stated that defendant No. 6, the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, and grandfather of plaintiff No. 3, were members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law; that defendant No. 6 had, without legal necessity, contracted a personal debt to one Mussamut Tetra, who sued him alone and obtained a money-decree against him, and in execution of this decree put up for sale the judgment-debtor's share in four annas of the property belonging to the joint family, which was purchased by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, 4 and 5, who entered into possession.

[899] The plaintiffs, thereupon, brought this suit to recover possession of a three-anna share in the four annas share sold. The auction-purchasers contended that the debt was contracted for legal purposes; that the whole four annas share, and not the judgment-debtor's share only, was sold at the sale, and that they were bona fide purchasers for value without notice. The decree-holder was made a defendant, but did not appear.

The Subordinate Judge found that the debt had not been contracted for immoral purposes; that the property was ancestral; that the father had been sued in his representative capacity; and that the entire four annas passed at the sale, the defendants being bona fide purchasers for value without notice; and that, on the authority of Suraj Bunssee Koer v. Sheopershad Singh (L. R., 6 I. A., 88; 1 L. R., 5 Cal., 148), the plaintiffs were bound to pay their father's debts legally contracted, and could not claim to recover their shares from the auction-purchasers, who were not bound to go back beyond the decree; and on these findings dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. R. E. Twidale and Baboo Roghunath Pershad Singh for the Appellants.

Baboo Chunder Mudhub Ghose and Baboo Rajendra Nath Bose for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.), was delivered by

Mitter, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by Umbica Prosad and Sungthadin Tewary, sons of Thakoordeen Tewary, and Adiadin Tewary, grandson of the said Thakoordeen Tewary by a deceased son, to recover possession of a three annas share of Mouza Chuck Nyamut, out of the four annas share of the mouza, which constituted the joint family-property of these plaintiffs and Thakoordeen Tewary. The sixteen annas of Mouza Chuck Nyamut was registered in the Collector's Register as Estate No. 66. It is alleged in the plaint that a decree was obtained against Thakoordeen for money by Mussa-[900]mut Tetra and others, and in execution of that decree only Thakoordeen's share in the family-property was sold on the 16th April 1877, and it was purchased by the defendants, who are the respondents before us. Then it is further alleged that, although only the interest of Thakoordeen was sold, the purchasers, the defendants—respondents in this case—under that purchase, succeeded in obtaining delivery of possession through the Court of the entire family-property, viz., a four-annas share of the aforesaid mouza, and thus dispossessed the plaintiffs, on the 27th of July 1877, of their share. The plaintiffs, therefore, brought this suit to recover possession of that share, viz., three annas, which, on partition of the entire family-property, would fall to them. The plaint was registered on the 28th August 1879. The defendants, respondents, in answer to this suit, alleged that the entire four-annas of the mouza in dispute was the self-acquired property of Thakoordeen, although it was purchased in the benance of his father Jagadin Tewary. They further alleged in their written statement that Thakoordeen, who, being the father of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, and grand-father of the plaintiff No. 3, was naturally the manager of the joint family-property, had an aurutdaree business, which was conducted for the benefit of the joint family; that, in the course of dealing regarding that business, he having become indebted to Mussamut Tetra and others, a suit was brought against him and a money-decree was obtained. It is also alleged that the sons, who were adults, and especially Umbica Prosad Tewary, the plaintiff No. 1, took an active part in the management of the aurutdaree business, of which, it is stated, he was the cashier. The defendants further alleged that the whole of the family-property was sold and purchased by them. They contend that, being bonâ fide purchasers for value of the whole of the family-property which was advertised to be sold in execution of a decree against the father Thakoordeen, they were entitled to take possession of the whole of the said family-property, which they did without any objection.

The lower Court has held upon the evidence adduced by the parties that the entire family-property passed by this auction-sale, and accordingly dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

[901] The lower Court mainly relies upon the Privy Council decisions in the cases of Muddun Thakoor v. Kanto Lall (L. R., 1 I. A., 321; s. c., 14 B. L. R., 187), and Suraj Bunssee Koer v. Sheopershad Singh (L. R., 6 I. A., 88; s. c., I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148), and considers that the present case is distinguishable from the decision passed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Deen Dayal Lall v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (L. R., 4 I. A., 247; s. c., I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198). In this appeal before us the main contention of the plaintiffs is, that the present case is governed by their Lordships' decision in the last-mentioned case. The defendants, respondents, on the other hand, contend, that the whole of the family-property passed under the execution-sale according to the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Muddun Thakoor v. Kanto Lall (L. R., 1 I. A., 321; s. c. 14 B. L. R., 187) and Suraj Bunssee Koer v. Sheopershad Singh (L. R., 6 I. A., 88; s. c. I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148). We do not think that there is any foundation either in the Mitakshara law itself, or in any decision passed by the Judicial Committee, for the broad proposition that, in all cases under a sale in execution of a money, decree against the father in a joint family consisting of a father and sons, whether adults or minors, nothing but the father's share passes. On the other hand, if the leading cases on the subject, viz., Muddun Thakoor v. Kanto Lall (L. R., 1 I. A., 321; s. c., 14 B. L. R., 187), Deen Dayal Lall v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (L. R., 4 I. A., 247 s. c. I. L. R. 3 Cal. 198), Suraj Bunssee Koer v. Sheopershad Singh (L. R., 6 I. A., 88; s. c. I. L. R. 5 Cal., 148), and Bissessur Lal Sahoo v. Maharajah Luckmessur Singh (L. R., 6 I. A., 233), be carefully collated and examined, it would appear that this contention is not sound. Of the cases cited above, that of Muddun Thakoor v. Kanto Lall (L. R., 1 I. A., 321; s. c., 14 B. L. R., 187) closely resembles the present. In Muddun Thakoor v. Kanto Lall (L. R., 1 I. A., 321; s. c., 14 B. L. R., 187), the defendant purchased at a sale in execution of a decree against two persons, who were fathers of the plaintiffs in that case. The Judicial Committee, after finding that the plaintiffs in that case had failed to prove that the debt, which was the basis of that decree, was contracted for immoral purposes, says: "It appears that Muddun Mohun Thakoor purchased at a sale under an execution of a decree against the two fathers. He found that a suit had been brought against the two fathers; [902] that a Court of Justice had given a decree against them in favour of a creditor; that the Court had given an order for the particular property to be put up for sale under the execution, and therefore, it appears to their Lordships that he was perfectly justified, within the principle of the case which has already been referred to in 6th Moore's Indian Appeal Cases (Hunooman Pershad Panday v. Mussamat Babooce Munraj Koonuceree 6 Moore's I. A., 433), in purchasing the property, and paying the purchase-money bonâ fide for the purchase of the estate." Then their Lordships cite the passage bearing upon this question from the report of the case mentioned above, and after setting it out in extenso they go on to observe: "The same rule has been applied in the case of a purchaser of joint ancestral property. A purchaser under an execution is surely not bound to go back beyond the decree to ascertain whether the Court was right in giving the decree, or, having given it, in putting up the property for sale under an execution upon it. It has already been shown that if the decree was a proper one, the interest of the sons, as well as the interest of the fathers, in the property, although it was ancestral, were liable for the payment of the fathers' debts. The purchaser under that execution, it appears to their Lordships, was not bound to go further back than to see that there was a decree against those two gentlemen; that the property was properly liable to satisfy the decree, if the decree had been given properly against them; and having inquired into that, and having bonâ fide purchased the estate under the execution, and bonâ fide paid a valuable consideration for the property, the plaintiffs are not entitled to come in, and to set aside all that has been done under the decree and execution, and recover back the estate from the defendant." In that case, therefore, it is clearly laid down that where a decree is properly obtained against the father of a Mitakshara family in his representative capacity for debts which are not proved to have been contracted for immoral purposes, and the property is sold in execution of that decree, the whole of the family-property passes. It is further laid down that if the property is purchased by a third party, and if there is nothing on the face of the decree or proceedings to show that [903] the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, the purchaser need not go beyond the decree. Now it is stated that this rule, thus distinctly laid down in that case, was to a certain extent modified in the case of Deen Dayal Lall v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (L. R., 4 I. A., 247; S.C., 1 L. R. 3 Cal., 198). Having carefully examined this latter case, we do not think that there is any foundation for this contention. The suit in that case was brought by one Jugdeep Narain Singh, who was the son of Tofany Singh, to recover possession of a certain share of a family-property, which belonged to Jugdeep and his father Tofany. From the printed record before the Privy Council it appears, that Tofany, the father, whether at the time of the sale or not, it does not appear clear, but at one time, was joint in estate with his two uncles, and the particular share which was the subject-matter of suit in that case was the share which belonged to Tofany and his son Jugdeep. The Court of First Instance, finding that there was no legal necessity for contracting the debts which formed the basis of the decree passed against the father, held, that the right, title, and interest of the father alone were sold. On appeal the District Judge came to the conclusion that there was legal necessity proved, and upon that ground held, that the whole of the family-property passed by the auction sale. The District Judge accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The case came up before this Court in Special Appeal, and a Division Bench of this Court held, upon the construction of the sale proceedings, that only the interest of the father passed by the auction-sale. In these proceedings the property that was brought to sale was described as "the rights and proprietary and mokurari title and share of Tofany Singh," the judgment-debtor. The Court, therefore held, that the purchaser under that sale could not, under any circumstances, acquire anything more than the interest of the father; but they, being further of opinion, that such interest was not saleable according to the Mitakshara law, decreed the plaintiff's claim. On appeal to the Judicial Committee, the learned Counsel who appeared before them for the defendant, purchaser, mainly raised the question whether such interest as that of a father in a Mitakshara family [904] was saleable in execution of a decree or not. Therefore the only question which the Judicial Committee had to consider in deciding that case was, whether the interest of a member of a joint Hindu family under the Mitakshara law was saleable in execution of a decree or not. Their Lordships observe (page 251) "that the first and principal question that arises on the appeal is, whether the appellant acquired a good title even to the right, title, and interest of the father." There is, however, one passage in the judgment (to which I shall presently refer) which has been generally considered to have laid down this proposition of law, viz., that where a decree is obtained against a father in a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law without making the sons defendants, all that can be sold in execution of the decree against the father is the father's interest only. The passage to which I refer is to the following effect: "This issue, however, seems to their Lordships to be immaterial in the present suit, because whatever may have been the nature of the debt, the appellant cannot be taken to have acquired by the execution sale more than the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor. If he had sought to go further, and to enforce his debt against the whole property, and the co-sharers therein, who were not parties to the bond, he ought to have framed his suit accordingly, and have made those co-sharers parties to it. By the proceedings which he took he could not get more than what was seized and sold in execution, viz., the right, title, and interest of the father. If any authority be required for this proposition, it is sufficient to refer to the cases of Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Sreemutty Kaminee Dassee (11 Moore's I. A., 241) and Bajum Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lal Awasthi (L. R., 2 I. A., 275)." Now these observations were made with reference to the particular facts of that case; their Lordships say "that if he," that is to say the creditor, "had chosen to go further and to enforce his debt against the whole property and the co-sharers therein, he ought to have framed his suit accordingly." If this observation referred to Jugdeep and his father only, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee would not have used the words "and the co-sharers therein," because there would be only one [905] co-sharer, viz., the son. It has been already stated that there were other co-sharers, viz., the uncles of the father, as appears from the record. It seems to me that their Lordships, in the passage cited, were referring to the question whether by the sale the whole of the family-property belonging to the father and his uncles passed or not. And they say that if it was the object to bring the whole of the family-property to sale, the plaintiff in the first suit should have made the co-sharers, namely, the uncles of Tofany, parties to the suit. Therefore there is no foundation for the contention that the passage above cited lays down generally this proposition of law, namely, that where a decree is obtained against the father alone in a joint Mitakshara family consisting of the father and sons, under no circumstances could anything more than the interest of the father be brought to sale in execution. The decision, therefore, of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Deen Dayal Lall v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (L. R., 4 I. A., 247; s.c., I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198) in no way conflicts with the principle laid down in the case of Muddun Thakoor v. Kanto Lall (L. R., 1 I. A., 321; s.c., 14 B. L. R., 187). That is also evident from the fact that the same principle is laid down again in the still later case of Suraj Bunssee Koer v. Sheopershad Singh (L. R., 6 I. A., 88; s.c., I. L. R., 5 Cal. 148), and it appears from the report of the last-mentioned case that the case of Deen Dayal Lall v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (L. R. 4 I. A., 247; s.c., I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198) was referred to and considered. In the case of Suraj Bunssee Koer v. Sheopershad Singh (L. R., 6 I. A., 88; s.c., I. L. R. 5 Cal. 148), after citing a decision of the Sadr Dewany Adawlut of the year 1861, their Lordships observe: "The judgment, moreover, and this is the portion of it that is chiefly material to the determination of the present appeal, affirms the principle laid down in the judgment of the Sadr Dewany Adawlut, that a purchaser under an execution is not bound to go further back than to see that there was a decree against the father; and that the property was properly liable to satisfy the decree, if the decree had been given properly against the father. In such a case, one who has bonâ fide purchased the estate under the execution, and bonâ fide paid a valuable consideration for it, is protected against the [906] suit of the sons seeking to set aside all that has been done under the decree and execution, and to recover back the estate as joint ancestral property." Their Lordships acted upon the same principle in the case of Bissessur Lal Sahoo v. Maharajah Lucknessur Singh (L. R., 6 L. A. 233). There three decrees were obtained on account of debts contracted by one Nath Dass. Upon the finding of the Judicial Committee in concurrence with that of the High Court, it appears that Nath Dass and his son Ram Nath Dass were members of a joint Hindu family. The decrees were obtained after the deaths of both Nath Dass and Ram Nath Dass, one against Mosaheb Dass, one of the sons of Ram Nath Dass, and the others against the guardian of Mosaheb Dass; and the questions which their Lordships had to determine was, whether, in execution-sales held under these decrees, the entire family property belonging to the joint family, consisting of Nath Dass, Ram Nath Dass and his sons, or only the right, title, and interest of Mosaheb Dass passed to the purchaser. Referring to one of these decrees passed against Mosaheb Dass the Judicial Committee observe: "It appears to their Lordships that, acting on the principle which follows from their finding that this family was joint, it must be assumed that Mosaheb Dass is sued as a representative of the family, and that it must further be assumed that Nath Dass, in taking the lease of the mouza here referred to, Rammuggur, in respect of which the rent was due, must be assumed to have taken it on behalf of the family, and that the debt must be deemed to be a debt from the family." It may be mentioned here that the original debt, the basis of these decrees, was contracted by Nath Dass for the purpose of obtaining a mostajeree lease taken from the defendants, and it is to that lease that their Lordships refer here. Then they go on to observe with reference to the decree framed in the suit that "the fair construction of it, though it may not be drawn up with much accuracy, is, that the decree is not to be executed against the self-acquired property of Mosaheb, but against the family-property, which is there described as that left by Nath Dass for the purpose of distinguishing it from the separate property which may have belonged to Mosaheb. The [907] only difficulty with reference to the second and third decrees arises from a certain informality with which they have been drawn up. It appears to their Lordships that, looking to the substance of the case, this second decree is a decree against the representative of the family in respect of a family debt, and that it is one which could be properly executed against the joint property of the family, and that Muddunpore was a part of that joint property." Then again: - "Their Lordships have, therefore, come to the conclusion that although there may have been some irregularity in drawing up these decrees, they are substantially decrees in respect of a joint debt of the family and against the representative of the family, and may be properly executed against the joint family-property." These passages leave no room for doubt that a decree properly obtained against the father of a joint Hindu family under the Mitakshara law, acting as manager of the family, would bind all the sons who are members of that family; and that if the entire family-property be sold in execution of that decree, and if it be purchased by a bonâ fide purchaser for value, the whole of the family-property would pass. The result of the examination of these cases is, that in each case the question as to what was sold in execution must be first determined; the mere circumstance that a decree was obtained against the father alone is not conclusive upon the point. It would be a material question for enquiry, viz., whether the father was sued in his representative character or not. If it be found that he was not sued in his representative character, no further question would arise ; but if on the other hand this question be found in favour of the purchaser, then a further question would arise whether the sons are entitled to set aside the sale quâ their shares. We must then examine the facts of this case in order to determine these questions.

We find that in this case it is well proved that Thakoordeen Tewary was the manager of the joint Hindu family ; that he was carrying on an aurutdaree business for the benefit of the family ; that in that business one of the plaintiffs in this case, viz., Umbica Prosad, materially assisted him and acted in the capacity of cashier. We also find from the plaint which was [908] filed by Mussamut Tetra and others against Thakoordeen that the latter became indebted to the extent of Rs. 1,151-10-3 in the course of his dealings connected with the aurutdaree business. A suit was brought against him on the 9th July 1875. In that suit the defence of Thakoordeen Tewary was, that the claim of the plaintiffs was very much exaggerated, and that he was indebted to the extent of Rs. 134 only. In support of this defence Umbica Prosad, the plaintiff No. 1 in this case, was examined. The Court before which that case came on for decision on the 10th January 1876 passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. On the 14th March 1876, the decree-holders applied to execute that decree, and the petition, which was filed for the purpose of obtaining an order for execution, prayed that the Court would be pleased "to seize and attach the properties specified below, and to sell the same and pay off the amount due under the decree"; and one of the properties "specified below" was No. 66 of Towzee, four annas of the entire sixteen annas, the milkiut and malguzari rights of the debtor in Mouza Chuck Nyamut. Thereupon an order was made by the Court on the 15th March 1876, directing the proper officer of the Court to attach the four annas milkiut right in Mouza Chuck Nyamut, and in accordance with that order the attachment was effected. Before the property was sold, Thakoordeen preferred an appeal against the decree, and that appeal was dismissed on the 15th November 1876. After that appeal was dismissed, a notification of the sale of the property attached was issued, and it ran in the following words : "Notification of sale of the rights and interests in the under-mentioned properties for the realization of the amount of the decree, dated 10th January 1876"; and one of "the undermentioned properties" was No. 66 of Towzee Chuck Nyamut out of the area of Abgela. Then there were certain conditions of sale, the first of which was that, "with the exception of the right and title of the debtor, the right and interest of no one else in the property in question will be sold"; and on the 17th May 1877 the sale was confirmed. The rubakary confirming the sale, after reciting that the property No. 2, as per detail below, to wit, No. 1, four annas of the entire sixteen annas, the milkiut and malguzari property of the debtor in Mouza Chuck [909] Nyamut, out of the area of Abgela, Pargana Azimabad, Zilla Patna, bearing Towzee No. 66, and paying Government revenue Rs. 175-8, the right and interest of the debtor, was on the appointed day, that is to say, on the 16th April 1877, sold in the Court of the Judge of Patna, concludes in these terms : "That the sale of property No. 2,—that is to say, four annas of the entire sixteen annas, the milkiut and malguzari right and interest of the debtor in Mouza Chuck Nyamut out of the area of Abgela, Pargana Azimabad, Zilla Patna, bearing Towzee No. 66, and paying Government revenue Rs. 175-8, held on the 16th April 1877, be confirmed in the name of the auction-purchasers." Then, on the 7th of July 1877, a purwanna was issued by the Court to deliver possession to the purchasers of the entire four annas, the milkiut and malguzari property, the right and share of the debtor in Mouza Chuck Nyamut. It appears to us from the documents mentioned above that, in execution of the decree, which was obtained by Mussamut Tetra and others, the entire four annas, which constituted the family property, was sold. No doubt, in the sale-proclamation, one of the conditions of sale was, that, with the exception of the right and title of the debtor, the right and interest of no one else in the property in question would be sold; but this is one of the usual conditions of sale which are inserted in all notifications. Moreover, if, upon the evidence we come to the conclusion that Thakoordeen was sued in his representative capacity, that is to say, that he represented all the members of the family, then it must be considered that the real debtors in the decree were all the members of the family. Having regard to the circumstances under which the original debt was contracted, and having regard to the circumstance that the adult sons, or at least one of them, assisted the father in carrying on the trade in the course of the dealings of which the debt was contracted, and to the fact that in the sale-proceedings the entire family-property was described as the property to be sold, we feel no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the whole family-property was brought to sale.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the decree of the lower Court is correct, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), ss. 5, 6—Suit to compel registration—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 77.

The provisions of s. 5 of Act XV of 1877 apply to suits instituted under the provisions of s. 77 of the Registration Act (III of 1877).

IN this case the plaintiffs sought to have a kabuliati registered. The plaint alleged that the defendant had executed the kabuliati; that, in the Sub-Registry Office of Kishengunge, the defendant denied execution, and therefore registration was refused by the Sub-Registrar; and that the plaintiffs appealed to the District Registrar, who dismissed the appeal on the 21st of November

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No 1965 of 1880, against the decree of F. Cowley, Esq., Officiating Judge of Purnea, dated the 4th August 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Lal Behary Dey, Munsif of Kishengunge, dated the 29th March 1880.

1879. The present suit was instituted on the 27th of December 1879, under the provisions of s. 77 of the Registration Act (III of 1877). The Munsif dismissed the suit as barred by limitation, citing Purran Chunder Ghose v. Mutty Lall Ghose Jahira (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 50), notwithstanding it appeared that his Court was closed from the 20th of December 1879 to the 26th of December 1879, inclusive, on account of the Christmas and Mohurrum holidays.

On appeal the District Judge, having stated the facts, said:—"The question then is—Does s. 5, Act XV of 1877, apply or not? The appellant's pleader refers to the case of Behari Lall Mookerjee v. Mungolanath Mookerjee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 110). That points out the distinction between s. 6, Act XV of 1877, and s. 6, Act IX of 1871, and shows that 'the rules prescribed by the Limitation Act for computing the period of limitation are applicable' to rent-suits. The decision refers specially to s. 12 of Act XV of 1877, and the argument applies equally to all sections in Part III of that Act. But the explanations to s. 4 and s. 5, Act XV of 1877, obviously refer to cases for which a period of limitation is prescribed in Act XV of 1877. Section 5 of [911] that Act, if applied in the present instance, would extend the period of limitation prescribed by s. 77, Act III of 1877. So far, therefore, as the question turns upon the application to this case of s. 5, Act XV of 1877, I am of opinion that the Munsif's view of it is correct. There is no provision in Part III of Act XV of 1877 which will avail the appellants. The appeal is accordingly, dismissed."

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Bahoo Bhoobun Mohun Biswas for the Appellants argued, that s. 5, Act XV of 1877 applied to the case, and that the decision of the lower Appellate Court was wrong—Golap Chund Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Das Biswas (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 314).

Moonshee Serajul Islam for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.):—

Cunningham, J.—We think that the proper interpretation to be put upon s. 5 of the Limitation Act, considered along with s. 6, is that, except as defined in s. 6, the general provisions of the Limitation Act are applicable to cases for which periods of limitation are specially provided by local or special law: and that therefore s. 5 of the Limitation Act ought to have been allowed to operate in the present case.

We accordingly set aside the decisions of the lower Courts, and remand the case to the first Court for a decision on the merits.

Costs will abide the result.

Tottenham, J.—I desire simply to add that s. 5 is of general application to all suits notwithstanding anything contained in s. 6.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

Kistibandi agreeing to pay off a debt due under a decree by Instalments—Account stated Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sched. ii, art. 64.

A, being the holder of a decree against B, B, on the 7th July 1875, entered into a kistibandi and filed it in Court, setting out that he would pay off the debt due under the decree by certain instalments, and that, in default of payment of one instalment, the whole amount of the debt might be recovered by taking out execution of the decree. By the kistibandi certain immoveable property was pledged to secure the debt, but the kistibandi was not registered. B failed to pay the first instalment, which fell due on the 14th August 1875; and A, on the 19th June 1878, applied for execution of his decree, but the application was refused, and A referred to a regular suit.

In a suit brought by A on the 29th January 1879, against B for the whole debt due under the decree held that, inasmuch as no appeal had been preferred against the order disallowing execution, A was bound by that decision; but that the suit might be taken to be one for an account stated in writing with an agreement for payment at a certain stated period of time as regards the instalments due, which were not barred by limitation; the suit as regards the instalments which had not fallen due being premature, and those previous to the 29th January 1876 being barred by art. 64 of the Limitation Act.

ON the 19th January 1874 the husband of the present plaintiff obtained a decree against the present defendant, and in that case, pending execution, the defendant entered into a kistibandi, dated the 7th July 1875, which was filed in Court, agreeing to pay off the debt without interest by instalments from 1875 to 1882, and at the same time mortgaging certain immoveable property to secure the debt. The kistibandi provided that, on default of payment of one instalment, the entire amount due might be realized, with interest at 1 per cent. per mensem, by execution of the decree. The husband of the plaintiff having died, his widow (the plaintiff), on failure of the defendant to pay on 30th Sawan 1282 (corresponding with 14th August 1875) the first instalment, applied for execution of the decree. The [913] application was refused on the 29th June 1878, and the widow was referred to a regular suit.

On the 29th January 1879 she then brought the present suit for the entire debt due to her deceased husband, and asked for a decree for realization of the amount by the sale of the mortgaged properties.

The defendant contended that the claim was barred by limitation. He denied execution of the kistibandi, and contended that, in any case, it could not be admitted in evidence, being unregistered.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 947 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Matadin, Subordinate Judge of Gya, dated the 28th February 1880, affirming the decree of Moulvi Feda Hosain, Munsif of Aurangabad, dated the 21st August 1879.

The Munsif found that the kistibandi was genuine, and that it was admissible in evidence as a bond without registration; and that limitation did not begin to run till the 29th June 1878, when execution of the decree was applied for and refused; and he therefore decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff, but made no declaration of any lien on the property mortgaged.

The defendant appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who, for other reasons than those given by the Munsif, not mentioning, however, the point of limitation, affirmed the decision of the Munsif, and dismissed the appeal.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Koruna Sindhoo Mookerjee for the Appellant contended that limitation ran before the 29th June 1878, and that, even allowing plaintiff the time occupied in the execution-proceedings, the suit was barred.

Mr. Twidale for the Respondent.

Mitter, J. (who, after stating the facts, continued): --The lower Appellate Court dealt with the case apparently on two grounds: (1) that there was a verbal contract to pay the judgment-debt by instalments, and the suit would lie on that contract. (2) that a fresh cause of action arose on defendant's failure to pay the contract instalments.

[914] The defendant appeals on the ground that the lower Appellate Court has omitted to try the question of limitation, and contends that limitation ran before 29th June 1878, and that, even allowing plaintiff the time occupied in the execution-proceedings, which terminated on that day, the suit is barred.

It certainly appears to us that the Subordinate Judge's decree is erroneous on his own view of the case. If there was a cause of action on defendant's failure to pay the instalments, then certainly the suit was not brought in time from the 14th August 1875, the date of the first instalment, and the claim should have been reduced by the amount of that, and possibly of other instalments also.

Then it appears to us, that the Subordinate Judge has made a case for the plaintiff. She did not claim on a verbal contract, but on a written one; but no ground of appeal has been presented upon this point.

We are unable to see upon what grounds the plaintiff can lay her cause of action on the 29th June 1878.

The suit, therefore, resolves itself into this: What is the nature of the suit upon the kistibandi, and what is the date from which limitation runs, and what is the period of limitation?

The nearest approach to a correct answer to the first question is, that it is a suit for money payable on an account stated: see art. 61, sched. ii, Act XV of 1877. The petition or kistibandi is not inadmissible as evidence of the debt, and we may, we think, take it to be an account stated in writing, with an agreement for payment at a certain stated period of time. The time for the payment of the first instalment arrived on 14th August 1875, and one of the conditions of the agreement was, that, on defendant's failure to pay one of those, the plaintiff might take out execution for the whole amount under the existing decree.

But it has been decided by a competent Court that this condition is invalid. The parties are bound by that decision, because there has been no appeal against it. It is evident, therefore, that the kistibandi or petition contains two conditions which are invalid and cannot be carried out,—viz.: (i) the clause about [915] the hypothecation of immoveable property, and (ii) the condition referred to above. That being so, the case cannot come under art. 75 of the Limitation Act: because, conceding that the petition of kistibandi was a bond, it did not provide that, on default of one instalment, the whole amount shall be due. The provision was that the whole amount shall be realizable by execution of the decree.

This provision has been held by a competent Court in a proceeding between the parties to be invalid. Putting, therefore, these two invalid conditions out of consideration, the petition or the kistibandi amounts to this. On an adjustment of accounts between the parties on the 7th July 1875, Rs. 689-14-15 were found due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and the former promised to liquidate the debt in certain instalments. In our opinion, therefore, the case is governed by art. 64.

In this view of the contract between the parties, the suit is premature as regards the instalments which had not fallen due at the time when the suit was instituted. For these instalments the suit must be dismissed on this ground.

As regards the first instalment, which had fallen due more than three years before the institution of the suit, viz., on 14th August 1875, the claim is barred. The plaintiff is entitled to a decree for the other instalments due before 29th January 1879.

The appeal will, therefore, be allowed, and the decrees of the lower Courts set aside, and in lieu thereof a decree passed for the sum of Rs. 248-4, being the amount of the instalments falling due on 9th February 1876 and following dates down to 29th January 1879.

The costs of the suit and appeal throughout will be allowed to the plaintiff and defendant proportionately to the result.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[ACCOUNT STATED—LIMITATION—KISTIBANDI—

This criticism appears in Starling's Limitation (1911), 5th Edn., p. 262:—It should be noted that the account stated must be in writing as well as signed; consequently no mere acknowledgment of a sum due will bring a case under this Article, and this provision prevents it clashing with sec. 19. Any document which is a mere acknowledgment must be dealt with under that section. These distinctions make the law different to what it is in England. These special provisions of this Article were apparently overlooked in 8 Cal. 912, where Mitter and Maclean, JJ., held that a kistibandi agreeing to pay a decree by instalments was evidence of an account stated. In this case, however, the Court was hampered by the fact that the kistibandi also related to land, and was not registered, and that the parties were bound by an unappealed order of the Court below on a question of execution.”]

Jassoda Koor... ..Judgment-debtor

The Land Mortgage Bank of India.....Decree-holders.

Execution of decree—Transfer of decree for execution—Order passed in Court to which proceedings are transferred—Appeal irregularly brought after time has been granted to apply to Original Court.

Under s. 239 of Act X of 1877, a Court to which a decree has been transferred may refer the objector to the Court which passed the decree.

Certain objections were taken in an execution-proceeding, and the Judge before whom the objections were heard passed an order disposing of the objections save as to two, which he decided he had no jurisdiction to entertain. The objector then made a special application to the Judge to obtain time to make an application with reference to these objections to the Court from which the decree had been transferred, and accordingly time was granted him to do so ; but, instead of applying, the objector preferred an appeal to the High Court against the order of the Judge disposing of the objections. The High Court, on hearing the appeal, made the appellant pay the costs of the appeal, disapproving strongly of the course taken by the objector.

THE Land Mortgage Bank of India having obtained, in the Patna Court, a decree against one Jassoda Koor, caused this decree to be transferred to the Court of the District Judge of Sarun for execution. The judgment-debtor raised various objections against the execution of the decree, amongst which were, (i) that execution was barred by limitation, and (ii) that the account was incorrectly stated in the proclamation of sale.

The District Judge of Sarun, on the 2nd November 1881, disposed of all the objections saving the two abovementioned ; and as to these he stated that he had no power to go into either the question of limitation or of the correctness of the account, as these questions admittedly had arisen before the case was transferred to his Court, and they, therefore, should have been raised in the Court in which the decree was originally passed. The objector then made a special application to obtain time to apply to the Patna Court with regard to certain of the objections, and one month's time was granted to him to do so ; but, instead [917] of so doing, he appealed to the High Court against the order passed on the 2nd November 1881.

Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Rajendro Nath Bose for the Appellant contended, that the view taken by the lower Court was contrary to the Full Bench ruling in the case of Leake v. Daniel (B. L. R., Sup. Vol. 970 : S.C., 10 W. R. (F. B.), 10).

Baboo Kashi Kant Sen for the Respondents.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 329 of 1881, against the order of J. F. Stevens, Esq., Officiating Judge of Sarun, dated the 2nd of November 1881.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—This appeal arises out of a decision of the Officiating Judge of Sarun, in the matter of the execution of a decree, which was obtained by the decree-holders, respondents before us, against the judgment-debtor, the appellant, in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Patna. The decree was transferred under the provisions of the Code for execution to the District Judge's Court of Sarun. The judgment-debtor raised various objections against the execution of the decree. All these objections have been disposed of by the District Judge of Sarun, excepting two, -viz., the objections relating to the plea of limitation and to the amount due under the decree. In this appeal the judgment of the lower Court is not questioned with reference to the objections which have been disposed of by the District Judge. As regards the plea of limitation, and the objections regarding the amount due under the decree, the District Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain them. He was of opinion that it was for the judgment-debtor to raise them in the Court in which the decree was originally passed, and upon that ground he declined to go into them. It has been contended before us that the view taken by the lower Court of its power in this matter is erroneous, and is contrary to the Full Bench decision in the case of Leake v. Daniel (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 970; s.c., 10 W. R. (F. B.), 10). It seems to us that the District Judge was not right in holding that he had no jurisdiction to entertain these objections. Under the Full Bench decision, no doubt, the Court to which the decree [918] is transferred for execution may entertain objections like the present; but it is not laid down in that Full Bench decision that the Court cannot refer the objector to the Court which passed the decree. Under s. 239 of the present Code, the Court to which a decree is transferred may refer the objector to the Court which passed the decree.

In this case we find that the lower Court had no materials before it upon which it could satisfactorily dispose of the objections taken by the judgment-debtor, and although we do not agree with the lower Court in the view which it has taken, viz., that it had no power at all to entertain these objections, yet we think that, in this case, the proper order that the lower Court should have passed was to postpone the execution proceedings under s. 239, and allow the judgment-debtor sufficient time to apply to the Court which originally passed the decree to entertain and adjudicate upon these objections. With reference to one of them, viz., the plea of limitation, the District Judge of Sarun subsequently did allow the judgment-debtor time to apply to the Patna Court to decide it. We find that an order was passed on the 16th of November, by which one month's time was allowed to the judgment-debtor to make the necessary application to the Patna Court. The judgment-debtor, instead of applying to the Patna Court, preferred this appeal on the 6th December 1881.

We ought to discourage such practices as these. The judgment-debtor, after the case was decided in the lower Court, made a special application to the District Judge to obtain time to make an application with reference to these objections in the Patna Court, and according to the prayer contained in his application the District Judge allowed him one month's time. Instead of taking advantage of this order, the judgment-debtor preferred this appeal. If the judgment-debtor had, in accordance with the order of the District Judge of Sarun, made an application to the Patna Court, the objections would by this time have been disposed of. However, be that as it may, we think that, under the circumstances, we should allow only a very short time to the judgment-debtor to make any objection he may wish to make in the Patna Court, and we [919] accordingly allow him fifteen days from this date for that purpose. As we pass this order under s. 239, we think that, under the circumstances, we should impose this condition on the judgment-debtor under s. 240, that he should pay to the respondents in this case the costs of this appeal. We assess the hearing fee at Rs. 200. If within the time fixed by this Court no application is made by the judgment-debtor to the Patna Court, the judgment-creditors will be at liberty to apply to the Sarun Court to proceed with the execution-proceedings.

Ram Soonder Roy and others.....Defendants

versus

Ram Sahye Bhugut.....Plaintiff.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara family—Suit by lunatic father to recover family property—Limitation Act (IX of 1871) Disability to sue.

A lunatic, a member of a joint Mitakshara family, cannot sue to recover property belonging to the joint family, he being, under the Mitakshara law, disqualified from inheritance, and therefore entitled to no share or partition in the property, but only to maintenance.

THE plaintiff, who was a lunatic and had been so since 1838, sued by his manager to set aside a deed of sale, executed on the 18th January 1844, by his son Abhilukh, in favour of Rungi Bhugut and Sheo Ram Bhugut, and also to set aside certain subsequent transfers by Rungi Bhugut and his purchaser, and an auction-sale held on the 17th December 1850, of the right, title, and interest of Sheo Ram Bhugut, whose right, title, and interest had been sold under Act I of 1845 for default of payment of revenue and purchased by the appellants.

The plaintiff stated that the property in suit belonged to him, and that his son sold the property without his authority and at an inadequate price, and that, therefore, the sale and the subsequent transfer made of the property were invalid.

[920] The defendants contended that the suit was barred by limitation, because more than twelve years had elapsed from the time when the property was sold, and also because no suit had been brought within one year from the date of the auction-sale to set it aside; that the son was an owner of an equal share in the property with his father and was in possession, and that the sale was made for the benefit and support of the family; and that Sheo Ram Bhugut and Rungi Bhugut were bonâ fide purchasers for valuable consideration, and no objection had been taken to their possession for more than thirty years.

The Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was under a legal disability to sue when his cause of action arose, and that the suit, therefore, was not barred; that there was no evidence to show that the sale was made for the benefit of the family; that the father and the son were joint, and that the plaintiff's son had no right before partition to sell a portion of the property as his definite share without the consent of his co-sharer. He, therefore, declared that the sales were invalid, with the exception of the sale of the rights of Sheo Ram in the share sold for arrears of revenue, and gave the plaintiff a decree for half the properties claimed.

The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who agreed with the lower Court, except as to the part of his decision which declared the sale of Sheo Ram's rights to be valid; and as to that he held, that the purchaser at the auction-sale bought the right, title, and interest of Sheo Ram, and that that right was nil, as the sale to Sheo Ram had been declared invalid; he, therefore, gave the plaintiff a decree for the whole of the properties claimed.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Srinath Banerji for the Appellants.

Mitter, J.—The facts of this case are briefly these:—

On the 18th January 1844 the plaintiff's son Abhilukh and defendants Nos. 10 and 11, two sons of Sheo Sohay, the plain-[921]tiff's brother, sold one anna five gandas of Mouza Ram Chawra, seven pies ten krants share of which is the subject-matter of this suit. The sale was made to Rungi and Sheo Ram, ancestors of defendants Nos. 7 to 9. Sheo Ram pledged his share as security for revenue payable by one Hera Mohun in respect of the ticca of an akheri mehal. For default in the payment of this revenue the pledged share of Sheo Ram was sold under the provisions of Act I of 1845 on the 17th December 1850, and purchased by defendants Nos. 1 to 4, the appellants before us. Rungi's share was sold by a private bill of sale, dated the 19th July 1870, to defendants Nos. 3 and 5: the latter again sold his share to defendant No. 6 on the 19th August 1872. The plaintiff seeks to recover a seven pies ten krants share of the mouza in dispute, being half of one anna five gandas, the share originally sold. He evidently excludes the share of his brother Sheo Sohay.

The defendants Nos. 1 to 4, who only are the appellants before us, defended the suit on the ground of limitation, and also on the ground that a valid title under the bill of sale of 1844 passed to the purchasers.

The Subordinate Judge awarded a decree in favour of the plaintiff for a moiety of the share claimed, dismissing the suit as regards the share sold at auction under Act I of 1845.

The District Judge in appeal has awarded a full decree. Hence this appeal.

The defendants pleaded limitation in the lower Courts, but it was over-ruled on the ground that the plaintiff was insane at the time of the sale and that he is still insane. But it is quite clear that the rights of the other members of the family are not only barred, but have been extinguished under the last section of the Limitation Act of 1871, which was in force when this suit was brought. Their rights are vested in the defendants. Under these circumstances, a question arises—viz., whether the plaintiff, an insane person, can maintain this suit for the restoration of the property in dispute to the joint family? The answer to this question depends upon the provisions of the Mitakshara law (which governs this family) relating to the rights of an insane person.

[922] Speaking of persons who are under the Hindu law excluded from inheritance (an insane person is in that category), the Mitakshara in Chap. II Sec. X, vv. 6 and 9, says :—

“They are debarred of their shares if their disqualification arose before the division of the property. But one already separated from his co-heirs is not deprived of his allotment.

“But their sons, whether legitimate or the offspring of the wife by a kinsman, are entitled to allotments if free from similar defects.”

It is clear, therefore, that, on a partition between the plaintiff and his sons, he would not get any share, and his sons would receive the whole property. The rights of those sons have been, as shown above, extinguished, and are now vested in the defendants.

“Partition,” says the author of the Mitakshara, “is the adjustment of divers rights regarding the whole by distributing them in particular portions of the aggregate.”—Chap. I, Sec. 1, v. 4.

Under the Mitakshara law the plaintiff is entitled to receive maintenance from the joint family property, but not to a share or a partition of the said property. The definition of ‘partition,’ as given above, clearly shows that the plaintiff has no such right in the property in dispute as would entitle him to maintain this suit for the purpose of restoring it to the joint family. The plaintiff’s suit must fail upon this ground. In Ram Sahye Bhukkut v. Lalla Laljee Sahye (ante, p. 149), decided by us on the 19th July last, we held the same view as to the rights of the present plaintiff.

The decrees of the lower Courts must, therefore, be reversed, and the plaintiff’s suit dismissed. As this point was not taken in the lower Courts, we will not allow any costs to the defendants.

Appeal allowed.

Appellate Court, power of—Remand order—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 562—Suit for possession after order under the Land Registration Act (Beng. Act VII of 1876)—Onus of proof.

An Appellate Court has no power to remand a case except under the provisions of s. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Where a person who, by an order of the Collector passed under the provisions of the Land Registration Act (Beng. Act VII of 1876), has been declared to be out of possession of certain land brings a suit for the recovery of possession, it lies on him in the first instance to make out a prima facie case.

THE judgment appealed from was as follows:—"This was a suit to establish the plaintiffs' title to certain shares in the kharija taluk called Kisto Nath Sadhoo, and to recover possession of the same, in reversal of an order passed by a Revenue officer under Beng. Act VII of 1876. The plaintiffs assert that one Bhowany Proshad Shaha was originally the owner of one-third share of that kharija taluk; that Bhowany Proshad left four sons—Shumbhoo, Janokey, Jogul, and Nobokisto, all of whom succeeded equally to their father's estate; that Shumbhoo left three sons—Mahabharat, Radhanath, and Chundernath; Janokey, one son, named Choiton; Jogul, one son, named Ramachundra, who again left three sons—Anando, Poorna, and Koilas; that Nobokisto left two sons, Premchand and Nundcoomar, the last of whom has a son named Govind; that the first plaintiff Bhoggomanto, by a kobala dated the 14th of August 1870, purchased the share of Govind, which is thirteen gandas one cowree one krantee, and the other two plaintiffs (along with Anando) succeeded to Jogul's share of the property, the share which devolved on those two plaintiffs being seventeen gandas three cowrees one krantee; that the plaintiffs were accordingly in possession of their respective shares; that they prayed for the registration of their names under Beng. Act VII [924] of 1876, but their prayer was rejected on the 14th of September 1877, in consequence of which they have been dispossessed therefrom by the defendants since Kartick 1264 (October-November 1877). The defence in substance is, that the vendor of the first plaintiff, as also the second and third plaintiffs, had no share in the Kharija taluk named in the plaint; that the whole one-third share of the taluk mentioned therein was the property of Choiton, whose right, title, and interest in the taluk having been sold on the 8th of June 1864, in execution of a decree which one Brojendro Coomar Roy had obtained against Choiton and others, was purchased by Bisheshur Gupta, from whom the defendants purchased the same, and have been in possession since Magh 1273 (January-February 1867), which, I believe, is the date of their purchase. These defendants also pleaded limitation in bar of the suit. The Munsif has cast the onus on the plaintiffs and found that they have failed to prove their possession, and also the possession of Govind, within twelve years back from date of suit. He has dismissed the case as barred by limitation." After referring to some analogous cases decided by the Munsif, the Judge continued :—"The present case appears to me to have been carelessly conducted, and also decided, in the Court below. The issues material for arriving at a correct determination of the case have not been clearly recorded. These issues are: (i) whether the one-third share of the kharija taluk Kisto Nath Sadhoo was the joint property of Shumbhoo, Janokey, Jogul, and Nobokisto, or was it exclusively the property of Janokey or Choiton alone? (ii) whether Koilas and Poorna are the descendants or grandsons of Jogul, and Govind, the grandson of Nobokisto, or not? If the plaintiffs should succeed in proving these issues in their favour, they must be considered to have established their title to the shares they respectively claim, inasmuch as the plaintiff Bhoggomanto has proved his purchase of the share of Govind. If the plaintiffs should succeed in showing their title, it will be for the defendants to show that that title has been extinguished by reason of their adverse possession for more than twelve years. See Radha Govind Roy v. Inglis (7 C. L. R., 364). [925] I accordingly decree the appeal and remand the case to the Court of First Instance with directions to record the above additional issues, and after affording the parties reasonable opportunity of adducing evidence in regard to those issues, and recording such evidence, to dispose of the case with reference to the above remarks."

* Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 2 of 1882, against the order of Baboo Rajchunder Sannyal, Officiating Second Subordinate Judge of Backergunge, dated the 30th August 1881, reversing the order of C. E. Perroux, Esq., Fourth Munsif of Burisal, dated the 10th July 1880.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Kashi Kant Sen for the Appellants argued, that the Subordinate Judge had no power to remand the case, as the Munsif had not disposed of it on a preliminary point—see s. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The lower Court has not understood the case of Radha Govind Roy v. Inglis (7 C. L. R., 364), which is wholly confined to alluvial lands, and forms an exception to the general rule: see Mano Mohun Ghose v. Mohura Mohun Roy (1. L. R., 7 Cal., 225), Kally Churn Sahoo v. The Secretary of State for India (1. L. R., 6 Cal., 725). In such a case as the present the onus is clearly on the plaintiffs.

Baboo Doorga Mohun Dass for the Respondents.

Prinsep, J.—The order of the lower Appellate Court remanding this case is clearly contrary to the law. The Subordinate Judge seems to have thought that, because the issues were not correctly framed, he was competent to draw up fresh issues and to send the case back to the first Court for retrial. No doubt the issues thus drawn up are more complete than those on which the case was tried in the first Court; but from the materials before us, it is impossible to say that there was any necessity for thus expanding the case, or that the parties before the first Court, when the case went to trial, were not fully aware of the points which they were bound, each of them, to prove. We would point out to the Subordinate Judge that if, on trying the appeal, he was of opinion that the evidence [926] on the record was not sufficient to enable him to decide all the points arising out of the case, he should have kept the appeal on his own file and dealt with it in the manner provided by s. 566 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The law allows him to pass an order such as he has passed only under the circumstances stated in s. 562,—that is, when the first Court has decided the case on a preliminary point and not on the merits.

We must, therefore, set aside the order of remand and direct the Subordinate Judge to try the case in accordance with law. So far as we are able to judge from the cases cited before us, the question of limitation will probably not arise. The question is really one of title, and should be decided on evidence adduced by both sides. The plaintiffs being out of possession by order of a competent Court, that is, by order of the Collector passed under the Land Registration Act, the onus was clearly on them, in the first instance, to make out a prima facie case. But if the question of limitation arises, the lower Appellate Court should deal with it on the principles laid down by the Judicial Committee in Rajah Saheb Perhlad Sein v. Maharajah Rajender Kishore Singh (12 Moore's L. A., 336; S.C., 2 B. L. R., P. C., 111).

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th April, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE BOSE.

Roushan Bibee.....Plaintiff

Hurray Kristo Nath and another.....Defendants.*

Rent suit on kabuliat—Occupation of land by one defendant previously to kabuliat—Decree for rent on failure to prove kabuliat—Alternative claim for rent at old rate.

The mere fact of one party alleging that a new contract has been substituted for an old one, does not of itself put an end to the old contract, even as against the party so alleging, unless the allegation is proved to be true.

In a suit on a kabuliat, where no alternative claim for rent at an old rate is in words expressly asked for in the plaint (although it is disclosed by the [927] plaint that the defendant had previously occupied the land in suit at a rate which the evidence proved to be lower than the rent mentioned in the kabuliat) and where the kabuliat is not proved, it is in the discretion of the Court to amend the plaint or the issues, and to allow an alternative claim to be tried; and when the omission to make the claim in the plaint appears to have been an inadvertence, it is right that the Court should do so.

The use of jama-wasil-baki observed upon.

THE plaintiff, who was the owner of a certain taluq, stated that he had, previously to 1281 (1874), let out thirteen khans thereof to the defendant No. 1; that, in 1281, defendant No. 2, who was the son of defendant No. 1, gave the plaintiff a kabuliat for one year at an annual jama of Rs. 69 in respect of the same land, and that, from that date, both the defendants became his tenants at the rental mentioned, and had paid to him their rent for one year at the rate of Rs. 69; but that, they having failed to pay the rent for 1283 and 1284 (1876 and 1877), he brought this suit to recover what was due to him, without making any alternative claim for rent at the rate paid by defendant No. 1 before 1281. The defendants denied having given the kabuliati, and denied that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between them and the plaintiff.

The Munsif found that the defendant No. 1 was not bound by the kabuliati, even if it had been entered into by the defendant No. 2, inasmuch as he had not ratified that contract; but he held, that the execution of the kabuliati was not proved, and therefore dismissed the suit against the 2nd defendant; but finding that the defendant No. 1 had been the plaintiff's tenant before 1281 at a rental of Rs. 50 per annum, the Munsif gave him a decree for rent at that rate for the years 1283 and 1284 against the defendant No. 1. The defendant No. 1 appealed to the District Judge, who held that, under s. 62 of the Contract Act, the plaintiff was not entitled to any decree, inasmuch as he had set up a new contract, and must stand or fall by that contract. He, therefore, as the plaintiff had not asked in the alternative for rent at the old rate, reversed the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

[928] The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Munshi Serajul Islam for the Appellant.

Baboo Okhil Chunder Sen for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and BOSE, J.), was delivered by Garth, C. J. -We are under the necessity of remanding this case to the lower Appellate Court for retrial, inasmuch as the District Judge appears to have decided it upon s. 62^a of the Contract Act, which, so far as we can see, has nothing to do with the matter. In fact, the Judge seems quite to have misapprehended the meaning of that section.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff against the two defendants, father and son, alleging that the father was his tenant up to the year 1281; but that, in that year, the other defendant, the son, gave him a kabuliati at an increased annual jama of Rs. 69; that thus both defendants became his tenants at the higher jama, and paid it for one year; but that, they having since failed to pay it for the years 1283 and 1284 and part of the year 1282, he brought this suit to recover the rents of those years with damages, road cess, house tax, &c.

The defendants denied not only that a kabuliati was ever given, but that the relationship of landlord and tenant ever existed between them and the plaintiff. Accordingly the first issue raised for trial was—"whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties; and what was the jama payable by the defendants." There were also other issues which it is not necessary now to consider.

The Court of First Instance found that the alleged kabuliati was not executed by the defendant No. 2; but it also found upon the evidence (inter alia) of certain wasil-baki papers, that the defendant No. 1 had been the plaintiff's tenant at the rent of Rs. 50-14, and eventually gave the plaintiff a decree for that rent against the defendant No. 1, for the years 1282, 1283 and 1284, as well as for damages and other charges, amounting altogether to Rs. 172.

[929] The lower Appellate Court, without apparently considering any of the other points raised in the case, held, that the suit ought to have been dismissed under s. 62 of the Contract Act, simply upon the ground that the kabuliati was found not to have been executed by the defendant No. 2. That section enacts that "if the parties to a contract agree to substitute a new contract for it, or to rescind or alter it, the original contract need not be performed."

The District Judge then argues in this way: As the plaintiff himself alleges that the defendant No. 2 executed a kabuliati which put an end to the old tenancy, and created a new one at a higher rent, the old contract was at an end, and was not enforceable against the defendant No. 1, although the first Court may have found that in point of fact the kabuliati was not executed.

It is clear that this view is founded upon an entire misapprehension of the meaning of the section.

If the parties to a contract have in fact made a new contract in substitution of the old, or have modified the old contract, then the old contract is at an end, and the new or the modified contract takes its place; but the mere fact of one party alleging that a new contract has been substituted for the old one does not of itself put an end to the old contract, even as against the party who so alleges, unless the allegation is proved to be true. Section 62 of the Contract Act made no difference in the law in that respect.

But then it is said that although the District Judge may have been wrong in that respect, still the Munsif was not justified, according to the law which has been laid down in this Court, to give the plaintiff any relief at all, and the Full Bench case of Lukhee Kanto Doss Chowdhry v. Sumeeruddi Lasker (13 B. L. R., 243; s. c., 21 W. R., 208) has been cited in support of that position.

But as I read that case it is an authority distinctly in favour of the course which the Munsif has taken.

In that case the plaintiff sued a ryot for arrears of rent alleged to be due under a kabuliati. The Court found that the kabuliati had not been executed, though the ryot had occupied [930] land under the plaintiff. But it does not appear from the report of the case that the plaintiff had given or offered any proof, other than the kabuliati, as to the amount of rent, which the defendant ought to pay.

Both the lower Courts, under these circumstances, dismissed the suit; and then it was contended by the plaintiff, on appeal to this Court, that the plaintiff was entitled, as a matter of right, to have a further trial of the question as to how much rent was due to the plaintiff on account of the ryot's occupation.

That question was referred to the Full Bench; and, as I understand their judgment, it only decides that, under such circumstances, the landlord is not entitled, as a matter of right, to have a further trial.

It is a question for the discretion of the Court in each case, whether it will frame issues, or amend the plaint if necessary, so as to allow the plaintiff to enforce his alternative claim.

The Full Bench say :—" It is in the discretion of the Court to amend the plaint or the issues, and to allow it (that is the alternative claim) to be tried. And where the omission to make the claim in the plaint appears to have been from inadvertence or by mistake, it would be proper to do so."

Now in this case it appears to me, that although in the plaint the claim was not expressly made in the alternative, still the fact is undoubtedly disclosed there, that the defendant No. 1 had, previously to the alleged kabuliat, been occupying the land at a lower rent as the plaintiff's tenant; and the issues appear to have been framed with a view to this alternative claim; the first issue being, whether the defendants or either of them held the land under the plaintiff, and what was the jama payable to him for it.

As to the latter branch of this issue the questions tried in the first Court were, whether the kabuliat alleged by the plaintiff had been executed or not; and if not, what was the former rent which had been paid by the defendant No. 1.

If the Munsif found (as we understand he did) that the kabuliat had not been executed, but that the defendant No. 1 had been in fact the plaintiff's tenant, and had paid the annual sum of Rs. 50-14 for rent, it was clearly the duty of the Munsif, [931] having regard to the circumstances under which the suit was brought, and the nature of the issues raised, to give the plaintiff a decree as against the defendant No. 1. If he had refused to make such a decree, he would not have done his duty. He would have compelled the plaintiff to bring a new suit, and would have put the parties to the expense of a fresh litigation, for the purpose of trying the very question, which one of the issues in the suit distinctly raised, and he would also probably have deprived the plaintiff of a large portion of his claim, which would thus have been barred by limitation.

Then it is said that, in the first Court, the Munsif relied improperly upon certain jama-wasil-baki papers. These jama-wasil-baki papers, we all know, are not evidence by themselves. The mere production of such papers is not enough. But, coupled with other evidence, these papers often afford a very useful guide to the truth in cases of this kind; and it is only right that those who have been collecting rent with the assistance of such papers should produce them in Court.

How far this evidence is to be relied upon in this case will be a question for the Judge when the case goes before him on remand. All we now say to the Judge is, that he has done wrong in dismissing the case upon the strength of s. 62 of the Contract Act.

He does not appear to have tried some of the most material questions in the cause; and we, therefore, send it back with the above remarks to guide him in disposing of it.

The costs of this Court, and of the lower Appellate Court, will abide the ultimate result of the suit.

Bandy Ali.....Judgment-debtor *versus*Madhub Chunder Nag and others.....Decree-holders and auction-purchasers. Setting aside sale in execution of decree—Material irregularities—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1887), ss. 287, 289.*

Upon an application to set aside a sale in execution of a decree on the ground of material irregularities in publishing and conducting it, it appeared that the sale-notification had not been fixed up in the Collector's office as required by s. 289 of Act X of 1877; that no affidavit as to search having been made in the Registry Office with regard to incumbrances as required by s. 287 of the Act had been filed; and that the sale took place on, and not after, the thirtieth day from the publication of the notice; but it also appeared that the applicant had himself been present at the sale and had purchased the property, and it was not shown that any substantial injury had resulted from the irregularities.

Held, that there was no ground for setting aside the sale.

Munshi Sirajul Islam for the Appellant.

Baboo Bhobany Churn Dutt for the Respondents.

Macpherson, J.—The appellant, judgment-debtor, made an application in the Court below for setting aside the sale held in execution of the decree passed against him, but did not succeed. From the order rejecting that application he now appeals to this Court, on the ground that there were material irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale which led to substantial injury. Of the irregularities the most material one that has been pressed upon us is, that the sale-notification was not fixed up in the Collector's office as required by s. 289 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Subordinate Judge is, no doubt, wrong in his comments on this part of the case in considering that the publication of such a notice is merely a formal proceeding. But we think that, in this instance, the omission is not shown to have resulted in any substantial injury to the [933] appellant, or to have injuriously affected the price obtained for the property.

Another ground taken is, that the rule framed by this Court under s. 287, which requires an affidavit as to search having been made in the Registry Office with regard to incumbrances, was not carried out. But this, in our opinion, is in itself no ground for setting aside a sale duly effected. The object of the rule is to provide the Court with the information required by s. 287 of the Civil Procedure Code, and a mere omission to comply with it will not have the effect of vitiating the sale. In this instance it further appears from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that the Court was in possession of the necessary information, inasmuch as the judgment-debtor himself was examined, and brought to the notice of the Court the existence of a mortgage on the property.

It was further urged that the sale took place on, and not after, the thirtieth day from the publication of the notice. But it is clear that the appellant was present throughout the sale-proceedings, and that the sale having taken place on the advertised day, this fact was never brought to the notice of the Court, or made the subject of any objection. The appellant not only himself attended the sale, but through a relative bid for, and purchased the property, which was, on his default to deposit the earnest-money, put up again and sold for Rs. 90 less than was before bid. In so acting appellant consented to the sale being held on the advertised date.

It was incumbent on the appellant to show that some substantial injury had resulted from the irregularities complained of, and having wholly failed to show this, the sale cannot be set aside, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[934] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 4th May, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE WHITE.

G. A. Watson.....Plaintiff

Jonmenjoy Coondoo.....Defendant.

Power-of-attorney—Meaning of the word ‘negotiate’ with reference to Government Securities—Principal and Agent.

W gave to A and B a power-of-attorney authorizing them jointly and severally to “negotiate, make sale, dispose of, assign and transfer,” amongst other things, certain Government securities standing in his name.

B pledged the securities for an advance of Rs. 19,000, and at the same time executed a promissory note for the amount of the loan, the promissory note being signed “B, as attorney for W.” In a suit by W to recover the Government securities,

Held in the Court below, that the power-of-attorney was sufficiently wide to cover the transaction ; that the transaction was a fraud on the part of B, but that the transferee (the defendant) had no notice of the fraud, and therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed.

Held on appeal, per WHITE, J. —(i) That the words of the power were to be read disjunctively, and the powers conveyed by the words were to be treated as joint and several ; (ii) that even supposing the word ‘negotiate’ to be applicable to transactions with Government securities (which was doubtful), and that such Government securities stood in the same position as ordinary commercial notes, the word 'negotiate' did not authorize B to do more than put the Government securities in the market, or to put them in the circulation in the ordinary way in which such a transaction takes place in the market, and if necessary to endorse them in the name of W; (iii) that the loan, which has the principal transaction, being irrecoverable from W, because unauthorized, the defendant could not retain the Government securities which were deposited as security for the loan, he not having taken the precaution to ascertain whether B had authority to enter into the transaction.

Per GARTH, C.J. : That although, on the authority of The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan (5 Moore's 1 A, 27) a power to negotiate Government securities would authorize the negotiation of Government securities by way of pledge, yet W was entitled to a decree, on the ground, that A and B had no power, under the power-of-attorney, to borrow money in the name of W; and that, therefore, the defendant was not entitled to retain the security given for the advance (viz., the Government promissory note).

On the 18th October 1878 the plaintiff deposited with Messrs. Nicholls & Co. (who were a firm carrying on business as bankers and financial agents in Calcutta), for safe custody, and for the purpose of drawing for and on behalf of the plaintiff the interest due thereon, a security of the Government of India of the $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. loan of 1879 for Rs. 20,000 standing in his name; and at the same time executed, in favour of William Nicholls and George Augustus Thompson (two of the partners of the firm of Nicholls & Co.), a power-of-attorney, authorizing them "jointly and severally to negotiate, make sale, dispose of, assign, and transfer, or cause to be procured, assigned, and transferred, at their or his discretion, all or any of the Government promissory notes or other Government paper standing in his name."

In November 1878, Nicholls & Co. renewed the security for Rs. 20,000; and on the 15th December 1880, George Augustus Thompson, without the knowledge or authority of the plaintiff, pledged the said security with the firm of Ameer Singh Shamah Mull as security for an advance of Rs. 19,000, and executed as attorney for Watson a promissory note for the amount of the loan, and the last-mentioned firm, on the same date, transferred the note and the security to one Jonmenjoy Coondoo, the defendant.

It appeared from the evidence that, on the 21st January 1881, Nicholls & Co. wrote to the defendant asking for the temporary loan of the security pledged by them; and that they, on the 22nd January 1881, made an appointment with the plaintiff at their office and showed to him his Government promissory note for Rs. 20,000.

At or about the end of January 1881, the plaintiff, having heard rumours regarding the solvency of Nicholls & Co., went to their office, when he discovered that George Augustus Thompson had absconded. He subsequently traced his Government promissory note for Rs. 20,000 to the hands of the defendant. He thereupon, through his attorney, wrote to the defendant demanding the return of the security, but received no answer to his demand. But, on the 21st March 1881, the defendant's [936] attorney wrote to the plaintiff's attorney calling upon him to redeem the security pledged with him.

The plaintiff then, on the 25th April 1881, brought this present suit, praying that the defendant might be ordered to deliver over the Government security or the value thereof, and for an injunction restraining him from parting with the same. The defendant denied any knowledge of the deposit of the Government security by Watson, and stated that he never was aware that it was the property of the plaintiff; but admitted that, at the time of the pledge, the Government security bore the blank endorsement of the plaintiff by his constituted attorney.

Mr. Hill (with him Mr. Trevelyan) for the Plaintiff.—The question which arises on the pleadings is as to the power of Nicholls & Co. to pledge the security with the defendant. If the power is not large enough, then the plaintiff would be entitled to succeed. It is for the defendant to show the authority of the endorser, having admitted that the paper stood in the plaintiff's name. A power which gives an attorney power to "negotiate, make sale, dispose of, assign, and transfer" and nothing more, does not enable the attorney to pledge; but only points to an out-and-out transfer by way of sale. As to the effect of the words "sell, assign and transfer," see De Bouchout v. Goldsmid (5 Ves. 211); there it was held, that such words did not include a power to pledge, and that the holding applied equally to shares as to goods. Although there is not in words an express power to endorse, yet such a power would be understood. The case of The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan (5 Moore's L. A., 27) lays down that the words "to sell, endorse, and assign" were to be read disjunctively; where a power to endorse is given, an endorsement for the purpose of pledging might pass property, yet a distinction is drawn between a case where the power is only "to sell, assign, and transfer." [WILSON, J. The question will be (i) was the power such as to authorize the transaction? (ii) was the transaction a fraud? (iii) had the defendant notice?] As regards the first question, unless the word 'negotiate' can be said to include the word 'pledge,' there are no other words giving [937] power to pledge. In Chitty on Bills, 10th edition, p. 154, a distinction is recognized both at law and in equity between the deposit of endorsed bills of exchange and the negotiation of bills by endorsement. If the words in this power pass the notes, then comes the question of fraud; that fraud was practised on the plaintiff, there can be little doubt. As to notice, I submit that the defendant knew that the paper belonged to Watson, and knew that it was for the purposes of Nicholls & Co. that the paper was being pledged.

Mr. Evans and Mr. Bonnerjee for the Defendant.—This is, properly speaking, an action of detinue, and the first question to be determined is, what is the nature of the thing wrongfully detained; the position of a bank-note is pointed out in the case of The Bank of Bengal v. Macleod (5 Moore's L. A., 1). [WILSON, J.—Is it not in the same position as any other bill of exchange?] In The Bank of Bengal v. Macleod (5 Moore's L. A., 1) the Privy Council proceeded on the broad ground that Macleod had authority to endorse. As to whether a power to transfer includes a power to mortgage, see Barber v. Richards (20 L. J., Exch., N. S., 135). The word 'negotiate' clearly carries with it the word 'endorse,' because you cannot negotiate an instrument that is negotiable by endorsement except by endorsement.

Wilson, J.—In this suit the plaintiff claims to recover a Government promissory note for Rs. 20,000 under the following circumstances:

The note undoubtedly belonged to the plaintiff. He deposited it for safe custody with a firm who were then carrying on business in Calcutta as bankers—Nicholls & Co., and he took from them what is called a safe custody receipt. He at the same time gave to Nicholls & Co. a power-of-attorney, in which he authorized them to receive interest upon the paper; but he also, by that power, authorized them to do certain other things, which are thus expressed—"to negotiate, make sale, dispose of, assign, and transfer, or cause to be procured, and assigned, and transferred, at their or his discretion [938] all or any of the Government promissory notes," and so on as to other securities.

The promissory note was renewed by Nicholls & Co., in the name of the plaintiff, and the new note of course remained in their hands on the same terms as the old. That was done without the plaintiff's knowledge for some reason which I do not understand, but that does not affect the case. Then, in December 1880, a transaction took place, out of which this controversy arises. The promissory note was pledged by Nicholls and Co. with the defendant for Rs. 19,000, one of the partners of Nicholls & Co., Thompson, having endorsed the note in blank, professing to do so as attorney for the plaintiff.

It appears from the evidence that Thompson was the person who carried out these transactions; and that he went so far as to sign a promissory note for the amount in the plaintiff's name. For that he had no authority.

Nicholls & Co. failed. The plaintiff, shortly before their failure, became suspicious as to the safety of his property in their hands, and went to their office on the 22nd January to see whether his securities were safe. He found all his securities apparently in order. The note, together with the shares, was put into his hands. He looked at the face of the note, but did not look at the back. He went away leaving his note and shares with them, and then came the failure of Nicholls & Co.

It comes now to be tried whether the note is his, or whether the defendant has a better title to it. The first question is this—Are the terms of the power-of-attorney sufficiently wide to authorize the transaction which took place, assuming that the transaction, as far as the defendant is concerned, was bond fide? If that question cannot be answered in the affirmative, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. If the terms of the power are wide enough to authorize the transaction, a further question arises, to which I shall presently refer.

The words of the power are—"negotiate, make sale, dispose of, assign, and transfer, or cause to be procured, and assigned, and transferred, at their or his discretion, all or any of the Government promissory notes."

Several cases have been cited with reference to the construction [939] of powers. They turn on the particular words used, but one case does more—The Bank of Bengal v. Macleod (5 Moore's I. A., 1). That case lays down a rule of construction that words such as these are to be construed disjunctively so as to give a power to negotiate, a power to sell, a power to assign, and not only to authorize an act, which may be described by all those words together.

The actual words in the case of The Bank of Bengal v. Macleod (5 Moore's I. A., 1) were different from these. The decision in that case turned on the word 'endorse,' which does not occur here. The case of De Bouchout v. Goldsmid (5 Ves., 211), does not assist us in this case. In that case it was held, that the power "to assign, sell, and transfer" stock did not authorize a pledge. That case is, perhaps, so far an authority that it may show that the words here used, "assign and transfer," would not themselves authorize a pledge. Wilson v. Moore (1 M. & K., 337) does not assist in the construction of this power; nor does Attwood v. Munnings (7 B. & C., 278). The words there were "endorse, negotiate, and discount," and all that was decided was that those words did not authorize the accepting of a bill. The real question here is whether the word 'negotiate' necessarily requires the discounting of a bill, or whether the word is satisfied by a pledge as in this case.

It appears to me that the word 'negotiate' is sufficiently wide to cover a transaction such as that which took place in this case. We are speaking of a class of documents long known as negotiable instruments, and I think the word 'negotiate' used in such an instrument means to deal with as a negotiable instrument by endorsement, if the instrument is such as to require endorsement, by delivery if it passes by delivery, and in my opinion that may be by an out-and-out sale or by pledge. I think, therefore, that the word 'negotiate' covers such a transaction as this.

But two other questions arise. Although it is shown that the act is within the power of the agent, yet every agent is presumed to act in good faith. If he employs his power otherwise than for the benefit of his principal, he deals in fraud of his principal. [940] Was this transaction in fraud of the plaintiff? That it was in fraud of the plaintiff cannot be doubted. It was a gross and deliberate fraud.

There remains the question, had any knowledge of the fraudulent nature of the transaction been brought home to the defendant? I think there were circumstances giving rise to grave suspicions. Any one's suspicions would be roused by an incident such as that of the 22nd January. The transaction between Nicholls & Co. and the defendant took place in December 1880; but on the 22nd January 1881, the security in question was in the possession of Nicholls & Co., and was by them shown to the plaintiff. That circumstance would give rise to suspicion, but I am satisfied that it has been explained. I see no reason to discredit the witnesses for the defendant. They say that when he received the letter from Nicholls & Co., to send this paper to their office, he came to the natural conclusion that it was sent for for the purpose of being sold or redeemed. I see nothing unnatural upon this view in their trusting the document to Thompson. It shows that Thompson succeeded not only in defrauding the plaintiff, but also in duping the defendant. I am satisfied with regard to the three questions, -

1st, that the power-of-attorney was sufficiently wide to cover the transaction; 2nd, that it was a gross fraud on the part of Thompson; and 3rd, that there is no reason for saying that the defendant had any knowledge of Thompson's fraud. The suit must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

From this decision the plaintiff appealed.

Mr. Branson (with him Mr. Trevelyan) for the Appellant.—Does the word 'negotiate' cover the present transaction? If the word 'negotiate' were struck out of the power, the lower Court admits the transaction could not stand. There cannot be a negotiation by way of pledge. In the English Statute of Embezzlements, the words used are "any person who transfers, pledges, or negotiates," &c., which shows that the word 'negotiate' does not include 'pledge.' Chitty on Bills, p. 454, draws a distinction between the deposit of bills endorsed and the negotiation of bills by endorsement. When the plaintiff [941] deposited these notes with Nicholls & Co., he never 'delivered' them; he simply put them in their hands for safe custody. See Ex parte Twogood (19 Ves., 229), as to the distinction mentioned by Chitty. [WHITE, J.—Any way in which you can get money on a bill would be to 'negotiate' the bill.] GARTH, C.J.—The Privy Council case of The Bank of Bengal v. Macleod (5 Moore's I. A., 1) comes so close to this case that it is difficult to distinguish it. What is the difference between 'endorsement' and 'negotiation' of bills of exchange? In the 12th Edition of Byles on Bills, p. 175, it is laid down that a pledgee of negotiable paper has no power to sell: see cases there cited. Then the fact of the deposit itself does away with negotiation of the thing deposited, the notes in this instance being locked up for safe custody after they were endorsed. [WHITE, J.—But the deposittee could sell them to recoup himself.] No, he could only bring a suit on the security given him. In The Bank of Bengal v. Macleod (5 Moore's L. A. 1), there was an express authority to sell. "Pledges of paper have no power to sell it, but are bound to collect it"—Story on Bailments, s. 321. [GARTH, C. J.—The case referred to by Chitty was an instrument endorsed without delivery; but this note was endorsed and delivered, and the property therefore passed, and that is the distinction.] The word 'negotiate' imports endorsement in blank, but I say it also imports the purpose for which the note is deposited. The decree of the Court below has dismissed our suit entirely. The Court should not have done this, as Nicholls & Co. had no power to borrow money at interest on our securities; and if they were not our agents to make a contract for the payment of interest, we should be entitled to redeem the paper on payment of the principal alone.

The Court called upon the respondent only on the question whether the word 'negotiate' was connected with the purpose for which the transfer took place, i.e., whether the word 'negotiate' did not import purpose; and whether the word was distinguishable from 'endorsement,' which has a technical meaning.

[942] Mr. Eraus (with him Mr. Bonnerjee) for the Respondent contended, that the point raised came to this, viz., what is the meaning of the word 'negotiate'? The word means to constitute another person a holder. A negotiable instrument is a peculiar contract capable of being transferred either by the Law Merchant or by Statute. Crouch v. Le Credit Foncier (L. R., 8 Q. B., 374) shows the peculiarity of negotiability to be (i) that negotiation constitutes a person a holder, who is able to sue on the instrument in his own name; and (ii) that the person so negotiating can give a better title than his transferee had. The word 'negotiate' is larger than the word 'endorse.' It covers the endorsement and also the delivery of an instrument payable to bearer. Chalmers, in his book on Bills of Exchange, s. 106, gives this definition of the word 'negotiate' to be "the transfer of" a bill in the form and manner prescribed by the Law Merchant with the incidents and privileges annexed thereby,—i.e., (i) the transferee can sue all parties to the instrument in his own name; (ii) the consideration for the transfer is prima facie presumed; (iii) the transferor can, under certain conditions, give a good title, although he has none himself; (iv) the transferee can further negotiate the bill with the like privileges and incidents.

At a subsequent date the Court intimated that it would be glad to hear further arguments on certain points.

[GARTH, C. J. We wish to hear you, Mr. Bonnerjee, as to this point; the real transaction in the matter is the promissory note, and in the power-of-attorney there was no power given to borrow upon a promissory note; and the question is, therefore, does not this make a distinction between the present case and the Privy Council case—The Bank of Bengal v. Macleod (5 Moore's L. A. 1). In the latter case the loan was made to Macleod, the agent, and he endorsed the promissory note. Here the loan was made to the principal, and not to the agent.]

Mr. Bonnerjee for the Respondent.—The real transaction was not the promissory note, but the pledge of the Government paper. [GARTH, C. J.—Supposing a suit had been brought [943] for the return of the promissory note, would there have been any defence to it? WHITE, J.—I don't think the agent signing as agent could have been sued on the promissory note.] No, I don't think he could have been sued. WHITE, J.—Then Watson is entitled to get it back; you can't use the note. You can't sue either of the parties upon it. It is an unauthorized loan, and does it not follow that the securities of an unauthorized loan must be given back?] The case the defendant came to meet was, whether he was bound to give up the Government security? No mention is made in the plaint of the promissory note. This shows that the other side looked upon the Government security as the real security, and they cannot ask for the return of the promissory note now. [GARTH, C. J.—I think we should be inclined to allow an amendment even now for that purpose. WHITE, J. Can you separate the loan from the promissory note, so far that, whilst admitting the loan to be bad, you can make out that the note holds good? GARTH, C. J.—In the Privy Council case Macleod had a right to obtain a loan for himself, and having the right to endorse a particular note for his brother under the power-of-attorney, endorsed the note, and did so honestly. The question there was—Was it necessary that the person who lent the money should have enquired the reason why the note was endorsed, and it was held that it was not? Now in this case the transaction was not bona fide, and the question is, Does this fact enable us to distinguish this case from the Privy Council case?] The defendant may have had no right to make the loan, just in the same way as the Bank of Bengal had no right to advance money to Macleod on pledge of paper which belonged to a principal of theirs; if, however, the words of the power-of-attorney give a right to pledge, then Nicholls & Co., had a right to execute any document necessary for the purpose of pledging, and for that purpose to execute the promissory note. If the property has passed, can it be taken away from the defendant unless fraud can be shown on his part?

Mr. Jackson for the Appellant. —With reference to the promissory note and the attempt to sever it from the rest of the [944] transaction, what reason had the other side for calling Mr. Larsen of the Bank of Bengal, and asking him the question as to what was the custom of the Bank as to what they considered the principal security in such cases, except for the reason of getting out of him, that, in transactions of this kind, the principal security was the Government security. If that had not been made out, the whole transaction would fail. The question was properly objected to. [The Court here intimated that it was not necessary to go any further into the question of severance.] As to Mr. Bonnerjee's argument that the power-of-attorney gave Nicholls & Co., power to make the promissory note, I say it does not; the word 'negotiate,' except with regard to bills, where it means only 'discounting,' is not an appropriate word to use in dealing with Government paper. If you wrote to the Bank and asked them to negotiate your Government paper, they would answer, in what way? by way of sale, or loan, or how? The word by itself conveys the idea with regard to bills of discounting and nothing more, but it has no definite separate meaning with regard to Government promissory notes or other kinds of securities. I say if the first part of the power does not enable Nicholls & Co. to borrow or pledge, the second part of the power cannot be taken to extend the words of the power. The other side would make out that the general words of the power enable them to enter into any mercantile transaction whatsoever as long as the Government paper was used to raise the capital. As to general words of limitation, see Esdaile v. Le Nauze (1 Y. & C., Exch., 400) and also s. 62 of Story on Agency. With regard to The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan (5 Moore's I. A., 27), that case is never cited except to show that the words of a power are to be construed disjunctively and that the property passes, and the case is therefore no authority on the subject of this suit.

White, J.—The first question is, what was the transaction that took place between the defendant and Thompson as the [945] agent of the plaintiff in connection with the piece of Government paper in suit.

There can, I think, be no doubt upon the evidence that it was a lending by the defendant and a borrowing in the name of, and ostensibly for, the plaintiff, of Rs. 19,000 upon the security of the paper. When the loan was effected a promissory note for the amount was executed in favour of the defendant by Thompson in the name of the plaintiff, and the Government paper was delivered to the defendant by Thompson. The paper was not endorsed to the defendant, but at the time of its delivery to the defendant bore an endorsement in blank, which had some time previously and for some other purpose been made by Thompson in the name of the plaintiff.

There is no dispute as to the identity of the paper. It is a promissory note of the Government of India of the four-and-half per cent. Loan of 1879 for Rs. 20,000. It bears the No. 016388 over 000678, and was issued by the treasury in the name of the plaintiff and payable to his order. It was a renewal of a previous note of the same Government loan, for the same amount, numbered 000678, which had been also issued in the name of the plaintiff and payable to his order. The latter piece of paper had, together with other pieces, been deposited by the plaintiff in October 1878 with Nicholls & Co., who styled themselves "financial agents," and gave the plaintiff a receipt for the same, dated the 22nd of that month. Two days before the date of the receipt, the plaintiff had executed in favour of William Nicholls and G. A. Thompson, two of the members of the firm, a power-of-attorney, applicable, amongst other things, to the Government paper so deposited.

Benimadhub, who manages the defendant's business in Calcutta as head-man, deposes that the broker who negotiated the transaction came to him on behalf of the plaintiff, and said that the plaintiff wanted to borrow Rs. 19,000 upon a Government security for Rs. 20,000, which he represented as being in pledge with the firm of Ameer Singh for money lent by the latter to the plaintiff. The defendant requiring to see the Government security before making the advance, the Government paper in suit was brought to him, and he, after satisfying [946] himself by enquiry of the broker that Thompson had authority to draw the interest and sell the paper, sent the Rs. 19,000 by his clerk Koylash Chunder to Nicholls & Co.'s place of business. Koylash Chunder deposes that he took the money to that place, and having got what he considered to be satisfactory answers from Thompson as to his authority to borrow money on the Government paper in the name of the plaintiff, and also having received from Thompson the promissory note and Government paper in suit, handed to him the Rs. 19,000. This took place on the 15th December 1880. At the foot of the promissory note is a memorandum of the deposit of the Government paper. An account also was opened in the plaintiff's name by Benimadhub in his master's books, in which the transaction is recorded as a loan upon the Government paper.

The next question is, was this transaction authorized by the plaintiff? The defendant, in his written statement, asserts, that "he believed, and had every reason to believe, that Nicholls & Co. had full power to borrow the said sum of Rs. 19,000 as agents of the plaintiffs"; but he has given no evidence that either Thompson, or his firm, had any such authority. The plaintiff, on the other hand, denies in his evidence that he ever borrowed Rs. 19,000 from Ameer Singh, or any one else, or ever gave authority to Nicholls & Co., or to Thompson, to borrow any money for him. He adds, that he first became aware of the loan made in his name when the members of the firm of Nicholls & Co. became bankrupt and disappeared. No member of that firm has been called to contradict the plaintiff, or to prove why or when Thompson put the blank endorsement in the plaintiff's name upon the Government paper in suit; nor any one from the firm of Ameer Singh to show the circumstances under which the Government paper was pledged with the latter firm.

But the defendant strenuously contends that the transaction was warranted by the power-of-attorney executed by the plaintiff in favour of Thompson and William Nicholls, authorizing the attorneys, amongst other things, to 'negotiate' the plaintiff's Government paper.

This word is in the power allied with the words "make sale, dispose of, assign, and transfer." Each of these words, according [947] to the decision of the Privy Council in The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan (5 Moore's I. A., 27), is to be read disjunctively, and the powers conveyed by these words to be treated as joint and several.

The power-of-attorney relates to many other classes of property besides Government notes and Government paper, the last class of property mentioned being "securities of any description." Viewing the words conveying absolute authority in connection with the classes of property over which the powers are to operate, it is difficult to see how the word 'negotiate' is appropriate to anything which is ordinarily done with or to a Government promissory note or piece of Government paper. As was truly said by one of the learned counsel for the plaintiff, if a banker who had a Government note belonging to a customer, deposited with him for safe custody, were to receive a written order from the customer to negotiate the Government note, he would not know how to execute the order, and would probably ask his customer for more definite instructions as to how he wished the note to be dealt with. If a similar order was given respecting an ordinary commercial promissory note, the banker would feel no hesitation what to do with the note. He would get it discounted, which means that he would sell the note and put it in circulation, with a right on the part of the purchaser or any subsequent holder to have recourse to the party on whose behalf it was discounted, in case that party's name was on the note and default made in payment of the note at maturity. If the principal's name was not on the note when offered for discount, a banker, who held a similar power-of-attorney to the present one, would, beyond doubt, be authorized to endorse the note in his principal's name for the purpose of discounting the bill.

Promissory notes of the Government of India, issued against a loan made by the public to that Government, although in form the same as ordinary commercial promissory notes, differ from them in most other essential particulars. They are not payable at any certain time, or on demand, or at sight. Their payment, with the exception of the half-yearly interest, is deferred indefinitely at the will of the borrowers, who are the makers of [948] the notes; and, as far as I am aware, though I do not think the point has ever been, or is likely to become, the subject of judicial decision, the holders have no right to come upon previous endorsers for payment of the principal or interest in case Government should make default. A consideration of all these circumstances makes the doubt whether the word 'negotiate' ought not to be confined in its application to that class of property which is described in the power-of-attorney as "securities of any description," and to such of them only as are ordinarily said to be negotiated when they are transferred or put in circulation.

Taking the term, however, to be applicable to a Government promissory note, and that such a note stands in the same position as an ordinary commercial note, did the word 'negotiate' confer upon Thompson authority to do what he did in the present case in the plaintiff's name?

Is it reasonable to suppose, or is it a reasonable interpretation of the word 'negotiate' to hold, that the plaintiff, when he executed the power in Thompson's favour, intended to confer upon Thompson authority to pledge his credit to an indefinite extent, or make him responsible for any money which Thompson might choose to borrow, or empower him to use the Government paper in Nicholls & Co.'s hands as a security for any loan that Thompson might please to contract. I think not. The word 'negotiate,' if applicable to such property as Government paper or Government promissory notes, did not, in my opinion, authorize Thompson to do more than put the paper in the market or to put it in circulation in the ordinary way in which such a transaction takes place in the market; and, if necessary for that purpose, to endorse it in the name of the plaintiff. In the transaction which Thompson entered into with the defendant, it was not put in the market or put in circulation; it was deposited as a security for money borrowed. It was an essential part of the transaction between Thompson and the defendant that the latter should keep the paper out of the market, and with himself, ready to be returned to Thompson when the loan was paid off, or when he sought to redeem the paper.

The defendant's contention is, that if the word 'negotiate' [949] does not by itself authorize the transaction, it does so when coupled with the words lower down in the power-of-attorney, which run thus, "and for the purposes aforesaid to sign for me and in my name and on my behalf any and every contract, agreement, acceptance, or other document." These are general words, and if the contention were sound, Thompson, under these words, might have entered into any transaction he pleased in the name of the plaintiff involving the plaintiff in any amount of responsibility, provided only he used the plaintiff's Government paper for the purpose of raising the money necessary to carry out the transaction,—thus he might have bought goods or opened a shop in the plaintiff's name. The authorities cited at the bar show that these general words are not to be construed as enlarging the authority of the donee of the power, but are to be confined strictly to the doing of things necessary to be done in performing the acts authorized by the power.

The defendant having, in my opinion, failed to show that the pledge of the Government note was authorized by the power-of-attorney, it follows that he acquired no title to the note by its delivery to him, although at the time it bore an endorsement in blank in the plaintiff's name.

Besides this ground, it appears to me that the plaintiff's right to recover the Government paper may be put upon another ground.

It is clear from the evidence that the defendant could not sue the plaintiff to recover the money which was borrowed by Thompson in his name, nor upon the promissory note which was executed by Thompson in his name. The loan, which is the principal transaction, being irrecoverable from the plaintiff because unauthorized, how can the defendant retain the Government paper, which was deposited as a security for that loan? If he sought to do so on the plea that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, the answer is obvious, that he took no means before lending his money to ascertain whether Thompson had authority to enter into the transaction. Neither Benimadhab nor Koylash Chunder asked to see the power-of-attorney which Thompson held; the former contented himself with seeing that the piece of Government paper was [950] endorsed by Thompson for the plaintiff, and with the answer of the broker that Thompson had authority "to draw interest and sell the paper"; and Koylash Chunder, who was sent to Nicholls & Co., with the money and instructions to "enquire whether the Government paper had Thompson's signature upon it," was satisfied with Thompson's acknowledgment of his signature, and his answer that "he had a power-of-attorney from the plaintiff to manage all his business, and had authority to receive money on that paper."

The case of The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan (5 Moore's L. A., 27) has been much relied on by the defendant's counsel on the argument of this case. That decision is an authority for two propositions: first, that the words in a power-of-attorney conferring power are to be read disjunctively; and secondly, that the word 'endorse' in a power-of-attorney warranted the endorsement which was made in that case; but beyond this has little or no application or bearing upon the present case.

The points there decided arose in an action of detinue instituted on the Common Law Side of the old Supreme Court of Calcutta. The success or failure of the suit depended upon whether the property in the Company's paper had passed to the defendants, and this again turned solely upon whether, under the power-of-attorney, the plaintiff's agent had authority to endorse the paper.

The present suit is instituted in a Court of both law and equity, and it must be determined by law as modified by equity. It seems to me immaterial whether the delivery of the Government paper, with the plaintiff's endorsement in blank upon it by the hand of Thompson, passed the property in the paper or not. If it did not, no title was conferred upon the defendant; and if it did, the defendant cannot in equity be allowed to retain the property.

The plaint is not well drawn; it does not, as it might have done, ask for any relief in respect of the promissory note executed by Thompson in the plaintiff's name; but that is not, I think, a reason why the plaintiff should be denied the relief which he does ask in respect of the Government paper. Although the [951] plaint contains the omission referred to, the correspondence between the respective solicitors, which is set out in the plaint, supplies, in a great measure, the deficiency. The plaintiff's attorney's letter of the 25th February 1881 demands the return of both the promissory note and the Government paper, alleging that the latter was deposited as a security for the payment of the former; and the defendant's attorney, on the following 21st of March, writes a letter requiring the plaintiff to redeem the Government paper by paying the Rs. 19,000 and interest. These letters show how the parties regarded the transaction.

Having decided the case adversely to the defendant on the grounds which I have mentioned, it becomes unnecessary to consider the charge brought against him, that he took the Government paper with knowledge of the fraud which Thompson committed against the plaintiff by pledging it.

The plaintiff is entitled to a decree ordering the defendant to deliver to the plaintiff the Government paper in suit and to pay him all interest, if any, that he may have received upon the Government note since its deposit with him on the 15th December 1880; and that, in the meantime, the defendant be restrained from endorsing or parting with the said Government note.

Garth, C.J.—I agree in the main with my brother WHITE's judgment. He has gone very fully into the facts, and it is only necessary for me to express my opinion shortly. I confess, if the case had depended upon the meaning of the word 'negotiate' in the power-of-attorney, I should have been disposed to take the same view as the learned Judge in the Court below. I see no reason why a Government note should not be 'negotiated' like any other promissory note; and if, as was suggested in the argument, the word 'negotiate' has any special meaning in Calcutta, which would confine its applicability to any particular class of instruments, or to any particular mode of dealing with those instruments, I think evidence to that effect should have been given at the trial.

It was held by the Privy Council in the case of The Bank of Bengal v. Pagan (5 Moore's I. A., 27), that a power to endorse a Government [952] note of this kind authorized an endorsement of the instrument by way of pledge; and upon the same principle it seems to me that a power to negotiate such a note would authorize its negotiation by way of pledge.

These notes are negotiated in much the same way as an ordinary promissory note,—that is to say, by endorsement and delivery in the first instance, and afterwards by delivery only; and endorsement seems to me to be only one mode of negotiation, the word 'negotiate' being the more comprehensive term of the two.

But this case does not depend, in my opinion, upon the meaning of the word 'negotiate,' nor of any other word in the power-of-attorney. It involves a different and much broader question than that in the case of The Bank of Bengal v. Pagan (5 Moore's I. A., 27). There the transaction in respect of which the pledge was made was perfectly honest and unimpeachable. The borrower of the money effected the loan on his own account, and the only question was, whether he had authority under the power-of-attorney to endorse, by way of pledge, the Government notes belonging to his brother; and the Privy Council held, that the word 'endorse' gave him that power without reference to the purpose for which the endorsement was made.

But in this case the plaintiff's real object is to impeach the whole transaction between Messrs. Nicholls and the defendant as a fraud upon himself, for which, from beginning to end, Messrs. Nicholls had no authority, and it is to be regretted that the plaintiff did not put his case upon this broad ground, and ask for relief as regards the promissory note, as well as the Government paper. He did take that course in the letter that was written before the suit was brought, and why he should have omitted to do so in his plaint it is perhaps not easy to explain.

I cannot help thinking that the separation of the question of pledge from that of the original loan has had a tendency to divert the argument, as well as the attention of the Court, from that which is the true issue in the cause; and I fear it may have been the means of inducing the learned Judge in the [933] Court below to take what we consider to be an imperfect view of the matter.

It seems to me now, looking at the question in its proper light, that the plaintiff had a right to unrip the whole transaction. I cannot doubt that if he had sued to have the promissory note delivered up to be cancelled, on the ground that the loan itself was unauthorized and fraudulent, the defendant would have had no answer to the suit. It is clear that Messrs. Nicholls & Co. had no authority to borrow in the plaintiff's name; indeed, it is not pretended that they had such authority, and the promissory note, although the plaintiff asks no relief in that respect, is in fact so much waste paper.

Then how can the security stand if the loan is negatived, and the promissory note is invalid? I think that the whole transaction is a fraud, and a nullity from beginning to end. The return of the Government paper is claimed upon that ground, and I think that the omission to ask relief as regards the promissory note will make no substantial difference in the result of the cause.

The plaintiff will have a decree in the terms of my brother WHITE's judgment, and he will also have his costs in both Courts on scale No.2.

Appeal allowed.

Shama Churn Mitter.....Defendant.

Payment to stay final sale—Payment to zamindar—Reg. VIII of 1819, s. 13.

The direction in s. 13 of Reg. VIII of 1819, that money paid into Court by a taluqdar in order to stay the final sale shall be deducted from any claim of rent that may at the time be pending on account of the year or months for which the notice of sale may have been published, is satisfied by payment not into Court, but to the zamindar. If a strictly literal construction were put upon the words 'into Court' no payment effectual to stay the sale could be made, for 'the Court' has nothing to do with these sales, which are managed by the Collector.

Baboo Trulokya Nath Mitter and Baboo Pron Nath Pandit for the Appellant.

Baboo Mohun Mohun Roy and Baboo Anand Chopal Palit for the Respondent.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), which was delivered by Field, J.—The plaintiff in this case is a patnidar, and the rent payable by him to the zamindar is Rs. 922. The defendant is darpatnidar, and the rent payable by him to the patnidar is Rs. 1,022. Under the terms of the darpatni kabuliati the darpatnidar is to pay the zamindar's rent,—i.e., the head rent. It thus appears that the actual amount payable by the darpatnidar to the putnidar for each year is Rs. 100.

The present suit is brought to recover the sum of Rs. 3,133-15, alleged arrears of the darpatni rent, with interest. This [955] amount has been obtained by making an account extending over the years after 1274 (1867). In this account the amounts paid by the darpatnidar, as well to the patnidar direct as to the zamindar, are credited to the oldest arrears of the entire amount of darpatni rent.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1638 of 1880, against the decree of J. P. Grant, Esq., Judge of Hooghly, dated the 27th May 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Sreenath Roy, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 10th July 1879.

The essential question in the case is, as the District Judge says, a question of appropriation of payments. The District Judge is of opinion that what the parties intended was, that the payments of each year should be credited to the rent of that year, and that any portion of the annual rent unpaid at the end of the year should constitute a separate debt and should not be carried on in a continuous account; in other words, he finds that, within the meaning of s. 60 of the Contract Act, there were circumstances in the case indicating it to be the intention of the parties that all payments made within the year should be credited to the rent of the current year, and not to arrears of past years. We think that this is a finding of fact with which we cannot interfere in second appeal.

It has been further contended before us that, in arriving at his conclusion upon the question of appropriation of payments, the District Judge has erred in applying the provisions of s. 13 of Reg. VIII of 1819 to the parties to the present case. We think that, quite apart from what the District Judge says as to the applicability of s. 13 of the Regulation, there is sufficient matter in his judgment to show that, even apart from the section of the Regulation, he would have arrived at the conclusion at which he has arrived upon the question of appropriation of payments.

As to the applicability of cl. 3, s. 13 of Reg. VIII of 1819, it is contended that the direction of this clause that money paid in order to stay the final sale shall be deducted from any claim of rent that may at the time be pending on account of the year or months for which the notice of sale may have been published, applies only to payments made into Court, and that, in this case, the payments were not made into Court but to the zamindar out of Court. The District Judge has found as a fact that the money was paid in each instance after the 'ashtomi' application under the Regulation had been [956] made, and in order to stay the sale; and he considered that the staying of the sale is the substance of the thing, and that the paying into Court or paying to the zamindar out of the Court is immaterial. We are not prepared to dissent from that view of the law; and, as already observed, even if we were, we think that there is sufficient matter in the District Judge's judgment to show that, apart from the consideration of s. 13 of the Regulation, he did arrive, and would have arrived, at the conclusion at which he has arrived upon the evidence before him indicating the intention of the parties as to the appropriation of payments.

We may, however, observe, that if a strictly literal construction were put upon the words 'into Court,' no payment effectual to stay the sale could be made, for 'the Court' has now nothing to do with these sales, which are managed by the Collector.

We think, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed. But as there is no doubt that these old arrears of the annual rent have not been paid, we think it fair to direct that each party shall bear his own costs of this litigation.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 10th May, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE FIELD AND MR. JUSTICE BOSE.

Charu SurnokarDefendant

Dokouri Chunder ThakoorPlaintiff.

Easement—Implied grant—Modes of acquiring easements—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 26.

In a suit for an injunction to restrain the defendant from using a path on the plaintiff's land it appeared that the land held by the plaintiff and defendant had originally belonged to one owner, and that the plaintiff and the defendant had obtained their respective tenements more than twenty years previously. The path had been admittedly made by the original owner, but the plaintiff contended that when he purchased the land he had closed the path. Thus the Munsif disbelieved, and refused the injunction. The District Judge, treating, [957] the case as if it fell under s. 26 of the Limitation Act, and being of opinion that the defendant had not proved twenty years' peaceable, open, and uninterrupted exercise of the right of way, gave the plaintiff a decree.

Held, that the mode of acquiring an easement provided by s. 26 of the Limitation Act is not the only way in which an easement may be acquired, but an easement may also be acquired by implied grant. In the present case the use of the path might be absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, in which case there would be an easement of necessity; or the use of the path, though not absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, might be necessary for its enjoyment in the state in which it was at the time of severance, and in this case, if the easement were apparent and continuous, there would be a presumption that it passed with the defendant's tenement.

Baboo Jadub Chunder Seal for the Appellant.

Baboo Girudass Banerjee for the Respondent.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (FIELD and BOSE, JJ.), which was delivered by

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1649 of 1880, against the decree of A. J. R. Bainbridge, Esq., Judge of Moorshedabad, dated the 22nd of May 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Anant Ram Ghose, Second Munsif of Berhampore, dated the 31st December 1879.

* [Sec. 26 :—Where the access and use of light or air to and for any building have been peaceably enjoyed therewith, as an easement, and as of right, without interruption, and for twenty years, and where any way or water course, or the use of any water, or any other easement (whether affirmative or negative) has been peaceably and openly enjoyed by any person claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right, without interruption, and for twenty years, the right to such access and use of light or air, way, water course, use of water, or other easement, shall be absolute and indefeasible.

Each of the said periods of twenty years shall be taken to be a period ending within two years next before the institution of the suit wherein the claim to which such period relates is contested.

Explanation.—Nothing is an interruption within the meaning of this section, unless where there is an actual discontinuance of the possession or enjoyment by reason of an obstruction by the act of some person other than the claimant, and unless such obstruction is submitted to or acquiesced in for one year after the claimant has notice thereof and of the person making or authorizing the same to be made.]

Field, J.—In this case the plaintiff brought a suit to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from using a path which runs over the land and premises admittedly belonging to the plaintiff. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court says, that it is an admitted fact that the plaintiff's premises and the defendant's premises, which adjoin, originally belonged to the same owner, and it appears that the plaintiff and defendant obtained their respective tenements by purchase more than twenty years ago. When I say "the defendant" I include the defendant's predecessor in title, because, although the defendant himself purchased seventeen or eighteen years ago, he is for the purpose of this suit entitled to add the time during which his immediate predecessor, Gya Nath, held the particular tenement. The defendant's case was, that the two tenements belonged to the same owner; that this owner constructed the ghat and the path now used by him (defendant), and that this ghat and path continued to be used for more than sixty years. The plaintiff on oath admitted that the pathway had been in existence when the two tenements belonged to the same owner, but he added that he had closed the path after purchasing his portion of the property.

[958] The Munsif disbelieved the plaintiff's statement as to the closing of the path. He says,—“there is no trustworthy evidence to show that the pathway was discontinued by him.”

It, therefore, appeared to him that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed, and he refused the prayer for an injunction. The case then went before the District Judge, and the District Judge treated the case as if it were one falling under s. 26 of the Limitation Act, and being of opinion that the defendant had not proved twenty years' peaceable, open, and uninterrupted exercise of the right of way, he gave the plaintiff a decree.

It appears to us that the learned District Judge has been in error in the manner in which he has dealt with the case. It has been decided by the Privy Council that the mode of acquiring an easement provided by s. 27 of Act IX of 1871, and by s. 26 of the present Limitation Act, XV of 1877,—i.e., by enjoyment as of right, without interruption and for twenty years, is not the only way in which an easement can be acquired, and that this provision of law was not intended to interfere with other modes of acquiroment. See Maharani Rajroop Koor v. Syed Abdul Hossein (L. R., 7 I. A., 240; s. C., I. L. R., 6 Cal., 394) also, Achul Mahtu v. Rajun Mahta (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 812) and Punja Kurarji v. Bai Kurar (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 20). In the present case the defendant did not allege that he had acquired an easement by twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment as of right. His case was that the two tenements originally belonged to the same owner; that while this unity of possession continued, the path and the ghat were constructed by the single owner; and that, when the two tenements became the property of separate owners, this path over the plaintiff's tenement continued to be used by the owner of the other tenement, in other words, the defendant alleged an implied grant. This implied grant might arise in one of two ways: (i) The use of the path and ghat might be absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement, in which case, there would be an easement of necessity. (ii) The use of the path and ghat, though not absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the defendant's tenement might be necessary for its enjoyment in the state in which it [939] was at the time of severance; and in this case, if the easement were apparent and continuous, there would be a presumption that it passed with the defendant's tenement. This latter case is discussed in the books under the principle of the disposition of the owner of two tenements (Destination du pere de famille). See Gale on Easements, 5th edition, pp. 96, 97 and following pages; and as to right of way, p. 103 note, p. 124 note, and Pyer v. Carter (1 H. and N., 922). This principle is just and fair and accords with common sense. It is in consonance with the rule of justice, equity, and good conscience, which must guide the Courts in the absence of positive direction by the Legislature. In the present case it appears to us that if the path and ghat were made and used when the two tenements belonged to the same owner, and, as alleged by the defendant, continued to be used by the proprietor of the defendant's tenement after the two tenements became the property of separate individuals, and if the easement is one to which the principle above indicated properly applies, then the plaintiff would not be entitled to the injunction which he asks.

The case must, therefore, go back to the District Judge, and he will have to find whether he agrees with the Munsif's finding upon the question whether the plaintiff closed the path after he became the owner of the tenement which now belongs to him. If the plaintiff closed the path, and it remained closed for such a period that non-user during this period would bar any suit by the defendant to have the use of the path restored to him, then the defendant's right has been lost. If, on the other hand, the District Judge finds that the plaintiff did not, as he alleges, close the path after purchasing the tenement which now belongs to him, the Judge will further have to determine whether this particular easement is one to which the principle already explained is applicable.

The case must, therefore, be remanded, and all costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

NOTES.

[I. MODES OF ACQUISITION OF EASEMENTS IN THE LIMITATION ACT ARE NOT EXHAUSTIVE—

This was declared by the Privy Council in (1880) 6 Cal. 394 P.C. See the notes to that case; see also 6 Bom., 20; 5 Mad. 226; 253; 10 Cal. 214; 14 Cal. 839; 35 Cal. 851.

II. EASEMENTS OF NECESSITY—

The necessity must be absolute, for this kind of easements to be recognised; this will not arise, if there should be any other mode of enjoyment though it should be attended with greater inconvenience:—(1890) 14 Bom. 452; (1891) 16 Bom. 552; (1893) 18 Bom. 616; (1893) 15 All. 270; (1894) 19 Bom. 797; (1905) 28 Mad. 495.

III. EASEMENTS BY IMPLICATION OF LAW ON SEVERANCE OF TENEMENTS.

The authority of this case has been questioned.

Under the English law, easements arise by implication when the case is one of absolute necessity or the easements are apparent and continuous. In such cases, they have been recognised in India also:—(1890) 14 Bom. 452; (1900) P. L. R. 173; 49 P.R. 1900.

In other cases, English law applies the principle that a grantor cannot derogate from his own grant and if the grantor intends to reserve any right over the tenement granted, it is his duty to reserve it expressly in his grant. Thus, if the servient tenement is granted first, the easement is at an end unless expressly reserved (and subject to certain exceptions):—Wheeldon v. Burrows (1885) 10 A. C. 590; Suffield v. Brown (1864) 4 D.G.J. & S. 185; Crossley & Sons v. Lightowler (1867) 2 Ch. Ap. 478; Union Lighterage Company v. London Graving Dock Company (1901) 2 Ch. 300; (1902) 2 Ch. 557; Ray v. Hazeldine (1904) 2 Ch. 17. The case of Pyer v. Carter (1857) 1 H. & N. 916 on which this case of 8 Cal. 956 and the Indian Easements Act sec. 13 (d) are founded is not authoritative in England at the present day; vide cases above cited.

Moreover rights of way are discontinuous easements, and the principles applicable to continuous easements ought not to be applied to easements of this sort:—See (1893) 15 All. 270; (1893) 18 Bom. 616; (1899) 26 Cal. 311; (314); 516; (520).

The recognised exceptions are easements of absolute necessity; mutual and reciprocal easements; conveyances forming part of the same scheme or transaction:—Russell v. Watts (1885) 10 A. C. 611; cases arising on partition:—28 Mad. 495; (1899) 3 C. W. N. 409; 407.]

[960] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 26th May, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE MITTER.

Gungadhur Shikdar and others.....Defendants

Ayimuddin Shah Biswas.....Plaintiff.*

Landlord and tenant—Grant of land—Presumption as to nature of tenure—Erection of buildings—Bastu land—Suit to evict.

Where it is conceded that lands were not let out for agricultural purposes, but that they had apparently been let out more than sixty years before suit for building purposes, the defendants' ancestors, having erected thereon a house more than sixty years before suit and having, with the defendants, resided there from first to last, the Court is at liberty to presume that the land was granted for building purposes, and that the grant was of a permanent character.

Prosonno Coomaree Debea v. Sheik Rutton Beparry (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 696) distinguished.

THE plaintiff was the holder of a patni right in a certain taluq, and had obtained confirmation of his title to the patni under a decree, dated the 31st March 1870, under which decree he was put into possession of the property by the Court. He, subsequently to this decree, let out the land to ryots; but the defendants, who were alleged to be trespassers, prevented them from taking possession. The plaintiff thereupon served a notice to quit on the defendants on the 20th September 1878, and brought this present suit to evict them.

The defendants denied service of the notice, and stated that they had resided on the land without interruption for more than twelve years, that the suit was barred as being a res judicata, and that, moreover, their ancestors and themselves had resided on the land for more than sixty years; and that the person who granted the patni to the plaintiff had acknowledged the right of the defendants to reside on the land by receiving rent from them.

The Munsif found that notice had been duly served, and that the previous suit under the decree in which the plaintiff derived [961] his title was no bar to the present suit, inasmuch as that was a suit to obtain possession of the whole mehal, whilst the present suit was to evict the defendants; that the land in question was homestead land containing the dwelling-house of the defendants, and had never been used for agricultural purposes; that the evidence produced showed that the ancestor of the defendants, and the defendants themselves, had resided on the land for a period of over sixty years, and that the defendants had bought up the jamai right in the land from a tenant of the original zamindar; and he therefore held, that the defendants had an hereditary holding in the land, and had resided thereon, and that therefore the plaintiff had no right to evict them.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, before whom it was admitted that the lands were bastu lands, and that the defendants or their ancestors had held this land as homestead land for sixty years : but that no statutory right of occupancy had been acquired by the defendants. The respondents' pleader however submitted that there was abundant evidence of a mourasi grant for building purposes, which, though not in writing, was a matter of legal inference from the fact that the land had been held from generation to generation, and as authority for this Dhunput Singh v. Gooman Singh (11 Moore's I. A., 433 ; s.c., 9. W. R. (P. C.), 3) was cited.

The District Judge held that that decision did not apply to bastu lands, but decided the case in favour of the defendants on these grounds : (i) that the facts of the case raised a fair and reasonable inference that the land was let for building purposes ; and (ii) that, as the original lessor would be estopped from evicting the defendants, inasmuch as he allowed the defendants to erect buildings on the land without objection, so the plaintiff, who was in no better position than his ancestor, would be bound in equity also as though he had granted to the defendants a building lease. He, therefore, dismissed the appeal with costs.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Mohiney Mohun Roy for the Appellant.

Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee and Baboo Shoshee Bhusun Dutt for the Respondents.

[962] FIELD, J., held, that the case could not be distinguished from the case of Prosonno Coomaree Dubea v. Sherik Rutton Beparry (1. L. R., 3 Cal., 696), and that the District Judge had decided the case on a point which was not raised in the Court of First Instance, nor on any cross appeal, and that, even supposing permission had been granted to build upon the land, such permission would not debar a landlord from ejecting his tenant after proper notice to quit, and he therefore allowed the appeal.

The defendants appealed under s. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose for the Appellants.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and MITTER, J.) was delivered by Garth, C. J. - In this case we think that there was quite sufficient ground to justify the Court below in presuming a grant of a permanent nature in favour of the defendants' ancestors.

It is conceded that the land in question was never let for agricultural purposes. It was apparently let upwards of sixty years ago for building purposes ; because it is found that, after the grant (whatever it was), these buildings, which are of a substantial character, were erected some sixty years ago by the defendants' ancestors, and that they and their ancestors have lived there ever since. Under these circumstances we think that the Courts below were at liberty to presume, if they thought fit, that the land was granted for building purposes, and that the grant itself was of a permanent character.

This has been explained in several recent cases, and amongst others in the case of Prosonno Coomar Chatterjee v. Jagun Nath Bysack (10 C. L. R., 25), to which our attention has been called.

If the land had originally been granted for agricultural purposes, then the defendants would probably had another answer to the suit, namely, that they had acquired a right of [963] occupancy. But as the circumstances under which the original grant was made tend to show that it was made for building purposes, the Courts below were at liberty to presume that the grant was of a permanent nature.

In the case mentioned by the learned Judge, which he thought governed this case, it did not appear that the defendants or their ancestors had ever built upon the land or laid out any money upon it. Indeed, it was found by the lower Courts in that case that such kutchu buildings as were upon the land had not been erected by the defendants.

We think, therefore, that the decision of the District Judge was right ; and that the judgment of this Court should be reversed, the appellants being entitled to the costs of both hearings in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 8th June, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE BOSE

Rajdhur Chowdhry.....Plaintiff

Kalikristna Bhatta Charjya and others.....Defendants.

Suit for declaration under a mokurari patta Alternative relief—Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877) s. 19—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) s. 28.

A suit to have a mokurari patta enforced as against one co-sharer granting it, and other co-sharers who repudiate it, and in the alternative to have the salami paid for the mokurari patta returned, is in substance a suit to enforce a contract to place the plaintiff in possession of the land under the patta and to declare his rights to it as against all the defendants; and under s. 19 † of the Specific Relief Act, the plaintiff is entitled to ask for compensation against the defendant granting the patta.

Under s. 28 of the Civil Procedure Code, such an alternative claim may be allowed against one or more of the defendants.

THIS was a suit brought to have it declared that the plaintiff was entitled to hold certain land under a mokurari patta granted [964] to him by the defendant No. 1; or, in the alternative, to recover refund of the salami paid for the mokurari lease.

Defendant No. 1, on the 31st Bhadro 1282 (15th September 1875), granted to the plaintiff, on payment by him of Rs. 250, a mokurari patta of certain lands, the lease reciting that, in the event of the lessor's co-sharers objecting to defendant No. 1 treating the lands as his private property possessed in severalty, then that the lessor would make up the deficiency of land from other lands held by him; and if he failed to do so, then the lessee might sue him for damages.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1617 of 1880, against the decree of S. O. B. Ridsdale, Esq., Acting Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, dated the 15th May 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Shib Pershad Chuckerbutty, Sadr Munsif of Gowhattee in Zilla Kamrup, dated the 31st December 1879.

† [Sec. 19 :—Any person suing for the specific performance of a contract, may also ask for compensation for its breach, either in addition to, or in substitution for, such performance. If in any such suit the Court power to award compensation in certain cases.

decides that specific performance ought not to be granted, but that there is a contract between the parties which has been broken by the defendant and that the plaintiff is entitled to compensation for that breach, it shall award him compensation accordingly.

If in any such suit the Court decides that specific performance ought to be granted, but that it is not sufficient to satisfy the justice of the case, and that some compensation for breach of the contract should also be made to the plaintiff, it shall award him such compensation accordingly.

Compensation awarded under this section may be assessed in such manner as the Court may direct.

Explanation.—The circumstance that the contract has become incapable of specific performance, does not preclude the Court from exercising the jurisdiction conferred by this section.]

The patni ryots of defendant No. 1 and his co-sharers ejected the plaintiff, and the plaintiff then brought the present suit. Defendant No. 1 admitted the terms of the lease, but his co-sharers, the other defendants, repudiated it, stating that the land leased had never been partitioned, and objected to the form of the suit.

The Munsif found that the property had never been partitioned, and that, therefore, the lease could only operate against the share of defendant No. 1; and refusing the plaintiff the precise relief asked for, he affirmed the plaintiff's right to the lease against defendant No. 1, and further refused to grant alternative relief.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who, agreeing with the decision of the Munsif, dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Bahoo Bhabany Churn Dutt for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and BOSE, J.) was delivered by Garth, C. J.—We think that the lower Appellate Court has taken an erroneous view of this matter.

The plaintiff's case is, that the defendant No. 1 granted to him a maurasi patta of the land in question, professedly for himself and the other defendants, Nos. 2 to 7, who are co-proprietors with him; and it appears that the plaintiff entered upon the land and paid rent under this patta.

[1968] But then the defendants Nos. 2 to 7, instead of confirming the contract that had been made for them by the defendant No. 1, repudiated it, as having been made without their authority; and in consequence the plaintiff was ejected. He therefore brings this suit against all the defendants for the purpose of having the contract, which the defendant No. 1 made professedly for himself and his co-defendants, enforced against them all; or, as an alternative, he claims to have the Rs. 250, which he paid by way of premium for the maurasi patta, restored to him.

Both the lower Courts have found that the plaintiff is not entitled to have his maurasi patta confirmed, because the defendant No. 1 had no authority to grant it; and with that part of the decree of the lower Courts we have no power to interfere.

But then in the Courts below the plaintiff pressed his alternative claim for the Rs. 250 under s. 19 of the Specific Relief Act, and both Courts have found that a case of this kind does not come within that section.

The lower Courts do not consider that the suit is one to enforce a contract; and they say that the plaintiff has no right to sue for alternative claims,—one to establish his right to the land, and the other for a refund of the Rs. 250.

Looking only at the form of the plaint, there is much reason in that view. But looking to the substance of the claim, we think that this may well be considered as a suit to enforce a contract (the patta), to place the plaintiff in possession of the land under that patta, and to declare his right to it as against all the defendants (see s. 4 of the Specific Relief Act); and if this is so, then under s. 19 the plaintiff had a right to ask, as an alternative claim, for compensation against the defendant No. 1 for his breach of contract, such compensation being measured by the Rs. 250 which he paid by way of premium, less the very small sum which would represent the short time during which the plaintiff was in possession of the property. This is certainly the substance and justice of the case; and we think that the lower Courts should have viewed it in that way.

Then the only question is, whether we have any right to [966] dispose of the matter here, or whether we ought not to send the case back to have the amount of compensation determined.

We might, without any very great stretch of our powers, award to the plaintiff the whole of the Rs. 250 by way of compensation, but strictly speaking, of course, the amount of compensation is a question of fact, and there ought perhaps to be some reduction, however small, from the Rs. 250 for the time during which the plaintiff was in possession.

The defendant No. 1 (respondent) is not present here; so we have no means of asking him to consent to any sum; and therefore we think the best thing we can do, in order, if possible, to save expense to both parties, is to remand the case to the Court below to ascertain the proper amount, unless the first defendant will consent to a decree for Rs. 230, with costs in the two lower Courts, but not in this.

The plaintiff consents to these terms; but if the defendant No. 1 does not consent to them, then the case must go back to the lower Appellate Court to ascertain what the compensation should be. The Court will probably then give the plaintiff a larger amount than we propose to give him now.

The decrees of the Court below will, therefore, be reversed, and, subject to the first defendant's consent, the decree will be for the plaintiff for Rs. 230, with costs in the lower Courts, each party paying his own costs in this. If this decree is not consented to by the defendant No. 1, the case will go back to the lower Appellate Court to ascertain the amount; and in that case the costs of the remand, and also the costs of the lower Appellate Court in ascertaining the amount, will be paid by the defendant No. 1.

We should add that, under s. 28 of the Procedure Code, we think that this alternative claim, to which the plaintiff is entitled, may be made against one or more of the several defendants.

Appeal allowed.

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 35—Certificate of Guardianship Act (XL of 1858)—Majority Act (IX of 1875), s. 3.

The object of s. 35 of the Registration Act, which directs the registering officer to refuse to register a document if the person by whom it purports to be executed appears to be a minor, is, that if the registration authorities refuse to register on that ground, the question of minority may at once be brought into a Civil Court and there determined.

The making of an order appointing a guardian under Act XL of 1858, and not the subsequent taking out of the certificate, is that by which a guardian is appointed of the person and property of a minor within the meaning of s. 3 of the Indian Majority Act (See Stephen v. Stephen, ante, p. 714).

Baboo Mohesh Chander Chowdhry, Baboo Sreenath Dass, and Baboo Bunshee Dhur Sen for the Appellants.

Baboo Trailokyanath Mitter and Baboo Kally Churn Banerjee for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (FIELD and MACPHERSON, JJ.), which was delivered by Field, J.—This is a case under s. 77 of the Registration Act. The plaintiffs seek to have a mortgage deed registered, which was executed by the defendant Brojo Nath Roy Chowdhry. The Sub-Registrar of Howrah, who was the Registering Officer to whom it was presented for registration, refused to register, on the ground that Brojo Nath Roy Chowdhry, the executant, was a minor. In making this order he acted under the provisions of s. 35 of the Registration Act, which provides as follows:—"If any of the persons by whom the document purports to be executed appears to the Registering Officer to be a minor, the Registering Officer shall refuse to register the [968] document." Now, the object of this provision is undoubtedly this, that if the registration authorities refuse to register on the ground that the executant is a minor, the question of minority may at once be brought into a Civil Court and there determined; and it is clear that this question can be decided more satisfactorily at the time when the last evidence of age or non-age may be supposed to be available than afterwards, it may be years afterwards, when this evidence is no longer forthcoming.

An appeal was preferred against the order of the Sub-Registrar, and under the provisions of s. 72 of the Registration Act, the District Registrar affirmed the Sub-Registrar's order. This case was then instituted, and the question which we have to decide is, whether Brojo Nath Roy Chowdhry was a major on the 18th of November 1879 when he executed the mortgage deed.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 142 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Kedaressur Roy, Subordinate Judge of Hoogly, dated the 29th December 1880.

In order to determine this question we have first to decide whether the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) is applicable. Upon this point the Subordinate Judge says in his judgment: "It has been argued by the defendants that the grandfather and the mother of the executant were ordered by the Judge to be his guardians under Act XL of 1858. He is a minor until he attains the age of twenty-one years under s. 3 of the Indian Majority Act. The plaintiffs' pleader, in answer to this contention, says that as the certificate of guardianship was not taken out by the said grandfather and the mother, the said section does not apply; but I do not think the contention of the plaintiffs' pleader is a valid one, for though no certificate was actually taken out, they were appointed as guardians by order of the District Judge, and they all along acted as guardians of Brojo Nath."

It appears to us that the view here taken by the Subordinate Judge is correct. It is not denied before us that an order was made under the provisions of Act XL of 1858 by the District Judge, and we think that the making of the order and not the subsequent taking out of the certificate, is that by which a guardian is appointed of the person or property of a minor within the meaning of s. 3 of the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875).

[969] We then come to the evidence. In dealing with the evidence the Subordinate Judge has placed the burden of proof upon the defendants. It is not contended before us that the burden has been improperly placed, and we will assume, for the purposes of this case, that the burden of proof does rest upon the defendants.

There is no ground of appeal that evidence, which is by law irrelevant, has been received on the part of the defendants. Nevertheless, as we are bound to form our own independent opinion upon the evidence, we think we cannot allow our minds to be influenced by matter which has been admitted upon the record, but is clearly irrelevant. (His Lordship, after reviewing the evidence as to the minority of Brojo Nath, continued.)

We think that the balance of evidence is in favour of the case made by the defendants; and in this view we find that Brojo Nath was a minor on the 18th of November 1879, and therefore that the registration authorities rightly refused registration of the instrument.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

There were two sets of authorities in the Calcutta High Court, one holding that the issue of the certificate was the proper date:—(1883) 9 Cal. 901; (1886) 12 Cal. 512; (1886) 13 Cal. 219; See also (1888) 13 Bom. 285; the other set of authorities held the date of the order to be the starting point:—(1882) 8 Cal. 967; (1886) 14 Cal. 55; (1887) 15 Cal. 10; the Privy Council reversed (1886) 12 Cal. 542 in (1889) 17 Cal. 317, see at p. 356 - from which it would appear that the view in this case is correct.

The question does not arise under VIII of 1890.

A mother cannot have a right to the custody of her legitimate children adversely to the father. Ordinarily the custody of the mother is the custody of the father, and any removal of the children from place to place by the mother ought to be taken to be consistent with the right of the father as guardian, and not as a taking out of his keeping. But where a Hindu woman left her husband's house, taking with her her infant daughter, and went to the house of [970] A, and on the same day the daughter was married to B, the brother of A, without the father's consent, it was held that A was rightly convicted under ss. 109 and 363 of the Penal Code of abetting the offence of kidnapping.

Baboo Doorga Mohun Doss for the Petitioner.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby) for the Crown.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (WILSON and MACPHERSON, JJ.), which was delivered by

Wilson, J. The conviction in this case was one under ss. 109 and 363 of the Penal Code for abetting the offence of kidnapping. Upon the appeal two questions were argued: first, whether the substantive offence was committed; secondly, whether there was sufficient evidence of abetment. The second question we may dismiss at once by saying that if the substantive offence was committed, there was ample evidence of abetment. The real question is as to the kidnapping. The facts proved appear to be the following:—

Parameshwari, the wife of Uma Churn Pattuk, left her husband's house at night, taking with her a daughter of six or seven years old and a son still younger. She went to the house of a cousin of her, who lived in a house in the same homestead with the accused and his younger brother Guru Dass. The same night Parameshwari gave her daughter in marriage to Guru Dass. The leaving of her husband's house with the daughter and the marriage of the latter to Guru Dass took place in pursuance of a previous arrangement between Parameshwari and the accused: and the marriage was without the sanction or knowledge of the girl's father. It was proved that Parameshwari had been subjected to some degree of cruelty at the hands of her husband, but the Court below did not find, nor do we think it could rightly have found, that the cruelty was such as to justify her in leaving her husband's house, even if that fact, had it been proved, could have affected the present charge, which we are inclined to think it could not have done.

* Criminal Appeal, No. 280 of 1882, against the order of T. F. Bignold, Esq., Sessions Judge of Chittagong, dated the 10th May 1882.

There is no question that, by the Hindu law, a father is the guardian of his children and is ordinarily entitled to their cus-[971] today. But it was suggested that, in the case of a very young child, the mother has as good a right to the custody as the father, and even possibly a better. So that the taking of the child by the mother was not a taking out of the keeping of the lawful guardian within the meaning of s. 361 of the Penal Code. And in support of this a passage was cited from the work of Dr. Gurudass Banerjee on the Law of Marriage and Stridhan, page 172. But we are unable to find any authority for the proposition that a mother can ever have a right to the custody of her legitimate children adverse to the father. And such a view seems to us inconsistent with the principles governing the Hindu law in such matters. Of course, under any ordinary circumstances, the custody of the mother is the custody of the father, and any removal of the children from place to place by the mother ought to be taken to be consistent with the rights of the father as guardian and not as a taking out of his keeping. But the present case is very peculiar. The mother removed the girl from the father's house for the express purpose of marrying her without his consent, and thereby depriving him for ever of her guardianship and custody. This did, we think, amount to a taking out of the keeping of the lawful guardian. The conviction is, therefore, right.

Conviction affirmed.

Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 361, 366.*

The mother of an illegitimate child is its proper and natural guardian during the period of nurture. And where the mother, on her death-bed, entrusts the care of such child to a person, who accepts the trust and maintains the child, such a person is "lawfully entrusted" with the care and custody of the minor within the meaning of s. 361 * of the Penal Code.

*[Sec. 361 :—Whoever takes or entices any minor under fourteen years of age, if a male, or under sixteen years of age, if a female, or any person of Kidnapping from lawful guardianship. unsound mind, out of the keeping of the lawful guardian of such minor or person of unsound mind, without the consent of such guardian, is said to Kidnap such minor or person from lawful guardianship.

Explanation.—The words "lawful guardian" in this section include any person lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of such minor or other person.

Exception.—This section does not extend to the act of any person who in good faith believes himself to be the father of an illegitimate child, or who in good faith believes himself to be entitled to the lawful custody of such child, unless such act is committed for an immoral or unlawful purpose.]

The explanation of the words "lawful guardian" in s. 361 is intended to obviate the difficulty the prosecution might be put to in being bound to [972] prove strictly in cases of abduction, that the person from whose care the minor had been abducted was the guardian of such minor within the meaning of the legal acceptation of the word.

THE prisoner was charged, tried, and found guilty, under s. 366^a of the Penal Code, for having kidnapped one Eva Fleury, in order that she might be seduced to illicit intercourse. It appeared from the evidence given at the trial in the Sessions Court that Eva Fleury was the illegitimate child of a Mrs. Fleury, who on her death-bed made over the child, who was then about three years old, to the charge of a Mrs. Lorenztsen, and that, from that time up to the time of the alleged offence Eva Fleury had lived in the house and under the care and protection of Mrs. Lorenztsen.

Eva Fleury was, at the time the offence was committed, a minor under the age of sixteen years, and for the purposes of the trial Mrs. Lorenztsen claimed to be the "lawful guardian" of the girl within the meaning of s. 361 of the Penal Code.

At the trial the prisoner was convicted and sentenced to three years' imprisonment, but at the request of Counsel, the learned Judge (CUNNINGHAM, J.) before whom the case was tried reserved the question as to whether Mrs. Lorenztsen could be said to be the "legal guardian" of the child within the meaning of s. 361 of the Penal Code.

On the case reserved coming on before the Court, Mr. Roy for the prisoner contended that Mrs. Lorenztsen was not the lawful guardian of Eva within the meaning of s. 361; that even the parents of illegitimate children had not the legal right of guardianship—Re v. Felton (1 Bott's Poor Law, by Const., p. 478, pl. 629) cited in Macpherson on Infants, 67; and that Mrs. Fleury, not herself being the guardian of the child, had no right to delegate her guardianship to Mrs. Lorenztsen—Ex parte Glover (4 Dowl., 291); Burns' Justice of the Peace, vol. 1, p. 389. Under English law a child above the age of seven years can choose her own guardian—In re Lloyd (3 M. and G., 547). Section 361 was intended to protect parental rights, and this child being illegitimate was in the eye of the law no one's child.

[973] The Officiating Standing Counsel (Mr. Bonnerjee) and Mr. J. G. Apear for the Crown were not called upon; but referred the Court to Re v. Cornforth (2 Str., 1161) and Ex parte Glover (4 Dowl., 291).

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., CUNNINGHAM, J., and MACLEAN, J.), was delivered by Garth, C. J. The prisoner was tried and convicted on the 30th day of March last, upon a charge framed under s. 366 of the Penal Code, for having kidnapped one Eva Fleury in order that she might be seduced to illicit intercourse.

Eva Fleury was the illegitimate child of a Mrs. Fleury, long since deceased, and was, when the offence was committed, living in the house and under the care and custody of a Mrs. Lorenztsen, who claimed to be her lawful guardian within the meaning of s. 361 of the Penal Code. Eva Fleury was, at the time when the offence was committed, a minor under the age of sixteen years, and Mrs. Lorenztsen's claim to be considered her legal guardian was based upon the fact that Mrs. Fleury, on her death-bed, confided Eva and another child to her keeping; this was some twelve years ago. Mrs. Lorenztsen accepted the trust, and has ever since had the charge of and maintained the child at her own expense.

* [Sec. 366.—Whoever kidnaps or abducts any woman with intent that she may be compelled, or knowing it to be likely that she will be compelled to marry any person against her will, or in order that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, or knowing it to be likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse, shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to ten years, and shall also be liable to fine.]

At the trial the counsel for the prisoner raised the point that Mrs. Lorenztsen was not, at the time when the alleged offence was committed, the lawful guardian of Eva Fleury within the meaning of s. 361 of the Penal Code. This point was reserved by the learned Judge who tried the case, and the prisoner having been convicted and sentenced under s. 366, this Court has now to determine whether that conviction can be maintained.

It was argued for the prisoner that Mrs. Lorenztsen was not the lawful guardian of Eva Fleury within the meaning of s. 361, that Mrs. Fleury herself was not the child's legal guardian at the time of her death, and therefore had no right to constitute Mrs. Lorenztsen, or any one else, the child's legal guardian; and lastly that s. 361 was intended rather to protect the rights of guardians than of minors; and unless the alleged [974] guardian could be recognized by law as such, she would not come within the meaning of the section.

We think, however, that the object of that and the cognate sections of the Code is at least as much to protect children of tender age from being abducted or seduced for improper purposes, as for the protection of the rights of parents and guardians; and we also think that the somewhat liberal explanation of the words "lawful guardian" under s. 361 is intended to obviate the difficulty which would otherwise arise, if the prosecution were required to prove strictly in cases of this kind that the person from whose care or custody a minor had been abducted or kidnapped came strictly within the meaning of a guardian according to the legal acceptation of that word.

We cannot doubt for a moment that the mother of an illegitimate child is its proper and natural guardian during the period of nurture; and if, during that period, the mother dies, and commits the child, as she did in this instance to the care of a faithful friend, who accepts the trust, and maintains the child in her own house, and at her own expense, we think it clear that such a person is "lawfully entrusted" with the care and custody of the minor within the meaning of the explanation in s. 361.

It too frequently happens that illegitimate orphan children, such as Eva Fleury in the present instance, are those who most require the protection of the law; and if persons in the position of Mrs. Lorenztsen who, so far as it appears, was the child's sole protector, are not to be considered lawful guardians within the meaning of the explanation, the law would become practically useless in a large class of cases in which its intervention is more especially needed.

Conviction upheld.

Valuation of suit—Decree, form and contents of—Variance between pleading and proof Ejectment, Suit for—Possession Thak Maps—Evidence.

Whether or not a suit has been properly valued is a preliminary question, which ought to be disposed of before the case goes to trial.

Decrees of Court should be drawn up by the Judge in such a way as to make them self-contained and capable of execution without referring to any other document.

A plaintiff must recover secundum allegata et probata, and no decree should be given in his favour on a point not raised in the pleadings, nor embodied in an issue.

Quere.—Whether a plaintiff in ejectment is entitled to succeed upon mere proof of antecedent undisturbed possession?

Value of thak maps as evidence of possession discussed.

THE facts of this case and the arguments on appeal are fully set out in the judgment of the Court.

Mr. Branson, Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee, and Baboo Joy Gobind Shome for the Appellants.

Mr. Bell and Baboo Taruck Nath Palit for the Respondents argued, that although the plaintiffs did not, in their plaint, rely on their possession, they could rely on it now —Kylash Kamnee Dossia v. Judoo Bushinee Dossia (22 W. R., 390). The thakbust maps were strong evidence of plaintiffs' possession —Nobo Coomar Doss v. Gobind Chunder Roy (9 C. L. R., 305). The onus was on the defendants who had dispossessed the plaintiffs—Mohabeer Pershad Singh v. Mohabeer Singh (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 591).

[976] Mr. Branson in reply.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), was delivered by Field, J.—The plaintiffs in this case sue to recover possession of 950 hals of land, consisting of two plots. Plot No. 1, according to the allegation contained in the plaint, comprises 850 hals, and is said to form the southern portion of Thak No. 2527, and to be known as Mouza or part of Mouza Rautpara. Plot No. 2 comprises 100 hals, and is said to form the southern portion of Thak No. 2581, and to constitute the Mouza or part of Mouza Bhoti Dowlutpore. The plaintiffs' case is, that these two plots and these two mouzas appertain to Taluk Mahomed Amzad and are their property, and they allege that they have been in possession thereof. The plaint does not set out the title of the plaintiffs in this property or the manner in which they came to acquire that title. With the plaint two thak maps were filed. One of these is the thak map of Gungadharpore, and is apparently undated. The other is a thak map of Mouza Dowlutpore, and bears date 1861. The plaint gives no boundaries of these two plots of land; but certain portions thereof are described to a certain extent. One portion under the Bengali letter ku (k) is said to consist of lands against the tenants of which the plaintiffs obtained decrees, and these lands are described by plots and boundaries of those plots as held by certain tenants whose names are given. The other portion under the Bengali letter kha (kh) is said to consist of lands which were in the possession of Kali Charan and Sunatun Das, and against whom also the plaintiffs are said to have obtained decrees. Of the rest of the land there is no particular description beyond the reference to the thak maps filed with the plaint.

The defence is, that the first plot of land appertains to Taluks No. 12, Anund Roy, No. 13, Ilukas Roy, No. 14, Shib Roy, No. 36, Krishna Prosad, and No. 4, Rajhullabhi, in Mouza Coyahara; and that the lands of Plot No. 2 appertain to Taluk No. 33, Bhelanugur, Kitta Anundpore, in Mouza Dowlutpore; that there is no such mouza as Rautpara or Bhoti Dowlutpore; [977] that the lands referred to in the plaint have really been the property of the defendants, their ancestors, and predecessors; and that the plaintiffs have never had any title or possession therein. The written statement of the defendants then further avers that the quantity of land has been largely overstated in the plaint; and it gives in a schedule the boundaries of the land as stated by the defendants, who further say that the first plot contains 500 hals only, and the second plot 125 hals, or 25 hals more than is stated in the plaint.

The issues fixed by the Subordinate Judge, who tried the case, are the following :—

- (1) Whether the lands under claim had been properly valued?
- (2) Whether the boundaries and quantity of land have been correctly stated?
- (3) Whether the plaintiffs were in possession of the lands in dispute, and were dispossessed therefrom at the time alleged, or the defendants having been in possession thereof from before, the suit is barred by limitation?
- (4) Whether the lands in dispute appertain to the mouza and taluk mentioned by the plaintiffs and belong to them, or to the mouza and taluk mentioned by defendants and belong to the latter (defendants)?

Now, the first of these issues is not an issue which ought to have been fixed for the trial of the case. It deals with a question of valuation, which is a preliminary question that ought to be disposed of before the case can or ought to go to trial. As to the second issue, it is impossible that the Subordinate Judge could have read the plaint when he fixed this issue, because the plaint does not give, or purport to give, the boundaries of the two parcels of land. The third and fourth issues are faulty, inasmuch as they are in that alternative form which has been repeatedly pointed out by this Court to be erroneous and misleading. When the Subordinate Judge came to deal with these issues, he found that, in consequence of there being no boundaries in the plaint, it was not possible for him to come to a categorical finding upon the second issue; and by way of getting over the difficulty, he took the boundaries [978] given by the defendants and proceeded to deal in his judgment, not with the land as described in the plaint by the plaintiffs, but with the land as described in the written statement by the defendants. Referring to the map he says :—“I find no difficulty in ascertaining the identity of the lands, inasmuch as the numbers of the thaks have been mentioned in the plaint and the maps thereof have been filed.” The difficulty which the Subordinate Judge did not experience has formed a very considerable difficulty both to the Judges of this Court and to the Counsel who have argued the appeal, inasmuch as by a mere inspection of the maps it is not possible to identify the land, either as described by the plaintiffs, or as described by the defendants, with any superficial area upon these maps. As a necessary consequence of adopting the boundaries given by the defendants, the Subordinate Judge was forced to hold that the quantity of the land comprised in the first parcel was not 850 hals as stated by the plaintiffs, but 500 hals as stated by the defendants; and that the quantity of land in the second parcel was not 100 hals, but 125 hals. Upon the merits of the case, the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the title to the land comprised in both parcels was in the defendants, but he was of opinion that the plaintiffs had been in possession for over twenty years, and that by such possession they had acquired a title which must be held to override and destroy the title which he found to be in the defendants. He says in one part of his judgment:—"In this case, there being satisfactory evidence of long possession on the part of the plaintiffs and no or doubtful proof on the part of the defendants, I am extremely sorry to say that although there is satisfactory evidence of title on the part of defendants, still they are not entitled to reap the benefit of this case." And further on, after considering the evidence, he thus expresses himself in conclusion:—"Considering all these circumstances, I come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs and their predecessors had been in possession of the disputed properties for twenty years and upwards; that they were dispossessed in the manner aforesaid in the year 1281; and that, by virtue of the excellent title that accrued to them by possession, they are entitled to recover possession." He there-[979] fore decided the case and made a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. That decree is in the following form: Mokuddma decree hoy. (The case is decreed.) Now, what the mokuddma was which was decreed it is not very easy to say. It certainly is not the case made by the plaintiffs, for, as we have already seen, he abandoned the quantity and description of the lands given by the plaintiffs, which description gave no boundaries, and he accepted the quantity and description given by the defendants. If the Subordinate Judge means to give a decree for the quantity of land stated by the defendants, he has given the plaintiffs in respect of the second parcel more land than they have claimed in their plaint. We think that it is not creditable to the Subordinate Judge that a decree of his Court in an important case like this should be drawn up in a form animadverted upon and condemned by a Circular Order of this Court dated so far back as 19th July 1867. In that Circular Order clear instructions were given to the lower Courts as to the preparation of their decrees in accordance with the requirements of the Code of Civil Procedure so as to make those decrees self-contained and capable of execution without reference to any other documents. The fulfilment of this duty is incumbent upon every Court of Justice, and any Judicial Officer who neglects it fails in the discharge of an important public function. Against this informal decree an appeal has been preferred by the defendants; and the points which have been argued before us are briefly as follow:—First, it is said that as the plaint contained no boundaries, the case ought to have been dismissed; and that the decree in the form in which it has been drawn is absolutely incapable of execution, inasmuch as it is impossible for an Ameen or other officer of the Court to take that decree, proceed to the spot, and identify the land, the possession of which is thereby directed to be given to the plaintiffs. Secondly, it is contended that the plaintiffs did not set up any title acquired by twelve years' possession, and that the Subordinate Judge has, in consequence, decided the case upon a point not raised in the pleadings, and which has necessarily taken the parties by surprise. Thirdly, it is said that the possession of the plaintiffs has not been proved.

[980] Now, as to the first of these points, we think there can be no doubt that the decree in its present form is incapable of execution, and if we were about to deal with this appeal upon this first point only, it would be necessary to remand the case in order to have a proper decree drawn up.

Then, as to the second point, we think there can be no doubt, and indeed the learned counsel, Mr. Bell, in his argument, very properly admitted, that the plaintiffs did not make in their plaint any alternative title based upon a twelve years' possession. They do, indeed, say that they were in possession of the land, but they do not say that they were in possession for twelve years, or 'from before,' or 'for a long time;' nor do they use any of those other general expressions which are to be found in plaints in this country, and which are at times argued to convey to the party, on the other side, the meaning, that the plaintiff relies upon an undisturbed possession for more than twelve years. This being so, it appears to us that it is impossible to uphold a decree which is based upon a title not stated by the plaintiffs in their plaint, and as to which no issue was framed for trial in the Court below. Cases must be tried and determined secundum allegata et probata, and it is contrary to this principle, and may be fraught with injustice, to decide a cause upon a point not raised in the pleadings, nor embodied in an issue, and to which, in consequence, the attention of the parties was not directed at the trial so as to enable them to produce all the evidence relevant thereto which was available to them. Then, as to the plaintiffs' title, we have already pointed out that they do not set forth in their plaint any specific title, and that the only title upon which they can be supposed to rely is a title based upon the two survey maps. The survey map of Dowlutpore gives as the western boundary of this Mouzas Gungadharpore and Rajapore. It does not mention any Mouza Rautpara on the west, but the plaintiffs' case is that the whole of Thak No. 2527 comprises three mouzas, Gungadharpore, Rajapore, and Rautpara; and they rely upon the map of Gungadharpore in support of this case. Now, in the first place, the two maps do not agree. If Rautpara were where the plaintiffs place it, - i. e., in the south [981] of Thak No. 2527, it ought to appear upon the Dowlutpore map, which it does not. Then, when we examine the map of Gungadharpore, it appears to us that this map is, on the face of it, imperfect and unreliable. There is, on the original map, or report of the officer in whose charge or custody the map may be supposed to have been, that this original map contained erasures and alterations. The map is, as we have already said, not dated. Then, as to the boundaries of the adjacent Mouzas Enatnagur, Kalargoon, and Joynabad, it is clear that the boundaries as shown on the map do not agree with the stations as given in the schedule at foot. There is in the column 'Remarks' the following observation:—"Be it known that, on the confines of Mouza Sarippore, No. 2528, some of the stations having been excluded on behalf of defendants in pursuance of orders, the three sides do not agree with the boundaries." This observation goes to show, that the map is not a correct reproduction of the locality and the true boundaries of estates. Then, neither of these maps contains any natural landmarks with reference to which the position of the parcels may be ascertained upon a local investigation, and finally no local investigation has been made, or was, indeed, applied for. The Subordinate Judge takes certain boundaries for example: Bhosachura Khal, which he finds to be on the north of Plot 1, and Dojana Dabi, which he finds to be on the north of Plot 2; but these natural boundaries are not shown on the maps, and it is not contended that there is any evidence upon the record by means of which we may identify any places upon the map with these two natural landmarks. Under these circumstances it appears to us that these maps are absolutely useless as evidence of a title in the plaintiffs.

We then come to the third question, which is concerned with the plaintiff's possession. The learned counsel Mr. Bell, contended, that although the plaintiffs have not set up an alternative title acquired by possession for twelve years, yet the decree of the lower Court can be supported upon the ground that the plaintiffs have proved an undisturbed and undisputed possession in themselves; and that, as against the defendants, who are wrong-doers, such possession entitles them to recover; [982] and he contended that, even without proof of twelve years' undisturbed possession, the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree merely upon the finding of the Subordinate Judge in respect of possession. This raises an important and a difficult question which we think, however, that it will not be necessary for us to determine upon the present occasion. If in our opinion the plaintiffs had proved their undisturbed and undisputed possession of this property, we feel bound to say that we would have had hesitation in accepting the finding of the Subordinate Judge upon the question of title of the defendants. That finding is based upon three documents, which are some hundred years old. We think we ought to point out that there is no evidence of the custody of these instruments. There is no evidence that the defendants in the present case derive title from the persons in whose favour those instruments were executed; and further we should have considerable difficulty in accepting the reasoning of the Subordinate Judge by which he has satisfied himself that the lands, which form the subject of these instruments, are identifiable with the two parcels of lands which form the subject of the present suit. The question whether a plaintiff in ejectment is entitled to succeed upon mere proof of antecedent undisturbed possession in himself is one upon which the Judges of this Court are perhaps not quite unanimous in their opinion and it may be that, at some future time, this question will have to be laid before a Full Bench. In the case now before us we think that the plaintiffs have not succeeded in proving an antecedent undisturbed possession before the year in which they say that they were dispossessed by the defendants. In the first place, if we consider the thak maps as evidence of possession, they are open to the following observations: There is nothing to show that the persons whose names are entered in these maps as in possession are the predecessors in title of the present plaintiffs only. In the second place, it is not possible to identify on these maps the land in dispute with the land as described either in the plaint or in the written statement. In the third place, the map of Gungadhurpore is, on the face of it, imperfect and unreliable as already pointed out. In the fourth place, [983] these maps are not signed by the proprietors or their agents, as is usual in the preparation of thak maps of the Government survey; and lastly, as appears from the field-book, to be found at page 11 and following pages of the paper-book, nearly the whole of the land so thaked was at the time jungle. Now, thak maps are, as has been pointed out in many decisions of this Court, good evidence of possession; but the value of that evidence varies enormously. In the case of a thak map containing definite landmarks and undisputed boundaries signed by the parties or their accredited agents, and representing land which has been brought under cultivation, and is in the possession of ryots whose names are known or can be discovered from the zamindari papers, a thak map is very valuable evidence of possession. But the value of such a map is greatly diminished when we find that there are no natural landmarks delineated thereupon; that the land was jungle when measured; that the boundaries are not discoverable from a mere inspection of the map; and that neither the zamindars nor their agents have, by their signatures, admitted the correctness of the thak. The latter is the condition of the maps in the present case, and we think that, for the purpose of proving the possession of the plaintiff, these maps are useless, more especially as no attempt has been made by a local inquiry and measurement to identify the area of the maps with the locality. Turning then to the other evidence which is to be found in the case, we may first refer to three measurements which are said to have been made by the plaintiffs at various times. The measurement papers have been filed, but as to these three measurements the same remarks are applicable, viz., that there is no evidence which connects these papers with the lands which form the subject of the present suit. No ryots have been called who prove that they hold and pay rent to the plaintiffs for lands which can be identified as the lands shown in these measurement papers. We think, therefore, that the case of the plaintiffs does not derive any support from these measurements. Then, coming to the oral evidence, the testimony of all the witnesses is general in the extreme. They speak of the 'disputed land.' They say that they saw [984] plaintiffs 'in possession.' They say they saw them 'collecting rents.' All these statements are general. And to persons who have had any experience in the mofussil, and who know how easy it is to bring any number of witnesses into Court, who will readily give general testimony of this nature, the absolute worthlessness of such evidence requires no demonstration. Then, as to the persons who are said to have collected the rents, there are irreconcilable discrepancies as to the periods during which they made those collections, and as to the order in which they succeeded one another in the discharge of this duty. Lastly, it is admitted by the plaintiffs' own witnesses, that three-fourths of the land is waste; and there is no evidence whatever to show acts exercised by the plaintiffs over these waste lands from which a Court of Justice can draw the inference that the plaintiffs were in possession. In respect of the lands that are said to have been under cultivation, the tenants in possession have not been called to prove that they paid rent to the plaintiffs for any land which can be identified with the land which forms the subject of the present suit. Under these circumstances we think it impossible to say that the plaintiffs have succeeded in proving an antecedent undisturbed possession of the whole of the land as described in the boundaries given in the defendants' written statement, or of any portion of it which can be identified by boundaries or otherwise so as to describe it with reasonable accuracy in the decree. The learned counsel for the respondents has asked us to remand this case in order that there may be a local enquiry; and he has urged upon us, that if there is a proper local enquiry made by a duly qualified Ameen, it will be possible to identify the lands which form the subject of this litigation with lands to be found in the locality. We are well aware of the difficulties which the learned counsel has had to contend in arguing a case which has been so badly prepared, so badly brought into Court, and so badly tried as this case has been; but we think that this is an application to which we ought not to accede. The plaintiffs did not apply to the Subordinate Judge to have a local investigation made. Had they done so, and had that local investigation proved to be unsatisfactory [985] or infructuous in consequence of the incompetency of the officer who made it or for other causes, we think that we might fairly be asked to grant a remand; but seeing that the plaintiffs did not ask for a local enquiry, we must presume that they or their advisers did not think that the evidence to be derived from this particular mode of proceeding would have benefited their case. Under these circumstances we are unable to comply with the request of the learned counsel to remand this case for a local enquiry. The result is, that this appeal must be decreed, and the plaintiffs' case dismissed with all costs of both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Jurisdiction of criminal Court—Tributary Mehsils—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), s. 70—Foreign Jurisdiction and Extradition Act (XXI of 1879), s. 9—Revs. XII, XIII and XIV of 1805.

The prisoners, residents of the District of Singhbhum, a district in British India, were convicted, under s. 331 of the Penal Code, at Singhbhum, of an offence committed in Mohurbhunj.

Per GARTH, C. J., PONTIFEX AND MORRIS, JJ.—The territory of Mohurbhunj is not within the limits of British India; but, under the provisions of s. 9 of Act XXI of 1879, a conviction in British India for an offence committed without the limits of British India, is good.

* Full Bench Reference made by Mr. Justice MITTER and Mr. Justice MACLEAN, in Criminal Appeals, Nos. 395 and 396 of 1881, dated 18th August 1881, Per MITTER, J.—Mohurbhunj is within the limits of British India ; but seeing that the Tributary Mehals constitute a 'district' within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the Superintendent of these mehals [986] has been vested with the powers of a Sessions Judge under an order of the Government of India, a conviction under the Penal Code (having regard to the provisions of s. 70 of the Criminal Procedure Code) ought not to be set aside.

Per PRINSEP, J.—Mohurbhunj is within the limits of British India ; but the Acts which extends to British India do not extend to Mohurbhunj. The territory having been expressly placed beyond the ordinary legislation, the law in force in British India cannot come into operation there until this exemption has been removed.

THE accused in these two cases were charged with having caused grievous hurt to one Ramdhone Panti, in order to extort a confession.

The accused, who were policemen belonging to Mohurbhunj went into the District of Singhbhum, and there arrested Ramdhone Panti and six others, residents of Borla, in Singhbhum, on a charge of being implicated in a murder in Mohurbhunj. The men, after being arrested, were taken to Koodasai in Mohurbhunj. Whilst there, they were maltreated, and Ramdhone Panti died from the effects of such maltreatment after having been brought back with the other prisoners to Singhbhum. The Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum, in the exercise of special powers under s. 36 of the Criminal Procedure, tried the cases and convicted the prisoners of causing grievous hurt in order to extort a confession, under s. 331 of the Penal Code, and sentenced them to terms of rigorous imprisonment varying from one to three years and to a fine of Rs. 200.

The prisoners appealed to the High Court.

No one appeared for the prisoners at the hearing. But a question was raised by the Court as to whether the Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum had jurisdiction to try an offence committed in Mohurbhunj.

MACLEAN, J., following the decision in the case of Hursee Mohapatro v. Dinobundo Patro (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 523), decided on the 13th July 1881, was of opinion that Mohurbhunj formed part of British India specially exempted from the operation of the ordinary law by Reg. XIII of 1805, and was under the administration [987] of specially appointed officers under special rules, and that, therefore, the Penal Code and Criminal Procedure Code were not in force in Mohurbhunj.

MITTER, J., was of opinion that Mohurbhunj formed part of British India, and considered that the Criminal Codes were in force there.

There being a difference of opinion the Court referred the following questions to a Full Bench :—

1st.—Whether the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Penal Code were in force in Mohurbhunj ? and 2nd.—Whether, if the two Codes were not in force in Mohurbhunj, the prisoners could be tried in Singhbhum for causing grievous hurt to Ramdhone Panti at Koodasai in Mohurbhunj assuming his death in Singhbhum to be the consequence of the grievous hurt caused to him at Koodasai ?

The Standing Counsel, Mr. Phillips (with the Advocate-General, Mr. Paul) for the Crown.—The question is, whether Mohurbhunj is included in British India within the meaning of the various Acts of the Legislature which extend to British India. It is admitted that Mohurbhunj is not independent of the British Government, and our contention is, that although not an independent state, Mohurbhunj is nevertheless not British India within the meaning of the enactments. Mohurbhunj has been under the paramount power of the British Government ever since the cession of Cuttack on the 19th December 1803. The territory of Mohurbhunj is, and always has been, administered by the Raja, subject to the control and interference of the British Government. Did the Legislature, when it enacted laws, which were intended to apply and be enforced in the whole of British India, intend that these laws should be enforced in Mohurbhunj? if not, the territory of Mohurbhunj is not subject to English law. If it did intend them to apply to Mohurbhunj, the Government has provided itself with no machinery to enforce such laws; but, on the contrary, it has recognized a variety of illegal tribunals, and has itself created some, and has allowed the revenue to be appropriated by the Rajas of Mohurbhunj. It therefore seems that the Government, [988] in its legislative capacity, could not have intended to apply or enforce laws in a territory which, in its executive capacity, it has left entirely without law. The treaty, by which it is assumed that Mohurbhunj was ceded, is that of the 17th December 1803, and by this treaty the province of Cuttack, including Balasore, were ceded in "perpetual sovereignty" to the East India Company; but it cannot be inferred that the cession of Cuttack in full sovereignty (even assuming that it included Mohurbhunj) transferred anything more than the suzerainty or paramount power, and this view is confirmed by the conduct of the British Government in its relations with the various territories ceded in 1803, and especially in its relations with the Tributary Mehals. In this treaty of 1803, art. x describes the chief feudatories. The mere cession in full sovereignty did not, I submit, make those subjects, who were before feudatories; it follows therefore that such a cession would not bring the territory so dealt with into "the possession or under the government" of the East India Company, within the meaning of s. 1 of 21 and 22 Viet., c. 106, although it would vest in the East India Company certain powers in relation to the government of the territory within the meaning of that section. It further follows that the territory so dealt with would not be part of India within that section, for 'India' is there defined to mean "the territories vested in Her Majesty as aforesaid, or to become vested as aforesaid" i.e., territories then in the possession or under the government of the East India Company, and which the Acts vest in Her Majesty, and also territories which might become so vested by virtue of any rights vested in, or which might have been exercised by, the Company. Now Mohurbhunj has not become vested in Her Majesty since 1858, and since 1858, Her Majesty, by Her sanad of the 11th March 1862, has recognized the Raja as a Prince or Chief, who then governed his own territories, and has conferred upon him a power of adoption, which is inconsistent with the theory that the Raja is a subject of Her Majesty, and he must be a subject, if Mohurbhunj is part of British India. Further it seems, incredible that the general laws should, in 1874, have been declared applicable in Mohurbhunj and all the Tributary Mehals, and that Angul [989] and Banki should be alone excepted; Angul and Banki having admittedly been taken possession of and placed under the Government of Her Majesty by virtue of her paramount powers. The Local Extent Act, 1874, declares certain laws applicable to the whole of British India to be in force throughout the whole of British India except the scheduled districts,—i.e., such laws were not in force in Angul and Banki; how did it happen then, apart from the exclusion supposed by PRINSEP and MACLEAN, JJ., that the general law did not prevail in Angul and Banki, which, according to their theory, were part of British India all along; and if it was by virtue of the exclusion they rely upon, how came the other mehals not to be scheduled also?

Mr. M. Ghose for the Raja of Mohurbhunj.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Full Bench :—

Pontifex, J.—The question whether the territory of Mohurbhunj is within the limits of British India is a question of evidence.

There is nothing to show whether the Mahrattas exercised direct authority over this territory, or whether they treated it merely as tributary. From its situation and character, however, the probability would seem to be that the Mahrattas only exacted tribute from it. Nor does the cession by the Mahrattas to the East India Company throw any further light upon the matter. If the Mahrattas had only the rights of a paramount power, the East India Company could, under the cession, gain no higher rights.

In this state of circumstances the Regulations of 1804 and 1805 were passed, the Government being probably in doubt as to what rights they actually took from the Mahrattas. Nothing was done under the Regulation of 1804 (which applies only to the territory ceded by the Mahrattas) to this particular territory. And the Regulation of 1805 seems to me to show that the Executive Government, being in doubt as to its true relation with the territory, determined to deal with it only in a negative way until such doubts were set at rest. [990] It is observable that, in the schedule to the Regulation, this territory is described differently from the other estates dealt with.

The Regulations of 1816 and 1821 do not seem to me to carry the case further. They relate only to the exercise of such authority as would properly and naturally be exercised by a paramount power.

The treaty engagement of 1829, if it stood alone, would, in my opinion, be conclusive to show that Mohurbhunj was merely tributary. It is of a different period to the engagements with the other mehals. It proceeds from the Raja of Mohurbhunj without any reciprocal instrument in the nature of a patta or sanad from the East India Company; and it speaks of "my territories," of "a contingent force of my own troops" and of "my successors," which is not the language which the Executive Government would be likely to tolerate from a mere subject.

Then come the rules of 1839 issued by the Bengal Government. They assume that there was something peculiar in the status of this territory; and on the whole they do not seem to me inconsistent with its being tributary. All that they do is to invest a Bengal officer with necessary authority as the representative of the paramount power to act at the request of the Raja.

No direct civil jurisdiction has ever been exercised in the territory by the Executive Government of India.

Lord Canning's sanad distinctly deals with the territory as independent and not British territory. For example, it ratifies the right of adoption which would have been mere surplusage if addressed to a British Indian subject. We know that both the Government of India and the Government of Bengal consider the territory to be independent.

Under these circumstances the question being a mere question of evidence, the maxim "optimus interpretis legis consuetudo" applies with very great force.

I am of opinion, therefore, that this territory is not within the limits of British India. And if that is so, the conviction seems to be right; for the referring Judges state that "the prisoners [991] describe themselves as residents of the Balasore or Singhbhum District," which would bring them within the provisions of s. 9 of Act XXI of 1879.

Morris, J.—I concur.

Garth, C.J.—I agree in the main with my brother PONTIFEX.

Whether the territory of Mohurbhunj forms part of British India or not, is a question of evidence. It depends partly upon documentary evidence, such as Regulations, treaties, and so forth; and partly upon the way in which the territory has been dealt with by the ruling powers, which are principally concerned with it,—that is to say, the Governments of India and Bengal on the one hand, and the Moharaja, the native chief of the territory, on the other. And when we find that the Indian Government and the Moharaja have, for a long series of years, concurred in considering and treating this territory as no part of British India, and when we also find that Acts of the Indian Legislature, which have been passed for, and have been acted upon throughout, British India, have never been acted upon or considered to be law in this territory, I must say, it seems to me, that such evidence, in the absence of any cogent proof to the contrary, ought, in British Indian Courts, to be almost conclusive upon the point.

I say “almost conclusive,” because I quite think that, under the circumstances of this case, the question is undoubtedly one which the Court is bound to determine; and that no consensus of the powers who are interested in the matter ought to be considered as binding upon it.

It is possible, of course, that the Indian Governments and the Moharaja too, may have been under a mistake. But before a Court of Justice ought to find it a mistake, I think the evidence that it is so should be clear and convincing—evidence of a very different character from the negative and equivocal language of the Regulations, to which our attention has been called, or acts of interference by the British authorities, which may have been intended rather as friendly aids to the Moharaja in the management of his own dominions, than as evidencing [992] any wish on the part of the Indian Government to take the rule of the territory out of the Moharaja's hands.

Then another point has also been suggested in this case, upon which, as the responsibility of deciding it rests peculiarly with myself, I think it right to explain my views. The question which we have been considering in this reference had previously come in much the same form before two Division Benches of this Court. Both those Benches, each consisting of two Judges, decided that Mohurbhunj was part of British India. But one of those Benches thought it right to refer certain points for the decision of a Full Bench.

Then, upon the case coming on for argument before this Court, the Advocate-General on behalf of the Government desired that we should also consider the question, whether Mohurbhunj formed part of British India; and my brother MITTER, one of the Judges who had previously decided that point, thought that it ought to be so considered; so, after some discussion, we all agreed to hear the point argued and to decide it. The result has been that three of the Judges of the Full Bench are of opinion that Mohurbhunj is not part of British India, whilst the two other Judges (MITTER and PRINSEP, J.J.) are of a contrary opinion. My brother MITTER, however, for reasons which he will explain himself, holds, as we do, that the prisoners were rightly convicted.

Thus it turns out, that three Judges of the Full Bench have decided one way, whilst four other Judges of the Court have decided the other way; and for this reason it has been suggested to me, that I ought to appoint another Full Bench to consider the question again. If I were to adopt this suggestion, I should appoint a Full Bench consisting of the whole Court; and if I thought that any real good was likely to be gained, or that the interests of justice in the particular case required it, I should certainly adopt that course, the more so because in the argument before us the prisoners were not represented.

But as four out of the five Judges of the Full Bench consider (though for different reasons), that the conviction should be confirmed, and there is no reason to suppose that the prisoners have not had a fair trial, I do not think that the interests of [993] justice require that the case should be heard again. The prisoners had of course a perfect right to raise the question of jurisdiction; but it was undoubtedly a technical one, and it has been overruled by the majority of a Full Bench.

That being so, I cannot see that any good would be gained by the whole strength of the Court being occupied (perhaps for days), in discussing an abstract question as to the political status of the territory of Mohurbhunj. The result would be either to affirm our present judgment, or else to place the Government of this country in a position of considerable difficulty. And lastly I wish to say, that the alleged reason for appointing another Full Bench is in point of law no reason at all. It has constantly happened, both here and in England, that the majority of an appeal Court which finally decides a point of difficulty, are numerically fewer than the Judges who have previously decided the point the other way.

This was notably so in the Full Bench case of Gujju Lal v. Fattah Lal (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171), which overruled not only the case of Neamut Ali v. Gooroo Doss (22 W. R., 365,) previously decided by the late Chief Justice and Mr. Justice AINSLIE, but also several other cases, which had been decided in the same way by other Judges of this Court.

And the same thing has often happened in England in the Court of Exchequer Chamber. But in all these cases the judgment of the appeal Court is no less decisive of the question, and is considered to be binding upon all other Courts, until it has either been reversed by the House of Lords, or overruled by some provision of the Legislature.

Mitter, J.—Upon the materials before us I am unable to agree in the conclusion that Mohurbhunj is a foreign territory and not part of British India.

Section 2, cl. 8 of Act I of 1868 says: "British India shall mean the territories for the time being vested in Her Majesty by the Statute 21 and 22 Vict., cap. 106 (an Act for the better government of India), other than the Settlement of Prince of Wales' Island, Singapore and Malacca." Section 1 [994] of 21 and 22 Vict., cap. 106, is to the following effect:—"The government of the territories now in the possession or under the Government of the East India Company, and all powers in relation to government vested in, or exercised by, the said Company in trust for Her Majesty, shall cease to be vested in, or exercised by, the said Company, and all territories in the possession or under the Government of the said Company, and all rights vested in, or which, if this Act had not been passed, might have been exercised by, the said Company in relation to any territories, shall become vested in Her Majesty, and be exercised in her name; and for the purpose of this Act, India shall mean the territories vested in Her Majesty, as aforesaid, and all territories which may become vested in Her Majesty by virtue of any such rights as aforesaid." Therefore the question for decision is, whether Mohurbhunj was in the possession or under the Government of the East India Company.

That Mohurbhunj is part of Zilla Cuttaok is clear from the terms of Reg. IV of 1804, as well as from the concluding section of Reg. XII, XIII and XIV of 1805, and the preamble of Reg. XI of 1816.

The Regulation of 1804 was passed almost immediately after that part of the country came into the possession of the East India Company on the close of the Mahratta war, and extended the general criminal law in force under the Government of the East India Company to the Province of Cuttack, including Balasore and its dependencies. That territory being formed into the Zilla or District of Cuttack, any doubt that might exist whether Mohurbhunj, or what is now known as the Tributary Mehals, was dealt with by that Regulation is removed by a reference to the Regulations (XII, XIII, XIV) of the following year, which "for the present" withdrew all this tract of country from the operation of "all laws and regulations" which have been or shall be enacted (Reg. XIV, 1805, s. 13). The preamble to Reg. XI of 1816, moreover, describes Mohurbhunj as one of the Tributary Estates in Zilla Cuttack. In the engagement entered into in the year 1829 by the then Raja of Mohurbhunj [see Aitchison's Treaties, &c., Vol. I, p. 184 (Ed. of 1876, p. 109)], he describes [993] himself as "of Killa Mohurbhunj" of Cuttack. Therefore it is quite clear, both from the Regulations passed by the East India Company and the engagement executed by the Raja of Mohurbhunj, that Mohurbhunj is part of Cuttack.

The whole Province of Cuttack was ceded to the British Government by a treaty, dated the 17th December 1803, between Roghuji Bhoosla and the Honourable East India Company (see page 97, Aitchison's Treaties, &c., Vol. III).

It has been said that the Mahratta Chief might have possessed only a paramount power over the Rajas of the Tributary Mehals, the sovereign power being vested in them. But by the 2nd article of the aforesaid treaty, the Province of Cuttack, of which Mohurbhunj is a component part, was ceded "in perpetual sovereignty" to the East India Company.

It has been further said that, shortly after the cession of Cuttack, the British Government was not certain as to the exact status and position of the Tributary Rajas, and that therefore the Regulations of 1805 were not extended to them. The language of these Regulations does not show any uncertainty in the mind of the ruling authorities as to the status of these mehals. They were described in s. 36 and 37 of Reg. XII of 1805 as "jungle or hill zamindaries" or "estates." Their "tributes" are styled as "quit-rents." Referring to the settlement of Mohurbhunj, s. 37 says, that it will have to be concluded with the "proprietor of that estate for the payment of a fixed annual quit-rent."

The reason for exempting the Tributary Mehals from the operation of the Regulations was not founded upon any uncertainty regarding their status or position, but upon the character of the inhabitants, who are described as "a rude and uncivilized race of people." Similar considerations influenced the Government in withdrawing Chota-Nagpore in 1833 from the operations of the Regulations. In fact, it is notorious that this was the cause of the formation of what are called Non-Regulation Districts of British India.

Then, in 1816, the Reg. No. XI was passed, vesting an officer under the British Government, viz., the Superintendent [996] of the Tributary Mehals with the power of trying cases of inheritance or succession to these estates. A special procedure was also laid down in that Regulation.

It is said that these rules were laid down by the British Government as a paramount power over the native sovereigns. But the Governor-General in Council could not pass any legislative enactment in respect of any foreign territory.

It may be noticed here that, in the years 1845 and 1850, the Indian Legislative Council passed laws relating to these mehals, and under s. 43 of 3 and 4 Will. IV, cap. 85, the Governor-General in Council had authority only to legislate in respect of territories under the Government of the Honorable East India Company.

It has been already noticed that, in the year 1829 (that is, several years after the British Government had legislated for Mohurbhunj, and had by Reg. XI of 1816 assumed to itself the right of determining the succession to the estate of Mohurbhunj by establishing special Courts and procedure for this purpose), an engagement was executed by the then Raja of Killa Mohurbhunj in favour of the Government of the Honorable East India Company. It is headed in the Collection of Treaties already referred to as a "treaty engagement." Whether this heading is to be found in the document itself or not, or whether it is a mere description of it given by the editor of the Collection of Treaties, &c., I have no means of ascertaining. But in the body of the document itself, it is simply called an engagement. By it the Raja engages to maintain himself in submission and loyalty to the Government of the East India Company, to pay sicca Rs. 1,001 as pesh-kush for the said Killa, to depute a contingent force of his own troops with the forces of Government for certain purposes specified in it, and to relinquish a certain specified claim which he had on "the Government," meaning thereby the Government of the East India Company. The two last clauses are very significant, because they contain a distinct admission on the part of the Raja that there was no separate Government of his own within the Killa in question. The Raja called the Government of the East India Company "the Government," meaning thereby [997] that there was but one Government in the whole Province of Cuttack, of which Mohurbhunj was a component part.

Now it is said that the condition regarding the deputation of a contingent force of the Raja's troops to act with the forces of Government shows that the engagement was not executed by a subject, but by a sovereign. That no such inference can be legitimately drawn from the condition in question is clearly shown in the judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in Hursee Mohapatra v. Dinobundo Patro (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 523): the passage is to be found at page 542 of the report. I need not make an extract of it here.

In these mehals the administration of civil justice, excepting in cases provided for by Reg. XI of 1816, and Acts XXI of 1845 and XX of 1850, has been left entirely in the hands of the native Rajas, who have no criminal jurisdiction, except in petty cases. The administration of criminal justice is, with that exception, in the hands of the officers under the British Government. Special rules of procedure were framed in 1839 by the then Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals; though they were not formally sanctioned by the Government, yet the officers entrusted with the administration of criminal justice in these mehals were directed to follow the spirit of these rules as closely as possible.

The recent orders of Government regarding the powers to be exercised by these officers are thus succinctly recited in the judgment of CUNNINGHAM, J., in the case already referred to (p. 531). "On the 12th December 1870, the Secretary of the Bengal Government addressed the Magistrate as 'ex officio Assistant Superintendent, Tributary Mehals,' informing him that as ex-officio Assistant Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, he was empowered to take up for trial all offences committed within the Tributary Mehals not punishable with death, and to pass sentences not exceeding seven years, submitting his proceedings, in each case, to the Superintendent. Trials thus conducted were to be, as far as possible, in accordance with the Criminal Procedure Code.

"In 1872, the Government of India vested the Superintendent [998] of the Tributary Mehals with the powers exercised by a Sessions Judge in Regulation Districts, and with power to hear appeals from sentences passed by any subordinate officer in Tributary Mehal cases.

"On the 30th April 1873, the Government of Bengal addressed the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, in answer to a letter submitting a tabular statement of the powers then exercised by officers in the tributary estate of Orissa, and the powers which, in the opinion of the Superintendent, ought to be exercised in accordance with the spirit of the new Criminal Procedure Code; authorised the Superintendent to exercise the powers of Magistrate of a District and of a Sessions Judge under s. 15 of the Act, and gave him power to hear appeals from sentences under s. 36. The Magistrates and ex-officio Assistant Superintendents of the Tributary States were invested with the powers of a Magistrate of the first class and under ss. 36 and 222 of the Code."

Upon the materials before us we have therefore these facts established :—

(1) The cession of Cuttack, of which Mohurbhunj is a component part, to the Government of the East India Company "in perpetual sovereignty" in 1803.

(2) In 1804, 1805, several Regulations were passed by the British Government treating the Tributary Mehals as part of Cuttack ceded to them.

(3) Legislative enactments were passed from time to time vesting officers under the British Government with power to decide suits of particular descriptions arising in these Mehals.

(4) An engagement was executed by the Raja of Killa Mohurbhunj in 1829 to pay a certain amount of posh-kush for the Killa and to maintain himself in submission and loyalty to the Government of the East India Company.

(5) With very insignificant exceptions, British officers administer criminal justice in these mehals.

In a case decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council—Damodar Gordhan v. Deoram Kanji (I. L. R., 1 Bom., 367) a similar [999] question arose, viz., whether a village named Gangli, which was admittedly in British Territory, was ceded to a native sovereign or not? In the Province of Kattyad, the Thakur of Bhaunagar held certain taluqs which have never been brought under the ordinary administration of the British Government in India. For these taluqs the Thakur of Bhaunagar used to pay certain tributes to the Peshwa and the Gaikwar. The rights of the Peshwa and Gaikwar in these taluqs were transferred to the East India Company between 1802 and 1820. The judicial administration in these taluqs was left in the hands of the Thakur down to 1831. In that year a Criminal Court of justice in Kattyad was established for the trial of capital crimes in certain cases, the sentence of the Court requiring confirmation by the Bombay Government. By an order of Government, the village Gangli was withdrawn from the ordinary jurisdiction of the British Courts of the Bombay Presidency and made part of these taluqs belonging to the Thakur of Bhaunagar. It was contended that this act of Government amounted to a cession of Gangli to a native sovereign, viz., the Thakur of Bhaunagar. The Judicial Committee held that this act did not amount to a cession of territory, but it was intended to confer upon the Thakur of Bhaunagur within Gangli as large a criminal and civil jurisdiction as that which he exercised in these taluqs. It is clear that the status of Mohurbhunj is very much similar to that of these taluqs of the Thakur of Bhaunagur. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was strongly inclined to the opinion that these taluqs formed part of British territory. This point was not expressly decided, because it was not absolutely necessary.

Some stress has been laid on the sanad of adoption granted to the Raja of Killa Mohurbhunj by British Government in the year 1862. But such sanads were granted to persons who are admittedly holders of mere zamindari and jagirs (see Aitchison's Treaties, &c., Vol. III, pp. 319, 320). On the whole, I am of opinion that Mohurbhunj is within British India.

The next question is, whether the conviction of the appellants is right, they not having been tried by the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals.

[1000] I think the Tributary Mehals constitute by themselves a district within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code, and by the Government order of 1872, the Superintendent was vested with the powers of a Sessions Judge. I am of opinion, therefore, that, having regard to the provisions of s. 70 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the conviction of the prisoners ought not to be set aside.

Prinsep, J.—I have had the advantage of seeing the judgments of all my learned colleagues in this case, but I regret to be unable in any respect to alter the opinions expressed by me in the case of Hursee Mohapatro v. Dinobundo Patro (I. L. R. 7 Cal., 523). That case was decided by CUNNINGHAM, J., and myself, after hearing the arguments of counsel on both sides. In the present case the prisoners, appellants, have not been represented: the case has, therefore, been decided on ex parte arguments.

The points for our decision are:—

First.—Whether the territory of Mohurbhunj is or is not British India, as defined in the Statutes 21 and 22 Vict., cap. 106?

Second.—If it is British India, whether the Indian Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure are in force within that territory?

Third.—If it is not British India, whether the prisoners can be properly tried in British India?

All these points were fully discussed and decided in the case of Hursee Mohapatro v. Dinobundo Patro (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 523), and as, after hearing the matter reargued by the Law Officers of Government, and Mr. Mon Mohun Ghose on behalf of the Raja of Mohurbhunj, I see no reason to modify the opinion expressed in my judgment in that case, I do not propose to give the grounds of my opinion with the same fulness as I expressed them in that judgment. It will be sufficient that I should briefly state them, and at the same time mention the reasons for which I altogether dissent from the opinions of the majority of my learned colleagues.

[1001] I would first of all observe that it was no part of the argument in the case heard by CUNNINGHAM, J., and myself, that there was any difference between the status of Mohurbhunj and the other Tributary Mehals, and though this distinction has been made by my learned colleagues in this case, I find myself unable, for reasons which I shall presently state, to agree in that opinion. It will, I think, be more convenient to deal with the case first as if no such distinction existed.

The Province of Orissa as now known, together with the country termed the Tributary Mehals, was conquered by the British from the Mahrattas in 1803, and afterwards formed the subject of a treaty entered into with the chief of the Mahrattas, Sewa Sahib Roghuji Bhoosla, on 13th December 1803, by which the country was ceded to us in "perpetual sovereignty." Treaties made by us during the course of the war with some of the chiefs of the Tributary Mehals who are described as feudatories of the Mahrattas, were confirmed by that treaty. Mohurbhunj was not among those feudatories who had joined us, but that is immaterial, as will appear from the narrative of subsequent events. The British Government then proceeded to legislate for this new territory, and passed Reg. IV of 1804 to provide for the administration of criminal justice and the authority of the Police. We learn from this Regulation that our rule dated, not from the date of the treaty of 13th December 1803, but from that of the conquest of Cuttack, 11th October 1803.

The Regulation deals with the "Province of Cuttack, including Balasore and the other dependencies of the said Province," and forms this country into the Zilla or District of Cuttack with two divisions. Whatever doubt there may be regarding the inclusion of the Tributary Mehals as dependencies of the Province of Cuttack within the operation of this Regulation, is removed by the Regulations passed in the following year. The Reg. IV of 1804 was repealed, and three Regulations were passed (XII, XIII, XIV of 1805) providing respectively for the revenue, criminal, and civil administration in the Province of Cuttack, and every one of these Regulations specially exempts the Tributary Mehals [1002] from the operation of those laws which it is declared shall not be "construed for the present to extend to the estates of certain hill or jungle rajas or zamindars," of which a list is given. There would have been no necessity for this provision if the law of 1804 had not been intended to apply, and did not apply, to the estates of these rajas or zamindars, and if, in the opinion of Government, the legislation for the Province of Cuttack would not otherwise extend to these estates.

The preamble to Reg. XI of 1816, which was enacted to provide for the trial and determination of "claims to the right of inheritance or succession in certain tributary estates in Zilla Cuttack," also confirms this view. Act XXI of 1815, is to the same effect, and so is the preamble to Act XX of 1850, which recites that "whereas certain jungle or hill zamindari in the Zilla of Cuttack enumerated in s. 36, Reg. XII, 1803, of the Bengal Code, and the territory of Mohurbhunj in the same zilla, are temporarily exempted by the said Regulation," &c., "and were temporarily exempted from the laws and regulations for the maintenance of the Police and for the administration of justice in criminal cases." That Act provided for the determination of boundaries of those zamindari, not only as between them and what may be termed regulation territory, but as between one another.

This is all the legislation on the subject, and from this, to my mind, it clearly appears that all the Tributary Mehals have been regarded as country ordinarily subject to the laws in force under the British Government, but specially exempted "for the present" from their operation. The Tributary Mehals have also uniformly been described as estates or zamindari in Zilla Cuttack, of which they were first made part by Reg. IV of 1804. I regard the terms of the Regulations and Acts to which I have referred as clear and express on this point, and I cannot consider the legislation of the Government in thus temporarily exempting the Tributary Mehals from the operation of the general laws and regulations,—in authorizing the Collector of Cuttack to conclude a settlement for the payment of a fixed annual quit-rent,— in providing for the determination of all claims of inheritance or succession to those estates,—in empowering the Governor-General in Council to prescribe rules for the guidance of such agents and their subordinates as he shall appoint and for the powers to be exercised by them in civil suits and criminal trials,—and in investing the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals with power to determine all disputes regarding the boundaries between the several estates, as negative or of any doubtful meaning. If any further indication of the intention of Government is necessary, it is to be found in the orders passed by Government in 1814 when creating the office of Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, which I shall presently quote.

I will next refer to what may be termed the executive or political action of Government with regard to the Tributary Mehals. Section 37, Reg. XII of 1805, declared that "it shall be the duty of the Collector of the Zilla (Cuttack) to conclude a settlement of that estate (i.e., the lands known as the Territory of Mohurbhunj) for the payment of a fixed annual quit-rent, on the principles on which a settlement has been concluded with the other hill or jungle zamindars, specified in the foregoing section." These other zamindars are the chiefs of the other Tributary Mehals.

In accordance with the terms of s. 37, the settlement, which appears in Aitchison's Treaties, etc., Vol. I, page 184, was in 1829 made with the Raja of Mohurbhunj. The engagements with the rajas or zamindars of the other estates known as the Tributary Mehals were made several years earlier; in fact, they are referred to in s. 36 of Reg. XII of 1805 as having been already entered into.

Some stress has been laid on the terms of the engagement entered into by the Raja of Mohurbhunj in 1829 as showing that he was not a subject of the British Government. That engagement is similar in all its terms to those entered into by all the other Rajas, except the Raja of Keonjhar, and, as I have already stated, the engagements of all those Rajas formed the subject of s. 36, Reg. XII of 1805, and are mentioned as "settlements for the payment of a fixed annual quit-rent." The terms 'estate,' 'zamindar,' 'settlement' and 'rent' applied to all the Rajas of the Tributary Mehals leave [1004] no doubt in my mind of their status with respect to the British Government. I have already in my judgment in the previous case noticed the terms in the engagement which, in my opinion, do not bear the interpretation put on them by my learned colleagues. The Raja styles himself as "of Killa Mohurbhunj of Cuttack." Zilla Cuttack has, since its conquest in 1803, invariably been a part of British territory and British India, and therefore the reference to Zilla Cuttack would, in my opinion, only be an additional indication of the fact that Mohurbhunj was, as set forth in Reg. IV of 1804, a dependency of the Province of Cuttack, and from that time a part of that Zilla. The expressions quoted from the treaty in the judgment of my learned colleagues appear to me of little significance. The succession to all those Rajas has always been assured to them, and the British Government has gone further to establish special Courts to determine claims to the right of succession or inheritance (Reg. XI of 1826). The Government, moreover, in its desire to be guided by local customs, in 1826, circulated among all these Rajas 25 questions to ascertain the customs in their families, and their answers have always been used by our Courts in determining all questions of inheritance in that part of the country. The papers known as the Pachees Sawal (25 questions) have always been regarded as authoritative by our Courts, and have more than once been quoted to me without any objection in cases tried by me in this Court. The expression "my successors" in the treaty engagement is thus easily explained. The country having sometimes been described in the Regulation as the Territory of Mohurbhunj, I see no special force in the expression "my territory." As regards the co-operation of "a contingent force of my own troops," I would only again refer to the preamble to Reg. XIII of 1805, which describes the origin of the maintenance of such "troops" throughout Orissa, and shows that after all they are merely police levies kept for the protection of the country. The Orissa paiks are well known to every one who has been officially connected with that part of India. The treaty engagement, too, is similar to those entered into by the other Rajas, which were referred to with approval in s. 36, [1005] Reg. XII of 1805, and this was a Regulation for the settlement of the revenue of the Province or Zilla of Cuttack. So far then as its terms go, I cannot regard this treaty engagement otherwise than as the result of the settlement which it was the duty of the Collector of Cuttack (s. 37, Reg., XII of 1805) to conclude for the payment of a fixed annual quit-rent, not tribute.

Next in order come the rules of 1839. These were prepared by the then Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, Mr. H. Ricketts, and submitted by his successor, Mr. Moffat Mills, for the sanction of Government. That sanction was never accorded. Instructions were, however, issued, that the officers were to act up to the spirit of those rules. I can find no authority for asserting that the action of those officers was to be exercised at the request of the Raja of Mohurbhunj, or any other Raja. On the contrary, the Government officers have always assumed a superior authority up to the present day, which seems to me to go far to indicate the exact position occupied by all these Rajas. That such a state of things existed and has been continued is (to use the words of the Regulations of 1805) "owing to the rude and uncivilized race of people occupying those hill and jungle zamindari," not, as has been stated, in consequence of any doubt on the part of Government regarding its true relations with that territory.

But if it be necessary to refer to other evidence of the intention and policy of Government in their relations with the Tributary Mehals, I would quote the orders of the Governor-General in Council in 1814 when the appointment of Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals was created. These orders are particularly important from the early date on which they were issued, as well as from the occasion which called for them. The letter is addressed to the officer who was appointed the first Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals.

"With respect to the office of Superintendent of the Tributary Estates, your attention is desired to the following remarks and instructions:—

"Under the existing Regulations (Sections 36 and 37, Reg. XII, 1805; s. 13, Reg. XIII, 1805) certain estates situated [1006] within the limits of the District of Cuttack are exempt from the operation of the general regulations, but pay a fixed annual revenue to Government.

"The Governor-General in Council does not understand that such exemption was founded upon any claims which the proprietors of those estates have to the exercise of independent authority. On the contrary, his Lordship in Council apprehends that it originated entirely from the opinion which was entertained of the uncivilized manners of the zamindars themselves, and of the inhabitants generally of those places, combined with the nature of the country, which was supposed to consist for the most part of hills and jungles. These circumstances, of course, render it extremely difficult to execute any process of the Courts of judicature, or otherwise to give effect to any orders which the Judge, the Magistrate or Collector in the discharge of their public functions may have occasion to enforce in any of those places.

"From this short review of the subject it follows that the continuance of the above-mentioned estates on their present footing is a mere question of expediency, and that there is not anything in the nature of our connection with the proprietors of them which should preclude us from placing them under the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil and Criminal Courts, should it at any time be thought advisable with reference to the points noticed in the preceding paragraph to do so. It will of course be understood that, in adopting any arrangements of that nature, no alteration is to be made in the amount of the revenue payable by the proprietors of the above-mentioned estates respectively which has been declared (Section 36, Reg. XII of 1805) to be fixed in perpetuity.

"Under the circumstances above noticed, it will be one of the first objects of your consideration to inform yourself whether any of the mehals to which the foregoing paragraphs refer can be conveniently brought under the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil and Criminal Courts, and to report the result of your enquiries on that subject to Government."

[1007] I further find from a selection of official papers published by Government in 1867 as "papers of the settlement of Cuttack and on the state of the Tributary Mehals," that various Superintendents have, from time to time, endeavoured to obtain the introduction of some definite law into the Tributary Mehals, the necessity being generally recognized, until in 1839 some rules were proposed by Mr. Moffat Mills, the then Superintendent, but that the Government, probably for the same considerations as influenced them in enacting the Regulations of 1805, has hesitated to introduce any regular system. All these attempts were altogether in accordance with the directions of the Governor-General in Council in his orders of 1814, in which, by requiring the Superintendent, then appointed, to inform himself "whether any of the mehals can be conveniently brought under the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil and Criminal Courts, and to report the result of his enquiries on that subject to Government," he declared the policy of Government to be to make these mehals, as soon as circumstances would permit, subject to the general law in force elsewhere.

It has been suggested that none of these acts of Government show that they even took possession of this territory, but that all that the Government has done is to exercise a sovereign control as the paramount power over the conduct of the Raja, and has allowed him to rule the territory as an independent state.

I cannot accept this view for the following reasons:—

The British Government has repeatedly legislated for Mohurbhunj. The treaty engagement of 1829 was entered into under authority of a Revenue Regulation of 1805, declaring it to be the duty of the Collector to make a settlement with the Raja for the payment of a fixed annual quit-rent for his estate, and even to the present time British officers have assumed to themselves the sole right to try in British India even inhabitants of Mohurbhunj for heinous offences committed by them in Mohurbhunj. Added to all these facts we have the orders of Government of 1814.

These papers of 1814 were not placed in my hands when [1008] I decided the case of Hursee Mohapatro v. Dinobundo Patro (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 523), and I refer to them with much satisfaction as confirming the opinion I then expressed and still entertain. Moreover, when, even up to the present day, officers of Government are directed to try in, what is beyond question, British India, inhabitants of all these Tributary Mehals whenever charged with any heinous offence, I cannot agree that there has been any consensus between the British Government and the Maharaja of Mohurbhunj that the territory of Mohurbhunj should be no part of British India.

The last public document is the sanad of Lord Canning of 1862. The right of adoption which it confirmed was one which I have already shown has been recognized by the British Government since 1829. MITTER, J., has further pointed out that similar sanads were granted to individuals who were undoubtedly British subjects.

No special importance can, in my opinion, be attached to the grant of such a sanad. It has not been contended that this sanad made any alteration in the previously existing status of the Raja, or that at any time there has been anything amounting to a cession of territory to the Raja; but it has been stated that this sanad is an indication that Government dealt with this territory as independent and not as British territory, and that it is evidence that it has at no time formed part of British territory. Such an interpretation is certainly not consistent with the Government orders of 1814, already quoted by me. But, for the reasons above stated, I can attach no force to that sanad.

Other papers, however—official correspondence—have been laid before us. So far from the Government having, as has been said, concurred in considering and treating this territory as no part of British India, I find that more than one Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has not only insisted on its being under his Government, but has repudiated the idea of its being independent. There has certainly been no such admission, though other Lieutenant-Governors have allowed the matter to remain in doubt. The exemption of this territory from the [1009] ordinary legislation and the application to it of special legislation on special subjects seem to me, as I stated in my previous judgment, rather to show that it has always been regarded as under our dominion and Government, and I am confirmed in this opinion by the orders of the Governor-General in Council passed in 1814, which I have already quoted. There is no precedent that I am aware of, in which our relations with any foreign states have been regulated by legislation, or that which has been termed our 'paramount power' has been exercised in this manner. Legislative powers have been given by Statutes from time to time to be exercised over our own subjects and within our own dominions.

For these reasons I agree with MITTER, J., that Mohurbhunj, like other Tributary Mehals, is British India, but I regret to differ from him that all Acts extended to British India apply also to it. It appears to me rather these territories have been expressly placed beyond the ordinary legislation; and that, until this exemption has been specifically removed, the laws in force generally throughout British India are not in operation in those parts. That the Legislature recognized such a contingency will appear from the preamble to Act XVI of 1874.

I am further unable to find any distinction between Mohurbhunj and other Tributary Mehals as regards its relations with Government. As I have before stated, this was never asserted by the Advocate-General or the Standing Counsel when they appeared before CUNNINGHAM, J., and myself in the case of Hursee Mohapatro v. Dinobundo Patro (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 523); but because Mohurbhunj was separately dealt with in Reg. XII of 1805, and because the treaty or engagement with the Raja was not entered into until 1829, several years after those with the other chiefs of the Tributary Mehals, it is sought to make some distinction between them and Mohurbhunj.

The reason why Mohurbhunj was separately dealt with by Reg. XII of 1805 appears from the terms of the two sections (36 and 37) which refer to it and the other Tributary Mehals. The Regulation was for the settlement of the land-revenue of the District of Cuttack. Section 36 confirmed the [1010] settlements for the payment of a fixed annual quit-rent by the zamindars of the Cuttack Estates, all mentioned by name and since known as the Tributary Mehals of Cuttack; and as no such settlement has been made with the Raja of Mohurbhunj, s. 37 empowered the Collector of Cuttack to make a similar settlement with him. This settlement was the result of the treaty or engagement of 1829, which, as I have already pointed out, is precisely similar in its terms with the treaties or engagements entered into with the Rajas of all the other Tributary Mehals, except that of Keonjhar.

In conclusion, I must express my great regret at the unsatisfactory termination of this case. Not only has a bare majority of the Judges in a Bench of five overruled the opinions of four Judges that Mohurbhunj is in British India, but this has happened in a case tried ex parte. How far this may be considered binding is doubtful. But the result is the more particularly unsatisfactory, because the grounds upon which the decision of the majority has proceeded distinguish between Mohurbhunj and the other Tributary Mehals, and the relations between the Government and these mehals remain in the same position as they were before the hearing of this case. Lastly, the present case concerns British subjects under trial for an offence committed in Mohurbhunj, whereas the Government has assumed to itself the right of trying in Cuttack and other places out of the Tributary Mehals, residents of those mehals who cannot, in the view of the majority of my learned colleagues, be regarded as British subjects whenever any offence of a serious character has been committed in those mehals. That was the jurisdiction which I had to consider in the case of Hursee Mohapatro v. Dinobundo Patro (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 523): but this point is not covered by the judgments now delivered. How far the exercise of this power is justifiable I need not at present determine, but to me it seems to negative this proposition that the Indian Government and the Maharaja have, for a long series of years, concurred in considering or treating these territories as no part of British India.

Jurisdiction — Suit for profits of a ship — Co-owners in a ship — Partnership — Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 239, illus. (c), and s. 265.

The fact that several persons are co-owners of a ship does not make them partners, and it is not necessary that a suit by one co-owner against the managing owner or ship's husband, for his share of the profits made by the ship before she has been sold, should be brought in the Court of the District Judge under s. 265 of the Contract Act, but such suit may be brought in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it.

THIS was a suit to recover the sum of Rs. 1,000 from the defendant Elahee Bux Maloom, as the managing owner of a river brig, of which the plaintiff and defendants were proprietors, the plaintiff alleging that he and the defendants were partners. The suit was instituted in the Munsif's Court. The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 376. The defendants appealed, and the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, on the ground that the partnership had been determined before the institution of the suit; and that, consequently, under s. 265¹ of the Contract Act, the Munsif had no jurisdiction to try the suit, which should have been brought in the Court of the District Judge. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Ameer Ali for the appellant contended, that the procedure [1012] provided by s. 265 of the Contract Act was optional and not compulsory—Luchman Lall v. Ram Lall (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 521), and Jarah Ramasami v. Sathambakam Thirucengadasami (I. L. R. 1 Mad., 340). No doubt, FIELD, J., had taken a different view in Prosad Deo Mullick v. Russick Lall Mullick (I. L. R. 7 Cal., 157); but the facts of that case were different. Besides,

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 401 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Mothoora Nath Goopla, First Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 19th January, 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Jugut Bundhoo Dutt, Sadr Munsif of that district, dated the 1st September 1879.

¹[Sec. 265:—In the absence of any contract to the contrary, after the termination of a Right of partners to partnership, each partner or his representatives may apply to apply for winding up by the Court to wind up the business of the firm, to provide for Court after termination of the payment of its debts, and to distribute the surplus partnership. according to the shares of the partners respectively.

Explanation.—The Court in this section means a Court not inferior to the Court of a District Judge within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the place or principal place of business of the firm is situated.]

s. 265 does not apply. Section 239, illus. (c), expressly excludes the ownership in ships from the category of partnerships. There is a great distinction between partnership and joint ownership in a ship—Abbott on Shipping, p. 84.

The Judgment of the Court (WHITE and MACPHERSON, JJ.) was delivered by White, J.—This is an appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, allowing an appeal against a decree of the Munsif. The appeal was allowed on a preliminary ground, that ground being that, under s. 265 of the Contract Act, the suit ought to have been brought in the Court of the District Judge, and not in the Court of the Munsif. A proviso to that section directs that where a partnership is determined, and a suit is brought to wind up the business of the firm, the Court in which the suit is to be brought shall be the Court of the District Judge. This provision, which relates to the forum in which partnership suits of the above description are to be tried, has nothing whatever to do with the subject-matter of the rest of the Code in which it is found, but was probably introduced with a view to secure, as far as possible, that such partnership suits should be properly tried.

Some Division Benches of this Court are said to have differed as to the construction to be put upon this proviso, —one of them holding that it is compulsory to bring such a suit in the Court of the District Judge, another of them holding that it is optional. It appears to us unnecessary to consider whether that difference of opinion really exists, and if it does, to which opinion we should incline; because an examination of the subject-matter of this suit shows that the suit is not one relating to partnership between the plaintiff and the defendants, but to a co-owner-[1013]ship which exists between them in respect of a ship. The plaintiff calls himself a partner, but is really a part-owner of a river brig, which has been sold; and he sues the first defendant, who owns half the brig, and is the managing owner of the brig, a brig's husband as he is called in nautical language, for his share of the price of the brig, and of the net profits earned by the brig, before it was sold, and he has made the remaining part-owners parties defendants. There is no doubt that, to ascertain accurately what is due to the plaintiff, involves an account very much of the nature of a partnership account; but still the relation between the parties is not that of partners. There is a distinction between co-ownership and co-partnership, and that distinction prevails in a marked degree in the case of ships, which, as LINDLEY, J., says in his work on Partnership, "are by far the most important chattels usually owned in common." The Contract Act also recognizes this distinction, for in s. 239 of the Act, which defines partnership, there is an illustration (c) in these words,—"A and P are joint owners of a ship. This circumstance does not make them partners." Cases may sometimes occur in which a partnership exists between persons owning a ship, and the ship may be part of the assets of the firm; but in such a case some contract of partnership exists between the parties, or some joint business is carried on by them to which owning of ships is merely accessory. The present case is simply one of joint-ownership in a river brig, and the right which the plaintiff has to a share of the net price for which the brig was sold and of its net earnings before it was sold, arises from his interest as part-owner and not by reason of any partnership subsisting between him and the defendants. For these reasons we are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge has misapplied s. 265 of the Contract Act, and that the Munsif had jurisdiction to try the suit. As the Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal on a preliminary point, it will be necessary to remand the case.

We accordingly set aside his decree and remand the appeal to his Court, with directions to try the appeal upon the merits.

The costs of this appeal will abide the event of the remand.

Appeal allowed, and case remanded.

ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 11th July, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Jumma Dass.....Defendant

versus

Eckford.....Plaintiff.

Principal and Agent—Power-of-attorney—“Purchase, sell, endorse, and transfer”—Meaning of “power to sell.”

N. & Co., having a joint and several power-of-attorney from the plaintiff, authorizing them “to purchase, sell, endorse, and transfer for the plaintiff, and in the plaintiff’s name and on the plaintiff’s behalf,” all shares standing in his name in the books of any public company or society, entered into a contract embodied in bought and sold notes, agreeing to sell by order and on account of N. & Co., to the defendant, twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares, and agreeing to buy, by order and for account of N. & Co., from the defendant, twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares in three months’ time at an advanced rate; the bought and sold notes bearing the same date and being one transaction.

The transfer deeds were signed by a partner in the firm of N. & Co., as attorney for the plaintiff, and N. & Co. received the purchase-money of the shares. Previous to the time fixed for the sale of twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares by the defendant to N. & Co., the latter became insolvent. The plaintiff then brought a suit to recover the shares from the defendant.

Held by GARTH, C.J., that the transaction between N. & Co. and the defendant was not justified by the power-of-attorney, the contract not having been entered into “for and on behalf and in the name of the plaintiff” within the meaning of the power.

[2] That the transaction was either an actual loan, or a transaction in the nature of a loan, for the purpose of raising money.

Per WILSON, J., that the defendant took no title to the shares for two reasons, viz. :— (i) because a power to sell is only a power to sell in the ordinary course of business,—i.e., for a money price; (ii) because it was the duty of the defendant, seeing that the shares were sold to him under a power, to see that he paid the price to the plaintiff or his attorney.

THIS was an appeal from a decision of WHITE, J.—

The plaintiff deposited with Messrs. Nicholls & Co., who were his agents, twenty-five shares in the Muir Mill Co., Limited, and gave to W. Nicholls and G. A. Thompson, two of the members of the firm of Nicholls & Co., a joint and several power-of-attorney, authorizing them (amongst other things) “for him and in his name, and on his behalf, to purchase, sell, endorse, assign, and transfer,” amongst other properties, all shares standing in his name in the books of any public company or society.

On the 24th January 1881, G. A. Thompson entered into a contract with the defendant, embodied in certain bought and sold notes, agreeing to dispose of the twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares. The bought and sold notes ran as follows :—

“Calcutta, January 24th, 1881.

Sold this day, by order and for account of Messrs. Nicholls & Co., to Jumma Dass Burmaidutt, twenty five Muir Mill Cotton shares, at Rs. 200 per share.

Delivery and payment to-day.

Brokerage from seller, Rs. 2 per share.

Calcutta, January 24th, 1881.

Bought this day, by order and for account of Nicholls & Co., from Jumma Dass Burmaidutt, twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares, at Rs. 205 per share.

Delivery and payment on the 25th March 1881.

(Signature of Broker.)”

In pursuance of this contract, G. A. Thompson, professing to act as attorney of the plaintiff, transferred, under three transfer deeds executed by him in the name of the plaintiff, to the defend-[3]ant the twenty-five Muir Mill Cotton shares, and received the agreed price.

The defendant never attempted to register these shares in his own name until after the insolvency of Messrs. Nicholls & Co., which took place on the 8th February 1881, when it became evident to him that the repurchase of these shares by Nicholls & Co. could not be carried out.

The plaintiff brought this suit to recover from the defendant the twenty-five shares. The defendant contended that the power authorized Nicholls & Co. to do what they had done, and that the transaction was a sale. It appeared from the evidence of the broker who transacted the affair, given on behalf of the plaintiff, that his instructions from Nicholls & Co. were, not to sell the shares at the bazaar-rate, but to sell them and to buy them back; and that he did not mention a better price for the shares, because he had only authority to sell and buy back at the price mentioned, and had no authority to make an out-and-out sale: and also it appeared from the evidence of a former cash-keeper of Nicholls & Co., giving evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, that the transaction, on the receipt of the money from Jumma Dass, was entered in the cash-book of Nicholls & Co. under the head of “credit loan payable account.”

Mr. Phillips and Mr. Trevelyan for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Bonnerjee and Mr. T. A. Apear for the Defendant.

WHITE, J., was of opinion that the words “purchase, sell, endorse, assign, and transfer” should be read, on the authority of The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan (5 Moore’s I. A., 27), disjunctively; and that, on the authority of the case of DeBouchout v. Goldsmid (5 Ves., 211), these words would not convey a power to pledge or mortgage the shares;—that, from the evidence of the broker who transacted the business, it was clear that he (the broker) had no authority to make an out-and-out sale, but had only authority to sell and buy back at the fixed prices which were settled between him and Thompson;—that, although from other evidence it was clear that the transfer deeds had all been executed in the name of the [4] plaintiff, yet there was no evidence to show that the defendant had agreed to buy, or that Thompson, as agent of the plaintiff, had agreed to sell, the shares to which the transfer deeds related. He further considered that the transaction partook much more of the character of a loan on the security of the shares, than of a bona fide sale of the shares; but declining to come to any finding on that point, rested his judgment upon the ground that the defendant had failed to show that Thompson had made any contract for the sale of the plaintiff's shares; it being a rule of law that an agent who seeks to bind his principal by a contract must make the contract in the name of the principal, and more especially where, as in the present case, the agent acts under a power-of-attorney which expressly directs that contracts connected with the power should be signed in the principal's name. He, therefore, decided the case in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendant appealed.

Mr. Evans (with him Mr. T. A. Aplear) for the Appellant. —The questions are whether the transaction is a sale or a mortgage? if it is a mortgage, whether the power allowed a mortgage? or if it be a sale, whether the reasons given by the Court below will be sufficient, viz., that Nicholls & Co. had power to sell, yet they had power only to sell the shares for and on behalf and in the name of Eckford, and that Nicholls & Co., had not followed out this power. The remarks made by the Court below on DeBouchout v. Goldsmid (5 Ves., 211) are not correct; it was in that case decided that the words "sell, assign, and transfer" were to be read connectively and not disjunctively; whereas in The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan (5 Moore's L. A. 27), it was held that the words were to be read disjunctively or else conjunctively in a strict sense. Of these two judgments, the judgment of the Privy Council must be followed. I, however, can satisfy the Court that the transaction here is a sale and not a mortgage, and therefore it will not be necessary to argue on the points raised in those cases. Now, could Nicholls & Co. have asked for re-delivery of the specific twenty-five shares on repayment? or if they had been sold, could we have had an action for them? As [5] to whether the transaction is a sale or mortgage, the case of the Yorkshire Railway and Wagon Co. v. Maclure (L. R., 19 Ch. D., 478) strongly supports the view Mr. Justice WHITE took of the case; but that case has been overruled: see Weekly Notes for 20th May 1882, p. 75, where it was held to be a transaction of sale and hire, adopted, because the loan could not be carried out. There is nothing in the evidence to show that the excess of Rs. 5, at which the re-sale was to be made, was to be taken as interest. We are not proceeding on a contract, but on a transfer-deed, and by that transfer-deed the property is in us. With regard to the evidence given by the broker as to what he thought was the meaning of the contract, it has been decided that it is not right to look at such evidence to find out the intention of the parties when the contract was made —Fleming v. Koepler (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 245). In The Bank of Bengal v. Fagan (5 Moore's L. A., 27), the question was, did the property pass, and this is also the question in this case. If the property passed, nothing can take it out of the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value, and that takes us back to the question whether the power-of-attorney authorized what was done.

Mr. Stokoe (with him the Officiating Advocate-General, Mr. Phillips) for the Respondent.

The Judgments of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and WILSON, J.) were as follows :—

Garth, C. J.—The questions which have been raised on appeal, and which we have to determine, are : 1st, whether the transaction entered into between Messrs. Nicholls & Co., and the defendant was of such a nature as was justified by the power-of-attorney ? and 2ndly, whether it was entered into for and on behalf, and in the name of, Major Eckford within the meaning of the power ?

I think that both these questions should be answered in the negative.

It seems to me that the transaction in its nature was neither a sale nor purchase of the shares in question. It was either [6] an actual loan, or a transaction in the nature of a loan, for the purpose of raising money.

This appears, I think, very clearly from the evidence of Ramrutton Danye, the broker, who acted for Messrs. Nicholls on the one hand, and of Daidraj Argurwallah, the gomashita of the defendant, on the other. Ramrutton, although necessarily called by the plaintiff, was by no means a favourable witness to him. His object evidently was, and naturally would be, to make out that the transaction was one which Nicholls & Co. had a right under the power-of-attorney to carry out for the plaintiff. He was himself the broker employed by Nicholls & Co., and had seen the power-of-attorney before he entered upon the transaction. He says that, on several previous occasions he had obtained advances of money for the plaintiff upon transactions very similar to the present one : and it is probable that the form in which this transaction was carried out was only somewhat different from those which preceded it, in consequence of Ramrutton having observed that the power-of-attorney did not authorize a loan.

Ramrutton and Daidraj both say, that the sale and purchase of the shares was intended to be one transaction. Ramrutton expressly says, that, whatever the defendant might have offered him for the shares, he had no authority to sell them, except upon the terms of re-purchase. He had no authority, he says, to make an out-and-out sale. And it is obvious, on looking closely into the transaction, that this must have been so. The defendant was not a dealer in shares. He was simply a money-lender, and was only in the habit of taking shares by way of security. He knew nothing, nor did Daidraj, of the value of these shares, and he evidently took the statement of their value from Ramrutton, with reference, not to their price in the market, but to the sum which he was to receive on the re-purchase.

The price in the market, so far as we can judge from the evidence, was Rs. 250 or thereabouts, --certainly not less than that sum : and it is not likely, under these circumstances, that Ramrutton would have sold the shares to the defendant at Rs. 200, except upon the terms of re-purchase ; or that the defendant [7] would have sold them back again, unless he had been obliged to do so, at Rs. 205. The additional price of 5 rupees upon the re-purchase exactly represented interest at 15 per cent. per annum. I think it clear, therefore, that the transaction was not a bona fide sale or purchase, properly so called, but merely a device by Nicholls & Co. to obtain a temporary advance of money by a so-called sale and re-purchase.

I confess, I strongly suspect, from the evidence of Daidraj and Bhimraj, that the transaction was not entered in their books in the same way as previous transactions, because they had been informed by Ramrutton that, for some reason or other, the transaction was not to be called a loan ; and it is admitted that this was the first purchase which the defendant has ever made.

The defendant himself dared not present himself in the witness box, and I strongly suspect, that he or his gomasthas knew more about the fraud that was being practised upon the plaintiff than could be extracted from them in cross-examination.

Taking the transaction, however, as it is represented by the witnesses on either side, I consider that it was certainly not a sale or purchase or transfer of shares within the meaning of the power-of-attorney.

Thus far I have assumed that the transaction was one entered into for and on behalf of the plaintiff. But the next question which we have to determine should also be answered, in my opinion, against the defendant. It was upon this point that Mr. Justice WHITE decided the case in the Court below. He considered that whatever the real nature of the transaction was, it was not authorized by the power-of-attorney, because it was not carried out for or on behalf or in the name of the plaintiff.

It is clear from the evidence on both sides, that, at the time when the bargain was made, the name of the plaintiff was never mentioned, and the defendant's own case is, and his witnesses say distinctly, that they never knew the plaintiff in the transaction. From beginning to end they considered they were dealing with Nicholls & Co., and although they received the transfers, they did not look at them, and they were never aware, until after the insolvency, that the plaintiff's name appeared [8] on the transfers. So far, therefore, as the defence was concerned, it is clear that the bargain was not made with the plaintiff, and it is equally clear that, so far as the partners of Nicholls were concerned, they were dealing for themselves and for their own benefit, and not for that of the plaintiff.

The transaction was carried out by bought and sold notes, which are as follows :- (reads bought and sold notes).

Now it is an admitted fact in the case, that the firm of Nicholls consisted of four persons, Mr. Thompson and Mr. Nicholls to whom the power-of-attorney was given, and Mr. Locke and Mr. Hawes who had nothing to do with it; and therefore the contract was made with the defendant by four persons to whom the plaintiff had given no power-of-attorney, and whom he had not authorized to make any such bargain.

So far as I can see, if the plaintiff had chanced to hear of the transaction, and had applied to the defendant to re-sell to him the shares at Rs. 205 per share, on the day when the re-sale was to take place, the defendant might have refused to make the re-transfer upon the ground that the bargain was not made for the plaintiff or by his authority; and on the other hand, if the defendant had applied to the plaintiff to re-purchase at Rs. 205, he would have had no power to compel the re-purchase.

It is true, that the transfers of the shares were in the plaintiff's name, but those transfers were made in a transaction which was clearly unauthorized by the power, and which was not made for or on behalf or in the name of the plaintiff.

One very fair test, as it seems to me, whether the plaintiff ought to be bound by the transaction, is this. If the defendant had looked at the transfers, as he ought to have done, and had seen that they were transfers made of the Muir shares and on the plaintiff's behalf, and if he had then asked to see the power-of-attorney, ought he not, and should he not, at once as a reasonable man have seen, on looking at the power, that the transaction into which he was entering was one which the power-of-attorney did not warrant.

I think that this appeal should be dismissed with costs on scale 2.

[9] Wilson, J.—I agree in the conclusion at which the Chief Justice has arrived. I have had the advantage of seeing his judgment, but I prefer to rest my own decision upon somewhat narrower grounds than those relied upon in that judgment.

The plaintiff gave to two members of the firm of Nicholls & Co. a joint and several power-of-attorney, authorizing them, amongst other things, "for me, and in my name, and on my behalf, to purchase, sell, assign, and transfer shares in any public company." The firm of Nicholls & Co. consisted of four parties.

The attorneys or one of them, or Nicholls & Co., entered into a contract with the defendant, in the name of Nicholls & Co., embodied in bought and sold notes, whereby Nicholls & Co. agreed to sell to the defendant a certain number of shares in a company at a named price, and the defendant agreed to sell back a like number of shares in the same company at a future day to Nicholls & Co., at an enhanced price, the whole transaction being one transaction. In pursuance of this contract, one of the attorneys, professing to act as attorney, transferred the shares of the plaintiff to the defendant and received the agreed price.

I think the defendant took no title to the shares for two reasons.

First.—A power to sell is, I think, only a power to sell in the ordinary course of business,—that is to say, for a money-price. But the sale here was partly for a money-price and partly in consideration of the sale of like shares at a future day. On this ground, I think, the transaction was not within the power.

Secondly. Assuming that, after a contract had been made between Nicholls & Co. and the defendant, for the sale of shares, the plaintiff's attorneys might properly sell his shares in satisfaction of that contract (and if there were no other objection in the way I am inclined to think they might), still it was the duty of the defendant, when he found that the shares sold to him were the plaintiff's shares and were transferred only under a power-of-attorney executed by him, to see that he paid the price to the plaintiff or his attorneys. But the price consisted in part of money, in part of a contract [10] to re-sell similar shares, and that contract was not with the plaintiff nor with his attorneys, but with Nicholls & Co. It was, therefore, a contract of which the plaintiff could not, so far as I can see, claim the benefit in any way.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 5th May, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Sreeputty Mirdha and another.....Defendants

Kartick Singha.....Plaintiff.*

Attachment—Execution of decree—Intervenor—Claim to attached property—of 1859), ss. 246, 247.

Where a person whose property has been attached in execution of a decree against another person, and whose claim under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859 has been rejected, brings a suit under the provisions of s. 247 of Act VIII of 1859, it is no objection to that suit that, previously to the filing thereof, the decree (in execution of which the property had been attached) was satisfied by the judgment-debtor and the property released from attachment.

THE judgment of the Court below, as far as is material for the purposes of this report, is as follows : —

“ The only question to be tried in this case is, whether there was a cause of action for this suit, and the lower Court should have allowed the plaintiff a trial on the merits.

“ It appears that, in execution of a decree by the defendant No. 1 against the other defendants, the tank in dispute was attached and advertised for sale. The plaintiff intervened with a claim, and objected to its sale, on the ground that the tank was his own property and in his possession. The claim was not enquired into, but was disallowed under s. 247, Act VIII of 1859. In [41] fact, the petition of claim was not admitted by reason of its untimely presentation. The plaintiff, therefore, sued in the present case to establish his title to the tank and to have it released from attachment.

“ It transpired subsequently that the sale of the property did not take place ; it was virtually released from attachment in consequence of the judgment-debt being satisfied by the sale of other properties of the judgment-debtors, and so, at the time of the institution of the suit, which was after the execution-proceedings had come to an end, the attachment was not in existence ; and the plaintiff's prayer for release of the property, which has ever since remained in his possession, was perfectly without a cause, and the lower Court's order, disallowing that portion of the claim, was quite justifiable. But the lower Court declined to try the merits of the case, on the ground that plaintiff had no cause of action for the suit, and that decision has been made the subject of this appeal.

“ The plaintiff's petition of claim was disallowed under s. 247 of Act VIII of 1859, and the latter portion of that section (which says ‘ the order disallowing the investigation shall not be subject to appeal, but the claimant shall be left to prosecute his claim by a regular suit ’) clearly gave him a right of suit. The lower Court has said that ‘ that provision is not imperative, but permissive.’ But, if ‘ permissive,’ it permitted the plaintiff to institute a regular suit. The section does not say that no such suit shall lie unless the property is sold, and hence the first Court's opinion that such was the intention of the law was quite unsupported. It seems to have been under the impression that a decision under s. 246, adverse to the plaintiff, would have given him a cause of action, and that a rejection of his petition under s. 247, not followed by the sale of his property, could not give him such cause. But s. 247, as I have said above, has made no such restriction on the right of suit. Suppose the plaintiff had instituted this suit immediately after his petition was rejected, and before the execution-proceedings were terminated, could it be contended in that case that he had no right of suit when the law expressly gave it to him? I think no such contention could be allowed. Then, suppose that the execution-proceedings were put an end to, and the property released before the suit would have been decided, would the suit stop and fail because the attachment was removed? I believe the suit would not fail on that account. It seems, therefore, quite clear to me that a suit under s. 247 would be independent of the sale of the property at-[12]tached. It is quite possible to imagine a case in which the execution-proceedings might be delayed over a considerable period, and the suit disposed of in the meantime. If a suit instituted before the release of the property would lie, I see no reason why it should be disallowed by reason of the decree-holder not bringing the property to sale, and causing it to be released at his own choice. The section of the law gave the plaintiff a right of action in unlimited terms, and the restrictions imposed on it by the lower Court have not been supported by any provision of law I am aware of. I, therefore, cannot agree with the lower Court in thinking that the plaintiff had no cause for this suit. That Court applied the principles of declaratory decrees provided for by s. 15 of the Act to this suit, but this case was not instituted under that section. Had it been so, it would have been of a quite different nature, and the principles laid down in the rulings quoted by the Court below, as well as in many others, should have been applied to it. But as it was a suit under s. 247 of the Act, those rulings could not be applicable. Questions of injury or inconvenience resulting from the attachment have not been made necessary to be considered in cases under this section, and, in my opinion, sale of the attached property would not be indispensable to give a cause of action under it. Even if the question of injury or inconvenience were to be considered in this case, the attachment of plaintiff's property by declaring it to belong to others has been injurious to his rights, for though the injury has not been immediate, a path was paved for future difficulties. The property was attached and advertised for sale as belonging to the judgment-debtors, those proceedings must have been known to the people at large, and if on any future occasion the plaintiff would be under any necessity of entering into a bargain regarding the property, the probability is ten to one that desirable or successful terms could not be secured. In this way the attachment of his property, though not followed by its sale, has been prejudicial to his rights, and a declaration of his indisputable title was, therefore, necessary to be obtained. For these reasons I hold that the plaintiff's suit was legally maintainable, and a trial on its merits must be held. As there is no evidence in the records, and the lower Court dismissed the suit on a preliminary point,—viz., want of cause of action,—which this Court must overrule, the case should be sent back to the Court below for trial on the merits."

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 419 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Kadar Nath Mozoomdar, Second Subordinate Judge of Midnapore, dated the 12th November 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Brojobehary Shome, Munsif of Ghatal, dated the 31st March 1879.

On remand a decree was given in favour of the plaintiff, which was affirmed on appeal. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by

Cunningham, J.—In this case the property of the plaintiff having been attached by the defendants, the plaintiff brought his claim under s. 246 of the old Code. That claim having been rejected without investigation, on the ground of the late date on which it was put in, plaintiff was left to prosecute his claim by a regular suit under s. 247. He has done so, and, after a contest on the part both of the judgment-debtor and the attaching-creditor, has established his right to the property in suit. But an objection is taken to the decree, which was also taken to the suit, on the ground that, at the time when the plaintiff made his claim, the attachment had virtually ceased owing to the decree having been satisfied from other properties of the judgment-debtor.

We concur with the Court below in thinking that there is nothing in this circumstance to deprive the plaintiff of the remedy which the law provided for him. A very distinct shade of doubt would be thrown on his title by the attachment, and the seriousness of the evil is shown by the fact that the plaintiff's title has been earnestly contested by both the other parties to the suit. We think, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to sue.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

[14] ORIGINAL CIVIL.

The 12th July, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE
CUNNINGHAM.

In the matter of the Indian Companies' Act of 1866 and of the Medla Tea Co., Limited.

C. Kernot.....Claimant

versus

Walton.....Official Liquidator.

Company—Articles of Association—Power to borrow—Borrowing in excess of Power in Articles of Association—Ratification.

Under the articles of association of a limited company, the directors had power, from time to time as they might see fit, without any previous consent of the shareholders, to borrow any sum of money not exceeding Rs. 50,000, on the bill, bond, note, or other security of the company, upon such terms as they might think proper; and had power, with the sanction of a special resolution of the company previously obtained at a general meeting, to borrow any sum of money not exceeding in the whole, together with the Rs. 50,000, the sum of Rs. 1,00,000.

A advanced sums of money to the company amounting in 1879 to over Rs. 80,000. No previous sanction was given to any of these advances. On the 4th October 1879, an extraordinary general meeting of shareholders was held, at which a resolution was passed sanctioning a mortgage to K of the whole of company's property, except ~~an~~ a certain garden, to secure the payment of a sum, not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000, for advances already made and to be made, with interest at 7 per cent. This resolution was confirmed on the 16th of October, and the mortgage was executed on the 22nd of December 1879. Subsequently the company was ordered to be wound up, and K advanced a claim for Rs. 1,20,787.

Held, that there is a distinction between loans which a company is empowered to raise under its borrowing powers, and debts which, in meeting its current liabilities and in the actual carrying on of its affairs, the company, or its agents on its behalf, have contracted; and that the advances made by K did not amount to a borrowing within the meaning of the articles of association.

Held also, that the borrowing powers conferred by the articles of association justified a mortgage, the object of which was in part to cover previously incurred liabilities.

APPEAL from a judgment of WILSON, J.

This was a claim made by Dr. Kernot against the Medla Tea Company, Limited, for Rs. 1,20,787-11. The principal questions at the hearing were-- (i) as to the validity of the debt, and (ii) as to the validity of the security.

The facts were as follows :—

The Medla Tea Company, Limited, was formed on the 11th [15] of January 1875, and by art. 13 of the Company's articles of association the Directors had power, from time to time as they might see fit without any previous consent of the shareholders, to borrow any sum of money not exceeding Rs. 50,000, on the bill, bond, note, or other security of the Company, at such rate of interest and upon such terms as they might think proper; and further the Directors had power, with the sanction of a special resolution of the Company previously obtained at a general meeting, to borrow any sum of money not exceeding in the whole, together with the 50,000 rupees, the sum of Rs. 1,00,000.

Up to the end of the season of 1877, the Company was financed by Messrs. Thomas and Co., after which time they refused to finance the Company further. On the 4th of January 1878, a general meeting of the Company was held, at which the Directors were authorized to arrange for the further financing of the Company. On the 14th of January 1878, Dr. Kernot was made a Director, and he agreed to finance the Company, and advanced to the Company a sum of Rs. 30,000, which went to pay off the advances made by Thomas and Co. On the 13th of February 1878, the money advanced to the Company by Dr. Kernot amounted to Rs. 63,569-9-8, and this fact became known to the shareholders when the reports and accounts were issued to the shareholders at the end of 1878.

On the 10th of April 1879, at a general meeting of the shareholders, there were present six shareholders: Dr. Kernot, in the chair, held proxies for two shareholders, and four others; when the report and accounts were approved and passed, and a resolution carried, empowering the Directors, in addition to the sum of Rs. 50,000 mentioned in the 12th article of the memorandum of association, to borrow a further sum of Rs. 50,000 on such terms as they might think fit, making in the aggregate a sum of Rs. 1,00,000, for the purpose of the Company. This resolution was, however, never confirmed.

Dr. Kernot continued to finance the Company, and on the 20th of June 1879 the Company owed him the sum of Rs. 80,000.

On the 4th of October 1879, an extraordinary general meeting [16] of the share holders was held, at which a resolution was passed sanctioning a mortgage to Dr. Kernot of the whole of the Company's properties other than the "Maskowah Garden," to secure payment of a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,00,000 for advances already made and to be made, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum. At this meeting Dr. Kernot was present, and represented one out of six others of his co-sharers present.

This resolution was confirmed on the 16th of October 1879, Dr. Kernot representing one of the seven other shareholders present at the meeting. Due notice of these two meetings had been given to the shareholders by circular and advertisement in the public papers.

On the 8th of November 1879, Dr. Kernot retired from the Directorship, and on the 18th December 1879 the debt due to him amounted to Rs. 87,353.

On the 22nd of December 1879, the Directors (there being only three Directors on the Board at the time) executed a mortgage of the Company's properties in favour of Dr. Kernot, and the rate of interest, which was formerly 10 per cent. on his advances, was, under the mortgage deed, lowered to 7 per cent.

On the 10th of January 1880, at a general meeting of the shareholders, Dr. Kernot was asked to rejoin the Board of Directors, and he consented to do so.

On the 13th of March 1880, at an ordinary general meeting of the shareholders, accounts up to the 31st December 1879 were passed.

On the 13th of July 1880, Dr. Kernot, through his attorney, served a notice on the Company, calling on them to repay to him the moneys advanced, within seven days, and demanding possession of the properties mortgaged to him.

On the 20th of July 1880, Dr. Kernot took possession under his mortgage, and the Company went into liquidation, one W. M. Walton being appointed Official Liquidator to the Company. Dr. Kernot then put in his claim, stating that, up to the 31st of May 1881, the sum of Rs. 1,20,787-11 was due to him for moneys advanced for the cultivation and production of tea at the garden mortgaged to him. It appeared from the books of the Company, that a shareholder named Campbell had objected [17] to Dr. Kernot financing the Company, to the borrowing of money for the use of the Company, and to the mortgage: but being always in the minority, his objections were, at the several meetings, overruled.

The Official Liquidator opposed the claim on the grounds:—(i) that the advances made by Dr. Kernot prior to the execution of his mortgage, in excess of Rs. 50,000, should be disallowed as not being a debt for which the Company was liable, the Directors having acted ultra vires with regard to their borrowing powers; (ii) that the mortgage being a mortgage of lands in the mofussil, Dr. Kernot's possession on default of payment was illegal, his remedy being to institute a regular suit, and having obtained a decree, to proceed in execution to sell the property; (iii) that the Company had given to Dr. Kernot a fraudulent preference, and that the mortgage was, therefore, invalid, and should be set aside.

Mr. Branson and Mr. Bonnerjee for Dr. Kernot.

Mr. Jackson and Mr. T. A. Apear for the Official Liquidator.

Wilson, J., in giving judgment, held: That the transactions of the Company, if valid, were valid on the ground of being within the scope of the authority of the Directors, or on the ground of subsequent ratification. That the principles of law applicable to the latter ground showed—(i) that any act in excess of the memorandum of association is wholly invalid, and can never be ratified—Ashbury Railway Company v. Riche (L. R., 7 H. L., 653); (ii) that an act of the Directors, ultra vires of the Directors under the articles of association, but not beyond the powers of a majority as restricted by the articles of association, stands on a different footing, and that such an act can be ratified by a meeting of shareholders duly called—Irvine v. The Union Bank of Australia (L. R., 2 App. Cas., 375; s. c. I. L. R., 3 Cal. 280)—(which was a case decided on the construction of an Act of the Colony of Victoria, an Act similar to the Act in force in India); (iii) that if the articles of association restrict the powers not only of the Directors, [18] but of the majority of the shareholders, and those restrictions have not been observed, so that the act done is outside the articles of association altogether, and ultra vires not only of the Directors, but of the meeting which has done or sanctioned it, the act, provided it be within the scope of the memorandum, may be ratified, but the ratification must be that of the whole body of the shareholders—The Phosphate Company v. Green (L. R. 7 C. P., 43). That it was under the last head that the present case fell, and that the acts of the Directors were beyond the powers of the Directors and beyond the powers of a majority, because in dealing with the question of borrowing, art. 13 of the articles of association imposed two restrictions on borrowing, viz., that it must be with the sanction of a special resolution previously given at a general meeting, and this expressly precluded a subsequent ratification by any majority of shareholders. That, therefore, so far as the borrowing in the present case was in excess, it could only be ratified by the whole body of shareholders, which, in the case of The Phosphate Company v. Green (L. R., 7 C. P. 43), was held to have been given by the tacit acquiescence of the shareholders, who had had full knowledge and opportunity to object. That, at the end of 1878, the Company had borrowed in excess of the borrowing powers Rs. 13,000, and that the resolution of the 13th of April not being a special resolution, the validity of the borrowing under it must depend on ratification. That although, in March 1880, the report and accounts were circulated to the shareholders, which, in April 1880, were adopted, yet there was clear evidence that Campbell, one of the shareholders, had dissented throughout from the whole of the transactions, and that it could not be assumed that he ever had intended to ratify any of the transactions which were done irregularly, and that the absence of assent by him was as sufficient as the objection of all.

He, therefore, found that the excess of borrowing beyond the powers defined in the articles of association was not good in the first instance, and had never been effectually ratified as to [19] all sums borrowed within the 50,000 rupees limit; but that as to all sums borrowed under the mortgage within the Rs. 1,00,000 limit, with all interest, the loan was valid.

That, as to the other points raised, no fraudulent preference had been made out, nor did the question as to the proceedings on the mortgage arise, inasmuch as it was not proposed to act on the power of sale.

From this decision Dr. Kernot appealed.

Mr. Branson (with him Mr. Bonnerjee) for the Appellant.—Inasmuch as, at a meeting of shareholders, the resolution was passed, is it not enough that the majority of the shareholders agreed? The matter is concluded by the case of Irvine v. The Union Bank of Australia L. R., 2 P. C., 366; s. c., I. L. R., 3 Cal., 280). In that case the advance was sanctioned at a general meeting by a majority of the shareholders present; it was found that the Directors had borrowed in excess of their powers, without their powers of borrowing being extended; and it was held that the shareholders could acquiesce in the borrowing, and had done so at an extraordinary meeting by a resolution of the majority of the shareholders present at the meeting. If Dr. Kernot, even without a mortgage, had come forward to save the property from ruin, if on no other ground (though a salvage claim might be advanced), he would be entitled to recover his advances, for he was a trustee on behalf of the shareholders; see Lowndes v. Garnett Mining Company (33 L. J., Ch., 418). As to costs, they have all been occasioned by the contention of the other side, setting up a charge of fraudulent preference, and this point was decided in our favour.

The Court here called on the Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. Phillips), who appeared for the Official Liquidator.

The Officiating Advocate-General.—The Privy Council case can be distinguished from this case; but we say also that Dr. Kernot being a Director, and the borrowing being improper, he cannot take advantage of the presumption that everything was rightly carried out, which presumption out [20]siders dealing with a Company are usually entitled to make. As to the Privy Council case cited by the other side, the Company there had power to borrow money, with no limit to their borrowing powers; but the Directors had no such power, and that is the distinction between the two cases, for in the present case the Company had a limited power of borrowing, viz., up to one lac, under the articles of association. In the Privy Council case they had power to extend their borrowing powers without altering their articles of association. Mr. Branson has endeavoured to show that there is no distinction between altering the articles and waiving any informality that may have taken place. Ashbury Railway Company v. Riche (L. R., 7 H. L., 653) decides, that a contract, being of a nature not included in the memorandum of association, is ultra vires not only of the Directors but of the whole Company, so that even the subsequent assent of the whole body of shareholders would have no power to ratify it. I submit that there must be a notice to the effect that the Directors had exceeded their powers, and that the meeting is convened to ratify the acts done; this was not done here. It is not enough to show that Campbell did not dissent; they must show that he assented. In Irvine v. The Union Bank of Australia (L. R., 2 P. C., 366; s.c., 1 L. R., 3 Cal., 280, at 287) no decision was come to on the passage cited by the other side, for nothing was allowed beyond the half of what was claimed. There was no decision except so far as a dictum of the Privy Council can be held to be so, because they held no ratification had taken place. If the act is beyond the power of the Directors, the whole body of shareholders must ratify it. An agent has no power to ratify, and the same rule applies to Directors. As to what ratification, what knowledge, or notice, is required, see s. 198 of the Contract Act, and also the remarks of Sir W. PAGE WOOD as to acquiescence in In re Athenæum Society, ex parte Eagle Co. (1 K. and J., 563), and in In re Phoenix Life Assurance Co. Burges' case (2 J. and H., 446), and Spackman v. Evans (L. R., 3 Eng. and Ir. App., 190-191); also Houldsworth v. Evans (L. R., 3 Eng. and Ir. App., 263-276-277). [21] [GARTH, C.J.—If it is a question of ratification by conduct, the ratification must be by all the shareholders; if a question of ratification at a meeting, it must be a ratification by a majority of the shareholders.] As to the point that the money having been received the Company are bound to repay it, it is too late to show that they have relieved the Company from liabilities. The principle laid down in In the matter of the Indian Companies' Act of 1866 and of the Port Canning Company (7 B. L. R., 601), cannot, on appeal, be, for the first time, applied to this case; and before doing so, it is necessary that the liability should have been paid off. As regards s. 65 of the Contract Act, I say that a Limited Company is not 'a person' within the meaning of the section.

Mr. Branson in reply. - If the loan account does not include borrowing, then I stand in a better position, as I am a Director who, seeing that money was wanted, financed the Company to get the garden out of difficulties. As to a borrowing by Directors, see Thring on Joint Stock Companies, p. 83. This Company being a trading company, it would have a power to borrow and to give a mortgage as security for its debts. As to whether I am entitled to interest I cite In re The German Mining Company (1 De G. M. & N., 19) and In re The British Provident Assurance Company, Lane's case (1 De Gex. J. & S., 504, 513). As to whether the shareholders had sufficient information and notice of the matter when the ratification took place, the series of cases which follow In re The German Mining Company (1 De G. M. & N., 19) cited in the last edition of Lindley on Partnership, pp. 760, 761, viz., In re The Norwich Yarn Company (22 Beav., 113), Baker's case (1 Dr. & S., 55), Troup's case (29 Beav., 353), Hoare's case (30 Beav., 225), show that where the Directors of a company, acting bond fide and to the best of their judgment, advance money in order to carry on the business of the company, and spend the money for that purpose, they are [22] entitled to be reimbursed by the company. If this is a borrowing within the strict meaning of the word, a borrowing, such as the Directors had no power to make without the sanction of the shareholders previously obtained, it has been sufficiently ratified by the shareholders, for they ratified on the 4th and 16th October 1879, and on the 12th March 1880. They had knowledge of the matter in October 1878, for the report read then stated that Rs. 63,000 was due by the Company, and this, in In re The Norwich Yarn Company (22 Beav., 164-165), was held to be sufficient notice. [CUNNINGHAM, J. - Your affidavits clearly show that Mr. Campbell knew what was going on, so are not these cases, which go to show what is to be considered knowledge or notice, unnecessary? In re The British Provident Assurance Company, Lane's case (1 De Gex. J. & S., 504, 513), goes further than the case of In re The Norwich Yarn Company (22 Beav., 164-165); it shows that all the shareholders, both absent and present, are bound. Now, at the meeting of the 10th April, power was given to the directors to extend their borrowing; it was a general meeting of the shareholders, therefore Campbell knew that the Directors had been allowed to borrow Rs. 50,000 more. This resolution, it is true, was not confirmed, so I can only use this fact as evidence that Campbell knew what was going on. If the act of the Directors was not ratified, then I say the onus is on the party who denies it to come and show it was a bad transaction, and that the contract is ultra vires. Pollock on Contracts, p. 104. As to the point that there is in every company a power incidental to its existence to incur debts, see Price on Ultra Vires, pp. 215, 217. There is a distinction between loans which a company is empowered to raise under its borrowing powers and debts for current liabilities incurred by the company: see Waterlow v. Sharp (L. R., 8 Eq., 501), In re Cefn. Cilcen Mining Company (L. R. 7 Eq., 88).

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. Phillips) was allowed to address the Court on the new cases cited, and on points on which he had not addressed the Court before.

[23] The case In re The British Provident Assurance Company (1 De Gex. J. & S., 504, 513) is the case of an outsider, and Mr. Thring, in his book on Joint Stock Companies, pp. 83 and 90, points out this difference. In re The Norwich Yarn Company (22 Beav., 113) was decided before limited liability companies came into existence. South Durham Iron Company, Smith's case (L. R., 11 Ch. D., 579), is as to whether Directors can shield themselves behind their own breach of duty ; but they must stand in a fiduciary position to their shareholders. As to the case of In re The German Mining Company (4 De G. M. & N., 19), the Company was established under a deed of settlement, and afterwards was registered under the Limited Liabilities Act, and the loans were all made before the registration of the Company. In re Cefn. Cilcen Mining Company (L.R., 7 Eq., 88), where two Directors incurred certain obligations to benefit the Company, and the obligations there were held not to be a borrowing, and supposing it to be a borrowing, it was not unauthorized. If the payments by Kernot are advances and not loans, then I must endeavour to show that Kernot, had no right to recover, because if the Directors could not recover, Kernot, who was also a director, could not do so either. As to the extent of affirmative powers in memorandums of association, see North Stafford Steel Company v. Ward (L. R., 3 Ex., 172).

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and CUNNINGHAM, J.) was delivered by Garth, C. J.— The question raised in this appeal is, whether Dr. Kernot is entitled to any larger portion of his claim against the Medla Tea Company than has been allowed by the Court below, and to enforce that claim under a mortgage of the 22nd of December 1879, executed in his favour by three of the Directors of the Company in accordance with a special resolution passed on the 4th of October 1879, at an extraordinary general meeting, and confirmed on the 16th of October 1879.

[24] The mortgage recites that the Medla Tea Company, being in want of funds for and towards enabling them to work and carry on the tea gardens, Dr. Kernot had advanced various sums of money, and had received from and on their account various sums of money, leaving a sum of Rs. 87,353, including interest up to date, due to him : "that they had asked Dr. Kernot to lend and advance from time to time such further sums as might be necessary for carrying on the gardens : that the mortgagee had consented on the express understanding that the loan and interest should never exceed one lac, and that it was agreed that the mortgage should be security for all such sums as Kernot had paid, laid out, advanced, or expended, or might from time to time pay, lay out, advance or expend, or engage so to do or otherwise become liable for, on account, or on credit of the Company. The mortgage then follows in these terms, with the provision that the sum due to Kernot should not at any time exceed one lac with interest. There is a covenant for repayment seven days after demand, a covenant to pay forthwith all law charges between attorney and client incidental to this mortgage security or to any proceedings which may be had either for sale, or attempted sale, or otherwise, of the mortgaged premises for procuring or obtaining payment of any moneys thereby received. The rate of interest is 7 per cent. with annual rests. There is power to enter and take possession on default and carry on ; money advanced while so carrying on to be deemed advanced to the Company. Usual covenants, &c.

The mortgage was sealed and signed by three Directors—Hart, Longmuir, and Barlow.

In July 1880 Kernot demanded payment within seven days, or, in default, possession of the mortgaged premises ; and on the 28th of July took possession under the mortgage.

In December 1880 the Company went into liquidation, and Dr. Kernot advanced a claim for Rs. 1,20,787. In disposing of this claim the original Court (17th September 1881) declared him entitled to charge the Company (i) with advances made before the 16th of October 1879, but so that the whole of the principal due in respect of such advances should not, at any time prior to the 16th of October 1879, exceed Rs. 50,000; (ii) with [26] advances subsequent to the 16th of October 1879, but so that the whole of the principle of such further advances should not, together with advances prior to the 16th of October 1879, exceed one lac; and ordered that the claim, as thus defined, should be allowed with interest at 10 per cent. to the 16th of October 1879, and thereafter at 7 per cent. on the aggregate amount; and that the rest of the claim be disallowed. If necessary, an account of sums laid out by Kernot in managing, &c., was to be taken, and the Liquidator was to retain his costs, claimant to bear his own costs.

From this order the claimant appeals on the following grounds :

1st.—That he was entitled to charge the Company in respect of advances made prior to the 16th of October 1879, not only to the extent of Rs. 50,000, principal, but to the entire extent of his advances :

2nd.—That he was entitled to charge the Company in respect of advances made subsequent to the 16th of October 1879, not only to the extent of Rs. 1,00,000, principal, inclusive of prior advances, but to the full extent of his advances :

3rd.—That the Company did not exceed their powers in borrowing beyond Rs. 50,000 :

4th.—That there was a ratification of the loans in excess of Rs. 50,000 :

5th.—That interest up to the 16th of October 1879 ought to have been allowed at the rate claimed :

6th.—That the claimant was ordered to pay his own costs :

7th.—That no part of the claim should have been disallowed.

There is no dispute as to the regularity of the proceedings of the 4th and 16th of October 1879, at which the mortgage was sanctioned, or as to the due execution of the mortgage itself, or as to the meeting of the 13th of March 1880. The only questions are : (i) How far the sum which the mortgage purported to secure, and which is now claimed by Dr. Kernot, is legally due to him from the Company? and (ii) How far the Directors had power to mortgage the property of the Company to secure the sum, whatever it may be, due to Dr. Kernot?

[26] For the purpose of determining these questions it is material to promise the following facts :—

The Company was registered in 1875. Its nominal capital was one and-a-half lacs, in 1,500 shares of Rs. 100 each. The objects of the Company are stated in the memorandum of association to be the purchase of certain tea estates, the manufacture and sale of tea, the leasing of the estates, and "the doing of all other such things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects." Part of the estates purchased were bought from Mr. A. S. Campbell for Rs. 60,000, paid as agreed. Another portion was also bought from Mr. Campbell for Rs. 40,000 made up as follows :—

Paid on Mr. Campbell's P. N. to the holder	...	11,000
250 paid-up shares in Campbell's name	...	24,000
50 paid-up shares to Barlow, at Campbell's request		5,000
		<hr/> 40,000

The 60,000 and 11,000 were contributed by Messrs. J. Kingsley, R. S. Staunton, E. A. Thurburn, and J. Longmuir, in equal sums of 17,750, each of whom were allotted 177 shares of 100 rupees in respect of these contributions, and a further allotment of 100 paid-up shares. Thus the four contributors had 1,108 shares nominally worth Rs. 1,10,800, and the vendor and his nominee had 290 shares nominally worth Rs. 29,000.

Campbell was appointed manager, and it was agreed that if, within three years from January 1st, 1875, the shares were sold at 25 per cent. premium, 100 paid-up shares should be allotted to Campbell. This, with two shares allotted to Baroda Prosad Mitter, made up the 1,500 shares, which constituted the nominal capital of the Company. Of Thurburn's 277 shares, 138 were, at his request, allotted to his partner J. Thomas. Messrs. Thomas and Co., financed the Company, and, by the close of 1877, the Company was indebted to them for Rs. 36,688.

At a meeting of the Directors held on the 14th January 1878, it was announced, that Messrs. Thomas and Co., refused to finance the Company any longer; the Secretary was authorized "to make the necessary financial arrangements for 1878, not to pay more than 10 per cent. on advances." A statement was [27] submitted of liabilities and of certain debit entries carried forward to 1878-79, the estimated out-turn and a probable resulting debit balance for 1877 of Rs. 3,388.

On the 11th of January 1878 Kernot purchased Thomas's and Thurburn's 277 shares, and, at the meeting of the 14th of January 1878, Kernot and Longmuir were appointed Directors in the place of Thurburn and Kingsley. On 15th of January 1878 Kernot sold thirty shares to J. Hart, J. Majee, and J. M. Crowley, in equal lots of ten. It was then arranged that Kernot should finance the Company, and on the 16th of January he advanced Rs. 30,200, which was mainly appropriated to payment of the debt due to Thomas and Co.

On 12th of December 1878, at a meeting of the Directors, a statement was submitted, showing a probable debt at close of the year of Rs. 71,416. Another meeting of the Directors was held on the 14th of January 1879, at which Kernot showed a balance in his favour of Rs. 63,569, and an order was passed to get more power to borrow at the next share-holders' meeting. The ordinary general annual meeting was held on the 10th of April 1879, and it was resolved, that, in terms of the 13th article of association, the Directors are hereby empowered to borrow. This resolution does not appear to have been confirmed in the mode required by art. 51, and accordingly never to have become a special resolution.

At a meeting of the Directors in June 1879, it was recorded that the liability of the Company amounted to Rs. 80,061.

At an extraordinary meeting on the 4th of October 1869, the meeting sanctioned a mortgage to Dr. Kernot of the Company's property (except a specified garden) "to secure payment of a sum not exceeding one lac for advances already made or to be made, and interest at 7 per cent. This resolution was confirmed at the extraordinary meeting on the 16th of October. On the 8th of November, Kernot resigned his seat in the Board.

At a meeting of the Directors on the 13th of December 1879, the mortgage was laid on the table, and the debit balance was stated to be Rs. 85,846.

On the 22nd of December 1879, Longmuir, Hart, and Barlow [28] (holding 257 + 10 + 50 = 317 shares respectively) executed the mortgage.

On the 15th of February, Kernot resumed his seat at the Board, and was re-elected at the ordinary general meeting on the 13th of March 1880, and acted as such till the 10th of April, when he resigned on his departure for England.

These facts appear to establish that the Company was, from the outset, without any means of meeting the current expenses incidental to its business, payment of officers, outlay in plant, wages and food of coolies, etc., etc.; and that the course of business was, as it is we believe with the greater number of these Companies, that the concern should be 'financed,'—that is to say, that some agent in Calcutta or elsewhere should make the advances necessary to meet current expenses, selling and giving credit for all sums received for sales of tea, and striking a balance at the close of the half-year. The result of this arrangement was a debit balance against the Company of Rs. 36,000 odd at the close of 1877, when Messrs. Thomas and Co., gave up their connection with the Company, and it had risen to about 87,000 at the time when Dr. Kernot's mortgage was executed.

Dr. Kernot's account of the arrangement is as follows: "I say that there was an account-current between me and the Company; that I provided funds for the management of the Company's tea garden in Assam, and other purposes of the Company as required, all moneys received by the Company being paid over to me in reduction of my advances; that interest was charged on the balance due to me at 10 per cent. per annum; that from the nature of the business it was impossible to foresee what amount might be required at any particular time, and that the state of the balance was also liable to be affected by the time of arrival of consignments of tea and the prices of tea fetched at any sale. And I further say that the Company had to provide for the wages and rice for the coolies in the gardens, and the expenses of working in Assam; and the custom was for the manager to draw bills on the Secretary in Calcutta for moneys he required, which bills were negotiated with certain Marwari merchants or Kyahs at Debrogghur in Assam. And I [29] further say, that this custom is very general in Assam owing to the difficulty in remitting money; and also that when these bills were presented to the Secretary, it was necessary for preserving the credit of the Company that they should be at once taken up; and that new funds not being immediately forthcoming to finance the gardens, the coolies under engagement there would have also broken their engagements and run away, and the property would have gone. I also say that money was also frequently required for the heavy litigation in which the Company was involved, and I was compelled for the preservation of the property of all concerned to continue making the advances."

We believe that this statement is substantially true, and the point which we have now to decide is, whether the system of advances thus described was beyond the powers of the Directors so soon as the sum due from the Company to Dr. Kernot amounted to more than Rs. 50,000, no previous sanction having been given to the advances by any special resolution.

The articles of association embody those given in the first schedule to the Joint Stock Companies' Act, so far as they are consistent with the articles. Article 13 further provides, that the "Directors may, from time to time, if they shall see fit, without any previous consent of the shareholders, borrow any sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole Rs. 50,000, on the bill, bond, note, or other security of the Company, at such rate of interest and upon such terms as they may think proper; and the Directors may, with the sanction of a special resolution of the Company, previously given in general meeting, borrow on mortgage of the Company's property or otherwise, any sum or sums of money, not exceeding in the whole, together with the said sum of Rs. 50,000, the sum of Rs. 1,00,000."

The Official Liquidator contends that the effect of this article was to render illegal and irrecoverable as against the Company all advances made by Dr. Kernot, previous to the 16th of October 1879, in excess of Rs. 50,000.

We think that this depends upon whether the advances so made can be regarded as a borrowing by the Directors with [30] the meaning of art. 13. If they were, there is certainly some difficulty in saying that the Directors had any power to contract the loans, or that the loans were ever legally ratified by the Company. But we have been referred to several cases, which do not appear to have been noticed by the learned Judge in the Court below, in which the English Courts have drawn a distinction between loans which a Company is empowered to raise under its borrowing powers, and debts which, in meeting its current liabilities and in the actual carrying on of its affairs, the Company or its agents on its behalf have contracted. In In re Cefn Celyn Mining Company (L. R., 7 Eq., 88), one Director had drawn bills which were accepted by another and endorsed by the Company to the Bank and discounted by the Bank. The proceeds were devoted partly to liquidating the Company's over-drawn account, about £200, and the residue to the purposes of the Company. At the date of the winding-up order, there was due to the Bank for bills so drawn, accepted, discounted and ultimately dishonoured £1,039. The Directors were precluded by their articles from borrowing more than £500, without special resolution. It was held by Stuart, V. C., that this transaction, though the benefit resulting to the Company was the same, was not borrowing and lending within the meaning of the articles of association, and that a debt due to a Bank by a Company which keeps an account with it is a debt, not a loan. The same view was expressed by Stuart, V. C., in Waterlow v. Sharp (L. R., 8 Eq., 503). There a Banking Company had allowed a Railway Company to overdraw to the amount of £65,000, which was headed 'loan account,' and it was contended that this was a loan and ultra vires. It was, however, held, that a cash credit with a Bank is not a loan, and that this was so notwithstanding that the cash credit was headed 'loan account.'

The principle there laid down was applied in a somewhat different way In re The German Mining Company (1 De G. M. & N., 19), Ex parte Williamson (L. R. 5 Ch., 313) and other cases, where it has been held that if money has been actually spent in defraying debts which [31] were legally recoverable from the Company, the person who advances the money can claim to stand in the place of the creditors who have been so paid.

Now in this case, from the first moment the Company started, it was worked on this system of advances by Messrs. Thomas and Co., who set off the sums advanced against the proceeds of the sales as they accrued. After a while Messrs. Thomas and Co., refused to go on, whereupon Dr. Kernot, apparently with the consent of the Directors, paid off the debt balance of Thomas's account, and continued to advance funds from time to time as necessity arose for the purposes of meeting the expenses.

It seems to us impossible to distinguish this case from those which were decided by Stuart, V. C.; and as we do not find that the principle upon which those cases proceeded has ever been overruled, we gladly avail ourselves of those authorities for the purpose of doing what appears to us the most palpable justice to Dr. Kernot. It has not been suggested before us that Dr. Kernot acted otherwise than in perfect good faith, or that the sums which he advanced were not necessary for the carrying on the business of the Company or not properly expended in that business.

Then the validity of Dr. Kernot's mortgage has been impugned upon the ground that the power conferred by art. 13 to borrow on bond, mortgage or other security, or otherwise, did not justify a mortgage, the object of which was in part to cover previously incurred liabilities. We think, however, that the English cases—The Birmingham Banking Company (L. R., 6 Ch. Ap., 83) and the Ins. of Court Hotel Company (6 Eq., 82)—sufficiently dispose of this objection. There is nothing in the Companies' Act or in the articles of association, or memorandum of association, of the Company to render such a mortgage invalid. The system of 'financing' the current expenditure appears to have been from the outset the regular mode of transacting the Company's business, repeatedly brought to the knowledge of the shareholders, and the mortgage, to cover those advances made, appears to us to be one of those things which was expedient [32] and necessary under the circumstances for attaining the objects of the Company, which are declared by art. 4 to be included in the business of the Company.

The decree must accordingly be amended, so far as it disallows that portion of the principal debt due to Dr. Kernot which was incurred previously to October, 16th, 1879, in excess of Rs. 50,000, and it must be declared that the claimant is entitled under the mortgage to charge the Company with all advances made by him; but that he is only entitled to avail himself of his mortgage-security to the extent of a principal sum of one lac of rupees.

The fifth ground of appeal is as to interest, but we find that the decree allows 10 per cent., the rate at which we understand the advances to have been made.

The sixth ground is as to costs. As we hold the advances not to have been ultra vires, and as the Liquidator raised the objection of a fraudulent preference, we think that Dr. Kernot is entitled to his costs, especially having regard to the covenant on this point in the mortgage-deed. The order of the Original Court is modified accordingly, and Dr. Kernot is entitled to his costs in this Court and the Court below on scale 2. The Official Liquidator will have his costs here, as in the Court below, out of the estate.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[COMPANY LAW - DEBT INCURRED FOR MEETING (1) PREVIOUS DEBTS (2) NEW LIABILITIES - POWER TO BORROW]

The distinction drawn in this case is well established.

To raise debts for meeting new obligations, the borrowing must conform to the conditions limiting the exercise of power in that behalf contained in the Articles etc :—Irvine v. The Union Bank of Australia, 3 Cal. 287 P.C. and see the Notes to that case.

In the case of Reversion Fund and Insurance Company Limited v. Maison Cosway Limited (1913) 1 K. B. 361 the Court of Appeal (Buckley, L. J., Kennedy, L. J., Vaughan Williams, L. J., diss.) upheld the replacement of old debts by the Directors without conforming to the articles. "The defendant company had under its memorandum and articles of association power to borrow, but that power did not come into active existence until the Board of Directors passed a resolution for its exercise. The Directors never passed any such resolution, and Morhange had no authority to borrow money on behalf of the defendant Company." (p. 373). The plaintiff was held entitled to recover.

First, if a corporation which has no power to borrow, or has exhausted its power of borrowing, does, nevertheless, borrow or purport to borrow, then such borrowing, being ultra vires, creates neither at law nor in equity any debt for money lent.

But secondly, if such a corporation having incurred debts, procures from some one, who is willing to find it, money which it employs in paying off those debts, that is a legitimate operation, and the transaction is not ultra vires: for, to that extent to which the money found by the lender is applied in discharging the debts of the corporation, there is, in effect, no further borrowing, because the money is employed in discharging debt, and there is therefore no increase of the corporation's indebtedness.

And thirdly, in that class of case, knowledge by the person advancing the money of the absence of authority to borrow is, not material. For, under such circumstances, there is, in substance, no borrowing; there is merely the replacement of one debt by another of the same amount. The existence or non-existence of borrowing power is, therefore, not material and, consequently, knowledge as to its non-existence is not material."']

The 12th July, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM.

The Administrator-General of Bengal.....Defendant

Mirza Ahmed Begg.....Plaintiff.

Decree --Construction of decree --Mortgage-decree directing accounts, etc., to be taken and report given---Tender of principal and interest before Report --Refusal to accept tender and subsequent charge of interest.

A decree directed accounts to be taken of what was due for principal and interest under a mortgage, such interest to be allowed "up to the time of payment hereinafter mentioned or until six months from the date of the decree," whichever first should happen; and further directed the plaintiff to pay what should be reported due for principal and interest up to the date of payment, and cost, with interest at 6 per cent. from the date of taxation until payment, within six months after the Registrar should make his report.

The plaintiff tendered a sum sufficient to cover the principal and interest due, but insufficient to cover costs, at a time prior to the drawing up of the Registrar's report.

Held, that the payment of principal and interest "hereinafter mentioned" referred to a time after the Registrar had made his report, because the sum to be paid was a sum reported to be due by the Registrar, and that, therefore, a tender made before the Registrar's report was given was not a sufficient tender to stop interest from the date of the tender.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice WILSON, dated the 8th December 1881.

One Mirza Ahmed Begg brought a suit against one Newal Hozoor and the Administrator-General of Bengal on two several mortgages, for an account and sale, and for the appointment of a receiver. On the case coming on for hearing, the plaintiff, who was the second mortgagee, agreed to pay off the Administrator-General of Bengal, who was the first mortgagee; and Mr. Justice WHITE, on the 20th of December 1880, passed a decree directing an account to be taken of what was due to the Administrator-General of Bengal for principal and interest on his mortgage, "such interest to be allowed as provided by the mortgage up to the time of payment hereinafter mentioned, or until the end of six months from the date of the decree, whichever should first happen, and thereafter on the aggregate amount of such principal and interest at six per cent. per annum," and [34] directing an account of the principal and interest due in respect of a sum of Rs. 10,880, paid on the 16th of September 1878, for an assignment of a certain decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganas, "such interest to be allowed at 12 per cent. per annum from the 16th of September 1878, up to the time of payment thereafter mentioned, or until six months of the date of the decree." The decree further directed the plaintiff's and the Administrator-General's costs of the suit and of all proceedings adopted by them, either in the Original and Appellate Court, or in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, to protect their interests under the said mortgages, to be taxed as between attorney and client; the costs of the present suit to be taxed under the heading class 2 ordinary causes. The plaintiff paying to the Administrator-General what should be reported to be due for principal and interest up to the date of payment and his costs with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the date of taxation until payment within six months after the Registrar should have made his report.

On the 19th of March 1881, the Administrator-General filed his statement of facts, showing that there was due to him Rs. 53,186; and on the 30th of March 1881, the plaintiff tendered to the Administrator-General Rs. 16,000, the amount of principal and interest due. The Administrator-General refused to accept the tender, on the ground that, under the decree, payment was not to be made until after the Registrar had made his report.

The plaintiff thereupon gave notice to the Administrator-General of his intention to pay the money into Court, and deposited the amount.

On the 5th of July 1881, the Registrar, in his minute, found that the Administrator-General was not bound to accept the tender, the tender being insufficient for the payment of costs, and therefore insufficient for the payment of the whole amount payable under the decree; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim the benefit of ss. 376 to 379 of the Civil Procedure Code, under

Deposit by defendant of amount in satisfaction of claim. * [Sec. 376. — The defendant in any suit to recover a debt or damages, may, at any stage of the suit, deposit in Court such sum of money as he considers a satisfaction in full of the claim.]

1 [Sec. 379. — If the plaintiff accepts such amount only as satisfaction in part of his claim, he may prosecute his suit for the balance, and if the Court decides that the deposit by the defendant was a full satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, the plaintiff must pay the costs of the suit incurred after the deposit and the costs incurred previous thereto, so far as they were caused by excess in the plaintiff's claim.]

Procedure where plaintiff accepts deposit as satisfaction in part. If the plaintiff accepts such amount as satisfaction in full of his claim, he shall present to the Court a statement to that effect, and such statement shall be filed and the Court shall pass judgment accordingly, and in directing by whom the costs of each party are to be paid. The Court shall consider which of the parties is most to blame for the litigation.]

which the sum of Rs. 46,000 had been paid into Court;—1st, because deposit was made after decree; and 2nd, because [35] although notice of the intention to deposit was given, yet no notice of the deposit having been made was served.

On the 13th of September 1881, the Registrar, in pursuance of the decree, reported that (i) there was due to the Administrator-General on his mortgage Rs. 40,573 for principal, and interest to the 19th of June 1881, being six months from the date of the decree, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, from the 20th of June 1881 until realization, as per account annexed to the report; and (ii) that there was also due to him a sum of Rs. 6, 594 for principal and interest to the 19th of June 1881, being six months from the date of decree, after debiting all sums received by him from the Court of the Subordinate Judge, as per account annexed to the report.

The plaintiff took exception to the report on the following grounds:—

First.—That the Registrar should not have allowed the Administrator-General interest on the principal sum claimed, after the 30th of March 1881, the date of the tender.

Second.—That the Registrar should have held that the tender was sufficient, and that the plaintiff had complied with ss. 376 to 379 of the Civil Procedure Code in giving notice of the deposit.

At the hearing of the exceptions to the report, Mr. Justice WILSON decided, that, in this country, a mortgagee claiming his money was not entitled as of right to six months' interest, but that the decree would entitle the mortgagor to stay interest by an early payment. that, as regards the question whether the tender was sufficient to stay interest (the money due for costs not having been tendered), the decree and mortgage premises standing as security for costs, the case of Letts v. Hutchins (L. R., 13 Eq., 176) was in point, and that, applying the principles of that case to the one then before him, the true rule was, that principal and interest having been tendered, interest should cease from the time of the tender. But the tender being insufficient to cover costs, the Administrator was entitled to proceed to recover them. The report was, therefore, ordered to be varied.

[36] The Administrator-General appealed.

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. Phillips, with him Mr. Paulit) for the Appellant. —I submit that I cannot be paid off until the costs of the suit are taxed, and that interest runs until taxation. The tender was not sufficient to stop interest, it being an incomplete tender of the whole sum due under the decree. The Court below was, therefore, wrong in varying the report by disallowing interest after the 30th of March 1881.

Mr. Evans (with him Mr. Bonneville) for the Respondent.—The words "time hereinafter mentioned" in Mr. Justice WHITE's decree cannot allude to the time in the Registrar's report appointing a time for reconveyance. If the decree does not tell us what our rights are as to the stoppage of interest, will a Court of equity interfere? [GARTH, C.J. —You had no right before the report was made to make a tender, but nevertheless you must be bound by the decree.] The case of Letts v. Hutchins (L. R., 13 Eq., 176) does not apply, as the mortgage was desirous of being paid off, and filed a bill for that purpose; and he was not in a position to demand six months' notice, or interest in lieu of notice; the real question is whether there is any right to six months' notice at all, there being no such stipulation in the mortgage. As regards the right of a mortgagor to repay before the expiration of the usual six months ordinarily allowed by decree, see Chotoollall v. A. B. Miller (7 C. L. R., 267).

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and CUNNINGHAM, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J. —We have had some difficulty in determining what is the true meaning of the decree in this case.

It may be that it was the intention of the learned Judge who made it to allow the plaintiff to pay his mortgage-money and interest when he chose; but we are bound to put a construction upon the language of the decree itself, and we think that the words "up to the time of payment hereinafter mentioned" [37] can refer to no other time of payment than that which is mentioned later on in that part of the decree which relates to the reconveyance of the property; and the time of payment there mentioned seems, according to the best construction that we can put upon the sentence, a time after the Registrar has made his report, because the sum to be paid is to be a sum reported to be due by the Registrar.

After the able arguments which have been addressed to us in this case, and the difficulty which we feel even now in saying what the decree really means, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the decree has not been drawn as clearly as it might have been. We only hope that the difficulty which we have had, and the expense which has been occasioned to the parties, will operate as a wholesome warning in the future.

It is true that the parties themselves are, to some extent, in fault, for having approved of the decree in its present shape; but each party may possibly have construed it in his own way, and been perfectly content with it according to his own construction.

The report, therefore, of the Registrar will be confirmed as it originally stood, and we think that each party must pay his own costs of this appeal on scale 2.

Appeal allowed.

[38] CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

The 25th May, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

In the matter of the Municipal Committee of Dacca.

The Municipal Committee of Dacca

versus

Someer.

Bench of Magistrates, Power of—Beng. Act V of 1876, ss. 180, 215, 216—Omission to remove obstruction.

A notice was issued under s. 215, Beng. Act V of 1876, requiring A to remove an alleged obstruction. The requisition was not complied with, and A was prosecuted for non-compliance therewith, under s. 216, before a Bench of Honorary Magistrates.

Held, that the Court had power to inquire whether the alleged obstruction was, in point of fact, an obstruction or not.

THIS was a reference under s. 296 of Act X of 1872 from the Magistrate of Dacca. A requisition, in respect of an alleged obstruction, was, on the 28th of February 1882, issued on the accused Someer Tamakalla by the Secretary to the Municipal Commissioners of Dacca, under s. 215, Beng. Act V of 1876. The accused neither obeyed the order nor preferred an objection under s. 180 of the same Act. He was, therefore, prosecuted under s. 216 of the Act.

A Bench of Honorary Magistrates discharged the accused, because, in the opinion of one of their number, who visited the place, there had been no encroachment. The Magistrate referred the case to the High Court, it being his opinion that "a Court, trying a case under s. 216 of Beng. Act V of 1876, has no authority to inquire whether there was any encroachment justifying the issue of a requisition. That is an issue for the trial of which the law has provided in s. 180 of the said Act, which allows the person served to make an objection, and I submit that, on his failure to file any such objection, the requisition becomes absolute and must be obeyed, and that, when the [39] person is prosecuted for disobedience thereof, it is too late to open the question as to there having been any encroachment."

No one appeared on the reference.

Prinsep, J.—We are of opinion that the Bench of Magistrates had jurisdiction, in a prosecution under s. 216, Beng. Act V of 1876, to determine whether the order which had not been carried out was a proper order,—that is to say, in the present case, whether there had been any encroachment on the road which the accused was bound to remove on the order of a Municipal authority. It has been held, in an analogous case under s. 518 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that, when prosecuted under s. 188, Penal Code, for neglecting to carry out an order of a Magistrate to remove a nuisance, that although that order, if properly made, cannot be questioned in any Court, the accused can, when prosecuted for disobedience of it, claim exemption from its operation on the ground that it was not an order which he was bound to obey, as being an order beyond the Magistrate's power and jurisdiction.

* Criminal Reference, No. 105 of 1882, and Letter No. 1331, from the order made by E. V. Westmacott, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Dacca, dated the 11th May 1882.

Debi Churn Boido.....Plaintiff

versus

Issur Chunder Manjee and another.....Defendants.

Suit for Possession—Ejectment—Onus probandi—Evidence—Previous Possession.

Where, in a suit for possession of land, the plaintiff proves merely that he has been in possession of the disputed land at some time within twelve years previous to the filing of the plaint, such evidence is not sufficient to throw upon the defendant the burden of proving his title to the land.

[40] THIS was a suit for possession of two bighas of land, which, the plaintiff alleged, formed part of thirty-five bighas, for which his predecessors had obtained, on the 22nd of June 1858, 'a patta' from one Sumbhoo Chunder Ghosh. The plaintiff stated that he had been in possession of the disputed portion, but that the defendants dispossessed him by making excavations therein and by enclosing it within boundary-marks. The defendants contended that the disputed land formed part of their jamai land, and that the plaintiff was never in possession of it.

The Court of First Instance fixed two issues :—(i) "Whether the suit is barred by limitation ; (ii) whether the disputed land is covered by the plaintiff's patta or by the defendants' patta ;" and, having found both against the plaintiff, dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, the first ground of appeal being that the decision of the Munsif was against the weight of evidence. The Judge said :—"With reference to the first ground of appeal, this Court is clear that there was no satisfactory evidence before the Court to show that the land claimed belonged to the plaintiff's land. The plaintiff never had mentioned any measurement paper or dagh thereof, and never tried to get the landlord to produce any. Nothing that his witnesses have said could justify a decree in plaintiff's favour." He then dismissed the appeal with costs.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court on several grounds, among which were the following :—(i) That the plaintiff's case, as laid in his plaint, being a case of forcible dispossession by the defendants, the learned Judge has committed an error in law to hold that the plaintiff having failed to prove the disputed land to be his pattai land, nothing that his witnesses have said could justify a decree. It is submitted that mere proof of possession within twelve years prior to suit in such a case is sufficient to shift the onus upon the defendants ; (ii) for that the sole contest between the parties being a boundary dispute as between themselves, the learned Judge should have given a decree to the plaintiff upon mere proof of possession : (iii) for that, under s. 110 of the Indian Evidence Act, the onus of proving title is shifted on the defendants, if the plaintiff's prior possession be proved, which the learned Judge should have [41] found, the more so when he does not disbelieve the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses."

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 518 of 1881, against the decree of J. F. Browne, Esq., Judge of the 24-Parganas, dated the 11th January 1881, affirming the decree of Baboo Jogendro Nath Roy, Second Munsif of Diamond Harbour, dated the 27th April 1880.

Baboo Anund Gopal Palit for the Appellant.

Baboo Jadub Chunder Seal for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered :

O'Kinealy, J.—In this suit the plaintiff claimed that the disputed parcel of land was situate within his jama, and that he had been lately dispossessed from it by the defendants. The defendants, on the other hand, contended, that the land formed part of their joto, and that the plaintiff had never been in possession. In the first Court the Munsif, coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff had not been in possession of the land within twelve years, dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed and on the case coming before the District Judge, he arrived at the conclusion that, as the plaintiff had never measured the land, nor produced any documentary evidence through his landlord, that the land had been measured by the latter, nothing that he could produce in the way of oral evidence would be sufficient to justify a decree.

In this Court it has been urged upon us, that, under s. 110 of the Indian Evidence Act, as the plaintiff had proved possession for some time within twelve years before the suit, that possession by itself shifted the onus of proving title from the plaintiff to the defendants, and that in this case the onus was wrongly placed. Further it is said that the plaintiff was not debarred by the non-production of documentary evidence from proving his title in whatever way he deemed best.

In support of the first contention the learned pleader has referred to Gour Paroy v. Wooma Soonduree Debia (12 W. R., 472), and he has intimated to us that this decision is to be supported on the ground that it is based upon English law. We are of opinion that this contention is unsound. The same question was before their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Wise v. [42] Amrunnessa Khatoon (L. R., 7 I. A. 81), and their Lordships held, that land to which a plaintiff is unable to make out a title cannot be recovered on the ground of previous possession merely, except in a suit under s. 15, Act XIV of 1859, now s. 3 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), which must be brought within six months from the time of dispossession. This decision in our opinion settles the matter.

In regard to English law it may well be that the difference of opinion referred to in the case of Asher v. Whitlock (L. R., 1 Q. B., 1) will be settled in accordance with the decision in that case, but it is not quite certain that it would support the appellant's contention to the extent urged before us. The same point was also touched upon in the case of Danford v. Mc Anulty (L. R., 6 Q. B. D., 645), and there BRAMWELL, L. J., said :—"A man in possession of land has a right to call upon a plaintiff in ejectment to prove his title; if the plaintiff does prove a prima facie title, then the man in possession must prove his. The rule is the same in respect of chattels; an action is brought to recover a chattel, the plaintiff must show a title to the chattel before he can call upon the defendant to prove his title." But whatever may be the result of those cases, it is evident that, according to the law of this country, as authoritatively laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council, mere anterior possession is not sufficient proof of title to dispossess a person in possession. We are, therefore, of opinion that this ground cannot succeed in second appeal.

In regard to the second point, we think that the appellant has made out a case sufficient to justify a remand. We are of opinion that the District Judge was not justified in restricting the plaintiff as to the manner in which he should prove his case, and that the case must go back in order that he should determine on the whole evidence on the record whether the plaintiff has a title to the land. Costs to abide the result.

Prinsep, J. -I also concur in remanding this case. On the question of onus in a suit to recover possession of immove-[43] able property not being a possessory suit under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, I have always held the opinion now expressed by my learned colleague, and in one case I was overruled by the learned Chief Justice and MORRIS, J. The judgment of the Privy Council which has just been referred to was not quoted in argument to us, and as that, in my opinion, settles the law, it does not become necessary, according to the usual rule, to refer the point for the decision of a Full Bench.

Case remanded.

NOTES.

[I. THE AUTHORITY OF THIS CASE

Though not expressly overruled, this case has to be treated as no longer authoritative. It purports to follow the dictum of the Privy Council in (1875) 7 L.A. 73 (81), "if the plaintiffs had wished to contend that the defendants had been wrongfully put into possession, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover on the strength of their previous possession without entering into a question of title at all, they ought to have brought their action within six months under s. 15 of Act XIV of 1859, but they did not do so." In this case, the plaintiffs had been dispossessed by persons deriving title from the true owners, and the observation should be confined to such cases, as pointed out in (1884) 8 Bom. 371, and not extended to cases of pure trespassers, having no valid title in themselves.

In the later Privy Council case of (1893) 20 Cal. 831 20 L.A. 99, their Lordships of the Privy Council observed, "The possession of the plaintiff was sufficient evidence of title as owner against the defendant" By section 9 of the Specific Relief Act (Act I of 1877), if the plaintiff had been dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law, he could, by a suit instituted within six months from the date of the dispossession have recovered possession, notwithstanding any other title that might be set up in such suit. If he could thus recover possession from a person who might be able to prove a title, it is certainly right and just that he should be able, against a person who has no title and is a mere wrong-doer, to obtain a declaration of title as owner, and an injunction to restrain the wrong-doer from interfering with his possession. The Appellate Court in accordance with the judgment above quoted, has dismissed the suit. Consequently, the defendant may continue to wilfully, improperly and illegally interfere with the plaintiff's possession, as the learned Judges say he has done, and the plaintiff has no remedy. Their Lordships are of opinion that the suit should not have been dismissed; and that the plaintiff was entitled in it to a declaration of his title to the land." (at pp. 842, 843).

In this case, it should be observed, the date of acquisition of the plaintiff's title was the 24th September 1885, the suit was brought on the 11th of September 1886 (see p. 837) and the cause of action as to dispossession was that four of the tenants, at the instigation of the defendant, had not attorned at all (p. 840). If the suit had been brought within six months of the dispossession, there was no necessity for entering into the question of title at all.

Even after this decision the Calcutta High Court followed the older cases that previous possession (except under s. 9 of the Sp. Relief Act, 1877) was not alone sufficient against defendants failing to establish their title—26 Cal. 579; 17 Cal. 256; 9 Cal. 39; 9 Cal. 130; though the opposite view had been taken in 7 Cal. 591 and has been taken in the latest case, 15 C. W.N. 163.

The later Privy Council case of Perry v. Chissold (1907) A. C. noted below removes all doubts. The other High Courts also have held differently from the Calcutta High Court, (1891) 13 All. 537 F. B. (MAHMOOD J. diss.) 6 Bom. 215; 8 Bom. 371; 20 Bom. 798; 25 Bom. 287; 23 Mad. 179 (O FARRELL J. diss.; SUBRAMANIA IYER'S judgment is quite in accordance with the English authorities like Perry v. Chissold) 9 O. C. 273; 11 O. C. 337; 10 Bom. L. R. 571; 26 Mad. 514.

II. NATURE OF THE POSSESSORY RIGHT—

A person in peaceable possession of land has, as against every one but the true owner, an interest capable of being inherited, devised or conveyed. In Asher v. Whitlock (1865) L. R. 1 Q. B. 1 “a man occupying without title purported by his will to settle the land so occupied, that settlement is effective as regards all persons not claiming under the true title, and governs the possessory title (which meanwhile may be perfected by lapse of time) exactly as it would govern a title good from the first.”

“It cannot be disputed that a person in possession of land in the assumed character of owner and exercising peaceably the ordinary rights of ownership has a perfectly good title against all the world but the rightful owner. And if the rightful owner does not come forward and assert his title by process of law within the period prescribed by the provisions of the Statute of limitations applicable to the case, his right is for ever extinguished, and the possessory owner acquires an absolute title.”—Perry v. Glissold (1907) A. C. 73 where such possessor was held entitled to compensation under the Land Acquisition Act.

“A person in possession of land without title has an interest in the property which is heritable and good against all the world except the true owner, an interest which unless and until the true owner interferes, is capable of being disposed of by deed or will, or by execution sale, just in the same way as it could be dealt with if the title were unimpeachable”;—24 All. 157; 27 All. 169; 29 All. 52.

On the strength of such a title, declaratory decrees have been granted and injunctions issued:—20 Cal. 831, P. C.

A possessory title perfected by adverse possession is a new title dependent on the negative provisions of the statute (s. 28 Limitation Act 1908) and therefore independent of the covenant of the dispossessed (Trehborne v. Weir (1892) 67 L. T. 735 C. A.; Wilkes v. Greenway (1890) 34 L. J. 673 C. A.) but subject to rights, not incident, but paramount to his estate:—Re Nisbet and Pott's contract (1906) 1 Ch. 386 C. A.

Possessory title is forced on the purchaser where an apparent defect of title is thereby cured. In re Atkinson and Horsell's contract (1912) 2 Ch. 1 C. A. affirming (1912) 1 Ch. 2, and following Games v. Bonnor (1881) 54 L. J. Ch. 517. The only exception appears to be that under an open contract mere possessory title for a short period is not deemed sufficient:—Re Cussons Ltd. (1901) 73 L. J. Ch. 296; Jacobs v. Revell (1900) 2 Ch. 858.

III. SUITS FOR POSSESSION AGAINST THE DISPOSSESSOR BASED ON MORE PREVIOUS POSSESSION WITHOUT PROOF OF TITLE—

The presumption as to possession is embodied in the Indian Evidence Act, s. 110. In a suit in ejectment, as the allegation is that the defendant is in possession though unlawfully, the presumption will apply in the first instance in his favour. The plaintiff has first of all to show his previous possession within 12 years (Art. 112) and of his subsequent dispossession being unlawful. Thus done, his possession is evidence of title within the rule that in an ejectment suit, the plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own title and not on the weakness of the defendant's. The possession need not be good against all the world, enough if the defendant be shown to be a wrong doer. The contrary was laid down in Doe v. Barnard, 13 Q. B. 952 which “seemed to lay down this proposition, that if a person having only a possessory title to land be supplanted in the possession by another who has himself no better title, and afterwards brings an action to recover the land, he must fail in case he shews in the course of the proceedings that the title on which he seeks to recover was merely possessory.” But that case was expressly overruled by the Privy Council in Perry v. Glissold (1907) A. C. 73. See 10 Bom. L. R. 571; L. B. R. (1905) Ev. 7; 4 All. 206; 6 L. C. 806; 1 M. H. C. 85; 33 Mad. 173.

In a series of (unlawful) dispossessions, each prior possessor has a good title in ejectment against the subsequent dispossessor.—Dalton v. Fitzgerald (1897) 2 Ch. 90 C. A. “It must be remembered that the title conferred by possession is (apart from the Statute) a title only against wrong-doers.

A person who is lawfully dispossessed has no subsequent remedy against a third person not claiming through a wrong-doer. Pollock & Wright on Possession (1888) p. 99, citing Buckley v. Gross (1863) 3 B. & S. 566.]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 5th April, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Luchmi Narain Singh.....Defendant No. 1

Assrup Koer and others.....Plaintiffs.*

Limitation Act (IX of 1871), sched. ii, art. 15; and (XV of 1877), sched. ii, art. 11-- Suit to recover Property sold in execution--Civil Procedure Codes (Act VIII of 1869), s. 246 and (Act X of 1877), ss. 280, 281, and 282.

Certain property, which the plaintiff alleged to belong to her, was sold in execution of a decree obtained by the purchaser of the property at the auction-sale, against a third party. The plaintiff put in a claim to the property under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, which claim was rejected on the 6th of September 1873.

The plaintiff, on the 10th of January 1878, brought a suit to recover possession of the property sold. Held, that the suit was not barred under art. 11* of sched. ii of Act XV of 1877, which refers to the section in Act X of 1877, corresponding to s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859; and that the suit was not barred by art. 15,† sched. ii of Act IX of 1871, the suit not being one to set aside a summary order within art. 15 of the schedule to that Act.

Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry v. Preonath Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 610) followed.

THIS was a suit to recover possession of 118 bighas of land with mesne profits.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1939 of 1880, against the decree of J. F. Stevens, Esq., Officiating District Judge of Sarun, dated the 26th of July 1880, modifying the decree of Baboo Grish Chunder Chowdhry, First Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 31st of March 1879.

By a person against whom an order is passed under Sections 280, 281, 282 or 335 of the Code Civil Procedure, to establish his right to, or to the present possession of, the property comprised in the order.	One year	The date of the order.‡

‡ [Art. 15:—

Description of suit.	Period of Limitation.	Time when period begins to run.
To alter or set aside a decision or order of a Civil Court in any proceeding other than a suit.	One year	The date of the final decision or order in the case by a Court competent to determine it finally.]

The plaintiff alleged that part of the land in question stood in the name of her deceased husband, being his self-acquired [44] property; and that the remainder was acquired by herself in the name of the pro forma defendants, Nos. 3 and 4, who were her servants, at a time when her husband was insane; and that she took possession of these lands on her husband's death. That, in satisfaction of a decree obtained by the defendant No. 1 against the defendant No. 2, the defendant No. 1 attached and put up for sale 42 bighas of land belonging to her; that she thereupon put in two claims on the 12th of February and 1st of September 1873 respectively (presumably under s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code) to two separate portions of the 42 bighas; but that these claims were disallowed on the 3rd of March and 6th of September 1873; and the defendant No. 1, on the 31st of March and 18th of September, sold the property under the Court and purchased them himself. On the 6th of September 1873, she then brought a suit to confirm her possession, and this suit was dismissed on the 6th of September 1873, on the technical ground that she was not in possession at the time of suit, and the decree was confirmed on appeal on the 23rd of July 1875.

That the defendant No. 1, in further execution of his decree, attached and brought to sale, on the 4th of July and 13th of November 1876, 74 bighas more of her properties, and at the sale himself became the purchaser; that she put in her claim to the 74 bighas mentioned (after delivery of possession had been given) for an adjudication under s. 269 of Act VIII of 1859, but the Court, on the 19th of February 1877, refused to entertain her claim, on the ground that the section was inapplicable; that she then brought the present suit on the 10th of January 1878 to obtain possession of the entire 118 bighas with mesne profits, stating that although her causes of action arose on different dates, viz., on the 23rd of July 1875 and on the 19th of February 1877, she was entitled, under s. 44 of Act X of 1877, to join the several causes of action.

The defendants contended that the lands were the joint property of the plaintiff's husband and of the defendant No. 2, who were cousins, and that they were members of a joint family, and that the share of the plaintiff's husband, on his death, passed to the defendant No. 2, and that he was in possession at the dates of the different auction-sales; and that the suit was barred, it not [45] having been brought within one year from the date of either of the orders of the 3rd of March and 6th of September as provided for suits to set aside claims under s. 246.

The Subordinate Judge found that the husband of the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2 were not members of a joint family; that the land belonged to the plaintiff, and had been in her possession prior to delivery of possession to the defendant No. 1; that the plaintiff's claim to the 42 bighas first sold was barred by limitation, but that she was entitled to recover possession of the 76 bighas with mesne profits.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge as to that part of the lower Court's judgment which had declared her claim to the 42 bighas to be barred by limitation.

The Judge held, that the portion of s. 246 of the Civil Procedure Code, which provided a special rule of limitation, had been repealed by Act IX of 1871, and that the corresponding provision in that Act was not a re-enactment of the old rule; that the case of Kóylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry v. Prónath

Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 610), had decided that the test to be applied in considering whether the provisions of art. 15, sched. ii, Act IX of 1871 applied to cases of this kind was, whether the relief sought could be given without setting aside the summary order: that, therefore, as no benefit could accrue to the plaintiff if the summary order refusing to release the property which had been attached were set aside, inasmuch as the property had since been sold, he set aside the judgment of the lower Court on the point which was in appeal before him. The defendant No. 1 also separately appealed on the ground that the case as regards the 76 bighas was barred under the special limitation provided by s. 269 of Act VIII of 1859. The District Judge dismissed the cross-appeal, on the grounds that the plaintiff's claims decided on the 1st of December 1876 and 19th of February 1877, being refused on the express ground that the provisions of s. 269 were not applicable, the special provision for limitation could not apply.

The defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

[46] Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellant, amongst other contentions, raised the point that the suit was barred under art. 11, sched. ii of Act XV of 1877, as regards the 42 bighas, because the suit was not brought within one year from either of the two orders passed under s. 246, dated the 3rd of March and 6th of September 1873. Krishnaji Vithal v. Bhaskar Ramnath (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 611), Jetti v. Sayad Husein (I. L. R. 1 Bom. 23n), and Venkapa v. Chembasapa (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 21), The Collector of Ahmedabad v. Semaldas Bechardas (9 Bom. II. C. R., 205).

Munshi Mahomed Yusuf for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.):—

Mitter, J.—We do not think that there is any ground for interference in this case. The Courts below have found that the plaintiff's husband was separate from the defendant No. 2, and that, after her husband's death, she was in possession of the disputed property until dispossessed. There is no ground upon which this finding can be questioned in second appeal. We must, therefore, accept it as correct. These two questions of law have been argued before us: 1st, that the plaintiff's suit is barred because a previous suit brought by her was dismissed. It appears that the previous suit referred to was dismissed not upon the merits, but upon the ground that the form in which that action was brought was not the correct form. She had alleged that she was in possession of the property in dispute, the Court found that she was not in possession, and simply upon this ground that suit was dismissed; therefore it cannot be said that that decision is any bar to the present suit under s. 13 of the Procedure Code. Neither is it a bar under s. 13. Section 43 is not applicable here, because the first suit was brought before the present Procedure Code was passed, and the rule of law laid down in s. 43 is laid down with reference to suits to be brought under the new Procedure Code. Under s. 7, Act VIII of 1859, the plaintiff was bound to include the whole of her claim arising out of the cause of action upon [47] which the first suit was brought, and there is no question that in the first suit she had included the whole of her claim. Therefore, there is no force in this contention. The next point of law that has been raised is, that the claim as regards a portion of the disputed land is barred because there were two orders passed under s. 246 against the plaintiff on the 3rd of March 1873 and 6th of September 1873 respectively, and the present suit is not brought within one year from either of those two dates. It is contended before us that the present suit, being governed by the Limitation Act of 1877, is barred; but the article to which reference is made, viz., art. 11, does not refer to an order passed under s. 246, but to an order passed under the corresponding section of the Act of 1877. The Limitation Act must be construed strictly; and we cannot therefore say that, under art. 11, the present suit is barred. Then as regards the question whether it was barred under the Act of 1871, the District Judge follows the decision of this Court in Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry v. Preonath Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 610). Beyond citing some contrary decisions of the High Court of Bombay, nothing has been urged before us from which we could say that the decision upon which the District Judge relies is not in accordance with law. Under the circumstances, we will follow the decision of our own Court.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Maclean, J. The decision of this Court in Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry v. Preonath Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 610), and others to the same effect are, no doubt, in conflict with some of the Bombay decisions, and I am by no means certain that I do not agree with the latter. But I am not at present disposed to dissent formally from the view of the law laid down in our Court. I, therefore, concur in dismissing the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[RIGHT TO ATTACHED PROPERTY]

The statutory changes should be noted, the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 contained provisions as to limitation in ss. 246 and 269. The Limitation Act of 1871 repealed that portion in s. 246 alone, and did not re-enact anything expressly in its place, there was only art. 15 providing for altering or setting aside a decision or order of a Civil Court in any proceeding other than a suit (same as art. 13 of the C. P. C., 1908). By art. 11, Limitation Act, 1877, provision was made for establishing one's right to or to the present possession of the property, in respect of orders under ss. 280, 281, 282 or 335, C. P. C. 1877. The present Limitation Act, arts. 11 and 11 A are more general in their terms.

The view of the Calcutta High Court was as stated in this case, 9 Cal. 43; 9 Cal. 230; 11 Cal. 673; 11 C. L. R., 113; 8 C. L. R., 51, see now (1901) 1 C. L. J., 296. The High Courts of Bombay and Madras held differently, 8 Mad. 124; 10 Bom. 604; 18 Bom. 260.]

[48] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 2nd June, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Jagut Chunder Roy, alias Bashi Chunder Roy and others.....Plaintiffs
versus

Rup Chand Chango.....Defendant.

Landlord and Tenant—Notice to quit—Reasonable notice.

A tenant other than an occupancy ryot is entitled to a reasonable notice to quit. What is a reasonable notice is a question of fact, which must be decided in each case according to the particular circumstances and the local customs as to reaping crops and letting land. It is not necessary that the notice must expire at the end of the year.

*Appeals from Appellate Decree, Nos. 2431 and 2132 of 1880, against the decree of R. F. Rampini, Esq., Officiating Judge of Dacca, dated the 21st September 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Surbanmud Dass, Second Munsif of that district, dated the 25th March 1880.

Janoo Mundur v. Brij Singh (22 W. R., 548), and Rajendronath Mookhopadhyaya v. Bassider Ruhman Khondkar (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 146; s.c., 25 W. R., 330) considered.

THIS was a suit for ejectment, after the issue of a notice to quit at the expiration of three months from the date of the notice. The defendant, who was a cultivating ryot, in his written statement, contended that the notice was not served on him, and that he had a right of occupancy. The Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree. The defendant appealed, and on appeal contended that, being a cultivating ryot, he could only be ejected at the end of the year, and that the notice was, therefore, bad. The District Judge, upon the authority of Bakranath Mandal v. Binodram Sen (1 B. L. R., F. B., 25; s.c., 10 W. R., F. B., 33), Bunwari Lal Roy v. Mahima Chandra Kunall (4 B. L. R., App., 86; s.c., 13 W. R., 267), Janoo Mundur v. Brij Singh (22 W. R., 548), and Rajendronath Mookhopadhyaya v. Bassider Ruhman Khondkar (I. L. R., 2 Cal. 146; s.c., 25 W. R., 330), decided that the notice was bad, as it required the defendant to quit before the end of the year. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee for the Appellants.

[49] Baboo Bama Churn Banerjee for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case the District Judge was of opinion that the notice to quit was bad, merely because the period allowed did not expire at the end of the year. He relies upon certain cases quoted in his judgment. With reference to the case of Rajendronath Mookhopadhyaya v. Bassider Ruhman Khondkar (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 146; s.c., 25 W. R., 330) we have to observe that the question referred to the Full Bench was—“Whether a ryot, whose tenancy can only be determined by a reasonable notice to quit expiring at the end of the year, can claim to have a suit brought against him by the landlord dismissed on the ground that he has had no such notice,” etc. This assumed that the ryot in that particular case was entitled to a reasonable notice to quit expiring at the end of the year. No question was raised or decided as to whether, as a general principle, a notice to quit, in order to be reasonable, must expire at the end of the year. Then, in the case of Janoo Mundur v. Brij Singh (22 W. R., 548), PHEAR, J., said:—

“We perceive that it,” that is, the notice, “was served upon the defendant in the month of Pous, three whole months before the expiration of the year, and therefore was, in respect of time, reasonably sufficient notice to quit.” It appears to us that the learned Judge considered the notice to be reasonable in that case, not because it expired at the end of the year, but because it was a three months’ notice. The other cases quoted by the District Judge do not, in our opinion, establish the proposition that a notice to quit given to a tenant other than an occupancy ryot must, in order to be reasonable, expire at the end of the year. We think that the result of the cases is, that such a ryot is entitled to a reasonable notice. What is reasonable notice is a question of fact which must be decided in each case according to the particular circumstances and the local customs as to reaping crops and letting land. In the present case a three months’ notice was given, and there was no contention [30] that, at the time when that notice expired, any crop was upon the ground, the necessity of removing which would have made the notice under the circumstances unreasonable. Further, the notice did, as a matter of fact, expire within seven days of the close of the year, and the facts of the case, therefore, are very similar to the case of Janoo Mundur v. Brij Singh (22 W. R., 548).

We think, therefore, that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and this appeal decreed with costs.

This judgment will admittedly govern Appeal No. 2432 of 1880.

Appeal allowed.

Hindu Law Adoption-- Simultaneous adoption.

A simultaneous adoption is not valid according to Hindu law. The adoption of one son alone is actually and in itself wholly sufficient to satisfy the purpose of the law ; the adoption of two is not within the scope of the power of adoption, and where such a thing is attempted, neither of the children is the legally adopted son of the deceased. Although the ceremonies of adoption may have been performed as regards each and also at the same time.

Mr. Branson for the Appellant.

Mr. Evans for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (WHITE and MACPHERSON, JJ.), which was delivered by White, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in the first Court against a decision of the Officiating District Judge of Rungpore, reversing a decree of the First Munsif of Gaibanda passed in favour of the plaintiff.

[51] The lower Appellate Court has found that the two widows of Kali Kristo Lahiri—namely, the defendant Shyama and one Brohmomoyi, who has since died,—adopted two sons at the same time under a written authority conferred upon each of them by Kali Kristo ; and that the son adopted by Brohmomoyi is the plaintiff, and the son adopted by the defendant Shyama is one Norendro, who, however, is not a party to the suit. The lower Appellate Court holds, according to Hindu law, that a simultaneous adoption is bad, and that the plaintiff has, therefore, no right to bring the suit.

* Appeals from Appellate Decree, No. 307 of 1881, and Nos. 687 to 697 of 1881, against the decree of T. D. Beighton, Esq., Officiating Judge of Rungpore, dated the 18th December 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Gopi Mohun Mookerjee, First Munsif of Gaibanda, dated the 6th July 1880.

Against this decision the plaintiff appeals. As the point is one of great and general importance, we should have been glad to avoid deciding such a question in the present suit, which is only what is called a rent-suit. But as the ryot-defendant has never attorned to, or paid rent to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff has not proved that the relation of landlord and tenant ever subsisted between himself and the ryot, the plaintiff can only recover his share of the rent on proving his title, and this depends on the validity of the simultaneous adoption.

This question has been very ably and exhaustively argued by Mr. Branson for the Appellant and Mr. Evans for the Respondents. They placed before us, and discussed at great length, all the ancient and modern authorities on the subject, and we have come to the conclusion that a simultaneous adoption is not valid according to Hindu law.

PHEAR, J., in the case of Sidessury Dossee v. Doorja Churn Sett (2 I. J., N.S., 22), decided on the 14th of July 1865, came to the same conclusion. His reasons for the decisions are to be found in an elaborate judgment which that learned Judge gave in Monemthounath Dey v. Ononthnauth Dey (2 I. J., N.S. 24), in the previous February. The latter case was appealed to a Bench consisting of PEACOCK, C.J., TREVOR, J., and SUMBUNATH PUNDIT, J., who reversed, indeed, the judgment of PHEAR, J., but on another and a distinct ground. As regards the validity of simultaneous adoption, PEACOCK, C.J., says:—"It is not necessary to go to the extent to which the learned Judge below went, or to say [32] that a simultaneous adoption must be bad." In another case—S. M. Money Dassee v. S. M. Prosonomoye Dassee (2 I. J., N. S., 18), decided on the 20th of September 1866, the same question again arose before PEACOCK, C. J., and NORMAN, J., but was again not decided, the Court there saying:—"It is not necessary to say whether, if the widow had adopted two sons at the same time they would have been regularly adopted sons according to Hindu law and so capable of being heirs of the testator." The judgment of PHEAR, J., therefore, on this point, has never been overruled, although it has not been affirmed by an Appeal Court.

PHEAR, J., discusses the conflicting authorities with the greatest fulness and minuteness. Having read and considered that judgment, we think that the learned Judge has deduced the right rule from the authorities.

He lays down the rule in these words:—"The power to adopt rests solely upon the religious necessities, so to speak, of the father, and is limited by them. It does not extend to enabling him to do more than is, at the time of exercising it, reasonably sufficient to satisfy the purpose for which the law exists. Consequently, supposing the occasion for exercising the power to have arisen, one son and one alone can be adopted." The words 'reasonably sufficient' might be taken to mean what a reasonable man might think sufficient to ensure his happiness in a future world, but the context shows that the learned Judge really meant that the exercise of the power of adoption must be limited by the necessity of the case.

Applying that rule, it follows that, as the adoption of one son alone is actually necessary, and is in itself wholly sufficient to satisfy the purpose of the law, the adoption of two is not within the scope of the power; and that where such a thing is attempted, neither of the children is the legally adopted son of the deceased, although the ceremonies of adoption may have been performed as regards each and also at the same time.

Such being our opinion, the result will be that the adoption of the plaintiff is invalid. Our decision on this point will not affect the other son, who is alleged to have been adopted with [53] the plaintiff at the same time, inasmuch as he is not a party to the suit, unless, indeed, his adoptive mother Shyama, who is a party, can be held to represent him in the present suit, upon which question we pass no opinion.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

This decision will govern Special Appeals Nos. 687 to 697, both inclusive.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[SIMULTANEOUS ADOPTIONS:-

In (1885) 12 Cal. 406 : 12 I.A. 198, this case was affirmed by the Privy Council on both the grounds that such adoptions were invalid and that the instrument of authority did not confer such a power. In (1892) 19 Cal. 513 : 19 I. A. 108, it was held that the instrument of authority in that case contemplated only such an adoption but that such an adoption was illegal as regards both the boys adopted. The further question there was whether the adopters were not bound by an ikrar made at the time of adoption, in favour of the adopted boys and whether such adopted boys might not take as personae Designate under the will. Both these were answered with reference to the facts of the case.]

CRIMINAL REFERENCE.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

In the Matter of Dhunum Kazee and another.

Dhunum Kazee and another.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 263—Discretion of Court Verdict of Jury—Forgery and abetment—Acquittal by Jury—Disagreement by Judge—Principles guiding the Court's discretion under s. 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872) : "Fraudulently and dishonestly uttering"— Intention—Inference of fraud.

Notwithstanding the large discretionary powers vested in the High Court under s. 263 of Act X of 1872, the Court will adhere generally to the principle of the Courts in England, viz., that the Court will not set aside the verdict of a jury unless it be perverse and potentially wrong, or may have been induced by the error of the Judge, and when the Court is asked to do so on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence, the question is, not whether the learned Judge who tried the case was or was not dissatisfied with the verdict, or whether he would have come to the same conclusion as to the jury, but whether the verdict was such as reasonable men ought to have come to.

Where a person, in the course of an action brought against him to gain possession of a property, uses a forged document for the purpose of supporting his title, though there may be no necessity for the use of it, such a user is clearly fraudulent.

* Criminal Reference, No. 9 of 1882 and Letter No. 599, from the order made by T. D. Beightón, Esq., Officiating Sessions Judge of Burdwan, dated the 7th June 1882.

A general intention to defraud, without the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another, would, if proved, be sufficient to support a conviction : and such an intention is a necessary inference [54] which the Jury should be directed to draw, if they are satisfied that the accused has uttered a forged document as a true one, meaning it to be taken as such, and knowing it to be forged.

Under s. 263 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Court is authorized to ask the Jury such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict really is ; but where the verdict although perhaps erroneous, is not ambiguous, it is the duty of the Judge to record it without further question.

ONE Dhumum Kazee was charged under s. 471 of the Penal Code with having, on or about the 1st of February 1879, fraudulently and dishonestly used in the Munsif's Court a certain hiba, knowing, or having reason to believe, the same to be a forged document ; and one Khorshed Kazee was charged, under ss. 471-109 of the Penal Code, with abetting the fraudulent and dishonest use of the forged document. The document purported to be executed in favour of the accused by their father, and purported to have been registered on the 14th April 1851.

The evidence clearly showed that the certificate of registration was a forgery. The accused, therefore, contended that the charge related exclusively to the forgery of the executant's name, and not to the forgery of the certificate of registration. The jury unanimously acquitted the accused, but the Judge disagreeing with the verdict of acquittal on the sole ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, submitted the case to the High Court under s. 263 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

It appeared from the Judge's report sent to the High Court that, after the verdict was given, he asked the jury to give their reasons for the verdict, and that they replied " that there was no proof as to who forged the registration certificates, i.e., whether they were forged by the father of the accused or the accused themselves : and no proof to show when the certificate of registration was forged, i.e., whether before or after the hiba was filed in the Munsif's Court : and no proof that the accused knew that the certificate was forged : and that they, therefore, found that the registration certificate was a forgery, but not the executant's signature on the hiba."

Baboo Umbica Churn Bose for the Appellants.

Baboo Ram Churn Mitter for the Crown.

[55] The Judgment of the Court (MACLEAN and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by Norris, J.—In this case the accused Dhumum Kazee was charged under s. 471 of the Penal Code with having, on or about the 1st of February 1879, at the Jehanabad Munsif's Court, fraudulently and dishonestly used as genuine a certain document, dated the 12th Falgun 1260, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be a forged document : and the accused Khorshed Kazee was charged under ss. 471-109 of the Penal Code with abetting the fraudulent and dishonest use of the forged document knowing or having reason to believe that the same was forged. The jury unanimously acquitted the accused. The Officiating Sessions Judge of Burdwan, before whom the accused were tried, disagreeing with the verdict of acquittal, has submitted the case to the High Court under the provisions of s. 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In arriving at a conclusion as to what principles should guide me in the exercise of the discretion given me by s. 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code, I am not left without authority. In The Empress v. Mukhtun Kumar (I C.

L. R., 275 ; at p. 281), GARTH, C.J., says : " With regard to the first of these questions" (i.e., how far the High Court is justified in a case referred under s. 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code in convicting the accused contrary to the express and unexplained finding of a jury) " it appears to me that, by that section, the Legislature intended to vest in the High Court a very large discretion, and that it would be improper for us, if not impossible, to lay down any fixed rule by which that discretion should be controlled ; the verdict of a jury, who are the legally constituted judges of facts, and have the advantage of seeing the case tried and of hearing the witnesses examined," (and, what is more important, cross-examined) " ought always in my opinion to command its proper weight ; and the more unanimous their verdict may be, and the less likely to have been influenced by prejudice or error, the more entitled it should be to our respect and consideration ; but there may be many occasions where, as it seems to me, little or no weight [36] should be attached to their verdict ; as for instance where, out of a jury of five, three are of one way of thinking and two of another, and the presiding Judge agrees with the minority, or where it is manifest from the conduct of the jury or otherwise that their minds have been influenced by a prejudice which had prevented them from forming a correct judgment. In the exercise, therefore, of my own discretion in cases coming before us under this section, I should not go so far as to hold with MACPHERSON and MORRIS, JJ. - Queen v. Wazir Mundul (25 W. R., Cr. Rul., 25)—" that the verdict of a jury should not be interfered with except where there is a gross and unmistakable miscarriage of justice ;" nor on the other hand, should I consider myself justified in deciding any case according to my own views of the evidence without giving the verdict of the jury its proper weight. Each case, in my view of the section, should depend upon its own circumstances."

In Reg. v. Khanderao Bajirao (I. L. R., 1 Bom., 10), WEST, J., says : " The section we have quoted (i.e., s. 263, Criminal Procedure Code) lays down that the Court may acquit or convict without reference to the charges made against the accused ; in other words, the functions both of the Judge and jury are cast upon the Court, and this differentiates our position very widely from that of the Courts in England. Notwithstanding this difference, however, and the more onerous duties devolving in consequence on the High Courts in India, we still desire to be guided as far as may be by the analogies of the English law. It is a well recognized principle that the Courts in England will not set aside the verdict of a jury unless it be perverse and potently wrong, or may have been induced by an error of the Judge. We adhere generally to this principle notwithstanding our large discretionary powers : first, on the constitutional ground of taking as little as possible out of the hands to which it has been primarily assigned by the Legislature ; and secondly, because any undue interference may tend to diminish the sense of responsibility which it is desirable that a jury should cherish. We think, however, that, by our rectifying a jury's verdict in [37] a proper case, we shall increase not diminish, that sense of responsibility."

The principles which guide the English Courts in deciding whether a new trial should be granted upon the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence were discussed in the recent case of Solomon v. Bitton (L. R., 8 Q. B. D., 176), where the Court of Appeal said : " The rule on which a new trial should be granted on the ground that the verdict was unsatisfactory as being against the weight of evidence ought not to depend on the question whether the learned Judge who tried the action was or was not dissatisfied with the verdict, or whether he would have come to the same conclusion as the jury, but whether the verdict was such as reasonable men ought to have come to."

The Judge, in his report referring the case to us, makes no complaint of the conduct of the jury on the ground of prejudice: he complains only that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and he seeks to substantiate that complaint by calling attention to the answers given by the jury to certain questions put to them by him after they had returned their verdict. I shall presently refer to these answers.

Endeavouring to guide myself by the light of the principles laid down in the decision I have quoted, I have to ask myself,—Is this verdict, which is sought to be set aside, such as reasonable men ought to have come to? In order to answer this question it is necessary to consider what the prosecution were bound to prove against the accused in order to justify a conviction. It was incumbent upon the prosecution to prove (i) that the document alleged to have been used by the accused was in fact a forged document: (ii) that it was used by the accused: (iii) that, at the time it was used by the accused, they knew or had reason to believe that it was a forgery: (iv) that, at the time they used it, knowing or having reason to believe that it was a forgery, they did so fraudulently or dishonestly. If any one of these points was left in doubt, the jury were bound to acquit. A verdict of acquittal would be such as reasonable men ought to have come to.

[58] The document, which was alleged to have been a forgery, was a hiba-bil-owaz, or one of gift, purporting to have been executed in favour of the accused by their father Sadderuddin Kazee, and to have been registered by one Golam Russool, Kazee of Jehanabad, on the 11th April 1851. Saddruddin Kazee died some ten or twelve years since, leaving the two accused, a daughter and a widow, the mother of his three children, him surviving. If the hiba was genuine, the widow and daughter were disinherited: if it was a forgery, the daughter became entitled to one-fifth of seven eighths of her father's property upon his death. The daughter, after her father's death, married one Aminuddin Kazee. The prosecution alleged that both the father's execution of, and the Kazee's certificate of registration endorsed on, the hiba-bil-owaz were forgeries: but they did not charge either of the prisoners with the actual forgery. Nothing worthy of the name of evidence was forthcoming at the trial to prove that the father's signature was a forgery, and practically that point was abandoned by the prosecution. On the other hand there was an overwhelming body of evidence, proving beyond all doubt that Golam Russool's certificate of registration was a forgery, and I am abundantly satisfied that it was a forgery. Thus the first point necessary for the prosecution to establish was established. The use of the hiba by the accused was also proved by their own admissions. Point the second has thus been established.

In order to establish the third point, which for brevity I will call a guilty knowledge on the part of the prisoners, the prosecution sought to prove that, after Sadderuddin's death, his widow lived in commensality with the accused; that the daughter enjoyed the property equally with them; that Aminuddin had tried to sell his wife's share to the accused; that not only did they not mention the hiba, but carried on negotiations for the purchase, which only fell through by reason of the accused not offering a sufficient sum; that the accused, after the negotiations with Aminuddin had fallen through, knowing that he was treating for a sale to one Sheikh Budruddin, allowed the treaty to continue and said nothing about the hiba: that, after the sale to Budruddin had taken place, when he went to [59] take possession, Dhunum Kazee told him that his (Dhunum's) brother was in Calcutta and would not return for fifteen days, when possession should be given : that, after the expiration of fifteen days, Dhunum told him that he would not give up possession : that when Budruddin sued the accused and their sister in the Munsif's Court, the accused, instead of producing the hiba, at once asked for fifteen days' time to put in their written statement, and, at the expiration of that period, asked for another adjournment, and subsequently for a third, and that it was not until after the third adjournment that the hiba was filed in the Munsif's Court. If these facts, or the more important of them, had been proved, I should have been of opinion that the jury, as reasonable men, ought to have come to the conclusion that a guilty knowledge on the part of the accused was established. But I am by no means satisfied that these facts, or the more important of them, were proved. They rested upon the testimony of Budruddin and Aminuddin. The former admitted that he had been imprisoned for three months for being in possession of stolen property : that he was on bad terms with the accused before his purchase from Aminuddin : that he had charged Khorshed with stealing a goat, which charge was dismissed : that since then he had had twenty or twenty-five civil suits with them. he also stated that Aminuddin was on bad terms with the accused. It is true that he says he still eats at the houses of the accused, but as I understand it is only in cases of the most bitter hatred that one Mahomedan will refuse to eat salt with another. Upon these admissions I am not satisfied with the truth of this witness's evidence. Aminuddin admits that he has had a suit with the accused, and that he is on bad terms with them, and that Budruddin used to assist him in his litigation with the accused : and though he says that three or four persons were present when he tried to sell the property to the accused, he cannot remember their names. I am not satisfied as to the truth of this witness's evidence. I am of opinion that the prosecution failed to prove a guilty knowledge on the part of the accused ; and if I can see my way to this conclusion, how much more probable is it that the jury who had a full opportunity of judging of the credibility of the witnesses [60] by observing their demeanour in the witness box, and how they went through their cross-examination, may have come to the same conclusion. It may, no doubt, be said, that the jury have not expressed any opinion upon the evidence of Budruddin and Aminuddin. It is sufficient to say in reply that their opinion was not asked, and as they found a general verdict of not guilty, I have a right to assume that this estimate of the evidence corresponded with the one I have formed.

This finding disposes of the case. I think it right, however, to deal with an argument that was advanced on behalf of the accused at the hearing before us. It was urged thus : "The accused had a good defence to Budruddin's action without having recourse to the hiba. That being so, even assuming that the hiba was forged and used by the accused with a guilty knowledge, yet, as there was no legal necessity for their using it, they cannot be said to have used it fraudulently or dishonestly." I am clearly of opinion that the use of the hiba under such circumstances was 'fraudulent.' The word 'fraudulently' is defined by s. 25 of the Penal Code thus : "A person is said to do a thing fraudulently if he does that thing with intent to defraud, but not otherwise." It is to be observed that this definition of 'fraudulently' differs entirely from that of 'dishonestly' as given in s. 24— "to do a thing dishonestly there must be the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another"; and 'wrongful' gain is defined to be "gain by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining is not legally entitled"; and 'wrongful loss,' as "the loss by unlawful means of property to which the person losing it is legally entitled." A general intention to defraud without the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another, would, if proved, be sufficient to support a conviction. MAULE, J., says in Reg. v. Nash (2 Dearsly's C. C. R., at p. 500). "There may be an intent to defraud without the power or the opportunity to defraud," and at p. 503: "It is not necessary that any person should be in a situation to be defrauded." I am further of opinion that, in such a case as was put in argument before us, [61] the intent to defraud the party to whom the document was uttered (in this case Budruddin) was a necessary inference which the jury ought to have been directed to draw: Reg. v. Hill (8 C. and P., 274), and Reg. v. Cooke (8 C. and P., 582). Let a person's title to property be ever so good, yet if, in the course of an action brought against him to gain possession of the property, he uses by way of supporting his title, though there may be no necessity for the use of it, a forged document, such as this hiba, I am clearly of opinion that he uses it fraudulently.

It now only remains for me to notice the answers of the jury to certain questions put to them by the Judge after they had delivered their verdict. In reply to questions from the Court the jury stated as the reasons for their verdict: "There is no proof to show when the registration certificate was forged, i.e., whether before or after the document A (the hiba) was filed in the Munsif's Court. There is also no proof as to who forged the registration certificate, i.e., whether forged by the father of the accused or by the accused themselves; and in the former case that the accused knew they were forged. They find that the registration certificate is a forgery, but not the executant's signature on the document."

It was urged by the learned pleader who appeared for the Crown that these answers showed that the jury had come to very foolish conclusions upon the evidence, and that, in receiving their verdict, he ought to proceed upon the assumption that these foolish conclusions and these alone had induced them to return a verdict of acquittal. It may be that the conclusions are foolish, but I refuse to consider these answers at all, because I am of opinion that the Judge had no right to put the questions which called forth the answers. The Court is authorized by s. 263 to ask the jury such questions as are necessary to ascertain what their verdict is. In this case the jury had returned a plain, simple verdict of 'not guilty', it may have been erroneous, but it certainly was not ambiguous, and the duty of the Judge was to receive it and record it without asking any questions about it.

[62] For the reasons given above I am of opinion that the verdict of acquittal should stand.

Verdict upheld.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 28th April, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Jugmohun Tewari and others..... Defendants

versus

Finch.....Plaintiff.

*Road Cess Act (Beng. Act X of 1871), ss. 5, 7, Part II, Schedule A, part ii—

Section 5 of the Road Cess Act requires the holders of any estate or tenure, of which the annual rent shall exceed one hundred rupees, to lodge returns of all lands comprised in an estate or tenure; bhowli lands are, therefore, to be included in such returns.

Where such a return has not been made, the holder of the estate or tenure is precluded from suing for or recovering any rent due therefor.

THE plaintiff was the ticcadar of a certain mouza, and stated that the defendants hold under him in ticca kasht 7 bigas 8 cottas 5 dhurs of this mouza at an annual rent of Rs. 15-10-6-1-8, and also 18 bigas 5 biswas of bhowli and sair land, the rent of which was paid in produce: and that the defendants not having paid the rent for these lands for the year 1283 (1876), he brought this present suit to recover the rent due. The defendants denied that they held any bhowli lands, but alleged they were the holders of an ancestral ticca tenure, in which the sair lands were included, the rent of which was Rs. 22-1-3, and in proof of this produced the receipt for rent for former years.

The Munsif found that the defendants were the holders of the bhowli lands mentioned, and gave the plaintiff a decree for the greater part of the amount claimed by him. The defendants appealed to the District Judge, contending that the plaintiff [63] had failed to prove his allegations as to area, rates, and bhowli tenure. The District Judge found that the documentary evidence produced by the plaintiff sufficiently established the area, jumma, and rates of rent of the lands held by all the defendants, and that the receipts produced by the defendants did not show the quantity of land and the annual jumma thereof. He also held that no return under the Road Cess Act of 1871 was required to be made in respect of bhowli lands, there being no column set apart for such tenures in the printed forms; and he, therefore, dismissed the appeal.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Twidale and Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellants contended that s. 7 of Beng. Act X of 1871 debarred the plaintiff from recovering any rent in respect of the alleged bhowli tenure, inasmuch as the tenure was not included in the return lodged in pursuance of the Act: and that the Judge was wrong in holding that the receipt produced did not show the annual jumma

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 89 of 1881, against the decree of H. W. Gordon, Esq., Officiating Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 17th September 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Ramyad Lall, Munsif of Tezpur, dated the 10th March 1879.

Baboo Bhowany Churn Dutt for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J. --The plaintiff, who is the ticcadar of Mouza Malpore, brought this suit for arrears of rent for the year 1283. He alleged that the defendants held in that year 7 bigas 8 cottas 5 dhurs of land at a nukdi rent of Rs. 16-10½; 7 cottas 10 dhurs of land on which there were bamboo clumps, and the value of the landlord's share of the bamboos cut in the year was Rs. 51; and 18 bigas 5 cottas of bhowli lands, the value of the landlord's share of the putnee was Rs. 210 and odd. The plaintiff gave a deduction of Rs. 24 and odd annas as the amount paid by the defendants in that year.

The defendants denied holding any bhowli land, and alleged that they held a maurasi tenure in the village, the rent of which was Rs. 22-1-3, and that in this tenure the bamboo clumps mentioned in the plaint were included.

[64] The Munsif gave a decree in accordance with the allegations of the plaintiff, although he made some modification in the amount claimed. This decree has been confirmed by the District Judge. The defendants have preferred this appeal.

The defendants, in order to prove that their annual rent was Rs. 22-1-3, produced receipts for the previous years. The District Judge disposes of these receipts with the remark that they do not contain the quantity of land and the annual jumma of the defendants.

It has been contended before us that the District Judge is mistaken in thinking that the receipts do not show the annual jumma. We find that the contention is valid, because if they are genuine, they do show the annual jumma. But there was a question about their genuineness in the lower Courts, and the lower Appellate Court has expressed no opinion upon this point. But in the view which we take of the next objection urged before us, it becomes immaterial to inquire into the question of the genuineness of the receipts.

The next objection is, that the lower Courts are in error in awarding a decree for the rent of the bhowli lands, because, in the return which was made by the plaintiff to the Collector under the Road Cess Act (Beng. Act X of 1871), these lands were not included. It has been contended before us that the plaintiff is, upon this ground, precluded by s. 7 of the Road Cess Act of 1871 from recovering any rent on account of the alleged bhowli lands. The District Judge upon this point says, that it is generally understood that it is not necessary to enter the bhowli lands in the return, because there is no column in the form prescribed under Act X of 1871, in which such lands are to be entered.

We are of opinion that the opinion of the District Judge upon this point is contrary to the provisions of Beng. Act X of 1871. The form referred to by him is prescribed by s. 5 of the Act, which requires that the return should be made "of all lands comprised in an estate or tenure. The plaintiff was bound to enter in the column headed 'annual rent' the rent of all bhowli lands. The District Judge says that it was generally understood that the rents of the bhowli lands were [65] not required to be entered in the returns under Act X of 1871. But we find a clear direction for this insertion in the following extract from the rules framed by the Board of Revenue for the preparation of returns under Beng. Act X of 1871, Part II, Sched. A, part ii: "With reference to the manner in which uttbandee, bhowli, spunja, and bhag holdings, where rents are paid partly in money and partly in kind, or wholly in kind, should be entered in the return, it will be better for the zamindar to enter the cash value on an average of the receipts of the past two years, or if there have been no such receipts during that period, then at an approximate estimate of what he expects his portion of the crop to be worth to him at market rates, together with cash paid, if any, as rent."

We are of opinion that the plaintiff is precluded by s. 7 of Beng. Act X of 1871 from recovering any rent for the alleged bhowli lands. That being so, it is unnecessary to enquire whether the receipts filed by the defendants are genuine, because the plaintiff is only entitled to recover the nukdi rent claimed by him, which is less than what is admitted by the defendants. The plaintiff admits the receipt of Rs. 24 and odd annas in the year 1283, and as this is more than the nukdi rent claimed or admitted, the suit must be dismissed. We reverse the decrees of the lower Courts, and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs.

Appeal allowed.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), which was delivered by Field, J.—The question in this case is whether, when a Court, upon an application for execution, has decided that the execution is barred by limitation, and that order has become final in consequence of no appeal having been preferred therefrom, such order will, upon a subsequent application made for execution of the same decree, operate as a bar to execution. The facts of the present case are, that, on the 5th of March 1881, the Subordinate Judge made the following order: "It appears that the case is barred by limitation. The decree was passed on the 27th of July 1871, and this petition of execution states that an application for execution was made in 1878. Now it is clear that that application must have been made more than three years after the decree was passed. It is not shown that any step was taken to enforce the decree in the interval so as to save it from being barred by limitation. Case dismissed with costs." A review of this order was applied for on the 7th April 1881; and, on the 7th May 1881, the following order was passed:—"This is an application for review of an order disallowing an application for execution. The order disallowing sets out the grounds of refusal. This application does not set out any ground, save a vague and bold statement in explanation of laches all through from the representation of an incorrect application down to the disposal of it. I do not consider the creditor entitled to review of the order, and no case has been made for it. I disallow the application with costs." On the same date on which the review was applied for,—that is, the 7th of April 1881,—a fresh application for execution was presented, and the question which we have now to decide is whether this application of the 7th of April 1881 is barred by the order of the 5th of March 1881, which decided that the execution was barred by limitation, and against which no appeal was preferred. Both the lower Courts have decided this ques-[67]tion in the negative. They have proceeded upon the general ground that the principle of res judicata is not applicable to execution-proceedings. The question, whether the principle of res judicata is applicable to proceedings after decree, was discussed in the cases of Hurrooondary Dassee v. Jugobundhoo Dutt (I.L.R., 6 Cal., 203), Rup Kumar v. Ram Kripal Shukul (I.L.R. 3 All., 141), and Delhi and London Bank v. Orchard (L. R., 4 I. A., 127; s.c., I. L. R., 3 Cal., 47). We do not, on the present occasion, propose to go into this broad, general, and probably difficult question, whether the principle of res judicata as enunciated in s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies in all its generality to proceedings after decree. We limit our decision to the exact question which is raised in the present case, and that is, whether the Court, having once decided that the execution is barred by limitation, that decision is a bar to further execution. We think that it is a bar. In the case of Mungul Pershad Dicht v. Grita Kant Lahari (I. L. R., 8 Cal. 51; s.c., L. R., 8 I. A., 123), a seventh application for execution was filed on the 22nd of September 1877, and the High Court held that this application for execution was barred, because the decree was barred when a previous application for execution was made on the 5th of September 1874. The Judges said: "A decree once dead, no proceeding by means of an application out of time could revive it." Their Lordships of the Privy Council reversed this decision, and on this ground, that, on the 8th of October 1874, an order for attachment was made by the Subordinate Judge. The Privy Council said:—"That order was made by a Court having competent jurisdiction to try and determine whether the decree was barred by limitation. No appeal was preferred against it; it was acted upon, and the property sought to be sold under it was attached, and remained under attachment until the application for the sale now under consideration was made"; and further down, "the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction, upon the petition of the 8th of October 1874, to determine whether the decree was barred on the 8th of October 1871, and he made an order that an attachment should issue. Ho, whether right or wrong, must be considered [68] to have determined that it was not barred. A Judge, in a suit upon a cause of action, is bound to dismiss the suit, or to decree for the defendant if it appears that the cause of action is barred by limitation. But if, instead of dismissing the suit, he decrees for the plaintiff, his decree is valid, unless reversed upon appeal: and the defendant cannot, upon an application to execute the decree, set up as an answer that the cause of action was barred by limitation." Now the present case is the converse of that case. If, in the present case the Subordinate Judge had decided, on the 5th of March 1881, that the decree was not barred by limitation, the judgment-debtor could not, upon the application of the 7th of April 1881, be heard to say that the decree was barred by limitation: and by the same course of reasoning, inasmuch as the Subordinate Judge decided on the 5th of March 1881 that the decree was then barred by limitation, and as that order has become final, the decree-holder, cannot now, upon the application of the 7th of April 1881, be heard to say that it is not barred by limitation. Under these circumstances we must reverse the decree of the Courts below, and direct that the application for execution be dismissed.

The appellants will be entitled to their costs in both the Courts below.

Appeal allowed.

versus

Kishari.....Plaintiff.

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 17 — Kabuliats Act XVI of 1864, s. 13.

Neither s. 17 of Act III of 1877, nor the similar sections of the preceding Acts, have the effect of rendering a document, which was not compulsorily registrable under Act XVI of 1864, inadmissible in evidence, under the succeeding Acts, without registration.

Baboo Ankil Chunder Sen for the Appellants.

Baboo Doorqa Mohun Doss for the Respondent.

[69] THE questions raised in this appeal are set out sufficiently for the purposes of this report in the Judgment of the Court (MACLEAN and MACPHERSON, JJ.), which was delivered by

Maclean, J.— Two points have been urged in this appeal: the first is, that the kabuliats, which appears to have been executed in the month of May 1865, should not have been admitted in evidence (in a suit instituted in June 1881), as it was unregistered. The other point is, that rent has never been realized by the landlord under that kabuliats.

The contention on the first point is based on the language of s. 17 of Act III of 1877, which is to the effect that all documents mentioned therein shall be registered if they have been executed after the date on which Act XVI of 1864 and the other Registration Acts have come into force; and the effect which it is sought to give to that section is, that this lease of May 1865, having been executed after the date on which Act XVI of 1864 came into force, requires, under the Act of 1877, to be registered.

But it is beyond doubt that the document in question did not require registration when it was executed, for it was not until the Act of 1866 was passed that kabuliats or counterparts of leases were made compulsorily registrable.

The 17th section of the Act of 1866 contained language almost identical with the language of the 17th section of the present Act, so far as the point we are now considering is concerned. But we believe that it has never been held, that that section, or the similar section in any of the succeeding Acts, had the effect of rendering a document, which was not compulsorily registrable under the Act of 1864, inadmissible in evidence without registration under the succeeding Act.

We have been referred to the case of Amjed Ali v. Ala Buksh (9 W. R., 537), in which the document under discussion was a kabuliat executed while the Act of 1864 was in force. The suit was brought in 1867, while the Act of 1866 was in force, and we cannot think that if the contention now raised by the learned vakil for the appellants had been considered tenable, [70] it would have been overlooked either by the learned vakils who conducted that case, or by the learned Judges who decided it.

Our own view is, that this section in the succeeding Acts from 1866 to the present date had not the effect of altering the character of a kabuliat executed before 1866 as admissible in evidence without registration.

The other point, -namely, that no rent has ever been asked for or paid under the kabuliat in this case, is one which we think is of no force. The kabuliat is a distinct engagement to pay rent. The defendants contended in the Court below that they held on some tenure called a mokurari tenure. That was found against them, and the Subordinate Judge, sitting in appeal, has found, on the evidence of one of the defendants, that the appellant's predecessor and uncle actually paid rent by deductions from his salary. The contention that the kabuliat provided for payment in paddy, and that the deduction from salary must have been a deduction in cash, does not alter the fact that rent was paid. As to the argument that no rent was realized, that was a matter entirely in the option of the landlord for the time being.

The Appeal must, therefore, fail. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu law—Succession of adopted son of one daughter and natural son of another—Grandfather's estate.

The adopted son of one daughter shares equally with the natural son of another daughter in the inheritance left by his maternal grandfather.

Uma Sunker Motra v. Kali Komul Mozoomdar (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 256) followed.

IN this case the plaintiff alleged that his maternal grandfather, Gunga Prosad Dutt, was the owner of a four-anna [71] share in certain lakhiraj lands, and that he died leaving two daughters, Bishnupria and Aradhoni, and two grandsons, the plaintiff and his brother, the sons of Bishnupria, and leaving also a widow Bishnupria (his second wife), and by her two daughters, Ishuri Dasi and Bhubuneshuri Dasi, that, on Gunga Prosad's death, the widow took possession of his property, during which Bishnupria and Aradhoni died, the widow shortly after died, leaving her married daughter Ishuri Dasi and her widowed daughter Bhubuneshuri, her surviving, as well as the plaintiff and his brother: that Ishuri Dasi then took possession to the exclusion of the widowed daughter, but died without issue in 1279, the brother of the plaintiff, however, predeceasing her, and that he, the plaintiff, thereupon put forward his claim as next heir, but was opposed by the defendant No. 1, who alleged himself to be the adopted son of Ishuri Dasi, and he therefore brought this present suit on the 6th April 1878, to recover possession of the four-anna share formerly belonging to Gunga Prosad.

The defendant No. 1 contended that Gunga Prosad died leaving a son named Kashi Nath as his heir, and that, on his death, Bishnupria (Gunga Prosad's widow) took possession as the successor to Kashi Nath, and that Bishnupria died leaving her surviving her daughters Ishuri Dasi and Bhubuneshuri, Bhubuneshuri, not however being a widow at the date of the death of her mother Bishnupria, and that the husband of Ishuri Dasi and Ishuri duly adopted him as their son, and that his adopted father and himself successively had held adverse possession to the property for more than twelve years.

The Subordinate Judge found that the defendant was the duly adopted son of Ishuri Dasi, but that Gunga Prosad had no son named Kashi Nath; that Bhubuneshuri was a widow at the time of the death of her mother Bishnupria. He also found that Bishnupria inherited the property of her husband Gunga Prosad, and that as the plaintiff's mother predeceased the widow Bishnupria, Ishuri the married daughter was the only person who succeeded to Gunga Prosad's property after the death of Bishnupria, and as Ishuri died in 1279, the plaintiff's cause of action was within time, and holding that the plaintiff being the [72] grandson of Gunga Prosad by his daughter, his claim to succeed to the property was preferable to the claims of the defendant No. 1, the adopted son of a daughter of Gunga Prosad, he decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff.

The defendant appealed to the District Judge, who held, that the defendant No. 1, the adopted son, was entitled to share equally with the plaintiff in the properties of Gunga Prosad.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and BONE, J.), was delivered by Garth, C.J.—In this case we think it right to follow what we understand to be the rule laid down by the Full Bench in the case of Uma Sunker Maitro v. Kali Komul Mozumdar (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 256).

We find no special text or rule laid down in the books applicable to this case; and we, therefore, hold that the adopted son of a daughter shares equally with a natural son the inheritance left by his maternal grandfather. The lower Court's view is, therefore, correct.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Dwarkanath.....Plaintiff.

versus

Baburam Laskar.....Defendant.

Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Contract to pay for excess land after measurement—Notice—Rent Act (Beng. Act VIII of 1869), s. 14.

When a tenant contracts to pay rent at a certain rate for any such land as upon measurement may be found to be in excess of the estimated area, it is not necessary to serve him with notice under s. 14 of the Rent Act before instituting a suit for the rent of any additional land, nor is it necessary that he should be present at the measurement.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2460 of 1880, against the decree of W. H. Page, Esq., Officiating Additional Judge of the 24-Parganas, dated the 20th September 1880, reversing the decree of Moulvi Abdul Hamid, Officiating Munsif of Baraipore, dated the 2nd March 1880.

[73] IN a suit for arrears of rent, road cess, and public work cess, it appeared that the defendant held his land on a maurasi and mokurari tenure, and that, in the kabuliati, the defendant agreed that, in case the lands mentioned therein were surveyed, and the quantity of such lands found increased, he would pay rent for the lands so found to have increased. The land had been measured and found to contain twenty-four bighas ten cottas. The defendant contended that he only held fourteen bighas, and that the land was not measured in his presence. The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree for the whole amount claimed. The District Judge considered, on the authority of Thekmee Beldar v. Ram Kishen Lall (15 W. R., 71), that the suit was in substance a suit for rent at an enhanced rate; that notice was necessary; and accordingly reversed the Munsif's decision. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty and Baboo Pran Nath Pundit for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

Prinsep, J.—The District Judge has dismissed this suit, on the ground that this was a suit for enhancement, and no notice required by s. 14 of the Rent Law had been served. It appears to us that the terms of the contract between the parties, under which the tenancy of the defendant was created, dispenses with the necessity for such notice. The case is precisely similar to that decided by a Division Bench of this Court, consisting of MORRIS, J., and myself, in Appeal No. 759 of 1878. In that judgment we expressed ourselves to the following effect :—“ There is no provision as to the necessity of previous notice or even to the presence of the tenant at the time of measurement. The tenant unreservedly stipulates to pay at a certain rate per kani for any such land as upon measurement may be found to be in excess of the estimated area. [74] Under the contract the time of discovery of the excess land by means of measurement is the moment from which he engages to pay additional rent for such excess land. The view thus taken that the special terms of the ryot's kabuliati dispenses with the necessity of a notice in terms of the Rent Law is in accordance with the judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in Ram Narain Lall v. Gnanbeer Singh (19 W. R., 108).” In accordance with the precedent of that decision, we set aside the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the first Court. The plaintiff will receive the costs of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court.

Field, J.—I concur. I think that this case is not similar to the case of Thekmee Beldar v. Ram Kishen Lall (15 W. R., 71), upon which the District Judge relies. In that case there was no express agreement to pay additional rent for additional land. Nor is this case precisely similar to the Full Bench case of Nistarini Dasi v. Bonomali Chatterji (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 911). It is similar to Special Appeal, No. 759 of 1878, referred to by PRINSEP, J. In that case the patta or kabuliati was for a term of ten years, in the present case it is a maurasi kabuliati. Now, a maurasi lease is, according to the custom of this country, a permanent lease. It appears to me, therefore, that the written engagement in this case does, by necessary implication, specify the period of such engagement, and that the provisions of s. 15 of the Rent Law requiring a notice do not apply.

Appeal allowed.

[75] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th July, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Jaggamoni Dasi.....Plaintiff

versus

Nilmoni Ghosal and another.....Defendants.

Right of suit - Injunction - Property dedicated to religious purposes - Suit to restrain its use for other purposes.

The plaintiff's ancestor built a temple, a bathing-ghat, a room called 'Gungajatri ghur,' and a ghat close to it, to which persons on the point of death were removed, and certain ceremonies were performed. The defendants used the last-mentioned ghat for the purpose of landing goods.

Held, that if, when the plaintiff's ancestor erected the buildings, he intended to grant to the Hindu community merely a right of easement over the property, and not to transfer the ownership therein to the community, the plaintiff was entitled to maintain a suit to restrain defendants from using the ghat for trading purposes.

Mr. Henderson and Baboo Soroda Churn Mitter for the Appellant.

Baboo Gurudas Banerjee for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), which was delivered by Field, J. - The plaintiff in this case makes the following allegations in her plaint: that her father, the late Gunga Narain Dutt, purchased certain brohmutter land on the bank of the river Hooghly, and during his lifetime built thereon certain mundirs, or temples, dedicated to Ishwar Siva, a bathing-ghat, and a room called gungajatri-ghur, and close thereto another ghat, called an antorjohi-ghat, about six feet in breadth; that, ever since the above ghat was built, sick persons, who have lost all hopes of recovery, have been brought to the aforesaid gungajatri-ghur, and, when on the point of death, have been removed to the said ghat, where the rites of antorjohi have been performed according to practice and the Hindu Shastras; [76] that the plaintiff is her father's executrix and the manager of his property; that the defendants have recently used the ghat for the purpose of landing goods from their boats; that, in consequence of their doing so, the sick persons brought to the river-side have been subjected to annoyance, and the object with which the ghat was built has been frustrated. The plaintiff, therefore, asks the Court to declare that the ghat was intended and dedicated for the purposes already mentioned, and further asks that the defendants be restrained from using such ghat for the purpose of loading and unloading articles of trade.

The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree. There was then an appeal to the District Judge of the 24-Parganas, who was of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain this suit. He says. - "It is quite clear that the plaintiff cannot claim exclusive possession, as the ghat is a public antorjoli-ghat, intended for the celebration of the antorjoli ceremony by dying persons of the Hindu persuasion. The proper course for the plaintiff to adopt is to 'ring to the notice of the Magistrate that the defendants, by carrying on the occupation of landing goods at a public ghat intended only for antorjoli purposes, have interfered with the comfort of those members of the community who are entitled to use the ghat for a particular purpose. The Magistrate then, if he concur in the finding on facts arrived at by the Munsif in his very careful judgment, will be in a position to take action against the defendants under the provisions of s. 521 of the Criminal Procedure Code."

It is now contended before us that the District Judge is in error in holding that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain this suit: and it appears to us, for reasons which we are about to state, that this contention is correct. An application for an injunction must be made by a person who has a sufficient interest in the subject-matter, and the question then arises whether the plaintiff has a sufficient interest in the subject-matter of this suit. There is here no deed of endowment, and no evidence has been taken as to the exact purpose and object of this so-called endowment. The first question which suggests itself is whether the plaintiff's father, in building these temples, this antorjoli room, and this ghat, intended to give to the Hindu [77] community a right of easement over the soil, or intended to transfer the ownership of the buildings as well as the ownership of the soil to such community. It by no means necessarily follows that, because the plaintiff's father erected this ghat and this antorjoli-room, and allowed the Hindu community to use them for the purposes set out in the plaint, he intended to divest himself of the ownership of the soil, &c. In the case of Lade v. Shepherd (2 Str., 1004) the plaintiff had built upon his own property a street which had ever since been used as a highway. The defendant, who had land contiguous thereto and separated therefrom only by a ditch, made a bridge over this ditch, the end of which bridge rested on the Highway. The plaintiff brought an action of trespass against the defendant, and it was insisted for the defendant that, by the plaintiff's making this street, there was a dedication of it to the public, and therefore, however, he might be liable to an indictment for nuisance, yet the plaintiff could not sue him as for a trespass on his private property. It was held that the dedication was to the public, so far as the public had occasion for it, which was only for a right of passage, but that it was never understood to be a transfer of the absolute property in the soil. So in the present case it might be said that there was a dedication to the public, so far as the public had occasion to use this ghat and this room for the purposes set out in the plaint: but that it never was understood to be a transfer of the absolute property in the soil. The case just cited has been referred to as an authority in the more recent case of St. Mary Newington v. Jacobs (L. R., 7 Q. B., 17). In the case now before us there is no suggestion that any sevait was appointed: and this being so, the donor, that is, the plaintiff's father, would, according to Hindu law, be the sevait. If a sevait had been appointed it might be said that the ownership of the soil had been transferred to such sevait, but inasmuch as it does not appear that any sevait was appointed, it may well be reasonable to suppose that the ownership in the soil continued in the plaintiff's father. A case has been referred to—the case of Baroda Prasad Mostafi v. Gora Chand Mostafi (3 B. L. R., A. C., 295; s.c., 12 W. R., 160): that [78] was a suit for obstructing a public road. PEACOCK, C. J., said:—"The plaintiff sues defendant for obstructing a public road, without showing that he has sustained any particular inconvenience in consequence of that obstruction. If he can maintain this suit, any member of the public can do so, and the defendant may be ruined by innumerable actions by persons who have not sustained a farthing of damages. It is said that the plaintiff has a right to sue, because he was one of the persons who dedicated the road to the public; but it is not because he gave the road to the public that he is necessarily entitled to be the guardian of the public and to sue whenever there is any obstruction to the public which causes him no inconvenience beyond that which is sustained by every other member of the public." The learned Chief Justice then proceeded to point out that there was a sufficient remedy provided by s. 308 and the following sections of the then Code of Criminal Procedure, Act XXV of 1861. Similar provisions are now to be found in s. 521 of the present Code of Criminal Procedure. Now we think that it is not possible in this case to say that this ghat and this room were public thoroughfares or public places within the meaning of s. 521. The dedication, if dedication there were, was not for the use of the whole public but for the use of a particular community, a particular portion of that public,—that is, persons professing the Hindu religion, and, in a more restricted way, for such members of that community, as are at the point of death. In this view it appears to us that the case before us is to be distinguished from the case of Baroda Prasad Mostafi v. Gorachand Moostafi (3 B. L. R., A. C., 295; s.c., 12 W. R., 160.), and we may further observe that, in that case, no question was raised as to the ownership of the soil, and no reference was made to the class of cases of which Lade v. Shepherd (2 Str., 1004) may be taken to be an example. In this view it appears to us that the first question which arises in this case is whether the plaintiff's father, when he erected these rooms and this ghat, intended to grant to the Hindu community merely a right of easement over this property, or to transfer the ownership in the ghat and the soil to that community. If it be found that there was no [79] intention in the donor to transfer the property in the soil, there can be no doubt that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the present suit. But we think that even if it be found that there was a dedication, the effect of which was to transfer the ownership in the soil to the Hindu community, the plaintiff, as the representative of the donor, may well be entitled to maintain the present suit, there being apparently no sevait or trustee; and the object of the suit being, not to resume the grant, but to effectuate the intention of the grantor by preserving the property to the uses for which he presumably granted it.

We must, therefore, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case for decision upon the merits, with reference to the observations which we have made in this judgment. The costs of this appeal and of the Courts below will abide the ultimate result.

Case remanded.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sched. II, arts. 49 and 123— Suit for Specific moveable property—Suit for a legacy.

A testator bequeathed certain specific moveable property to A. B applied for and obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 on behalf of the testator's widow, and took possession of the property bequeathed. A appealed, and the case was remanded for retrial. On the 27th of March 1873, the former order was cancelled and a certificate was granted to A. On the 19th of August 1873, B was directed to deliver up the property to C, who had purchased it from A. On the 22nd of March 1878, C instituted a suit to recover the property.

Held, that the suit was barred under art. 49† of the Limitation Act.

Article 123 ‡ of the Limitation Act only applies to cases in which the property sought to be recovered is not only a legacy, but is also sought to be recovered as such from a person who is bound by law to pay such legacy, either because he is the executor of the will or otherwise represents the estate of the testator.

[80] BY his will dated the 29th Cheit 1277 (11th April 1871), one Kasi Chunder Shaha bequeathed all his property, both moveable and immoveable, to one Juggut Chunder Roy. Kasi Chunder Shah died on the 5th Bysack 1278 (17th April 1871), and an inventory of his property was prepared under Act XIX of 1841.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No 1118 of 1880, against the decree of W. F. Meres, Esq., Officiating Judge of Tippera, dated the 5th April 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Kahi Dass Dutt, Second Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 23rd November 1878.

† [Art. 49 :—

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
For other specific moveable property, or for compensation for wrongfully taking or injuring or wrongfully detaining the same.	Three years ...	When the property is wrongfully taken or injured, or when the detainer's possession becomes unlawful.]

for a legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator, or for a distributive share of the property of an intestate.	Twelve years ...	When the legacy or share becomes payable or deliverable.]
---	------------------	---

One Chunder Moni Shaha, the brother of Alladmoni, the widow of Kasi Chunder, applied for a certificate on her behalf under Act XXVII of 1860. Juggut Chunder objected, but an order granting a certificate was made upon security being furnished. Two persons, named Mothur Mohun Poddar and Rai Chand Poddar, became sureties under a bond, dated the 17th Srabun 1278 (1st August 1871), by which they pledged certain immoveable property. Chunder Moni then obtained possession of all Kasi Chunder's property. Juggut Chunder appealed to the High Court against the order granting the certificate, and the case was remanded for retrial. On the 27th of March 1873, the District Judge cancelled his former order and granted a certificate to Juggut Chunder; and on the 19th of August made an order directing Chunder Moni to deliver up Kasi Chunder's properties to the plaintiff, who had purchased them from Juggut Chunder on the 5th Kartic 1282 (21st August 1875). On the 22nd of March 1878, the plaintiff instituted the present suit against Chunder Moni, Mothur Mohun, Rai Chand and Juggut Chunder, to recover the properties left by Kasi Chunder (which consisted of moveable properties only), and for a declaration that the properties pledged by Mothur Mohun and Rai Chand were liable for his claim.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that it was barred under art. 49 of the Limitation Act, and the decision was upheld by the District Judge.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

[81] The Judgment of the Court (WHITE and MACPHERSON, JJ.), was delivered by White, J.— The lower Appellate Court has decided the question of limitation correctly, and has correctly applied art. 49 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. It appears that the specific property sought to be recovered is specific moveable property, and came into the possession of Chunder Moni Shaha, the first defendant, in the year 1871, under an order of Court, which directed that he should hold that property on giving security subject to the order of the Court. On the 19th August 1873, the same Court ordered that he should deliver up the property to the plaintiff or his vendor. This order he disobeyed. Up to the date of this order, it may be taken that his detention of the property was lawful. But from the moment the latter order was made, his possession of the property became unlawful. Article 49 says, that in a suit for specific moveable property the period of limitation is three years running or commencing from the time that the obtainer's possession became unlawful. The present suit, therefore, comes strictly within that article, and not having been brought until the 22nd of March 1878, is clearly barred.

It is contended that art. 123, which provides twelve years for the receiving of a legacy is applicable, because this specific property was originally bequeathed to the plaintiff's vendor under a will. But the answer to this argument is, that the property to which this suit relates is not sought to be recovered as a legacy, but as property which belongs to the plaintiff, and has been unlawfully detained by the defendant No. 1. Article 123 only applies to cases in which the property sought to be recovered is not only a legacy, but is also sought to be recovered as such from a person who is bound by law to pay such legacy, either because he is the executor of the will or otherwise represents the estate of the testator.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Registration Acts (VIII of 1871 and III of 1877)—Sale-certificates, Registration of.—Construction of Act—Maxim “Optimus legis interpret consuetudo.”

Sale-certificates granted under the provisions of s. 259 of Act VIII of 1859 are not documents the registration of which is compulsory under the provisions of s. 17 of the Registration Act of 1871.

THIS was a reference to a Full Bench by McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.

The question referred was, whether a sale-certificate, dated the 23rd June 1873, and granted under the provisions of s. 259 of Act VIII of 1859, is a document of which the registration is compulsory under the provisions of s. 17 of the Registration Act (VIII of 1871).

Mr. Branson, Baboo Kuli Mohun Doss, and Baboo Bussunt Coomar Bose for the Appellant.

Mr. Branson.—The question here is between the auction-purchaser and a third party. I contend that a sale-certificate cannot be admitted in evidence unless it is registered. According to the reported cases, a sale-certificate under the Act of 1859 does require registration, and there appears to be only one case in which it has been held that registration was unnecessary, and that is in an unreported case—In the matter of Srinath Banerjee (Rule No. 1277 of 1879), decided by PRINSEP and MORRIS, JJ.—The case of Benodi Lal Ghose v. Tamizuddin (7 C. L. R., 115) did not in [83] words decide that registration of sale-certificates was necessary; but the Court admitted, for the sake of argument, that it was necessary whilst deciding the case on other grounds. The cases which show that a certificate of sale must be registered are, an extra-judicial ruling of the Madras High Court (6 Mad., H. C. Rep., App., xxxix), Srinivasa Sastri v. Seshayyagangar (I. L. R., 3 Mad., 37) Mulji Bèchar v. Anupram Bèchar (7 Bom., H. C. A. C., 136, 137), Pandhu Malhari v. Rakhmabai (10 Bom., H. C., 435), Lalbhau Lakhmidas v. Naval Mir Kamuludin Husen (12 Bom., H. C., 217), In the matter of Khaja Patthanji (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 202), Ichharam Kalidas v. Gorindram Bhowani Shankar (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 653), and Karan Singh v. Kamal (I. L. R. 2 All., 96).

[GARTH, C. J. If a purchaser at an auction-sale before taking out his certificate, brought a suit against his judgment-debtor for possession, would not a decree obtained in that suit be sufficient evidence of his title? Perhaps as between the parties to the suit, but certainly not as between the judgment-creditor and third parties. The case of Harkisandas Navandas v. Bai Ichha (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 155), lays down that a purchaser shall have no remedy against his judgment-debtor unless he has obtained a certificate of sale; and the case of Basapa v. Marya (I. L. R., 3 Bom., 133) lays down that a purchaser at a sale cannot apply to the Court for possession before obtaining a certificate. The case of Mulji Bèchar v. Anupram Bèchar (7 Bom., H. C., A. C. 136, 137), decided in November 1870, whilst Act XX of 1866 was in force, which required sale-certificates to be registered, and required the Court to send notice also to the Registry Office, was the first case in the Bombay Courts which decided that sale-certificates should be registered. In the next Registration Act (VIII of 1871), s. 12 of the old Act was omitted, and the question then again came before the Courts, and the extra-judicial decision reported in 6 Madras High Court Reports, App., xxxix, and decided on the 8th September 1872, was to the effect that registration was necessary. The question was again raised in the case of Pandhu Malhari v. Rakhmabai (10 Bom., H. C., 435), and a like decision came to; and again, 1875, [34] in the case of Panha Khumaji v. Fatta Upaji (12 Bom., H. C., 179), it was held that the registration of sale-certificates was optional. Then Act III of 1877 was passed: that Act had no clause directing the Court to send notice to the Registry Office, but this clause was added by s. 107 of Act XII of 1879. Act X of 1877, in s. 316, omits the words which are the basis of the decisions of the Bombay Courts, the present case falls under the old Code. Then in point of time comes the case of Ichharam Kalidas v. Gorindram Bhowani Shankar (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 653), decided on the 21st September 1881, which incidentally decided that sale-certificates are compulsorily registrable. [GARTH, C. J. We know the Bombay cases are all to that effect, but it becomes a question whether we in Bengal should follow them, inasmuch as if we did so we should upset innumerable titles, which have been thought to be safe for a very long period back.] There are also the cases of Kanhua Lal v. Kaladin (I. L. R., 2 All., 392), and Srinivasa Sastri v. Seshayyagangar (I. L. R., 3 Mad., 37), which decide that certificates of sale must be registered. The maxim optimus legis interpret consuetudo will not help the matter. For where a Statute, speaking on some points, is silent as to others, usage may well supply the defect, especially if it is not inconsistent with the statutory directions where any are given; or where the Statute uses a language of doubtful import, those acting under it for a long course of years may well give an interpretation to that meaning. But usage can be binding only as affording contemporary interpretation.—See Magistrate of Dunbar v. Duchess of Roxburghe (3 Cl. & F., 354).

Mr. Evans, Baboo Boma Churn Banerjee, and Baboo Joy Gobind Shome for the Respondents.

Mr. Feans.—To hold that sale-certificates require registration, would be to upset the rule of unwritten law which has been in force in the Courts in Bengal for many years. That such certificates do not come under s. 17 of the Registration Act, was clearly the opinion of the Inspector-General of Registration; see Stephens on Registration, p. 12. The case of Morecock v. Dickins (2 Amb. Rep., 681) shows that the Court will not upset a practice; and in Thumbarumy Moodelly v. Hoosain Borthen (1. L. R., 1 Mad., 1), where from the year 1858 the Madras Presidency, and from 1861 the Bombay Presidency, had erroneously, in contravention of the law of India as declared by the earlier decisions, adopted, with regard to mortgages by conditional sale, doctrines which the English Courts of Equity had applied to mortgages in England, the Judicial Committee expressed a doubt as to whether they should follow the earlier decisions, which appeared sound, or the new course of decisions that had sprung up in Madras and Bombay, which appeared unsound. A sale certificate is not 'an instrument' within the meaning of cl. 2, s. 17 of Act VIII of 1871; it is not an instrument executed by the parties within the meaning of the section. As sale-certificates are not regarded by the Stamp Act as conveyances, this shows an intention on the part of the Legislature not to look upon them as instruments inter partes requiring registration. The case referred by the Board of Revenue, No. 2 of 1875 (8 Mad. H. C., 112), shows the ratio decidendi in the case reported in 6 Mad. H. C. Ruling, App., xxxix. It was only the peculiar words in s. 259 of Act VIII of 1859, which were the grounds of the decision. Act VIII of 1859 is a Procedure Act; and when therein a document is said to be taken and deemed to be a transfer, it merely means that it is a transfer for the purpose of the procedure of the Court. The case of Mussamut Buhans Koonnar v. Lalla Buhoree Lall (10 B. L. R., 159) has decided that the possessor of a sale-certificate, who is in possession, is in such a strong position that, under s. 260 of Act VIII of 1859, he can hold the property against any suit brought against him. Doonga Naran Sen v. Baney Madhub Mozoomdar (1. L. R., 7 Cal., 199) pointed out that the words of s. 259 do not contemplate that nothing would pass to a purchaser at a sale by the Court unless a certificate were issued; and that the order would be sufficient to pass the title, the certificate being merely evidence that the [36] property so passed; if this is so, a certificate cannot be called an instrument under which the transfer was made. Abdool Aziz Biswas v. Radha Kanto Kobray (1. L. R., 5 Cal., 226) is a case as to the registration of a certificate under Reg. VIII of 1819, but it raises a query whether a sale-certificate under Act VIII of 1859 requires registration or no. Certificates of sale would never have been taken to fall within s. 17 of the Registration Act, except for the purview of s. 259 of the Code. Is there any compulsion in these words in s. 259?

The Opinion of the Full Bench was delivered by Garth, C.J.—If we were called upon to decide this question merely upon the language of the Registration Act of 1871 and the Code of 1859, and without regard to the practice which has prevailed in this province, it is possible that we might take the same view of it as the other High Courts, or at any rate, out of respect for their opinion, we should not adopt a contrary view without considerable reluctance.

But, in point of fact, we are now asked to put a construction upon these Acts with reference to the registration of sale-certificates, which is directly at variance with that which has been recognized and acted upon by the people of Bengal for many years past. We are not aware of a single instance in which this Court has held that such certificates ought to be registered; whilst, on the other hand, both on the Appellate and on the Original Sides of the Court, such instruments have been admitted in evidence without registration.

And this practice moreover appears to have received the sanction of the Government of Bengal from a very early period.

In a letter written by Mr. Secretary Eden to the Inspector-General of Registration, on the 19th of September 1868, the Government laid it down as an instruction to Registration Officers, that certificates given on sales for arrears of revenue did not require registration. It is stated in that letter, that such instruments did not come under s. 17 of the Registration Act; and that if they come within that Act at all, it [87] was under s. 42, which requires the Court, and not the parties, to register the instrument.

These certificates were, of course, of much of the same nature as certificates under sales in execution: and we believe that, upon the strength of this authority, and the practice which has prevailed in accordance with it, many thousands of purchasers at execution-sales have omitted to register their sale-certificates in the belief that they were acting in accordance with the law; and if we were now to hold that registration was necessary, the consequences would be most unjust and disastrous.

We think, therefore, that, in this instance, we may very properly act upon the well-known legal maxim "optimus legis interpret consuetudo." When a legislative measure of doubtful meaning has, for several years, received an interpretation, which has generally been acted upon by the public, Courts of Justice should be very unwilling to change that interpretation, unless they see cogent reasons for doing so. And this argument, of course, applies more strongly where, as in the present case, the measure relates not to any general principle of law, but to some technical or fiscal rule, such as the registration of documents, and where the interpretation which has been put upon the measure is in case of the general public.

There is undoubtedly much force in the remarks of Mr. Justice FIELD in the last paragraph of the reference which we are now answering, that the two main objects of registration,—namely, the authentication of documents, and the publicity given to dealings in land, are both, to a great extent, unnecessary in the case of sale-certificates.

And the result of recent legislation has been to show, either that the Government of India never intended these certificates to be registered, or that, having intended it, they have now found reason to change their minds.

In the Civil Procedure Code of 1877, s. 316, which provides for certificates of sale being given, the words in the former Code are omitted, that "the certificate shall operate as a transfer." Then, by the Registration Act of the same year, provision is made in s. 89, that such instruments shall be registered [88] by the Courts, and not by the parties. And lastly, by the Transfer of Property Act (s. 2, sub-section d), the provisions which make registration necessary are not to extend to "any transfer in execution of a decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction."

We think it right, for these reasons, to answer the question which has been referred to us, in the negative.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 24th March, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Duli Chand and others..... Plaintiffs

versus

Rajkissore..... Defendant.

Mokurari lease--Covenant to forfeit lease if rent be unpaid -- Payment of rent after suit but before decree--Relief against forfeiture - Beng. Act VIII of 1869 s. 52.

Section 52 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 is applicable both to cases where the right to cancel a lease arises under the provisions of the Act, and to cases where the right arises under agreement between the parties.

But, the object of the section being to prevent a forfeiture, if the rent be paid within the time specified by the section, the Courts will grant relief against a forfeiture where the rent is so paid.

THIS was a suit brought to cancel a mokurari lease under s. 52 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, and for the payment of certain arrears of rent. It appeared that twelve annas of a certain mauza had been leased out in 1263 (1856) to the defendant under a mokurari patta by Ram Imaman and Mussamut Bhatto, the proprietors of the mauza, at an annual jama of Rs. 2,022, out of which the defendant was to pay as Government revenue Rs. 668-1-6, and the balance to the proprietors; the mokurari being granted on payment of Rs. 3,750 as nuzarana. The lease contained a stipulation that if the mokuraridar and her heirs failed to pay the mokurari rent for any year in full, then the proprietors should have the power to deduct the rent due from [89] the nuzarana-money, and, after payment of the balance of the nuzarana-money to the mokuraridar, to cancel the mokurari lease and take seer possession of the land leased.

The proprietors of the land sold twelve annas of the mauza leased as aforesaid to Ram Rutton Neoghi, under a kobala dated the 11th of January 1871; and on the 15th of September 1873, the right and interest of Ram Rutton Neoghi was sold by auction and purchased by one Dindyal Lal (a deceased brother of the plaintiffs) in satisfaction of a decree obtained by Dindyal Lal against Ram Rutton Neoghi.

Dindyal Lal brought two suits against the defendant for arrears of rent; and, on the 13th of April 1875 and the 30th of May 1877, obtained decrees against her. On the latter of these decrees nothing had been paid.

Dindyal died on the 8th of March 1878, and his widow relinquished her life-interest in the property to the brothers of Dindyal, the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs then served the defendant with the following notice:--
"Please deduct Rs. 3,750, the nuzarana-money of the mokurari property, from the arrears of rent and decretal-money, which are still due by you, or receive in cash Rs. 619-1-3, which forms the balance of the nuzarana-money after the deduction of the rent, and give up possession of the said mouza. We shall take seer possession and collect the rent." On the 21st Jait 1286 F. (27th May 1879), the defendant refused to comply with their demands, and the plaintiffs, thereupon, on the 9th of June 1879, brought the suit for the purposes above stated.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 239 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Matadin, Subordinate Judge of Gya, dated the 13th July 1880.

The defendant admitted the mokurari lease, but contended that she had paid the Government revenue, and that this should, therefore, be deducted from the annual jama, and claimed the benefit of s. 52, Beng. Act VIII of 1869; and stated that, on the 10th of June 1879, she had deposited the rent for the years in dispute under ss. 46 and 47 of Act VIII of 1869; and had further, on the 20th of June 1879, deposited in Court the decretal money due; and further contended that as the mokurari lease was descendible to children, and she only had a life-interest in it, the claim to have the lease cancelled was not good.

The Subordinate Judge held that the mokurari could not be [90] cancelled, as the amount of rent due at the time of suit was paid in full after the institution of the suit and before decision, and dismissed the suit, each party bearing their own costs.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory and Baboo Amarendra Nath Chatterjee for the Appellants.

Baboo Kabi Mohun Dass and Baboo Kashi Kant Sen for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J. - This suit was brought by the plaintiffs for the cancellation of a mokurari lease. It was based upon the terms of the mokurari lease. These terms are to the following effect: "If the said mokuraridar and her heirs fail to pay the mokurari rent for any year in full, then we, the proprietors, and our heirs, shall have the power to deduct the rent due to us from the nuzarana-money, and after paying the balance of the nuzarana-money to the mokuraridar and her heirs, and cancelling the mokurari patta, take seer possession of the share in the said mauza." It was stated in the plaint that, for seven successive years, this condition of the lease was broken, and the full amount of rent for each of these years remained in arrear at the end of each year; that the plaintiffs' predecessor in title obtained a decree for rent on the 31st May 1877, which, up to date of suit, had not been satisfied. That decree was for Rs. 1,444-5-4. The prayers of the plaint were: first, that the mokurari patta may be cancelled and set aside; secondly, that, after deducting Rs. 3,130-14-3, the principal amount of the arrears of rent, the balance, Rs. 619-1-9 of the nuzarana-money be awarded to the defendant, or that the plaintiff be declared to be at liberty to deposit the said money in Court after deducting the total amount covered by the decree for arrears of rent due to the plaintiffs from the defendant, or that any other order as the Court think proper may be passed on the subject; and thirdly, that, by dismissing the defendant, the plaintiffs may be put in seer possession of the property. It appears that, after the [91] suit was instituted, the defendant satisfied the decree of the 31st May 1877 by depositing the money due under it into Court. In this state of facts the lower Court, under the provisions of s. 52 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit for the cancellation of the lease. It is contended before us in the first place that the provisions of s. 52 would not apply, because that section only refers to suits for the cancellation of leases which may be brought by the landlord under the provisions of the Rent Act for the cancellation of leases. Now this question came up before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Dul Chaud v. Meher Chand Sahu (12 B. L. R., 439). That was also a suit by a landlord to cancel a mokurari lease in pursuance of a similar agreement contained in the lease. The Court of First Instance found in favour of the landlord upon the question of non-payment of rent, but dismissed the claim for cancellation upon the ground that the claim was barred by limitation. The High Court set aside the decree of the lower Court with reference to the claim for the cancellation of the lease, and awarded a decree in terms of s. 78, Act X of 1859. (Section 52 of Act VIII of 1869 is word for word the same as s. 78 of Act X of 1859). Against the decree of the High Court the landlord appealed, contending that he was entitled to a decree declaring the lease to be unconditionally cancelled. The Judicial Committee observed that it was contended before them that "the latter part of s. 78 only applied to cases where the statutory power was given by this Act to cancel leases, and not to cases where the right to cancellation accrued in consequence of covenants in the lease itself. But their Lordships are of opinion that that would be placing too narrow a construction upon an Act which may be termed, upon the whole, a remedial one; and they see no sufficient reason for limiting what is the prima facie and natural meaning of its terms to the extent contended for. Their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the High Court was right in its determination on the point in question."

This is, therefore, clear authority for the proposition that, whether the right of cancellation arose from the provisions of the Act itself, or whether it arose under any agreement between [92] the parties, s. 78 of Act X of 1859 was applicable to a suit of this nature. Therefore s. 52, Act VIII of 1869, which now takes its place, is similarly applicable to the present suit. Under that section, if the arrears of rent due under the decree of the 31st May 1877 had not been paid up by the defendant, no doubt, the Court might have awarded a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the cancellation of the lease; but then that decree could not have been executed, if, under the provisions of the 2nd para. of that section, the arrears of rent had been paid into Court within fifteen days from its date. In this case, it is not disputed that the arrears due under the decree of the 31st of May 1877 were deposited in Court as soon as the suit was brought. Therefore it is quite clear that, after the arrears were paid, there could not be a decree for cancellation of the lease, notwithstanding the express stipulation in the lease. It is contended before us that there is a distinction between this case and the Privy Council case quoted above, and the case decided by this Bench - Mahomed Amir v. Dianut Ali (9 C. L. R., 185): and the distinction pointed out is this, that, under the conditions of the lease in this case, the defendant would be entitled to get back the nuzarana. But so far as the point before us is concerned, it seems to us that that distinction is immaterial. The object of the rule of law laid down in s. 52, Act VIII of 1869, and also in the cases cited above, is to prevent forfeiture if the rent be paid; and a Court of Equity grants this relief against forfeiture, because it considers that it would be too hard upon the tenant if such a condition as this were strictly enforced. Having regard to the reason of the rule, we do not think the distinction pointed out would make any difference as to the applicability of s. 52. We think that the decision of the lower Court is correct and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Adverse possession—Limitation—Alienation by Hindu widow—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sched. ii, art. 141.

A title by adverse possession for more than twelve years accrues even during the lifetime of a Hindu widow, but if possession arises directly from any invalid alienation on her part, special provision is made for the right to sue on the part of the reversioners within twelve years from her death and the accrual of their title.

THIS was a suit to recover possession of certain houses with mesne profits. The following genealogical table will show the relation of the parties :—

CHETAN SAHOO.

Two of the houses, numbered 3 and 6, had originally belonged to Ram Narain Sahoo, who died without issue in 1852, leaving Mussamut Lakho, his widow, him surviving; the remaining houses at that time were the property of Bhoop Narain Sahoo. In 1859, one Sheo Golam Bhagut obtained a decree against Bhoop Narain, and in 1862 the houses belonging to him were sold in execution of the decree and purchased by Sheo Golam, who subsequently sold them to one Sheo Narain Sahoo. On the 23rd of July 1863, Sheo Narain sold the houses to Mussamut Lakho, who paid for them out of moneys belonging to Ram Narain's [94] estate. After Ram Narain's death, his widow entered into possession of his estate, and made over the houses 3 and 6 to Bhoop Narain Sahoo as her reversionary heir, and waived her life-interest therein. Bhoop Narain remained in possession of the other houses. Mussamut Lakho died in 1870 without having obtained possession of any part of the property. The present suit was instituted in 1876 by Heet Narain Sahoo and Dwarka Lal Sahoo against Gya Pershad, Nund Pershad, Binda Lal and Sosai. The defendants pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation, on the ground that the plaintiffs' cause of action arose when Mussamut Lakho was dispossessed or kept out of possession, which was more than twelve years from the date of suit. The Subordinate Judge held, that the time of limitation must be computed from the date of Mussamut Lakho's death, and that the suit was not barred. This decision was upheld by the District Judge.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Moonshee Mahomed Yusoof and Baboo Roghunundan Pershad for the Appellants.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—The sole point for our decision in this case is whether the suit is barred by limitation. The plaintiffs sued to recover certain property as having been bought in the name of Mussamut Lakho by Ram Narain Sahoo, and that, on the death of Lakho, they are entitled to succeed as her heirs. It appears that this property is now held by the heirs of Bhoop Narain Sahoo, who is a relative of both the plaintiffs and of Ram Narain, but subordinate as regards rights of inheritance to the plaintiffs. In April 1859, one Sheo Golam Bhagut obtained a decree against Bhoop Narain, in execution of which, in 1862, he sold the properties now in suit, Sheo Golam being himself the purchaser. He then sold his rights to one Sheo Narain Sahoo, who again, in July 1863, sold to Mussamut Lakho.

[95] In November 1865, Lakho applied to execute this decree and got possession of this property; but nothing resulted from this application, for, on the following June, it was struck off for default. In November 1870 Lakho died, and the present suit has been brought on the 9th of April 1876,—that is to say, nearly fifteen years from the date of original purchase.

It is contended by the defendants, appellants, that, inasmuch as neither Lakho, nor her husband Ram Narain, has, at any time, been in possession of this property, and as more than twelve years have passed since their right accrued, during which the previous proprietor Bhoop Narain and his sons have held possession, the present suit is barred. On the other hand, it is argued on behalf of the plaintiffs, that limitation would commence to run only from the death of Lakho Koor,—that is to say, from November 1870. The rule which has been followed by this Court seems to be that a title by adverse possession for more than twelve years accrues even during the lifetime of a Hindu widow, but if possession arises directly from any invalid alienation on her part, special provision is made for the right to sue on the part of the reversioners, within twelve years from her death and the accrual of their title. Under such circumstances we think that the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation; but with regard to the houses 3 and 6, the suit is, on the defendants' own statement, not so barred; because they admit that she entered upon possession of these houses and made them over to the ancestors of the defendants as her reversionary heirs. Under such circumstances limitation would commence to run as against the plaintiffs only at her death. As regards these two houses, therefore, the order of the lower Appellate Court will be maintained, in other respects the order will be set aside. The plaintiffs will get possession of two-thirds of those two houses, Nos. 3 and 6. Costs in proportion.

Appeal allowed in part.

NOTES.

[HINDU WIDOW'S ESTATE—ALIENATION—LIMITATION]

This case is open to criticism upon the facts as reported. The statement of the law is correct, as then understood, and as to this, see the Notes to 8 Cal. 142; 11 Bom. 317 (319). The husband died in 1852 when he owned two houses and these two, the widow "made over to Bhoop Narain Sahoo as her reversionary heir and waived her life-interest therein" (p.94). Thus as regards this property there was an acceleration of the reversion and if so, the actual reversioner at her death would have no right of suit. The other point, as regards limitation, which had commenced to run even before her purchase during widowhood is correctly decided.]

Appeal from decision of Bench of Magistrates—Summary Procedure—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), chap. xxvii.

No appeal lies to a District Magistrate from the decision of a Bench of Magistrates composed of an Assistant Magistrate with second class powers and two or more Honorary Magistrates, in a case tried under chap. xxvii of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. M. M. Ghose for the Petitioners.

Mr. Kilby for the Opposite party.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (MACLEAN and MACPHERSON, JJ.), which was delivered by Maclean, J. The petitioners were tried before a Bench of Magistrates at Jugdespore on a charge of an offence under s. 352. The Bench was composed of an Assistant Magistrate with second class powers and three Honorary Magistrates. The former and two of the latter signed the judgment convicting the petitioners, and sentencing them to pay a fine of Rs. 5 each.

An appeal was preferred to the District Magistrate, who dismissed the appeal of Wahid Ali and enhanced the sentence of Havalдар Roy by addition of two months' rigorous imprisonment.

On motion made by counsel, the proceedings have been sent for and counsel heard on both sides. The first question for our decision is whether any appeal lay to the District Magistrate. This question is raised on behalf of the appellants [97] themselves. In fact, they now assert that their appeal was improperly lodged. Had the sentence not been enhanced, we should not have entertained this objection. The case was tried under the summary procedure (chap. xviii), and if the Bench was invested with first class powers, there would be no appeal: see s. 274 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Under para. 1 of Government Orders published in Calcutta Gazette, 1873, pages 17 and 662, any Bench of two or more Honorary Magistrates, sitting with a salaried Magistrate exercising not less than second class powers, is vested with first class powers. The case before us was, therefore, tried by a Bench vested with first class powers under that rule. The Deputy Legal Remembrancer has laid before us some orders of Government dated 31st March 1882, modifying other orders dated 31st January 1878, relating to the constitution of Benches in Shahabad. As to the orders of 31st January 1878, we have no information. Those of 31st

* Criminal Motion No. 169 of 1882, against the order of the Jugdespore Bench of Magistrates (provided over by Mr. T. Inglis), Assistant Magistrate of Shahabad, dated the 22nd April 1882.

March 1882 justify us in holding that the Jugdespore Bench under the presidency of a Magistrate (salaried) exercising second class powers, has jurisdiction to try all cases under s. 222 of the Code of Criminal Procedure,—that is, cases triable summarily by a first class Magistrate.

We think, therefore, that the District Magistrate was not competent to hear an appeal against the sentence of the Bench, dated 22nd April 1882. We accordingly set aside the order of 3rd May directing that Havaldar Roy be imprisoned for two months. Counsel for the petitioners does not press his case as to the order of the 22nd April, with which, therefore, we do not interfere.

Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 293.*

At a sale in execution of a decree the property was knocked down to a bidder at Rs. 260. The bidder was unable to make a deposit, and the property was immediately put up for sale and re-sold for Rs. 50. Held, that the judgment-debtor had sustained such substantial injury as would justify the Court in setting aside the sale, notwithstanding that the judgment-debtor might, under s. 293 of the Civil Procedure Code, have recovered the difference between the original bid and the price at which the property was sold.

Baboo Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty for the Appellants.

Baboo Kabi Churn Banerjee for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), which was delivered by Field, J. —This is an appeal against an order of the Munsif refusing to set aside a sale. The application to set aside the sale was made on the ground that there had been substantial irregularity in publishing the sale-proclamation, and that the judgment-debtor in consequence of such irregularity, sustained substantial injury. The irregularity is said to consist in this, that the sale-proclamation was not published in the village. Three of the persons, whose names were inserted in the peon's report as having been present when the sale-proclamation was published, were called on the part of the judgment-debtor, and they denied that any sale-proclamation had been published in their presence. The other witnesses to the publication of the sale-proclamation were not called on behalf of the decree-holder; and [99] there is in fact no evidence to show that the sale-proclamation was published, and no evidence to rebut the testimony given by the above three witnesses. Under these circumstances, we must hold that the sale-proclamation was not published according to law.

Then as to the question of substantial injury, the Munsif, assuming the value of the property to be not more than Rs. 175, argues that the judgment-debtor sustained no substantial injury, because when the property was put up for sale, it was knocked down upon a bid of Rs. 260. In consequence of no deposit being made by the person who had made this bid, the property was immediately put up again and sold. The Munsif thinks that, because the judgment-debtor might, under the provisions of s. 293 of the Code of Civil Procedure, have recovered the difference between Rs. 260, the amount of that bid, and Rs. 50, the sum for which the property was ultimately sold, he cannot be said to have sustained substantial injury. This assumes that the property was sold for Rs. 260 at the sale, which was sought to be set aside. We think the Munsif was not justified in assuming this. It might be quite possible that the person who made this bid was a man of straw, and that the difference could never have been recovered from him. At any rate, under the provisions of s. 293, the judgment-creditor (as well as the judgment-debtor) could have applied to realize this difference; and, if he had succeeded in doing so, he would have deprived the debtor of the argument that he had sustained substantial injury. We think it would not be equitable to say that the judgment-debtor was bound to realize this difference, and that until he had tried to do so, or succeeded in doing so, the amount for which the sale was really effected ought to be taken to be the amount of this first bid, and not the amount for which the property was actually sold. There is evidence that the property was worth Rs. 175. There is no evidence that it was fairly valued at Rs. 50, for which amount it was sold at the sale sought to be set aside; and, under these circumstances, we think that the judgment-debtor did sustain substantial injury. We, therefore, reverse the Munsif's decree and set aside the sale with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Execution---Limitation Act (XIV of 1877), sch. ii, art. 179, para. 2—"Appellate Court."

The meaning of paragraph 2 to art. 179 † of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877 is, that, where there has been an appeal, the period of limitation is to run from the date when the Court to which that appeal has been preferred passes an order disposing of the appeal.

The words "Appellate Court" signify the Court or Courts to which the appeal, mentioned in the article, has been preferred.

THIS was an application for execution of a decree. It appeared that, on the 19th December 1877, the plaintiffs (decree-holders) obtained a decree against the defendants in accordance with an arbitration award. The defendants, pending suit, deposited a sum of Rs. 140 in Court in satisfaction of this decree; and afterwards applied to have the judgment set aside on review. Their application being rejected, they then appealed to the District Judge against the decree of the 19th December 1877. The District Judge dismissed the appeal on the 10th May 1879, and the judgment-debtors again appealed to the High Court. This appeal was, however, dismissed on the 12th March 1881.

The decree-holders, on the 23rd June 1881, applied for execution of their decree.

The judgment-debtors contended that the decree of the first Court having been passed in conformity with the award, no appeal would lie against it; and that, therefore, limitation ran from the date of the original decree, and not from the date of the final appeal from the decree; and that the plaintiffs should not be allowed costs and interest on the sum of Rs. 140 deposited in the Court. The Subordinate Judge of Patna held, that limitation ran from the final decree of the 12th March 1881, and that, therefore, the application was in time. He also held that [101] the plaintiffs were entitled to interest and costs on the Rs. 140, and disallowed both the objections.

* Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 5 of 1882, against the order of H. Beveridge, Esq., Judge of Patna, dated the 28th October 1881, confirming that of Baboo Paresch Nath, Banerjee, First Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 3rd September 1881.

Description of application.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.

The judgment-debtors appealed to the District Judge, who upheld the decision of the lower Court.

The judgment debtors appealed to the High Court.

Mr. E. Twisdale for the Appellants.

Baboo Saligram Singh for the Respondents.

Mitter, J. Two objections have been urged against the decision of the lower Court. The first is that the application for execution is barred under art. 179 of sched. ii, Act XV of 1877. It appears that the decree of the first Court was passed on the 19th December 1877, in accordance with an arbitration award. An appeal was preferred by the defendants, against whom the decree was passed, they contended that the decree should not have been in accordance with the award. The Appellate Court, after entering into the objection raised by the defendants, came to the conclusion that no appeal lay against the decree of the first Court, because it was in accordance with the award of the arbitrators appointed in the case. There was a second appeal preferred by the defendants, and the Court upheld the view of the lower Appellate Court that there was no appeal. The judgment of this Court is dated the 12th March 1881. On the 22nd June 1881, the present application for execution of the decree was filed. It is contended that, under art. 179, the application being filed more than three years from the date of the decree of the 19th December 1877, is barred. We do not think that this contention is correct, because the 2nd para. of art. 179 says, "Where there has been an appeal, the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court,"—that is to say, where there has been an appeal, three years are to be counted from the date of the final decree or order of the Appellate Court. There is no question that in this case there was an appeal: although both the Appellate Courts held that [102] no appeal would lie. The case, therefore, comes within these words of art. 179, viz., "where there has been an appeal." The next question is whether there is any decree or order of the Appellate Court. There were orders no doubt of the Courts to which the appeals were preferred rejecting the appeals on the ground that no appeal would lie. The words "Appellate Court," in our opinion, here mean the Court or Courts to which the appeals mentioned in the section have been preferred. The meaning of this clause, therefore, in our opinion, is, that where there has been an appeal, the period is to run from the date when the Court to which that appeal has been preferred passes an order disposing of the appeal. That being so, it is quite clear that the present application is within time. The second objection taken is this: It appears that the defendants, while the original suit was pending in the first Court, deposited Rs. 140, alleging that that was all that was due from them to the plaintiffs. The decree subsequently passed was for a larger amount. Then, in the petition for execution, the plaintiffs (decree-holders) calculate interest upon the whole of the amount decreed from the date of the decree to the date of the application. The defendants object, on the ground that the plaintiffs (decree-holders) were bound to take out the money which was deposited in Court immediately on the passing of the first decree, and that there was nothing to prevent the decree-holders from withdrawing this money from the Court then, and therefore, in calculating interest, this amount should have been deducted from the amount of the decree on the date of the decree. The learned pleader for the respondents fully admitted that this is a reasonable contention. We are also of that opinion. The decree-holders, therefore, in calculating the interest from the date of the decree should take the amount decreed minus the amount deposited as the principal. With this modification in the decree of the lower Court we dismiss the appeal with costs.

As the appellants have failed in their main ground, they must pay the respondents the costs of this appeal.

Appeal modified.

NOTES.

LIMITATION ORDER IN APPEAL NATURE OF THE ORDER—

Even if the order be only rejecting the appeal (16 Cal. 250; 7 All. 887, contra 6 All. 438) or abating the appeal (1 C. L. J. 17n; contra 20 All. 124; 9 C. W. N. S. N. 67), the order is still the order of the Appellate Court within the Limitation Act, 1908, Art. 182; the present Act removes the difficulties which arise under the previous Act as regards withdrawal of appeal. Jurisdiction—Protection of property Criminal Procedure

Code (Act X of 1872), s. 518.

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make an order under s. 518 of the Code of Criminal Procedure merely for the protection of property.

THIS was a motion to set aside an order of the Assistant Magistrate of Nawada, directing Prayag Singh and others to remove a bund, which they had erected across a stream called the Goukhana, and ordering that the water-course remain open until Prayag Singh and others should establish their right to close it in the Civil Court. The matter had been referred to the Sub-Deputy Collector for investigation and report, and his statement of the facts was as follows:—"The real facts of the case are, that there is a stream called Goukhana, which, issuing from the Chur of Haswa, passes through Panchor, Bugoor Bayra, Sukra, and Kahooara, and falls into the River Dhanarje. About a chain above the boundary of the Government estate Sukra, a pyne from the village Mea Bigha joins on to this stream. As the pyne of Mea Bigha is a little higher than the bottom of the stream, it requires a deal of deepening to take a sufficient quantity of water to the village Mea Bigha. But the maliks of Mea Bigha, instead of deepening their own pyne, placed in September last a dam across the main stream to take the water into their pyne. As this dam would not allow a drop of water to go to the Government estate Sukra, and would injure the cultivation of that estate, the tohsceldar reported the matter to Mr. Shirecore, the then Sub-Divisional Officer, on the 28th September last, and an order was passed on the same day directing the maliks of Mea Bigha to remove the dam at once, or to [104] file objections if they had any. The maliks wrote in reply to the notice on the 30th September, that they would file objections within fifteen days, but they filed no objections, and the dam was cut open. They again, on the 11th December 1881, placed a dam across the main stream, and kept about a dozen of lathials to guard the dam, so that the Sukra men might not cut it open. The maliks of Mea Bigha admitted that they had placed the dam and pleaded justification alleging that the bund is a very old one, and that they have been preserving it for generations." Several witnesses were examined before the Sub-Deputy Collector, who came to the conclusion that the proprietors of Mea Bigha had no right whatever to maintain the bund. He then went on to say: "As for most of the lands so injuriously affected by the dam the ryots pay rent in money, I apprehend a serious breach of the peace if the dam is not removed. Under the circumstances I consider it essentially necessary that the defendants Prayag Singh and other maliks of Mea Bigha be directed under s. 518, Criminal Procedure Code, to cut open the dam at once, and not obstruct the main course of the stream more than a day or two in the week. The defendants may also, I think, be prosecuted under s. 430, Indian Penal Code, for causing mischief by placing a dam across the irrigation channel of Sukra, the consequence of which has been a serious damage to the agriculture of that estate."

On the strength of the Sub-Deputy Collector's investigation and report, together with a visit made by him to the place where the bund had been erected, the Assistant Magistrate made the order now sought to be quashed.

Baboo Umbica Churn Bose and Babu Pran Nath Pundit for the Petitioners.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J. -The order of the Assistant Magistrate must be set aside as made without jurisdiction. The order under s. 518 can only be made when it is necessary to prevent obstruction, annoyance or injury to the person or injury to human life, [103] health, or safety or a riot or affray. Such an order cannot be made merely for the protection of property.

In the present case, taking the Assistant Magistrate's finding at the highest, it cannot amount to more than this, that the bund in question diminishes the supply of water to the land lying at a lower level.

Order quashed.

Where a promissory note is executed in one district, and it is agreed that the amount of the note shall be paid in another, the Courts of the latter district have jurisdiction to entertain a suit on the note.

The illustrations to s. 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure afford no safe guide as to what is meant in the Code by the term "cause of action."

IN this case the material portion of the judgment appealed from was as follows:—

"This is a suit to recover money due on a promissory note, dated the 3rd of October 1876. The defendant denies its genuineness, and contends that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain this suit. The first point to be determined is, whether this Court has jurisdiction to entertain this suit. The facts stand thus:—The plaintiff is a banker in the district of Monghyr, where he has his principal place of business and his books of account; where he had, on other occasions, made payments for the defendant; and where, as an agent of the defendant, he paid [106] for him Government revenue, &c. But the note in suit was said to have been executed in the district of Durbhunga. No money was paid on it, it being in lieu of two others and for other sums due on other accounts. The plaintiff further contends—a contention which the defendant denies—that the defendant promised to pay the money at his central place of business at Monghyr. In this state of facts, and under the rule laid down in the case of Gopi Krishna Gossami v. Nil Komul Banerjee (13 B. L. R., 461; S.C., 22 W. R., 79), and Lucknow Chaud v. Zorawar Mull (8 Moore's I. A., 291), I think this Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit. 'The practical rule as to jurisdiction,' says Mr. Justice MARKBY in the former case, 'which has gained the most general acceptance, is that which allows the plaintiff to bring the suit either in the Court of the place where the contract was made, or in that of the place where it was to be performed.' Where no place of performance is prescribed by the agreement, Mr. Justice BIRCH points out, 'what we have to look to is the intention of the parties. If from the surrounding facts and the acts of the parties we can ascertain what place was in their contemplation the place of performance, the Courts of that place have jurisdiction.' Here, beyond doubt, the contract was made at Durbhunga, but leaving out of our consideration for a moment the alleged agreement of a payment at Monghyr, let us see what the intentions of the parties were. Here the plaintiff is a banker: his central place of business is at Monghyr, where he receives money due to him and pays what is due from him. The notes in lieu of which this note was executed were paid at Monghyr; other payments that were made for the defendant were also made at Monghyr. It was apparently an accidental circumstance that this note was executed at Durbhunga. The accounts of the defendant were kept by the plaintiff at Monghyr. The Government revenue that is paid by the plaintiff for the defendant is paid at Monghyr. These facts prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that the intended place of performance was at Monghyr. If again to those facts we add the presumption that the obligor is bound to seek the obligee and tender the money at the residence of the latter, I think there can be no reasonable doubt that the place of fulfilment thought of by the parties was at the plaintiff's banking firm at Monghyr. The plaintiff, however, goes further. He sets up an oral agreement, and proves by the evidence of his witnesses that it was specially agreed that the performance should be at Monghyr. Taking also the light afforded by the conduct of the parties as evidenced by the correspondence between them, that agreement seems to be probable, as otherwise the plaintiff could not have asked for payment at his own place of business."

The learned Judge then found that the note sued on was genuine, and decreed the plaintiff's claim, whereupon the defendant appealed to the High Court. The plaint, which was filed on the 17th of September 1879, described the defendant as a resident of the city of Durbhunga, and the note sued on ran as follows:—

"On adjustment of accounts as per former note-of-hand, and on account of payment of Government revenue, &c., the sum of Rs. 34,500 (thirty-four thousand and five hundred) is found due to you by me. I shall pay this amount, principal, with interest at 11 annas per cent. per mensem, within one year, and shall then take back this note-of-hand. For this purpose I execute this note-of-hand, that it may be of use when required. I acknowledge the note-of-hand for Rs. 34,500, which I have executed.

Cur. ad. vult.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by

Cunningham, J.—This action is brought on a promissory note made at Durbhunga in the Mozufferpore District, but payable (as the evidence appears to us sufficiently to prove that the parties intended) in the Monghyr district. A plea is raised to the jurisdiction of the Bhagalpore Court, on the ground that the cause of action, within the meaning of s. 17 of the Code, did not arise within the local limits of its jurisdiction. This raises the question whether, when a contract is made in one place for fulfilment in another, a suit for the breach can, under s. 17 of the Code, be brought in the District where performance was intended to take place and the breach occurred, or whether the cause of action includes not only the breach on which the suit is brought, but the contract and other circumstances which, together with the breach, go to constitute the plaintiff's right to sue.

Conflicting decisions have been given by the English Courts as to the meaning of the corresponding words in the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, s. 18, the latter of the two just mentioned views being taken in Sichel v. Borch (33 L. J., Ex., 179), Althusen v. Malgorejo (L. R., 3 Q. B., 310), and Cherry v. Thomson (L. R., 7 Q. B., 573); the former in Jackson v. Spittal (L. R., 5 C. P., 542), and ultimately by agreement in Vaughan v. Weldon (L. R., 10 C. P. 48).

On the Original Side of this Court the provisions in the Letters Patent enabling a suit to be brought, "with the leave of the Court," if the cause of action has arisen wholly or partially within the local jurisdiction, has been understood as suggesting the inference that "cause of action" means, for the purposes of suits on the Original Side, the contract as well as the breach: [109] and this view appears to have been taken on the Original Side of the Bombay, and until recently, of the Madras High Court: see Sujan Chand Shydas v. Mulchand (12 Bom., 123). But on the Appellate Side there are decisions which we consider binding upon us, under which the rule laid down has been that the cause of action may, for the purposes of giving local jurisdiction to a Mofussil Court, be deemed to arise at the place where performance ought to take place, and where the breach occurs, a construction which corresponds to that agreed to by the English Judges in Vaughan v. Weldon (L. R., 10 C. P. 48), adopting the decision of the Judges of the Common Pleas, in Jackson v. Spittal (L. R., 5 C. P., 542) as to cases under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852.

In Gopi Krishna Gossami v. Nil Komul Banerjee (13 B. L. R., 461; s.c., 22 W. R., 79) a contract was made at Serampore, for certain transactions to be carried on in Calcutta, it agreeing to advance funds on condition of repayment with interest within a certain date. The money was paid partly in Serampore and partly in Calcutta. A suit was brought in the Hooghly Court for recovery of the balance of the sum advanced, and it was urged that, as the whole of the cause of action did not arise within the local jurisdiction, an action would not lie. MARKBY and BIRCH, J.J., held, that the action might be brought in the place where the money was to have been paid, referring to the decision of the Privy Council in Lachmee Chund v. Zorawar Mull (8 Moore's I. A., 291), in which it was held that the central place of business of the contracting firm, being the place where the books were kept, the accounts would have to be balanced, and the payment of the balance, if any, made, was the place where the plaintiff's action lay. This view was also taken by a Full Bench at Agra, Prem Shook v. Bhakoo (3 Agra, 242). The same view was adopted in Hills v. Clark (14 B. L. R., 367), where JACKSON, J., held that where a contract was made in Moorshedabad for seed to be delivered in Nuddea and to be paid for, on delivery, by an order to be sent to plaintiff at Moorshedabad on receipt of the goods, a suit for non payment would lie in the Moorshedabad [110] Court. In this case the authorities were considered and reliance appears to have been placed on the views expressed by HOLLOWAY, J., in DeSouza v. Coles (3 Mad., H. C., 384).

The same view was taken by MORGAN, C.J., and INNES, J., in Sami Ayyangar v. Gopal Ayyangar (7 Mad., H. C., 176). In that case the defendant executed in the Tanjore District a mortgage of land situated in the Trichinopoly District. In order to make it enforceable, the deed required registration in the Trichinopoly District. The suit was brought to compel the defendant to register, and it was held that though the contract was made in Tanjore, the cause of action had arisen in Trichinopoly, inasmuch as, from the nature of the act to be performed, it was the place of the fulfilment of the obligation. It is true that in this case the obligation on which the action was brought arose directly from a statutory requirement, instead of as in the case before us, from contract; but this does not in our opinion affect the application of the rule laid down.

In Muhammad Abdul Kadar v. E. I. Railway Co. (L. L. R., 1 Mad., 377), KERNAN and KINDERSLEY, JJ., adopted, even in a case on the Original Side of the Court, the rules laid down in Gopi Krishna Gossami v. Nil Komul Benerjee (13 B. L. R., 461; S.C., 22 W. R., 79), and Vaughan v. Weldon (L. R., 10 C. P., 48). We consider ourselves accordingly bound by authority, unless it can be shown that the state of the law has been altered by subsequent legislation. As to this it is contended that the illustrations given to s. 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure are to be read as adopting and sanctioning the view that the cause of action embraces the contract as well as the breach, and that, consequently, where the contract is made in one place and the performance is to take place in another, no local jurisdiction arises.

This is not in our opinion the proper inference to be drawn from the illustration. The Legislature has, in the Code of Civil Procedure, thought fit not to define "cause of action." This omission may have arisen from the circumstances that different views were held in different Courts on the point, and that the [111] framers of the Act did not consider it desirable on that occasion to lay down one uniform rule. At any rate, there is no definition of "cause of action," nor any illustration immediately directed to pointing out where the cause of action arises and where it does not. This being so, it appears to us that the illustrations are intended merely to illustrate the rules laid down in the section, 1st, that a suit may be brought either where the cause of action arose, or the defendant resides or carries on business; and 2nd, that where there are several defendants, the action may be brought either where the cause of action arose or any one of the defendants resides or carries on business, provided the leave of the Court be obtained or the other defendants acquiesce.

In both instances the illustrations appear to us to avoid the question as to what constituted "cause of action" by giving facts which, on any theory, would be held to constitute it: and the utmost that, in our opinion, can fairly be inferred from their language, is that there is no intention to show that the narrower definition is the one sanctioned by the Code. This, however, falls entirely short of laying down a rule on the subject, and leaves the matter where it previously was.

We therefore do not consider that the illustrations have modified the previously existing state of the law, and this being so, we are bound to follow the previous judgments of the Court, which appear to lay down the more convenient rule and to be sanctioned by the concurrence of several of the other High Courts and the resolution of the English Judges in Vaughan v. Weldon (L. R., 10 C. P., 48).

As to the question of the payments alleged by the defendant and the other points raised in appeal, we concur in the view taken by the original Court.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[JURISDICTION—CAUSE OF ACTION— WHERE IT ARISES—

In 1888, by the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act VII of 1888, sec. 7, an explanation (III) was added to sec. 17, defining where the cause of action arose in respect of contracts. In the C. P. C. 1908, sec. 20, the explanation was omitted, as by clause (c) thereof suits may be instituted wherever the cause of action arose, whether wholly or in part. The lucid and exhaustive exposition of the subject, in Hukm Chand on Civil Procedure (1900), Vol. I, may be consulted, with reference to what is the place of performance; and what is the cause of action.

Execution of decree — Mesne profits how estimated— Amount stated in plaint — Estoppel.

When, in a suit for possession of land and mesne profits at a rate stated in the plaint, a decree is passed which directs that the amount of mesne profits be ascertained in execution of the decree, the plaintiff is not limited to the amount or rate stated in his plaint, though it may be used as evidence against him in favour of the defendant.

Baboojan Jha v. Bijnath Dutt Jha (I. L. R., 6 Cal. 172 ; S.C., 7 C. L. R., 539) explained.

THE facts of this case are fully set forth in the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court : —

“The first point raised by this appeal is, whether the appellant can recover mesne profits to an amount exceeding that claimed in his plaint and decreed to him. In the plaint mesne profits are claimed for the period from Barsakh 1281 (April- May 1874) to the 6th of Choitro 1282 (18th March 1876), and their amount is declared to be Rs. 11-11 11, at the rate of Rs. 21-8-8 per annum. The Munsif decreed the plaintiff's (appellant's) claim to possession of 117 out of the 121 plots in suit, and that "the plaintiff do get wasilat from 1281 to this day (the 15th of September 1876 - 31st of Bhadro 1283), and the amount of wasilat is to be ascertained in execution of this decree." The decree of the Munsif was affirmed successively by the Judge and the High Court. In execution, the decree-holder seeks to recover mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 317 a year. The Munsif, on the authority of Gooroo Doss Roy v. Bungshee Dhar Sen (15 W. R., 61), which, as he observes, was a case precisely similar to the present, has refused to allow mesne profits at a rate in excess of that claimed in the plaint, and for the period subsequent to the 31st of Bhadro 1283 (15th of September 1876), and assessed the mesne profits payable under the decree at Rs. 52-8 0, with interest at 6 per cent. from the 16th of September 1876 until the 14th of August 1880, the date of such assessment. The aggregate thus awarded is Rs. 76-7-0. Unquestionably the cases of Gooroo Doss Roy v. [113] Bungshee Dhar Sen (15 W. R., 61), and Baboojan Jha v. Byjnath Dutt Jha (I.L.R. 6 Cal. 472; S.C., 7 C. L. R., 539) do lay down that the plaintiff, in the absence of special circumstances, cannot recover damages in the nature of mesne profits in excess of the sum claimed in the plaint; but the Munsif has awarded a sum in excess of that claimed by his decree. The claim was for a period terminating on the 6th of Choitro 1282 (18th of March 1876), whereas the Munsif decreed mesne profits up to and inclusive of the 31st of Bhadro 1283 (18th of September 1876). By a cross appeal, the respondent denies the appellant's right to mesne profits in toto, but that question is concluded by the affirmation of the Munsif's decree on a first and second appeal. That decree distinctly awards mesne profits up to the date of the decree. It is now settled that if the decree is silent on the subject of mesne profits subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit, the Court executing the decree cannot assess or give execution for such mesne profits: Sadasiva Pillai v. Ramalinga Pillai (15 B. L. R., P. C., 383). The same principle of the inability of the Court executing a decree to add to it precludes it from assessing or giving execution for mesne profits accruing due subsequently to the date of the decree, where the decree is silent on the point. The plaintiff, appellant, is, therefore, debarred from recovering in execution, mesne profits for the period beginning with the 1st A-shar 1283. His remedy is a separate suit.

"With regard to the period anterior to that date I conceive that he is bound by his own assessment of the mesne profits, as the Munsif has pointed out he has ample means of knowing or ascertaining their amount before action brought, and he estimated the amount at Rs. 21 odd annually. No special circumstances exempting him from the operation of the rule enumerated in Gooroo Doss Roy v. Bungshee Dhar Sen (15 W. R., 61), and Baboojan Jha v. Byjnath Dutt Jha (I.L.R. 6 Cal., 472; S.C., 7 C. L. R., 539) are suggested, much less proved; and I therefore uphold the Munsif's decision on the question of the annual rate at which the mesne profits are to be assessed. The respondent, in cross appeal, takes exception to the aggregate mesne profits awarded, on the ground that, having dismissed the appellant's claim to four of the plots in dispute the annual amount of mesne profits should be proportionately reduced; but I do not understand the High Court rulings I have quoted to go so far as to lay down that, in no instance, can the plaintiff recover in [114] excess of the rate claimed. In each of those cases the plaintiff recovered the full amount claimed, and in this instance the Munsif does not decide that the claim made in execution is groundless and exorbitant, but merely that, exceeding the amount laid down in the plaint, it cannot be awarded. The appellant is clearly entitled to recover at least the amount awarded to him. Had the amount been specified in the decree nothing in excess of the sum decreed could be recovered; but the Munsif having reserved the assessment of mesne profits for the execution of the decree, was, I conceive, competent to assess and award any sum not exceeding the aggregate of the annual rate declared in the plaint for the period for which the decree gave mesne profits.

"The respondent further contends that the Munsif ought not to have given interest on the mesne profits. The Munsif seems to have considered s. 211, Civil Procedure Code, as sanctioning the award of interest. At least he quotes that section and the explanation thereof, but its application is clearly confined to cases where the Court has provided in its decree for the payment of interest, which this decree did not do. I consider, however, that the appellant is entitled to interest independently of the express provisions of any Act, on the principle expounded in Lachhy Narain v. Kally Paddo Banerjee (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 882) and the authorities there cited, and that, whether the decree provides for such interest or not. In Lachhy Narain v. Kally Paddo Banerjee (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 882) the decree appears to have been silent on the subject of interest, which was nevertheless awarded. Finally, both the appellant and respondent appealed regarding costs. The Munsif disallowed the costs of both. I do not, however, comprehend why the plaintiff is not to get proportional costs. I am not prepared to say, and I do not understand the Munsif to say, that he has been guilty of fraud. He may yet succeed in recovering mesne profits at the higher rate for the period posterior to the 31st Bhadro 1283. I accordingly direct that the appellant do recover the costs of the enquiry into and ascertainment of the amount of mesne profits in the Court below. Such costs to bear the same proportion to the whole of the costs incurred by him as the amount of mesne profits awarded to him bears to that claimed. In the result I dismiss the cross-appeal of the respondent with costs."

The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Prinsep, J.—The point we are called upon to decide in this appeal is, whether the plaintiff having stated the amount of mesne profits claimed at a certain sum of money, and the decree having directed the amount to be ascertained in execution, the plaintiff, decree-holder, is estopped from claiming any excess of the amount stated in his plaint.

As an authority for the affirmative of this proposition the case of Baboojan Jha v. Byjnath Jha (I.L.R., 6 Cal., 472; s.c., 7 C. L.R. 539) has been cited. We have consulted the learned Judges who passed that judgment, and we are authorized by them to state that they did not then intend to enunciate any general rule for adoption in such cases. We are therefore at liberty to deal with this case on its own merits.

It appears to us that—as stated by DWARKANATH MITTER, J., in the case of Pearce Soonduree Dossee v. Eshan Chunder Bose (16 W. R., 302).—the decision in the original suit having declared the amount of mesne profits should be determined in execution, the Courts are not precluded from varying or altering the decree in that suit. This was the conclusion arrived at by a Full Bench of this Court—Mosoodun Lall v. Bheekare Singh (6 W. R., Mis., 109) and affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in numerous cases: see Pillai v. Pillai (I. L. R., 2 I. A., 219), Forester v. Secretary of State for India (I. L. R., 4 I. A., 137), Gokuldass v. Murli (I. L. R., 5 I. A., 78). We are, therefore, of opinion that, in executing such a decree as that now before us, the plaintiff is not estopped from proving that he is entitled to a larger sum as mesne profits than that claimed in his plaint. This is in accordance with s. 11 of the Court Fees Act, which declared that, in suits for mesne profits, or for immoveable property and for mesne profits, if the profits or the amount decreed are or is in excess of the profits claimed, the decree shall not be executed until the difference of fee has been paid. It also appears to be the view adopted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of [116] Pakharuddin Mahomed Ahsan Chowdhry v. Official Trustee of Bengal (L. R., 8 L. A., 197), for we find from an inspection of the record that the successful party obtained a larger sum as masilat than he had claimed in his plaint. At the same time, we would observe, that if it should appear that, in making his original claim for mesne profits, a plaintiff has special means of knowledge for determining the amount due, the judgment-debtor can fairly use as evidence against him his own statements embodied in his plaint. Applying this principle to the present case, we think that it must be remanded for reconsideration by the lower Appellate Court. Costs to abide the result.

Case remanded.

Special Appeal—Revenue Sale Law—Evidence—Registration - Common

Registry—Act XI of 1859, s. 39.

The fact that a tenure is registered in the Common Registry under Act XI of 1859, s. 39, is not of itself prima facie evidence that such a tenure exists.

In a suit for damages for trespass laid at a sum under Rs. 100, a special appeal will lie to the High Court if the title to the land trespassed upon has been raised in the Courts below.

THE facts of this case are fully set forth in the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

“The circumstances in connection with the suit out of which this appeal has arisen are these: Asura Madhanpore and other mouzas formed a revenue-paying estate, and they were registered in the Collector's towji under two numbers, viz., 61 and 325, each of them representing a moiety of the estate. When the estate was advertised for sale on account of arrears of revenue, the plaintiff informed the Collector that he held the property in inokurari and was in possession, and prayed to have the sale stopped by offering to pay the arrears due.

[117] That application is dated the 1st of November 1878. The order of the Collector (Mr. Waller) runs as follows: ‘I cannot, as Collector, interfere. Applicant's remedy will lie in the Civil Court.’ That order was made on the 2nd November 1878. The plaintiff appealed to the Commissioner, and he was informed by a written notice, bearing date the 3rd December 1878, that his appeal had been rejected. In the meantime the property was sold on the 18th November 1878, and purchased by the defendant, who was put in possession by order of the Collector. After obtaining possession, the defendant collected rents from the tenants and took some fruits from the mango and jack trees. There could not, therefore, be any mistake that the object of the defendant was to ignore the mokurari right of the plaintiff to the mouza if he had any. Under such circumstances a suit to have the mokurari right established would have been intelligible, but the plaintiff did not want to have such broad relief. His suit was peculiar in its nature. It was a suit to have his title to two mangoe trees and one jack tree, and to the land on which they stand, established, and to recover damages without applying for leave of the Court under s. 41 of the Procedure Code. He valued the land on which the three trees stood, at 1 anna and six pies, the value of the trees at Rs. 13, and the value of the fruits taken at Rs. 6, 10 annas; total value of the claim was Rs. 19, annas 11, pies 6. The defendant denied his liability to pay damage and put the plaintiff to the proof of the patta set up by him. The plaintiff offered no evidence to prove the patta, but showed that, in 1862, he had his tenure registered under the provisions of Act XI of 1859, and contended that he was, therefore, protected by the provisions of s. 37 of that Act.

"Now it ought to be observed, that the fact of a tenure having been registered under the sale-law does not show that the patta which is said to have been granted is proved. The procedure to be followed for getting a tenure under Act XI registered is laid down in s. 40. That section does not even impose upon the applicant for registration an obligation to file the patta before the Collector. It is just like an application for foreclosure of a mortgage. Because a mortgagee has applied for foreclosure, and the year of grace has expired, it does not follow that the mortgagee is to get a decree without proof of the mortgage when the truth of the deed is not admitted. If a tenure-holder is able to prove that the tenure was in existence, that it was actually created by the late proprietor, the fact of the registration would protect him; but if he fails to show that the tenure existed, the fact of his having registered the [118] existence of something which never existed, would not create a right which he never possessed. The patta put forward by him bears date the 29th of March 1855. It is, or purports to be, only twenty-six years old, so it has to be proved. The plaintiff made no attempt to prove it.

It has to be noted that the alleged lessor, by her petition of the 3rd January 1863 presented before the Settlement Authorities, appears to have distinctly denied having granted any such patta. The defendant distinctly alleged, in his written statement, that the father of the plaintiff was a servant under the employ of Raja Gopal Singh, the husband of the alleged lessor. There is, indeed, no evidence properly so called to show that he was the servant; but there is every reason to believe that he was so. My ground for believing it is this. The first court distinctly finds it in its judgment that the plaintiff's father was in the employ of Raja Gopal Singh. If it were not the fact, the appellant would have instructed his pleader to take exception to it most prominently in his memo of appeal; but the appellant did not even make the slightest suggestion in his petition of appeal that that finding was wrong.

The patta appears to direct the lessee to pay Rs. 10, annas 8 to the Collector as revenue, Rs. 4, annas 6 to one Ram Das, and Rs. 10 to the lessor herself. The plaintiff has not been able to file a single receipt to show payment of any portion of the rent to the lessee or to Ram Das. He has filed some receipts to show payment of revenue. But it is quite intelligible why, as a servant of the rani, his father should be the custodian of such receipts, and why he should, from time to time, collect rent as a servant of the raja. Everything turns upon the proof of the patta, and there is no proof whatever. The suit is, it ought to be remembered, to have a declaration that the plaintiff has a good title to the trees and the land on which they stand, and the basis of that title remains unproved. So far as possession is concerned, there is no proof that the plaintiff was in possession under his alleged patta. There is some evidence to show that his father sometimes collected rent, but that is not conclusive. He, as servant of the raja, would be the proper person to collect the rent. It is needless to enter into a discussion of the question as to whether the patta granted, as it purports to have been, by Rani Churamani would have created a valid title in plaintiff's favour if it had been proved."

Tottenham, J. A preliminary objection is taken by the respondent's pleader in this case, that no second appeal lies the subject of the suit being, as he submitted, one of the Small Cause Court class. For the appellant, however, it was contended, and, as we think, rightly contended, that the question of right to the land was raised by the plaintiff, and that the suit was treated by both the Courts below as one for title. We, therefore, hold that the appellant has a right to have the second appeal heard and the question of title decided.

The suit was brought against an auction-purchaser under Act XI of 1859 for an alleged trespass and damage done by him to the plaintiff by appropriating the fruit of certain trees said to be upon the plaintiff's mokurari tenure, which mokurari tenure is alleged to have been registered in the Common Register under Act XI of 1859. He, however, did not produce any further evidence of the existence of the tenure beyond filing a mokurari patta, and of that patta he adduced no proof.

For the appellant it is contended that the fact of registration under Act XI of 1859 is in itself prima facie proof of the existence of a tenure registered in the Common Register. We think that this is not so. If the tenure in this case had been specially registered, then, under s. 50 of the Act, entry in the Special Register would apparently have been prima facie good evidence of the existence of the tenure, but no such provision is made in the Act with regard to registration in the Common Register. It may be observed that, in any case in which a registered document is produced the fact of registration is not accepted as prima facie evidence of the genuineness of that document. It has to be proved independently. We see no reason to hold that the registration of a tenure in the Common Register under Act XI of 1859 relieves the person alleging such tenure of the necessity of proving its existence in the regular way. Section 37 of the Act provides, that certain [120] tenures, if registered, are protected from being set aside by auction-purchasers. The effect of this is, that a bona fide tenure actually proved is not protected unless it is registered. It does not provide that the registration of an alleged tenure will have the effect of proving it. We think, therefore, that the registration of the tenure alleged in this case is not a sufficient proof of the plaintiff's title.

The appellant's pleader, however, contended that there was further evidence in an admission by the lessor of the genuineness of the patta, such admission being contained in a petition made to the Collector at the time of the execution of the patta, or shortly afterwards, praying the Collector to enter the tenure in his books, and to hold the lessee responsible for a certain portion of the Government revenue. It turns out, however, that the petition here referred to is only a copy of the petition made, not by the lessor, but by a person calling himself the mooktear of the lessor. The petition, therefore, is of very little importance in this case, especially when we find that another petition made by the lessor before the Settlement Officer expressly repudiates any such patta as is now set up by the appellant.

It is unnecessary for us to go into the merits of the case, but we think that the lower Appellate Court was right, as a matter of law, in confirming the decision of the first Court.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

*Suit for Possession—Co-defendants —Res judicata —Civil Procedure
Code (Act X of 1877) s. 13.*

A leased lands to B, who sued C for possession of a certain mauza, alleging it to be a portion of the lands leased. A was made a defendant, and supported the case of the plaintiff who obtained a decree. C appealed, making A and [121] B respondents, when the decree was reversed and the suit dismissed, on the ground that the mauza sued for was the property of C, and that ruling was upheld on special appeal to the High Court. Subsequently A brought a suit against C for the same mauza, making B a defendant.

Held, that the title to the mauza was res judicata between A and C, and that the suit would not lie.

Gobind Chunder Koondoo v. Taruck Chunder Bose (L. R. 3 Cal., 116) followed.

THE facts of this case, and the contentions raised by both parties, are fully set out in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, which is as follows :—

“ The issue raised in the case is, whether the disputed land, which goes by the name of Bonkata, forms a part and parcel of Mauza Gossampur, or is it a separate mauza by itself distinct from Gossampur. The very same issue was raised in suit No. 393 of 1865, and it was found that there was no separate mauza by the name of Bonkata, comprising the land in dispute, but that it was part of Gossampur. The first Court has held, therefore, that the present suit is barred by the rule of s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. In appeal I have to see whether that view is correct or not.

“ The facts of suit No. 393 of 1865 have to be closely examined. In that suit, Monmohini Dabia was the plaintiff. She stated that she had taken a pathni of Mauza Bonkata on the 2nd of Pous 1271 (15th December 1864) from the plaintiffs in this case, and endeavoured to take possession on the 19th Pous 1271 (1st January 1865), but in consequence of the resistance offered by the defendants, she could not get possession. She, therefore, wanted to recover possession on an adjudication of her title. In that suit the plaintiffs in this case were made pro forma defendants. They filed a written statement supporting Monmohini. At the trial they produced documentary evidence in support of their allegation. The first Court, in its judgment, took notice of their document. It was found by the Munsif that Bonkata was a separate mauza, and the claim of Monmohini was decreed on the 31st of May 1866. In appeal, Monmohini and her lessors, the present plaintiffs, were respondents; and the defendants were the appellants. The Appellate Court took notice of the documents filed by the plaintiffs, but it came to a different conclusion, and the claim of Monmohini was dismissed, it being found that Bonkata was not a separate mauza, but that it formed part of Gossampur. That judgment bears date the 21th of September 1866. [122] It was confirmed in special appeal on the 28th of March 1867. The judgment of the High Court is not with the record.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2235 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Brojendro Coomar Seal, Additional Judge of Bankura, dated the 28th June 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Jogendro Nath Bose, Munsif of Gungajulghatty, dated the 21st March 1879.

" In their plaint in the present suit, the plaintiffs say that they had made a permanent settlement of the mauza with one Dinobundhu Chatteropadhyaya in 1237, and were in possession through him; that Dinobundhu having failed to pay rent, they brought a suit against him, and in execution of the decree in that case entered into khas possession (when, it is not stated), and afterwards made a settlement of it with Monmohini Dabia on the 2nd Pousht 1271 (15th December 1861), and received rent from her up to the year 1274. Thus, though Monmohini never obtained possession of the property, and though it was finally settled by the High Court on the 28th of March 1867 (16th Chait 1273) that the plaintiffs were not entitled to get rent on account of this property, the plaintiffs say that Monmohini paid rent up to the year 1274. The first Court notices that Monmohini is the mother of plaintiff No. 5. These are the facts of case No. 393 of 1865, and the plaintiffs in the present case date their cause of action from the time that the judgment in Monmohini's case was confirmed by the High Court.

" The difference between the case of Monmohini and that of the plaintiffs is this, that whereas the property in dispute in the case of Monmohini was the patni interest, in this case it is the zamindary right which is the subject of dispute; but the issue which has to be decided in this case is the same which was raised in that case. In Case No. 393, the present plaintiffs occupied the position of pro forma defendants, it is true; but s. 13 of the Procedure Code does not appear to make any distinction between principal parties and pro forma parties. Throughout the Code there is no mention of pro forma parties. Parties or no parties, the plaintiffs were parties. Were they parties litigating under the same title? Monmohini litigated for herself and for the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs supported her, and were parties. The right for which Monmohini contended was one in which the plaintiffs were interested. According to Explanation V of s. 13 and the Full Bench case of Gobind Chunder Koondoo v. Taruck Chunder Bose (4 L. R., 3 Cal., 116), section 13 appears to bar the plaintiffs. My attention has been drawn to the case of Price v. Khelat Chunder Ghose (13 W. R., 461). That case was decided in 1870, long before the Procedure Code of 1877 came into operation.

" The plaintiffs were pro forma defendants, and from their position as defendants it is stated that they could not join issue with the other [123] defendants. No doubt it was so, but every case has to be decided on its own merits. Monmohini, the plaintiff in that case, was the mother of plaintiff No. 5. The plaintiffs, if so disposed, might join Monmohini as plaintiffs, but they did not like to do so, and they were made pro forma defendants. As pro forma defendants they did not contend that they were not necessary parties to the case, but, on the other hand, supported Monmohini, and put in documentary evidence. In appeal, Monmohini and the present plaintiffs were respondents. So it was open to the plaintiffs to appeal to the High Court in the same way as Monmohini did, for they were interested in the issue that was tried in the same way as Monmohini was. There may be cases in which the position of pro forma defendants would not allow them to appeal, but suit No. 393 was not one of such cases. I agree with the first Court in holding that the issue which is raised in this case cannot be tried again. Without entering into the question as to whether the suit is barred by limitation, I dismiss the appeal with costs."

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court, on the ground that the Court below was in error in holding that the present suit was barred under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Baboo Borkant Nath Dass for the Appellants.

Baboo Umbeca Churn Bose for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (GUNNINGHAM and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered¹¹.

Cunningham, J.—In this case the plaintiffs sue for possession of certain land, described as Mauza Bonkata, on a declaration of their title thereto. They allege that their ancestors obtained the entire Mauza Gossamipur and two drones of land transferred from the jami of Jugurnathpore; that these two drones were reclaimed and called Mauza Bonkata, and were let on mokurari lease to the father of the defendant Dinobundhu; that, on Dinobundhu's failure to pay rent, the land was resumed and let on patni to the 13th defendant Monmohini; that Monmohini sued the principal defendants for possession, and obtained a decree in the original Court, which was reversed in appeal and special appeal, 28th March 1867; that Mauza Bonkata [124] never did appertain to Mauza Gossamipur, and never belonged to the defendants. In that suit the present plaintiffs were joined as defendants.

The defendants contend, and the Courts below have held, that the suit is barred by s. 13 of Act X of 1877, inasmuch as the main issue in the case—viz., the question whether the disputed land appertains to Mauza Bonkata and belongs to the plaintiffs,—has already been raised and adjudicated in a suit to which the present plaintiffs and defendants were parties,—viz., the suit brought by Monmohini, the 13th defendant in the present suit, against (i) the present defendants and (ii) the present plaintiffs.

It appears that Monmohini is the mother of the 5th plaintiff in the present suit and that, in the former suit, the present plaintiffs, though formally joined as defendants, supported Monmohini's case and put in evidence in its support; and that, in appeal, Monmohini and the present plaintiffs were joined as respondents. In that appeal it was decided that the disputed land did not form a separate mauza, as Bonkata Mauza, but pertained to Gossamipur; and that the present plaintiffs not having any rights in it could not settle it with Monmohini.

The same issue is raised in the present suit; but it is contended that s. 13 does not apply, the matter not having been "in issue between the same parties," inasmuch as the present plaintiffs were co-defendants in that suit with the present principal defendants, and Monmohini, the present 13th defendant, was plaintiff.

We concur with the Courts below in thinking this contention unsound. The material point for deciding whether a matter has become res judicata under s. 13 is, whether it was directly and substantially in issue between the same parties and was finally decided. If the issue is clearly raised between the several parties to the suit and adjudicated, it matters not that the parties were marshalled in the one case differently from the other—Gobind Chunder Koondoo v. Tarack Chunder Bose (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 146). Here there can be no doubt, that though the present plaintiffs were joined as defendants in the former suit, they were practically supporting the case of the plaintiff and had the fullest [125] opportunity of contesting the point which that suit decided, a circumstance which is proved by their being joined as respondents in the appeal. In these circumstances, the plaintiffs are, in our opinion, debarred under s. 13 from now again contesting the same point with the parties to the former suit. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[RES JUDICATA—CO-DEFENDANTS—

In (1886) 12 Cal. 580, a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court came to a different conclusion and practically overruled this case. Their main arguments were firstly that though the lessee claims under the lessor, the lessor does not claim through the lessee and therefore is not bound by any decree in a suit the conduct of which is in the lessee's hands ; and secondly though made a defendant and thus a party to the suit, he, the lessor, was only a pro forma defendant, and took no active part in the suit.

These two arguments are not supportable. The former argument would be perfectly valid if the lessor had not been a party ; but in the case, he was made a party, as a matter of fact ; and it therefore ignores the raison d'être of his being a party.

The latter argument ignores the rule of 'might and ought' laid down in the Explanations to the Res judicata section. The bar of Res judicata does not depend on the will and the conduct of the defendant with reference to the first suit.

The facts of the lessor having been a party to the first suit and of his having been in the same interest with the lessee will be sufficient. This is laid down by the Master of the Rolls (Sir JOHN LEACH) in the early English case of Parquharson v. Seton (1828) 5 Russel 45 (at 61-63). There the second mortgagee had sued the first mortgagee inter alia for getting the amount of the first mortgage debt declared at a certain sum ; and the mortgagor was a party thereto, and he supported the plaintiff. A decree was made, and there was an appeal by the first mortgagee, one of the defendants, but the mortgagor, the co-defendant, was not a party to this appeal, and he was not even served with the notice of appeal. In the subsequent suit by the mortgagor against the mortgagee he was held bound by the decree of the appellate Court fixing the debt at a certain sum. Sir JOHN LEACH M.R. observed, "The form of relief can make no difference in the principle, that the mortgagor being a defendant in the suit in the same interest with the plaintiff, the subsequent encumbrancer must be equally bound by the decree which establishes the amount of the debt of the first encumbrancer. It is argued that the plaintiff in the present case was not bound by the decree of the Privy Council (the appellate Court) because he was not served with the petition of appeal. I consider that it was not incumbent upon the appellant to serve him. The appeal was against a decree obtained by the plaintiff, with whom the appellant was to contest the validity of the decree, and if a defendant, in the same interest with the plaintiff, did not think proper to trust his interest to the sole conduct of the plaintiff, he should have applied to the Court, and have prayed that he might be admitted as a party to support the decree which permission would have been granted to him as of course."

It is possible to distinguish this case, as one of mortgage wherein all were said to be necessary parties ; but this has no force or validity, inasmuch as the bar of res judicata has been applied to intervenors who were not necessary parties.

The text-writers (Hahn Chaud, Caspers, on Res judicata) cite both the 9 Cal. and the 12 Cal. cases ; but there is no clear indication as to their opinion of the 12 Cal. case.

This subject is dealt with in extenso in the Notes to 12 Cal. 580 ; (which was followed in 6 C. P. L. R. 87 overruling 2 C. P. L. R. 52) and to 11 Bom. 216, in the LAW REPORTS REPRINTS.]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 19th June, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Bhootnath Chatterjee.....Defendant

versus

Kedarnath Banerjee and others.....Plaintiffs.

Suit for possession—Previous dispossession—Limitation—Adverse possession—Evidence—Onus.

In every suit for the recovery of land, on the allegation of previous dispossession by the defendant, the plaintiff must start his case by showing that, at some time within twelve years previous to the institution of the suit, he has been in possession of the land sued for.

Rajah Sahib Perhlad Sein v. Maharajah Rajender Kishore Singh (12 Moore's L. A., 337), Dawkins v. Lord Penrhyn (4 App. Cas. 51), and Noyes v. Crawley (10 Ch. D., 31, 36), cited.

THIS was a suit for the recovery of possession of four katas of land, on adjudication of rights thereto. The plaint alleged that the land in dispute (together with certain land adjoining, which is now the property of the defendant) formerly belonged to the plaintiffs' father; that the defendant purchased from the plaintiffs' father the land adjoining the land in dispute; and that he had, by falsely alleging that he had subsequently obtained the disputed land as a gift from the plaintiffs' father, got himself registered as the owner thereof under the provisions of Beng. Act VIII of 1876. The defence was, that the suit was barred by limitation, and that the plaintiffs' father had made a gift of the disputed land to the defendant. The Munsif [126] found that suit was barred by limitation, and he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit, though he found the story of the gift not proved. On appeal, the District Judge reversed this decision, on the ground that the land having admittedly belonged to the plaintiffs' father, and the defendant's allegation of gift having failed, the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree.

The defendant appealed to the High Court, on the ground that the District Judge should have determined the question whether the plaintiffs had been in possession at any time within twelve years previous to suit, and that he ought not to have thrown the onus as to adverse possession, in the first instance, on the defendant.

Baboo Opendar Chunder Bose for the Appellant.

Baboo Gopinath Mookerjee for the Respondents.

Prinsep, J.—This is one of the many cases that have recently been before the Courts arising out of the Land Registration Act. The defendant succeeded, as against the plaintiffs, in getting his name registered as in possession of four katas of land.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 591 of 1881, against the decree of J.F. Browne, Esq., Officiating Judge of the 21-Parganas, dated the 13th January 1881, reversing the decree of Baboo Prosunno Coomar Bose, Additional Munsif of Baroypore, dated the 24th March 1880.

The plaintiffs have brought the present suit to obtain possession by proof of title, alleging that the registration-proceedings were their cause of action,-- that is to say, as we understand it, that they were in possession up to the date on which those proceedings were taken. The defendant says, that he has been in possession for the last twenty-five years under a verbal gift made in his favour by one who is said to have been the plaintiff's ancestor.

Now the first point which the District Judge had to decide was whether, under such circumstances, the plaintiffs have proved that they were in possession of the land in dispute within twelve years from the institution of the suit. The possession set up by the plaintiffs is, that they excavated this land for the purpose of obtaining bricks, which were buried there. The Munsif found that this was false. The District Judge comes to no [127] very definite finding on this point, though, so far as we can learn his opinion, he seems to have thought that it was not true; but, that however that might be, the plaintiffs' real cause of action was the registration-proceedings. To make out his cause of action in a case of this kind, the plaintiff had to show the date on which he was dispossessed, that is to say, to show that either on the particular date on which he stated the dispossession to have taken place, or some other period within twelve years from the date of the institution of the suit, he was in possession of this land. As an authority for this view of the law we would refer to the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Rajah Sahib Perhlad Sen v. Maharajah Rajender Kishore Singh (12 Moore's I. A., 337), Dawkins v. Lord Penrhyn (4 App. Cas., 51), and Noyes v. Crawley (10 Ch. D., 31, 36). In the present case, until the plaintiffs could show that their suit was not barred by limitation, that is to say, that they were in possession within twelve years from the date of the institution of the suit, -- they could not call upon the defendant to prove his title under the alleged verbal gift. We, therefore, remand this case to the lower Appellate Court, that it may re-try the appeal in accordance with the above observations. Costs to follow the result.

Case remanded.

NOTES.

[SUIT FOR POSSESSION ONUS --

In a suit for possession based on dispossession, the onus of proof is on the plaintiff to prove his prior possession within the period of limitation within Art. 112 of the Limitation Act:-- (1888) 16 Cal. 473; (1906) 10 C.W.N. 630 P. C.; (1892) 14 All. 193.

But such prior possession may be established by presumptions, such as those concerning continuity of ownership, joint ownership, derivative or representative ownership, constructive possession, part possession standing for the entirety, etc.-- (1883) 9 Cal. 744; (1902) 29 Cal. 518; 3 Cal. 796 P. PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

Brojo Gobind Shaha..... Defendant

versus

Goluck Chunder Shaha, alias Goluck Shaha.....Plaintiff.

Stamp Act (I of 1879) -Stamp Duty- Hathchitta Evidence -- Acknowledgment.

An account in a hathchitta, showing advances of money made to, and part payment made by, the defendant, the whole amount being in the handwriting and signed by the defendant, is admissible in evidence without being stamped.

Brojender Coomar v. Bromonoge Chowdhrao (I.L.R., 1 Cal., 885; 3 C.L.R., 520) followed.

[128] THIS was a suit to recover the sum of Rs. 1,130, being the balance of a sum of money lent and advanced by the plaintiff to the defendant on the 6th of Bysack 1283 (17th of April 1876). The plaint stated that the defendant, "as evidence of that transaction, opened a hisab (or account) in a khata-book in favour of the plaintiff." This hisab is thus described by the Subordinate Judge: "The hisab is written in one of the pages of the khata-book. The words used there are exactly these 'Account (of money) due to Goluck Shaha by Brojo Gobind Shaha,' and below this is written the word 'Cr.' on the left side, and the word 'Dr.' on the right side, in the usual way. Beneath the word 'Dr.' are inserted the following words. 'The 6th Bysack. Cash received in person (1,250) twelve hundred and fifty, due by me, payable with interest at the rate of 1 rupee and 12 annas.' On the left side, under the word 'Cr.,' is entered a sum of Rs. 400, paid on two dates, and at the top is signed the name of Brojo Gobind Shaha, the defendant. But there is no time specified for the repayment of the money, nor are the names of witnesses therein." It was proved that the defendant had received the money, and that the hisab was throughout in his handwriting.

Previously to the institution of the suit, the hisab had been presented to the Collector for the purpose of being stamped on payment of a penalty; and this officer held, according to the decision in Ferrier v. Ramkalpa Ghose (23 W. R., 403), that the hisab, or account in question was one falling within the meaning of cl. ii, sched. ii, Act XVIII of 1869; that the omission to put on a stamp at first was not a material one; and that the document should be stamped with an 8-anna stamp. It was contended before the Subordinate Judge that the hisab was a promissory note; that, as such, it should have been stamped with a 1-anna stamp, that the action of the Collector was illegal under s. 20, Act XVIII of 1869; and that, therefore, the document must not be admitted in evidence, citing Prosunonath Lahiree v. Tripoora Soondree Debia (24 W., R., 88), Ankur Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Madhub Chunder Ghose (21 W. R., 1).

Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1820 of 1880, against the decree of W. P. Mc Esq., Officiating Judge of Tippera, dated the 25th August 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Kali Dass Dutt, Second Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 6th August 1879, Giridia Coomar Dutt [129] Chowdhry v. Mohessur Bhattacharjee (19 W. R., 246), and the Circular Order of the High Court, dated the 12th of May 1876, passed in accordance with para. 69 of the Circular Order of the Sudder Board, dated the 23rd of March of the same year. The Subordinate Judge overruled the contention, and gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal, the Officiating Judge considered the document was a promissory note, but feeling bound by the decision in Perrier v. Ramkatha Ghose (23 W. R., 403), which he considered to be in point, he affirmed the decree of the Court below with costs. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Montgion and Baboo Sreenath Doss for the Appellant.

Baboo Kali Mohun Dass for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by

Prinsep, J. It is contended before us in appeal that the document upon which the plaintiff sues is a "promissory note," and that being so, it should have been stamped, and that the Collector, at a subsequent period, was unable to order it to be stamped on payment of a penalty. It appears to us, however, that the document before us cannot be so regarded. It is exactly of the same nature as the document which forms the subject of the suit in the case of Brogender Coomar v. Brohomoye Chowdhram (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 885; 3 C. L. R., 520). In that case WHITE, J., in delivering the Judgment of the Court, expressed himself in the following terms: "Now, if any one of the entries in the hatchitta had stood alone, and had been intended by the parties to form an isolated entry in the book, it might have been contended with considerable force that it fell within the description of document mentioned in the 5th article as requiring a stamp. We think, however, that the entries cannot be detached from the account of which they form a part. That account has two sides to it, the one headed 'amount advanced,' and the other 'amount received.' The amount due varies from time to time, [130] and depends upon the relation of the amount advanced to the amount received. In the present case no sum is entered under the head of 'amount received,' but that is an accident and makes no difference in considering the question as to what is the nature of the document which is offered in evidence." The only difference between that case and the one now before us is, that, in the heading of the 'amount received,' there are two payments on the part of the debtor, amounting in all to Rs. 400. Being accordingly of opinion that the document in this case is not a "promissory note," we think that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is correct and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Suit for possession - Previous dispossession - Limitation - Adverse possession -

Onus.

Where, in a suit for the recovery of land, based on title, the plaintiff alleges that he has been in possession of the land and was dispossessed therefrom by the defendant within twelve years prior to the institution of the suit, mere proof of such possession will not be sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a decree.

Wise v. Amcerunnissa Khatoon (I. R., 7 I. A., 73) followed. Kara Manji v. Khawas Nussio (5 C. I. R., 278) disapproved.

IN this case the plaintiff alleged that, from a long time, he had a dwelling-house on six katas of land in Mouza Allygunge, the property of Juggunnath Sahoy and other proprietors; that the defendants dispossessed him of a portion in the month of November 1877; and he instituted the present suit on the 18th of March 1879, claiming an adjudication of his right to the land on the ground of long previous possession. The defence [131] was, that the land claimed was the defendants' land, and formed part of the defendants' Mauza of Hobeehpore. The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree for the portion claimed. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge found that the defendants had dispossessed the plaintiff as alleged; that the plaintiff had not proved twelve years' possession prior to the act of dispossession; and he remanded the case to the lower Court in order that the Munsif should find on the evidence as it then stood, whether the disputed land formed part of Mauza Allygunge or of Mauza Hobeehpore. This the Munsif was unable to do, and the Appellate Court holding that the previous possession of the plaintiff threw upon the defendants the onus of showing title to the land, gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff, citing Kara Manji v. Khawas Nussio (5 C. I. R., 278). The defendants appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 318 of 1881, against the decree of Moulvi Hafez Abdool Kareem, Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore, dated the 20th December 1880, affirming the decree of Moulvi Ameer Ally, Sudder Munsif of that District, dated the 12th September 1879.

The Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Tottenham, J. We think that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court in this case cannot be supported.

The question in dispute was, whether the land belonged to the village of Allygunge or that of Hobeehpore. The plaintiff sued to recover it on the ground that it belonged to Allygunge; and that he held it under the proprietors of that Mauza, and for a long time. It, therefore, was incumbent upon him, in our opinion, to prove either that the land in fact belonged to Allygunge, or that he had enjoyed possession of it adversely to the defendants for at least twelve years. The proprietors of Allygunge were not parties to the suit. The proprietors of Hobeehpore were the defendants.

The lower Appellate Court found as a fact that the plaintiff had not made out twelve years' adverse possession. The Subordinate Judge, therefore, remanded the case to the Munsif for an enquiry as to which mauza the land belonged. The result was that the Munsif professed himself unable to determine that point. The Subordinate Judge agreed with him that upon the evidence, it was not possible to say to which mauza [132] the land belonged. But it must be observed that, by his remand order, the Subordinate Judge had precluded the parties from adducing evidence on the point which had to be determined. It does not follow, therefore, that if an opportunity of adducing all the evidence available had been given, there might not have been enough to enable both the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge himself to come to a decision upon the point. But the lower Appellate Court apparently thought it immaterial which mauza comprised the land in question, for it thought that it could decide in the plaintiff's favour upon the strength of a decision of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Kara Manji v. Khowaz Nussio (5 C. L. R., 278). There it appears to have been held that a plaintiff having once established that he had been in possession and had been dispossessed, his possession was enough to prove his title prima facie, and to throw upon the other side the burden of proving a better title. In this case the Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff had been in possession, and that he had been dispossessed, and he held, that mere possession was sufficient evidence of title, and it was for the other side to prove a better title. The defendants having failed to prove a better title, the Subordinate Judge confirmed the decree of the first Court. But the decision of this Court, to which the lower Appellate Court refers, is not in accordance with the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Wise v. Ameerunnissa Khatoon (L. R., 7 L. A., 73). Their Lordships quoted and approved of the observations made in the case before them by the Judges of this Court, to the effect that mere possession would not prove any title, and would not entitle a plaintiff to obtain a decree for recovery of possession excepting under the special Statute which entitles him to recover possession if the suit is brought within a certain time from the date of dispossession. But while we think that the decision of the lower Appellate Court cannot be sustained, we think also that the plaintiff is entitled to have the suit tried upon the real point in issue, namely, to which mauza the land in question belongs, to Allygunge or Hobeehpore; and for that purpose the case must go back to the first Court. We are also of opinion that the proprietors of Mauza Allygunge ought to be made parties to this suit. The Munsif should, therefore, issue a notice to them to show cause why they should not be made co-plaintiffs; and in case they refuse, he should make them defendants, so that the point in issue may be determined in their presence as well as in that of their adversaries, the proprietors of Hobeehpore, who are already defendants. On their being made parties, the whole case will be re-opened. Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

[SUIT ON PREVIOUS POSSESSION --

This is an erroneous decision. See the Notes supra to 9 Cal. 39, which is a precisely similar case. See also 17 Cal. 256; 8 Bom. 371; 12 All. 16; 26 Cal. 579; 3 C.W.N. 158; 78 P. R. 1902; U B.R. (1892-1896), Vol. II 619; 12 C P.L.R. 59.

In a suit in ejectment, the rule is that the plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own title. But it is enough if the title is established as against the defendant, and it need not be a title good against all the world: -- Perry v. Chissold (1907) P. C. 73. The right to possession of the plaintiff may arise (1) from previous possession and subsequent dis-possession, or (2) from title alone without previous possession, as in the case of the lessee suing the lessor; of the purchaser against the vendor, etc., or (3) such a right derived from such a person may have to be enforced against not only such person but against third parties in present possession.

The presumption in favour of possession applies in each of these cases. As regards its application to the first case, see the Notes to 9 Cal. 39 supra; as regards the second, the plaintiff must show a subsisting right to sue not barred by limitation; as regards the third, the plaintiff must begin and establish not only his title, but also the right to possession as against such third party. See as to onus, etc., Notes to 9 Cal. 125.]

Act XX of 1863, s. 14 Jurisdiction Leave to Sue-- Suit by Committee.

A committee appointed under Act XX of 1863 may, without leave of the Court previously obtained, sue their manager, or superintendent, for damages for misappropriation, and for an injunction. The provisions of Act XX of 1863, s. 14, do not apply to such suits by the committee themselves.

THIS was a suit, by the members of a committee appointed under Act XX of 1863, to obtain an injunction against the defendant, to restrain him from styling himself or acting as superintendent, or paricha, of the Sutiabadi Muth, and to recover from him a large sum of money on account of waste and misappropriation of the temple-funds committed by him. The facts of the case and the contentions raised on behalf of the defendant are fully set out in the judgment of Mr. Justice TOTTENHAM. The suit, which was in respect of a temple of the description provided for in s. 3, Act XX of 1863, was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack without the leave of the District Judge having been previously obtained. The Subordinate Judge refused to entertain the question of damages, no leave to sue having been obtained; but he granted the injunction prayed for, "with costs in proportion," citing Chinna Ranganayagar v. Subbraya Mudali (3 Mad. H. C. R., 334), Janardhana Embrandi v. Palakal Kesava Embrandi (3 Mad. H. C. R., 198), Syed Amin Sahib v. Ibrahim Sahib (4 Mad. H. C. R., 112), L. Venkataswami v. Sadagopasamy Iyer (4 Mad. H. C. R., 401), and distinguishing Local Agents of Zillah Hooghly v. Kishanund Dunder (S. D. A., 1848, pp. 253, 255). On appeal this decision was affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1734 of 1880, against the decree of A. W. Cochrane, Esq., Officiating Judge of Cuttack, dated the 26th May 1880, confirming the decree of W. Wright, Esq., Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 30th June 1879.

The Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Tottenham, J. The plaintiffs in this suit stated that they were appointed a committee under Act XX of 1863 of the temple of the idol Gopinath. They said that the defendant was the highest officer in the temple appointed by the former local agents and confirmed by themselves, and that his duty was, under their supervision, to look after the sheba of the idol and to collect the rents, &c. They say that he became incompetent for the discharge of his duties and mismanaged affairs; and that, consequently, the committee dismissed him from office on the 15th November 1876. Notwithstanding his dismissal, the plaintiffs say, that the defendant continued exercising the same rights and enjoying the same perquisite, and so forth that he had during his incumbency as superintendent; and that he was causing waste of the property of the idol. They therefore brought a suit asking for an injunction against the defendant, directing him not to assume the official designation of the superintendent of the idol; not to exercise any authority over the property of the idol, and in short not to interfere in any way. They also ask for a decree for the sum of Rs. 1,882-9-6, which was the estimated loss sustained by the idol in consequence of [135] the defendant's improper exercise of authority subsequent to his dismissal; and they asked for the costs of their suit.

The defendant took various preliminary objections to the suit. He urged that the plaintiffs had not dismissed him, and that they were not competent to dismiss him under Act XX of 1863 except by a suit. He denied the alleged misappropriations and mismanagement; and with reference to that, he pleaded that the old local agents very judiciously decided that, after making provisions for the offerings better than what the idol had before, and after making arrangements for the sheba of the idol, he should take the balance of the profits as a remuneration for his labour. That order, he said, was final; and, in the last paragraph of his written statement, he alleged that the idol in question was his ancestral family god; that the debutter properties were given by his ancestor; and that he has the right and full power to manage the sheba and to spend money.

At the trial in the Subordinate Judge's Court an objection was taken that the suit would not lie in that Court at all; that, supposing that the endowment comes under Act XX of 1863, such a suit could only be brought in the Court of the District Judge, and by his permission. The Subordinate Judge held that the suit would lie in his Court, and did not require the sanction of the District Judge, so far as the prayer for an injunction was concerned; and as regards the sum claimed as damages, the Subordinate Judge found, first, that there was no proof of any such misappropriation as the defendant was charged with, and secondly, that, if there had been any proof of that, a suit would not lie without the sanction of the District Judge in respect of that claim. The result was that the Court gave a decree for the injunction only, with costs of suit in proportion. The defendant appealed to the District Judge and took the same grounds, —viz., that the suit is bad in law as having been brought in the wrong Court, and without the necessary sanction. He did not very clearly take the objection that this property did not come under the operation of Act XX of 1863, but he did say that the committee had no power to dismiss him; and in appeal before us it was contended that that objection was broad enough to cover the objection that the endowment [136] did not come under that Act. But we may observe that the very point of his objection was based upon the assumption that the case would come under the Act. Unless Act XX of 1863 governed the endowment, his objection that a suit in respect of it would not lie, and that if a suit did lie it should be brought in the Court of the District Judge, would have no possible foundation. The District Judge confirmed the decree of the first Court, both as to the injunction and as to costs.

In appeal before us four points are pressed upon our attention: first, that the suit would not lie in the Subordinate Judge's Court, but only in the District Judge's Court, under the Act; and that, as the first Court found that one portion of the claim was bad for the reason that it was brought in the wrong Court and without sanction, the whole suit should have been dismissed; secondly, it was contended that the endowment was not a public endowment at all, and that the committee under Act XX of 1863 had no power to deal with it or with the defendant; thirdly, it was contended that the decree was bad, because while it prohibited the defendant from continuing the management of the service of the idol, it made no provision for anybody else to do so; and lastly, it was objected that the order as to costs was wrong. As to the third objection, viz., as to the effect of the decree, we think it unnecessary to discuss that point at any length, because it does not seem to us to be competent to the appellant to object to the decree on that ground. If it was right so far as the injunction against himself goes, it does not matter to him who succeeds him, or whether anybody is appointed or not.

On the first point, viz., as to the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge to try the case, we think, upon the construction which we put upon the act, and looking to the authorities on the subject, that there is no doubt whatever that this suit was properly brought in the Subordinate Judge's Court, and that it did not require the sanction of anybody. The section relied upon by the appellant is s. 14. We think that that section is merely an enabling section intended to allow suits to be brought by any person interested in the endowment, against the members of the committee themselves or any of those who are engaged in managing or superintending the affairs of the [137] endowment. We think that it was not intended by that section to take from the committee the power which would be inherent in them of their own authority to bring a suit in the ordinary Court against the manager in respect of moneys misapplied. We have been referred to various cases which fully support the opinion we have formed. On this point, therefore, we think that the appeal fails.

Then as to the question whether the endowment is a public endowment within the scope of Act XX of 1863, or whether it was the private property of the defendant, we have been asked to remand the case for the trial of this point, or else to say that, as the original defendant is now dead, and the point was not clearly raised and decided in the Courts below, there is no binding decision upon that point, and that it remains open for future litigation.

We think we ought not to assent to this course, because we think that the original defendant, who was the person to raise the issue, and to insist on having it tried out, if he thought fit to do so, did not really in his written statement contest the fact that the endowment was governed by s. 3 or 4, as the case may be, of Act XX. We find in various portions of his written statement that he expressly admits that he has been acting as superintendent appointed by the committee under Act XX, and by the local agents before them. In paragraph 12 especially, he expressly states that he was allowed by the previous local agents to appropriate to himself, as remuneration for his labour, the balance that remained after providing for the sheba of the idol; and at the trial he produced a proceeding of the Deputy Collector of the year 1846, and a proceeding of the Commissioner of the year 1859, which clearly set out that he was appointed by the Collector as local agent. We think, therefore, that it is much too late, and it was too late even at the commencement of the suit, for the defendant to pretend that he was independent of Act XX of 1863, and we must, therefore, disallow this point of the appeal.

The only matter as to which we think that the defendant has ground for complaint is as to the matter of costs; in that, while he has been saddled with the costs of the suit so far as it was [138] decided against him, he has not been awarded costs on the amount as to which the suit was dismissed. The suit was mainly brought for an injunction against the defendant. That he got, but, besides that, the plaintiffs claimed a considerable sum, nearly Rs. 2,000, as damages; and that part of the claim was dismissed. The order of the Court below was not, as the appellant appears to imagine, that he should pay costs to the plaintiffs on the whole amount of the plaint.

The order was that costs should be given in proportion.

Accordingly we find in the schedule of costs only Rs. 10 were paid in as the stamp-fee for the plaint, but Rs. 80 have been allowed as pleader's fees. Nothing has been allowed to the defendant in respect of the large portion of the claim which was dismissed. The Courts below have given no reason for departing from the usual rule in such cases, and it may probably have been by an oversight that they made no order for the defendant to get his share of the costs.

We think it right to amend the decree by saying that the parties will get their costs in proportion to their success respectively. The costs of this appeal will follow the same.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 6th June, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE
McDONELL.

Yusuf Ali and others..... Plaintiffs

The Collector of Tippera.....Defendant.*

Mahomedan law -- Gift, Requisites of—Gift in futuro.

Under the Mahomedan law a gift is not valid unless it is accompanied by possession, nor can it be made to take effect at any future definite period.

A document, containing the words "I have executed an ikrar to this effect, that, so long as I live, I shall enjoy and possess the properties, and that I shall not sell or make gift to any one : but, after my death, you will be the owner, and also have a right to sell or to make a gift after my death," held, to be an ordinary gift of property 'in futuro,' and as such invalid under Mahomedan law.

[139] THE facts found on remand in this case, after the hearing on appeal to the High Court, were as follows :—

That one Bhani Bebi held an absolute interest in certain properties given by her husband and in other properties which she had acquired by purchase out of funds allowed to her by him ; and that she, being childless, out of natural love and affection, agreed to, and on the 19th Bhadro 1253 (3rd September 1846) entered into an ikrar, under which she took a life-interest in these properties only, the remaining interest going to one Asfunnissa, another wife of Buksh Ali, the mother of the defendant ; the words used being "I have executed an ikrar to this effect, that, so long as I live, I shall enjoy and possess the properties, and that I shall not sell or make gift to any one ; but, after my death, you will be the owner, and also have a right to sell or to make gift after my death ;" that this ikrar was duly executed by Bhani Bebi, and was explained to her, and that there was absolutely no trace of fraud in the transaction. The defendant, who was a lunatic, was represented by the Collector of Tippera.

This ikrar was impugned by the plaintiffs, who were the brothers and sisters of Bhani Bebi, and they disputed the order of the Collector, who had ordered the defendant to be registered as proprietor of the properties.

The point on which the case turned on appeal before the High Court was, whether such a voluntary relinquishment of her property on the part of Bhani Bebi was valid under the Mahomedan law.

Mr. Ghose (with him Mr. Amir Ali and Moonshee Serajul Islam) for the plaintiffs contended that the ikrar was invalid, as under the general rule of Mahomedan law, any gift to be valid must be accompanied by immediate delivery of possession, see Chap. V of Macnaghten's Mahomedan law, p. 50, and Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan law, p. 250, 2nd Edn. ; and that a gift cannot be postponed so as to make it take effect at any future definite period—Rajah Syud Enaet Hossein v. Ranee Roshan Jahan (5 W. R., 4), and on appeal, Khajoo- roonissa v. Roushan Jehan (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 184). [140] As to immediate delivery of possession, see Abedoonissa Khatoon v. Ameroonissa Khatoon (9 W. R., 257), Obedur Reza v. Mahomed Muneer (16 W. R., 88), Gulam Jafar v. Masludin [I. L. R., 5 Bomb., 238 (242)], and Khader Hussain Sahib v. Hussain Begum Sahiba (5 Mad. H. C. Rep., 114). The case relied on by the other side will be Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mussamut Mohumdee Begum (11 Moore's I. A., 517), but the present case cannot be governed by it. The case of Jeswant Singjee Ubby Singjee v. Jet Singjee Ubby Singjee (3 Moore's I. A., 245), cannot be distinguished from the present case, and it was before the Privy Council at the trial of the case of Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mussamut Mohumdee Begum (11 Moore's I. A., 517). The Privy Council did not intend, in the case of Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mussamut Mohumdee Begum (11 Moore's I. A., 517), to depart from the rule laid down in the case of Jeswant Singjee Ubby Singjee v. Jet Singjee Ubby Singjee (3 Moore's I. A., 245). This ikrar is not a testamentary disposition; the legatee has not enjoyed possession, and there is no consent of the heirs; the donee in this case predeceased the donor. The Mahomedan law does not contemplate any other kind of disposition than a gift and a testamentary disposition. To show that the Mahomedan law is applicable, see the case of Zohorooddeen Sirdar v. Baharoolah Sircar (W. R. for 1861, p. 185).

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1294 of 1879, against the decree of J.C. Geddes Esq., Officiating Judge of Comilla in Tippera, dated the 10th March 1879, reversing the decree of Baboo Umachurn Kastogiri, First Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 28th June 1877.

The Officiating Advocate-General (Mr. Phillips, with him Bahoo Anoda Pershad Bawerjee) for the Respondent. I submit the deed was a kind of family arrangement, and is not in any way governed by Mahomedan law. It is not in form or substance a gift; it is merely a definition as to what the wife's status was to be. It does not come within the definition of 'gift' according to the Mahomedan law, and if so, the Mahomedan law is not applicable. There are a number of cases which are not contemplated by Mahomedan law, such as trusts, &c.; but they are valid nevertheless. The case cited—Zohoorooddeen Sirdar v. Baharoolah Sircar (W. R. for 1861, p. 185)—came within the definition of 'inheritance,' the will there was capable of being revoked at any time during the life of the donor. [141] If the rule of equity and good conscience is sufficient to let in the Mahomedan law of gifts in the case of Mahomedans, then, under that principle, the law of every nation with regard to gifts would be applicable in our Courts. A general rule of equity, which is applicable to Mahomedans, is laid down in Stapilton v. Stapilton (Cited in White & Tudor, Eq. Cas., 649), that family arrangements do not come within the rules relating to persons dealing with reversionary interests, and in the absence of undue influence on the part of the parent, will be binding. The transaction in the case of Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mussamut Mohumdee Begum (11 Moore's I. A., 517) is much the same as the transaction in the present case. That case was heard in Oude before the transfer to the East India Company, and it was for that reason that the Mahomedan law was applied.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—We thought it right in this case, when it first came before us on second appeal, to send it back to the District Judge, for the purpose of having these two material points more clearly ascertained :

1st—What interest had Bhani Bibi in the properties given her by her husband, and those purchased with her own money, at the time when she executed the ikrar of 1253? and 2nd—Under what circumstances, and for what reason, did she execute that ikrar?

Upon these points the District Judge has found :

1st—That Bhani Bibi had an absolute, and not a life, interest only in the property in dispute up to the time when she executed the ikrar of 1253; and 2ndly—That the ikrar of 1253 was executed at the solicitation of her husband, but without any undue influence or fraud.

He says that the reason for her executing it seems to have been that, as she was then pretty well advanced in life, and had no children, her husband was anxious that the property which [142] he had bestowed upon her should not pass away from his own children. He, therefore, induced her to convey it to herself for life, and after her death to his children by his other wife.

The District Judge finds, moreover, that the instrument was executed at Bhani Bibi's own residence, and in the presence of her husband, without any of her own relatives being present; that it was read over to her before she signed it; and that as to any fraud, compulsion, or undue influence, except the 'anurah' of her husband mentioned by the witness Doorga Churn, there is absolutely no trace.

These findings of the Judge completely dispose of the two material points which were raised before us on the former occasion. It is now clear that Bhani Bibi had an absolute and not a life estate in the property, and that the ikrar was not made in settlement of any dispute, or by way of compromise.

We thought it not improbable, that some dispute had arisen in the family as to whether she had a life-estate or not, or as to what her rights in the property really were; and if that had been so, and if the ikrar had been made for the purpose of settling those disputes, there might have been a good consideration for it. But these doubts are now set at rest by the finding of the District Judge.

We have, therefore, only to decide, as a matter of law, whether such voluntary relinquishment of her property on the part of Bhani Bibi was valid in point of law; and as to this it has been contended by the appellants :

1st —That, by Mahomedan law, a gift cannot be valid unless it is accompanied by possession; and 2nd—That it cannot be made to take effect at any future definite period.

There certainly seems no doubt as to the correctness of both these propositions. They are laid down very clearly in Baillie's Digest of Mahomedan law, pp. 507 and 512, and in Macnaghten's Mahomedan law, p. 50, Chap. V, paras. 3 and 4; and they are confirmed and exemplified by several authorities to which we have been referred. See Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Musamat Mohumdee Begum (11 Moore's I.A., 517), Khader Hussain Sahib v. [143] Hussain Begum Sahiba (5 Mad. H. C. Rep., 114), Rajah Syud Enact Hossein v. Rance Roshun Jahan (5 W. R., 419), and Khajooroosnissa v. Rowshan Jehan (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 184).

Indeed, the Advocate-General, who appeared for the respondent, scarcely attempted to dispute the general correctness of these propositions. But his main contention was, that the deed of gift by Bhani Bibi was the result of a family arrangement, and that, being of that nature, we ought to presume that it was made for good consideration.

There is no evidence, however, that it was the result of a family arrangement; and certainly the finding of the lower Court, which was directed to enquire into the circumstances under which it was made, affords no ground for that supposition. The disposition of the property was made by the lady at the request of her husband, and prompted, no doubt, by a very proper motive. She felt grateful to him for the generosity with which he had treated her, and was very ready to carry out his wishes by securing (as no doubt she intended to do), the reversion of the property after her death to her husband's family.

There is nothing, so far as we can see, in the form of the disposition to distinguish it from an ordinary gift of property in futuro; and, as such a gift is not valid by Mahomedan law, we must need reverse the judgment of the Court below, and confirm that of the Subordinate Judge with costs.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 14th April, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Shoo Sunkur Sahoy.....Defendant

versus

Hridoy Narain.....Plaintiff.

Suit for damages - Splitting claims - Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 43.

On the 27th Joist 1286 F. S. (2nd June 1879) the plaintiff brought a suit to recover damages for the breach of a contract on the part of the defendant, for not having made over possession to him of certain leasehold properties, the [144] damages claimed being for the profits accrued due for the year 1283 F. S. (1875-6). In this suit he obtained a decree.

On the 21st Joist 1287 F. S. (11th June 1880) the plaintiff brought another suit against the defendant to recover damages for the profits accrued for the years 1284, 1285, and 1286 F. S. (1876-7 to 1878-9).

Held, that the plaintiff should have included the damages for the years 1284 and 1285 (1876-7 and 1877-8) in his former suit, and that he was debarred by s. 43 of Act X of 1877 from including in his second suit any portion of his claim for damages which had accrued due at the time of the institution of his first suit, and for which he had omitted to sue; but that he was entitled to recover damages for the year 1286 (1878-9).

Taruck Chunder Mookerjee v. Panchu Mokun Debba (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 791) followed.

THE defendant, on the 30th Shrabun 1282 F. S. (31st July 1875), executed a fieca patta in favour of the plaintiff, and thereby leased a certain mouza to him at an annual panna of Rs. 3,714 for a term of eleven years, beginning in 1283 (1875-6) and ending in 1293 (1886-7).

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 391 of 1880, against the decree of Batoo Koilash Chunder Mookerjee, Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 3rd September 1880.

The defendant, however, neglected to give possession of the land leased to the plaintiff and the latter brought a suit for possession, and obtained a decree giving him possession; and after appeal, was put into possession on the 18th June 1879. The plaintiff then, on the 27th Joist 1286 (2nd June 1879), brought a suit against the defendant to recover damages for the year 1283 (1875-6), during which year he had been kept out of possession, and obtained a decree on the 16th July 1879.

On the 21st Joist 1289 (18th June 1880), he again sued to recover damages and interest for the years 1281, 1285, and 1286 F. S. (1876-7 to 1878-9) during which time he was kept out of possession.

The defendant contended that the claim in this latter suit should have been included in the former suit, and it not being so included, the suit was barred under s. 43 of Act X of 1877.

The Subordinate Judge held, that the claim for damages was a cause of action recurring year by year; that the claim in suit related to a claim subsequent to the period covered in the former suit; and that, therefore, the suit was not barred under s. 12. He also held that the case was the converse of the illustration to s. 43 of the Code, and that, inasmuch as no claim [145] for damages for the year 1286 (1878-9) could have been raised in the former suit, he gave the plaintiff a decree for the greater part of the sums claimed by him.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Unmoda Pershad Banerjee and Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellant.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose, Mr. C. Gregory, and Mr. M. L. Sandel for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—This is a suit for the recovery of damages from the defendant under the following circumstances:—A ticea patta was executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff on the 13th Shrabun 1282, stipulating that the plaintiff should remain in possession of the property leased from 1283 to 1293 on a fixed rent, which was to be applied to the payment of Government revenue, the interest upon the zurpeshgi-money, and other charges. The possession of the leasehold property not having been given to the plaintiff, a suit was brought to recover possession, and a decree was passed in his favour on the 19th of December 1877. On the 2nd of June 1879, corresponding with the 27th Joist 1286, a suit for the profits of the ticea lease for the year 1283 was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, and a decree was obtained. The present suit was brought for the profits of the ticea for the years 1284 to 1286. An objection was taken in the lower Court that this suit was barred by the provisions of s. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1877. This objection was overruled in the lower Court, which decreed the plaintiff's suit. In appeal this objection has been again taken before us, and we think that the contention of the appellant upon this point is valid, so far as the claim for 1284 and 1285 is concerned. It is supported by a decision of this Court in the case of Taruck Chunder Mookerjee v. Panchu Mohan Debba (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 791). That case is not distinguishable from the present in any respect. That was a suit for rent, and the present is [146] a suit for damages, and if there be any distinction, the distinction is against the plaintiff. Section 13, as it stood when the suit of 1879 was brought, was to the following effect: "Every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action, but a plaintiff, etc., etc. If a plaintiff omits to sue for, or intentionally relinquish any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue for the portion so omitted or relinquished."

Now what was the cause of action in the former suit which was brought on the 2nd of June 1879? The cause of action was the breach of contract on the part of the defendant in not having made over possession of the leasehold property to the plaintiff. The particular amount which should have been claimed in that suit was the amount of damages which had then accrued from the wrongful act of the defendant. In measuring the amount of the damages, if the plaintiff chose only to include the profits of 1283, he certainly cannot bring a second suit for any portion of the claim which had thus accrued due, and for which he omitted to sue.

The suit was brought in the month of Joist 1286, and it was incumbent upon the plaintiff, under s. 43, to include in his claim the whole amount of damages sustained by him up to the date when that suit was brought. There is no question that the damages for the years 1284 and 1285 had then accrued due, therefore the plaintiff cannot successfully claim these damages in this suit. But it has been further contended that the damages for the year 1286 also had accrued due then, because the suit was brought in the last month of the agricultural year 1286. But we have no evidence on the record from which we can say that, on the 27th Joist 1286, the plaintiff, if he had been in possession, could have realized the whole or any portion of the rents and profits of that year of the leasehold property. Then it is further contended that the plaintiff could have at least claimed the interest due to him up to the month of Joist 1286, and that, therefore, to that extent the claim for the year 1286 should be disallowed.

Now, in the former suit for the damages of 1283, the Court decided that, according to the terms of the agreement, the [147] interest would not fall due till the end of the year. The parties are bound by that decision. Therefore no portion of the claim for 1286 is shown to have accrued due on the 27th Joist 1286, when the first suit for damages was brought. This part of the claim is, therefore, not affected by the provisions of s. 43.

The plaintiff has taken objection to the finding of the lower Court as to the amount of damages, but we are of opinion that there is no valid ground for impugning the correctness of the lower Court's decision upon this point.

We, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Court so far as it relates to the years 1284 and 1285, and dismiss the plaintiff's suit for these years. The decree of the lower Court in respect of the year 1286 is confirmed. The plaintiff will pay and receive costs in both Courts in proportion to the claim dismissed and decreed.

Decree modified.

Breach of contract in planting trees on land let for agricultural purposes—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 27 Act X of 1859—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sched. ii, art. 120.

Section 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 only relates to such suits as could be brought either by the landlord or tenant under Act X of 1859, and will not apply to an alternative claim, put forward in a suit for ejectment, to compel the defendant to remove trees from certain lands leased to him for agricultural purposes. Article 120 of sched. ii of Act XV of 1877 is applicable to such claims.

THIS was a suit brought on the 13th Bysack 1286 (19th April 1879) to eject the defendant from two plots of land, on the ground that he had committed a breach of contract in planting trees on his land which had been leased out to him for agricultural purposes only.

[148] The plaintiff alleged that the trees were planted on plot No. 1 in 1284 F. S. (1876-7), and on plot No. 2 in 1281 F. S. (1873-4), and he asked that the defendant might be ejected, or in the alternative that the defendant might be compelled to remove the trees.

The defendant pleaded limitation, contending that the trees were planted on plot No. 1 in 1282 F.S. (1874-5), and on plot No. 2 in 1274 F. S. (1866-7).

The Munsif found that the suit in respect of plot No. 2 was barred by limitation, more than twelve years having elapsed since the trees were planted; but as regards plot No. 1 he held, that the suit was in time, and therefore gave the plaintiff a decree, ejecting the defendant from plot No. 1, and ordering the removal of the trees.

Both the plaintiff and the defendant appealed to the district Judge. The Judge dismissed the plaintiff's appeal and decreed that of the defendant, directing the dismissal of the whole of the plaintiff's suit as being barred by s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Taruck Nath Palit for the Appellant.

Baboo Pron Nath Pundit for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER, Offg. C.J., and NORRIS, J.) was delivered by Mitter, Offg. C.J.—This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to eject the defendant from two plots of land constituting his holding. The suit was based upon the ground that, under a contract, or according to the custom of the country, the defendant was bound to use the land of his holding for agricultural purposes only ; but that the defendant, in contravention of this condition, planted trees upon the land in dispute, and converted it into a garden.

The plaintiff alleged that this planting of trees took place in October 1876. The suit was brought on the 19th of April 1879. The plaintiff in his plaint sought for two reliefs. He [149] asked first for the ejectment of the defendant, and if the defendant was not liable to be ejected, he next asked in the alternative that the defendant should be compelled to remove the trees planted by him.

As regards one of the plots in dispute the Munsif found that the planting of the trees had taken place more than twelve years before the date of this suit. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit in so far as it related to this plot. But with reference to the other plot he found that the trees were planted on it within twelve years from the date of the suit, and that, therefore, the suit was not barred by limitation. Upon the merits the Munsif finding that the plaintiff's allegation was made out, awarded a decree in his favour.

Against that decree, which was partly in favour of the plaintiff and partly in favour of the defendant, both the plaintiff and the defendant appealed to the District Judge.

The District Judge dismissed the plaintiff's appeal and decreed that of the defendant, directing the dismissal of the whole of the plaintiff's suit, on the ground that it was barred by limitation under the provisions of s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869. He came to this conclusion, because, on the face of the plaint, the suit was brought more than one year after the alleged planting of trees.

Section 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 only relates to such suits as could be brought either by the landlord or tenant under Act X of 1859. The claim of the plaintiff so far as it seeks to eject the defendant was a claim which was cognizable under Act X of 1859, and therefore we are of opinion that decision of the District Judge, so far as it disallows the claim of the plaintiff for ejectment of the defendant, is correct.

But s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 will not apply to that part of the plaintiff's claim in which he seeks to compel the defendant to remove the trees, because a suit of that nature was not cognizable under Act X of 1859. Therefore, so far as that part of the plaintiff's claim is concerned, the decision of the lower Appellate Court is not correct.

Then the question arises, what article of the Limitation Act of 1877 governs this part of the plaintiff's claim ?

[150] It was contended on behalf of the defendant that art. 31 sched. ii of that Act applies.

We are clearly of opinion that this contention is not correct, and we are supported in this opinion by the decision in the case of Kilar Nath Nag v. Sritirutno (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 34). In our opinion art. 120 governs this part of the plaintiff's case ; and the lower Appellate Court will have to determine whether it is barred under that article or not.

We, therefore, set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court so far as it dismisses the plaintiff's claim to compel the defendant to remove the trees, and remand this case to that Court for retrial with reference to that relief. The costs will abide the result.

It is admitted that the appeals, numbered from 926 to 933 both inclusive, will be governed by this decision. The same order will be made in those cases also.

Case remanded.

Mahomed Siddik and others.....Plaintiffs*

Suit to compel registration -Registration Act (III of 1877), ss. 73, 77.

Under the Registration Act of 1877, a suit to compel registration is maintainable only when the provisions of s. 77 of the Act have been complied with. A person omitting to make an application to the Registrar as provided by s. 73, within the time provided by s. 72, cannot be said to have complied with the conditions precedent to a suit under s. 77. Independently of s. 77 of the Act, no suit will lie.

Bhagwan Singh v. Khuda Baksh (I. L. R., 3 All., 397) followed.

Ram Ghulam v. Chotey Lal (I. L. R., 2 All., 46) dissented from.

THIS was a suit to compel the defendant to register a certain mokurari lease granted to the plaintiff on the 27th of January 1880. The plaintiffs alleged that they filed the lease in the Sub-[151]Registrar's office at Patna on the 31st of January 1880, but that the defendant appeared and denied execution, and that the Sub-Registrar, on the 9th of February 1880, refused registration. On the 8th of April 1880, the plaintiffs applied under s. 73 to the Registrar to establish his right to registration, but the Registrar held that the application was made out of time,—i.e., more than thirty days after the date of the refusal to register.

The plaintiffs then brought this suit under s. 77 of Act III of 1877 to compel registration. The defendant denied execution of the deed, and contended that the suit was barred.

The Munsif found that a Civil Court could not direct the registration of an instrument of which registration had been refused, and as to which the person complaining of non-registration had not presented an application under s. 73 to the Registrar in time; that such an order would, if made, override the express provisions of limitation set out in the Registration Act, and held that the suit was barred, inasmuch as the application under s. 73 was not presented within thirty days after the Sub-Registrar had refused registration; and that the question could not be contested in a regular suit. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge, who overruled the Munsif's decision, holding, on the authority of Ram Ghulam v. Chotey Lal (I. L. R., 2 All., 46), that the sections of the Registration Act were merely permissive, and would not exclude such a suit as the one before him for the enforcement of the contract of sale, which included the obligation to register, and that although the plaintiffs might have been out of time under the Registration Act, yet they were at liberty to bring a regular suit for the purpose of enforcing the contract.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 672 of 1881, against the decree of H. Beveridge, Esq., Officiating Judge of Patna, dated the 27th January 1881, reversing the decree of Baboo Kodarnath Roy, Third Munsif of Patna, dated the 11th August 1880.

The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Bahoo Sahgram Singh for the Appellant.

Mr. Twidale for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J. This is an appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Patna, reversing the decision of the Munsif, [152] by which the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The decree appealed against is in these words :—"Defendant must cause registration of the deed and delivery of it, and put the plaintiffs in possession of the thing sold, and then plaintiffs will pay to her, or into Court, the Rs. 20 still due."

The plaintiffs brought this suit to compel the defendant to register a mokurari patta alleged to have been executed by her in their favour. It was alleged in the plaint that the defendant agreed to grant a mokurari patta of the property in dispute on a bonus of Rs. 100; that, according to this agreement, a mokurari patta was executed by the defendant on the 27th of January 1880; that, on that date, Rs. 80, out of Rs. 100, were paid, and the mokurari patta was made over to the plaintiffs; that the said document was filed by the plaintiffs in the Sub-Registry Office at Patna on the 31st of January 1880; that the defendant, in accordance with a summons issued upon her by the Sub-Registrar, appeared before that officer and denied the execution of that document. The Sub-Registrar, on the 9th of February following, refused registration. Against the order of the Sub-Registrar the plaintiffs preferred a complaint to the Registrar, by a petition dated the 8th April 1880. The Registrar, on the 28th of May 1880, refused to adjudicate upon the complaint, and rejected the application as it was made more than thirty days after the Sub-Registrar's refusal. Then the present suit was brought on the 5th of June 1880.

The question raised in the lower Court was, whether, under the circumstances stated above, the suit was maintainable. The Munsif being of opinion that the suit was not maintainable, dismissed it upon that amongst other grounds. The District Judge on appeal has overruled the Munsif's decision upon this point. We are of opinion that the Munsif's decision upon this point is correct.

We entirely agree in the reasons given by the Allahabad High Court in Bhagwan Singh v. Khuda Baksh (I. L. R., 3 All., 397), which supports the Munsif's view of the law. Under the Registration Act of 1877, such a suit as this is maintainable only when the provisions of s. 77 have been complied with. The District [153] Judge, relying upon a decision of Ram Ghulam v. Chotey Lal (I. L. R., 2 All., 46), was of opinion that the sections of the Registration Act are merely permissive, and that a suit of this nature is maintainable, although, it does not come within the purview of s. 77. The decision cited by the learned Judge fully supports his view ; but with deference to the learned Judges of the Allahabad Court, we find ourselves unable to agree in the view of the law taken in that case.

The most formidable objection to the maintenance of a suit of this nature lies in the circumstance that, under the Registration Act, the mokurari patta cannot be received in evidence, because it has not been duly registered under its provisions. The patta being not receivable in evidence, the main allegation upon which the plaintiffs' suit is based, viz., that a mokurari grant was made, is not capable of proof. It was upon this ground that a Full Bench of this Court, in the case of Sheikh Rahmatulla v. Sheikh Sarwatulla Kagechi (1 B. L. R., F. B., 58), held, that a suit like the present would not lie.

Then again, under s. 34 and s. 23 of the Registration Act of 1877, the Registering Officer is prohibited, subject to certain specified exceptions, from registering a document, unless it be presented for registration, and unless the persons executing such document or their representatives, assigns or agents authorized under the Act, appear before him within four months from the date of its execution. It may be that that period may lapse before a decision is arrived at by a Civil Court in a suit of this description. Should the Court in that case direct the Registering Officer to register the document in spite of the provisions of the Registration Act ?

Similarly, under the second para. of s. 71, a Registering Officer, after he has refused registration, and endorsed on the document the words 'registration refused,' is prohibited from accepting for registration a document so endorsed unless and until, under the provisions contained in the Act, the document is directed to be registered. In the place of this prohibition, is the Civil Court competent to direct the registration of a document, [154] although no steps have been taken under the provisions of the Registration Act to obtain an order for registration ?

These considerations clearly show that a suit like the present, independently of s. 77 of the Registration Act, will not lie.

In this case the plaintiffs cannot succeed under s. 77 of the Act, because they did not comply with the conditions precedent to the maintenance of a suit under that section. But it has been said that those conditions were complied with, because an application was made to the Registrar complaining of the Sub-Registrar's order refusing registration. This argument is not valid ; the application referred to above was not made within the time allowed by the Act. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that it cannot be said that the plaintiffs have complied with the conditions precedent for the maintenance of a suit under s. 77.

The decision of the Munsif was, therefore, right ; and the District Judge was in error in reversing it. The appeal is decreed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[The Allahabad High Court has held that a suit will lie independently of the provisions of the Act, 2 All., 46 ; 3 All. 397 ; 5 A. W. N. 329 ; 16 All 303 ; 24 All. 402. SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MITTER,

Tinumoni Dasi.....Plaintiff

versus

Nibarun Chunder Gupta and others.....Defendants.¹

Hindu Law Succession by daughter before her marriage --Subsequent marriage and birth of son---Death of such daughter---Succession of married sister.

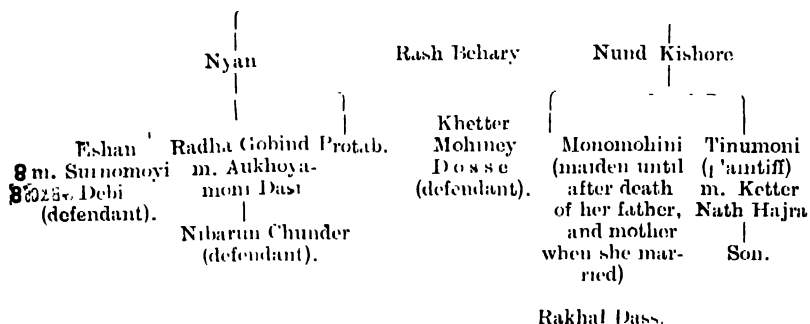

On the death of a daughter, who had succeeded before her marriage to her father's estate, to the exclusion of her married sister, the estate so inherited by her devolves upon her married sister, who has, or is likely to have, male issue, and not upon her own son.

[155] THIS was a suit to recover possession of certain properties which formerly belonged to one Nund Kishore.

The plaintiff alleged, that Nund Kishore left a wife and two daughters him surviving, that, on the death of his wife, her two married daughters, Tinumoni (the plaintiff) and Monomohini, inherited the property, and that, on the death of Monomohini, Tinumoni (the plaintiff) became sole heiress; but the defendants having taken possession of the properties, she brought this suit to recover possession.

The defendants, who were the heirs of the brothers of Nund Kishore, contended, that Nund Kishore left him surviving his wife, Monomohini, an unmarried daughter, and Tinumoni, who was married and had a son at that time; that, after the death of Nund Kishore's wife, Monomohini married and had a son named Rakhul Das; and that this son took the property to the exclusion of Tinumoni and her son.

The following is the genealogical tree of the family :

¹ Full Bench in Special Appeal, No. 1998 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Brojendra Coomar Seal, Judge of Burdwan, dated the 3rd July 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Bhubutty Roy, Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 29th September 1879.

The Munsif found that Tinumoni was, and that Monomohini was not, married at the date of the death of their mother; that Monomohini had subsequently married, and had a son Rakhal Dass; and that he took Nund Kishore's property to the exclusion of Tinumoni and her son, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who on the authority of the case of Radha Kishen Manjhee v. Rajah Ram Mundul (6 W. R. 147) dismissed the appeal and affirmed the decree of the Munsif.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. The Judges, PRINSEP and MOHENDRO NATH BOSE, JJ., referred to a Full [155] Bench the question, whether, according to the Hindu law current in Bengal, on the death of a daughter who had succeeded to her father's estate in her maidenhood (but who, subsequently to her parent's death, had married and had a son), to the exclusion of her married sister, the estate so inherited passes to her son or to her married sister capable of inheriting according to that law?

The reference to the Full Bench was as follows:—

This case raises a question on Hindu law as current in Bengal. The plaintiff is the married daughter of Nund Kishore, the deceased proprietor, and she seeks to take the inheritance left by him on the death of his maiden daughter, who had succeeded to it. She is opposed by the defendants, on the ground that the maiden daughter has left a son who has preference to the succession.

The lower Appellate Court has, on the authority of the case of Radha Kishen Manjhee v. Rajaram Mundul (6 W. R., 147), dismissed the plaintiff's claim.

In second appeal it is contended that the judgment in that case is not in accordance with the Hindu law: that although Macnaghten and Elberling in their Treatises have stated that, on the death of one who has inherited as a maiden daughter, her son succeeds to her father's estate before a married daughter, their opinion is not supported by any text of Hindu law; and the ruling of the Sadr Court in the case of Mussamat Bijai Debia v. Mussamat Unnopoona Debia (3 Sel. Rep., 26), on which it is based, does not bear it out.

We have considerable doubts as to the correctness of the judgment of the Division Bench. Referring to v. 30, s. 2, chap. xi of the Dayabhaga, it is clear that the maiden daughter takes the inheritance like any other female heiress, and, on her death, it goes to the heirs of her father, and not her own. Now these heirs, after the widow, are the daughters, and then the daughters' sons. Verse 25 establishes the position that the daughter's son succeeds after the daughter. These texts taken together, would exclude the maiden daughter's son in the presence of the married daughter of the deceased proprietor.

[157] The interpolation "without leaving issue" in v. 30 by Srikishen Tarkalanankar does not, in our opinion, raise any valid argument in favour of the inheritance of the maiden daughter's son. That was inserted, as we take it, simply to explain the text; for otherwise the husband could not be entitled to succeed to the wife's peculium. The verse first establishes the position that, after the maiden daughter, the inheritance devolves on the married daughter and others who would regularly succeed if there were no such unmarried daughter. It then distinguishes the character of the property taken by such daughter from a woman's peculiar property, by saying that the husband cannot take such property, as in the case of a woman's peculium when she dies without issue, and concludes by saying that the position of such a daughter is no better than that of the widow, and, as in the case of the latter, so in the case of the former, the heirs of the former owner inherit the property on her death.

That this was the meaning of Srikishen in inserting the above passage will appear from his own treatise called the Dayakrama Sangraha. In chap. 1, s. 3, v. 3, he has put the matter of the 30th verse of the Dayabhaga in his own language as follows, namely: "The following special rule must be here observed, namely, that if a maiden daughter, in whom the succession had once vested, and who was subsequently married, should die without having borne issue, the married sister who has, and the sister who is likely to have, male issue, inherit together the estate which had so vested in her. It does not become the property of her husband or others, for their right is exclusively to a woman's separate property."

That Srikishen, by making the insertion, never meant to place the maiden daughter's son in a superior position to married daughters, will clearly appear from chap. 1, s. 4, v. 1 of his own book, wherein he places the daughter's son after all the daughters. He says, "in default of all daughters, the daughter's son takes the inheritance," so that, as long as any daughter who is entitled to succeed remains, the daughter's son cannot come in. Nor can such preference, if given, be consistent with the principle of offering oblations, which is the regulating principle of succession in the Dayabhaga.

There is no reason why, according to that principle, the maiden daughter's sons should have preference over other daughter's sons in regard to the succession, when they equally offer the general cake to their deceased grandfather.

As the point is of great importance, we think it proper to refer the following question for the decision of the Full Bench, namely, whether, according to the Hindu law as current in Bengal, on the death of a daughter who had succeeded to her father's estate in her maidenhood, to the exclusion of her married sister, the estate so inherited passes to her son, or to her married sister capable of inheriting according to that law?

Baboo Mohun Mohun Roy and Baboo Rashbehary Ghose for the appellant contended that the case of Radha Krishen Manjhee v. Rajah Ram Mundul (6 W. R. 147), relied on by the lower Appellate Court, was not in accordance with Hindu law; that although Macnaghten and Elberling in their treatises have stated that, on the death of one who has inherited as a maiden daughter, her son succeeds to her father's estate before a married daughter, their opinion is not supported by any text of Hindu law; and the ruling of the Sadr Court in Mussamut Bipra Debia v. Mussamut Unnopoorna Debia (3 Sel. Rep., 26) on which it is based, does not bear it out. The Dayabhaga, chap. xi, s. 2, v. 5 clearly states that the maiden daughter takes the inheritance like any other female, and on her death it goes to the heirs of her father, and not to her own heirs; and the heirs, after the widow, are the daughters, and then the daughters' sons. See v. 25, s. 2, chap. xi, Dayabhaga, explained by Srikishen in chap. 1, s. 3, v. 3 of his Dayakrama Sangraha.

The Court here called on the respondents.

Baboo Sreenath Dass for the respondents.—The question must be decided by the Dayabhaga, chap. xi. Section 2, v. 30 lays down that, if a maiden daughter, in whom the succession has vested, and who has afterwards married, dies, the estate which was hers becomes the property of the married daughters, who would have succeeded if there had been no unmarried daughter [159] to succeed. But this only is the case, I contend, when the unmarried, who afterwards married, dies without issue, and this is shown by the interpolation of the words in v. 30, "without bearing issue," by Srikishen Tarkalankar. [MITTER, J.—The words "without issue" may be struck out as they do not appear in the original, and have been only interpolated by Srikishen. There are two reasons laid down why an unmarried daughter should succeed, whereas there is only one given for a married daughter.] Those are reasons for the succession, but not reasons for preference of one daughter over the other. In the chapters on daughters and daughters' sons Srikishen's own book points out what is meant by the words "after being married." Macnaghten's Hindu Law of inheritance, p. 24, lays down that if one of several daughters who had, as maidens, succeeded to their father's property, die leaving sons and sisters or sister's sons, then, according to the law in Bengal the sons take alone the share to which their mother was entitled, to the exclusion of the sisters and sisters' sons; and Elberling on Inheritance, Gift, &c., p. 76, is to the same effect. Section 30 of the Dayabhaga refers only to the case of a maiden daughter dying without leaving a son, and therefore the judgment of the lower Court is correct.

The Opinion of the Full Bench was as follows :—

We are of opinion that, on the death of a daughter, who had succeeded before her marriage to her father's estate to the exclusion of her married sister, the estate so inherited by her devolves upon her married sister, who has, or is likely to have, male issue, and not upon her own son.

According to the Hindu law in Bengal, the succession of females who have generally no heritable rights, takes place in certain exceptional cases specified in the Shasters. Jimutavahana, after citing the text of Baudhayana to the effect that "a woman is entitled not to the heritage; for females and persons deficient in an organ of sense or member are deemed incompetent to inherit," says, that "the succession of the widow and certain others takes effect under express texts without any contradiction to this maxim"—see Dayabhaga, chap. xi, s. 6, para. 11.

[160] There are also certain special rules applicable to the succession of a female. For example, on her death the succession devolves not upon her heirs, but upon the heirs of the last owner who had absolute estate in the property.

Of the exceptional female heirs, the widow ranks first. Jimutavahana, after laying it down that the widow is entitled to succeed on default of a son, grandson, or great-grandson, says in chap. xi, s. 1, para. 56: "But the wife must only enjoy her husband's estate after his demise. She is not entitled to make a gift, mortgage, or sale of it." Thus Katyayana says: "Let the childless widow, preserving unsullied the bed of her lord, and abiding with her venerable protector, enjoy with moderation the property until her death. After her, let the heirs take it." In commenting upon this passage, Jimutavahana says: "But when she (the widow) dies, the daughters or others who would regularly be heirs in default of the wife, take the estate."

Then in para. 65, s. 1, chap. xi, Dayabhaga, its author says: "In like manner if the succession have devolved on a daughter, those persons who would have been heirs of her father's property in her default take the succession on her death, not the heirs of her daughter's property."

Then the above rule is laid down in chap. xi, s. 2, paras. 30 and 31, as applicable to all cases of woman's succession. Referring to the text of Katyayana (chap. ii, s. 1, para. 56), Jimutavahana says in s. 30 cited above: "Since it has been shown by a text before cited that, on the decease of the widow in whom the succession had vested, the legal heirs of the former owner who would regularly inherit the property if there were no widow in whom the succession vested, viz., the daughters and the rest succeed to the wealth; therefore, the same rule is inferred a fortiori in the case of the daughter and grandson whose pretensions are inferior to the wife's (31), or the word 'wife' is employed with a general import, and it implies that the rule must be understood as applicable generally to the case of a woman's succession by inheritance."

There is no authority to be found in any portion of the Dayabhaga or any other Hindu law-book recognized in Bengal, [161] which shows that this rule, which is so clearly laid down as applicable to all cases of a woman's succession by inheritance, does not apply to the case of a maiden daughter's succession.

It is said that, in the opinion of Srikishen Tarkalankar (a commentator of the Dayabhaga, and also the author of a treatise on inheritance current in Bengal, viz., Dayakrama Sangraha), this rule is not applicable to the case of a maiden daughter succeeding to the property of her father, and then dying after marriage, leaving a son. But neither in his commentary, nor in his treatise, is to be found any passage clearly expressing this opinion. On the other hand, in the Dayakrama Sangraha, he says in chap. 1, s. 4, which treats of the right of succession of the daughter's son, that "in default of all daughters, the daughter's son takes the inheritance," &c., &c.

There is, therefore, no express authority in Srikishen's Dayakrama Sangraha, or in his commentary on the Dayabhaga, for the contention that the general rule applicable to the succession of a woman is not applicable to the case of a succession of a maiden daughter dying after marriage and leaving a son. But it has been contended, that this is the opinion of Srikishen, may be inferred, because in para. 30, chap. xi, s. 2 of the Dayabhaga, he suggests that, after the word 'die,' the words "without bearing issue" are understood. He does not assign any reason for this suggestion. We are left entirely to conjecture only, as to the ground for his holding that these words are understood. The passage with the words suggested by Srikishen placed within brackets runs thus: "But if a maiden daughter in whom the succession has vested, and who has been afterwards married (die without bearing issue), the estate which was hers, becomes the property of those persons, a married daughter or others who would regularly succeed if there were no such (unmarried daughter) in whom the inheritance vested, and in like manner succeed on her demise after it has so vested in her. It does not become the property of her husband or other heirs; for that text (which is declaratory of the right of the husband and the rest) is relative to a woman's peculiar property."

It is clear that this is an illustration of the general rule laid [162] down in the latter end of this and in the next paragraph, viz., that, in the case of woman's succession, the property on her death devolves not upon her heirs, but upon the heirs of the last owner. It is exceedingly probable that the annotator suggested the addition of the words "without leaving issue," thinking that the language of the author without these words would be open to the objection of want of precision. Because, on the death of a maiden daughter (in whom the succession had vested, and who had been afterwards married) leaving issue, the estate would "not become the property of her husband or other heirs" even if the law regulating the succession to a woman's peculiar property were applicable, because the husband would succeed only in default of issue.

In our opinion, therefore, Srikishen Tarkalankar suggested the addition of these words by way of mere verbal criticism upon the language of the paragraph (30) cited above, and that he did not intend thereby to lay down an exception to the general rule enunciated by Jimutavahana relating to the case of a woman's succession by inheritance.

In Macnaghten's Hindu Law, Vol. I, page 25. and Elberling on Inheritance, it is laid down that, in a case like the present, the son of the deceased sister is entitled to succeed to the exclusion of the married sister. No authority is cited in support of this doctrine, which is clearly contrary to the opinion of Jimutavahana. Furthermore, Mr. Macnaghten was mistaken in supposing that the case of Mussamut Bija Debia v. Mussamut Unnopoorna Debia (3 Sel. Rep., 26) was decided in accordance with the doctrine laid down by him. That case does not in any way support his view.

The case of Radha Kishen Manjee v. Rajah Ram Mundul (6 W. R., 147), referred to in the order of reference, seems to have been mainly decided on the authority of Macnaghten and Elberling. But the opinion of these two European text-writers on Hindu law being opposed to the Dayabhaga cannot be followed. The learned Judges who decided that case also referred to the Dayabhaga, chap. xi, s. 2, para. 30, as supporting their view. But in our opinion the text cited shows just the contrary.

[163] The decisions of the lower Courts are, therefore, erroneous. We accordingly reverse them. The case will be remanded for the trial of the other questions raised by the parties. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed—Case remanded.

NOTES.

[HINDU LAW—MAIDEN DAUGHTER'S SUCCESSION]

The text of Gautama prescribing the order of succession among daughters to those who are apratita and those who are apratistita has been the subject of different interpretations in the Mitakshara and the Dayabhaga schools. But the exclusion under either interpretation is temporary only, so that, when the succession opens again on the death, etc., of the daughter that was preferred by the application of that text, the unpreferred daughter then surviving succeeds to the estate, and not the next class of heirs to the propositus—32 All. 314; 2 C. P. L. R., 166; 5 C. P. L. R., 58; 5 I. C. 384; 7 A. I. J. 293; 7 I. C. 884. Even a prostitute daughter may thus come in, in the Bombay and the Madras schools where chastity is not a condition precedent to succession—31 Bom. 195; 9 Bom. L. R. 774. It should be noted, however, that in the Bombay School, (and in the Provinces that follow that law) the daughter takes an absolute estate in the inheritance, and as a consequence of this, it follows, that on her death, the inheritance devolves to her heirs and has not to be traced to the propositus; thus, the daughter unpreferred at first would be excluded altogether:—11 Bom. 285; 5 N. L. R., 13; 1 I. C., 213; 2 S. L. R. 59. Similar principles have been applied to the case of Stridhana inherited by daughters, the text of Gautama being primarily enunciated for stridhan.—(1890) 17 Cal., 911; (1895) 19 Mad. 107.]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd July, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER, OFFICIATING CHIEF JUSTICE, AND

MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Bessessur Bhugut and others.....Defendants

versus

Murli Sahu and othersPlaintiffs.*

Civil Procedure Codes (Act VIII of 1859), s. 246; and (Act X of 1877), ss. 97, 371--Limitation (Act XV of 1877), sched. ii, arts. 11 and 120.

The defendants attached certain property, which the plaintiffs alleged belonged to them. The plaintiffs preferred a claim to the property under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859; this claim was disallowed on the 15th August 1877.

In June 1878, the plaintiffs brought a suit to establish their title to the property attached and for confirmation of possession. Pending this suit, the principal defendant died, and the plaintiffs applied for an order to substitute certain persons as defendants. The Court thereupon directed the issue of a summons on the defendants proposed by the plaintiffs to appear and defend the suit; but the plaintiffs failing to pay the costs of the service of this summons, the suit was dismissed on the 14th March 1879.

On the 4th March 1880, the plaintiffs again brought a suit to establish their title to the same property, and for confirmation of possession.

Held, that the order of the 15th August 1877 not being an order passed under s. 283 of Act X of 1877, art. 11 of sched. ii of Act XV of 1877 did not apply, but that art. 120 of sched. ii was applicable; and that as the first suit had not been dismissed upon the merits the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the second suit.

Baboo Umakali Moorkerjee for the Appellants.

Baboo Turuck Nath Paulit for the Respondents.

[164] THE facts of this case are sufficiently set out in the Judgment of the Court (MITTER, Offg. C.J. and NORRIS, J.) which was delivered by Mitter, Offg. C.J.—It appears that the appellants before us held a decree against certain persons, who are on the record styled the second party defendants, and in execution of that decree the property in dispute in this case was attached. The plaintiffs intervened under s. 246 of the Procedure Code of 1859, claiming to have the property in dispute released on the ground that it did not belong to the second party defendants, but to themselves. Their claim was disallowed by the Court executing the decree on the 15th of August 1877.

The present suit was brought on the 4th of March 1880 for the purpose of establishing the plaintiffs' title to the property in dispute, and for confirmation of their possession thereof. The object of the suit apparently was to obtain a declaration that the decree-holders were not entitled to sell this property in execution of their decree against the second party defendants.

* Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 27 of 1882, against the order of H.W. Gordon, Esq., Officiating Judge of Mozsufferpore, dated the 4th January 1882, reversing the decree of Baboo Koylash Chunder Mookerjee, Second Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 25th August 1882.

The Court of First Instance dismissed the plaintiffs' suit as barred by limitation. It was of opinion that art. 11 of the 2nd schedule of the present Limitation Act applied to this suit, and that as it was not brought within one year from the 15th of August 1877, when the Execution Court disallowed the plaintiffs' claim under s. 246, it was barred.

There was also another question before that Court, and it arose in this way.

Before the present suit was brought, the plaintiffs had brought another suit for obtaining the same declaration, and while that suit was pending the principal defendant,—namely, the father of the appellants before us,—died. Thereupon, the plaintiffs applied for the substitution of the appellants in the place of their deceased father. The Court granted their application, and directed that a summons should issue to the appellants before us to appear on a day fixed by the Court to defend the suit; but the plaintiffs having failed to pay the costs required for the service of this summons the suit was dismissed.

With reference to this proceeding, the appellants contended before the Court of First Instance that the dismissal of the suit [165] under such circumstances operated as a bar to the maintenance of the present suit.

On this point also the decision of the first Court was in favour of the appellants before us.

On appeal, the District Judge overruled both the pleas raised in the defence. He was of opinion that as the order of the 15th of August 1877 was not an order passed under s. 283 of Act X of 1877, art. 11 of sched. ii of the Limitation Act did not apply.

As regards the other objection, the Judge held that the suit was not dismissed under the provisions of s. 371 of Act X of 1877, but was dismissed under the provisions of s. 97 of that Act; and as an order passed under s. 97 is no bar to a fresh suit, the District Judge was of opinion that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain this suit.

Against this judgment the present appeal has been preferred.

We agree with the District Judge in the opinion expressed by him on both these points. The Limitation Act must be strictly construed. In this case there is no doubt that Act XV of 1877 would apply, because the present suit was brought more than two years after the passing of that Act. But then it must be shown that art. 11, which the Court of First Instance held barred the present suit, is really applicable. That article distinctly refers to an order passed under s. 283 of Act X of 1877, and as the order of the 15th of August 1877 was not an order passed under that section, the article in question cannot apply: and if art. 11 is not applicable, then art. 120, which gives six years as the period of limitation for all the other kinds of suits not elsewhere provided for in the Act, will apply; and if art. 120 applies then the suit is in time.

But it has been argued that if the order of the 15th of August 1877 is not to be considered as an order passed under s. 283 of Act X of 1877, then the plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain this suit at all, because s. 246, which gives to an unsuccessful party in a proceeding under it the right of instituting a suit to establish his title, was repealed by s. 3 of Act X of 1877, and there is no provision in that Act, nor in s. 6^{*} of Act I of 1868, saving the existing rights of the parties.

Matters done under an enactment before its repeal to be unaffected.

*[Sec. 6 :—The repeal of any Statute, Act or Regulation, shall not affect anything done or any offence committed, or any fine or penalty incurred, or any proceedings commenced before the repealing Act shall have come into operation.]

Without expressing any opinion upon the question whether [166] the repeal of an Act affects existing rights (and, as at present advised, I am disposed to think that, independently of s. 6 of Act I of 1868, the repealing of an Act would not affect rights already acquired), it seems to us that the contention of the learned pleader for the appellants is not valid.

If s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859 is to be considered as wholly repealed, then the learned pleader must establish that the present suit is barred by any of the provisions of Act X of 1877. The present suit is a suit of a civil nature, and s. 11 of Act X of 1877 says, that the Courts shall, subject to the provisions contained in that Act, have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits the cognizance of which is barred by any enactment for the time being in force. The learned pleader must, therefore, make out that the cognizance of this suit is barred by any enactment now in force; but he has not been able to do so. We are, therefore, of opinion that there is no force in this contention.

Then, as to the question whether the order of dismissal passed in the former suit would not operate as a bar to the present suit, we entirely agree in the view which the District Judge has taken of that order.

Section 371 of Act X of 1877 cannot apply. That section applies only to orders passed under the last paragraph of s. 368, and the second paragraph of s. 370. Under the last paragraph of s. 368 a suit abates, and under the last paragraph of s. 370 an order of dismissal may be passed when the circumstances mentioned in that section come into existence.

The order referred to, therefore, not having been passed under s. 371, the only other section under which it could have been passed is s. 97.

But supposing that s. 97 were not applicable if the order was not passed under s. 371, the cognizance of the present suit is not barred, because the order dismissing the suit was not an order disposing of it on the merits.

On all these grounds, we are of opinion that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[167] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th July, 1882.

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MITTER, AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Hari Ram and another.....Defendants

versus

Denaput Singh and another.....Plaintiffs.

Unpaid vendor—Lien—Creditor of vendor, Right of, to lien—Mortgage.

Although an unpaid vendor holds a lien upon property sold for the consideration-money, yet a creditor of that vendor cannot claim the same right.

THE facts of this case were, that the plaintiffs, under a chitti dated March 1873, lent to Ram Nath and Hem Nath a sum of Rs. 192, and that Hem Nath and Ram Nath being possessed of a share in a certain mauza, the former sold his share to one Gokoola Persad, defendant No. 2, on the 10th July 1874, and on the same date, Hem Nath, as guardian of his deceased brother's child, granted a zurpeshgi lease of Ram Nath's share to Gokoola Persad, defendant No. 2. Out of the consideration-money of these two transactions by an arrangement between the parties, Rs. 192 was left in the hands of defendant No. 2, to be paid over to the plaintiffs in satisfaction of their loan of March 1873. Defendant No. 2 neglected to pay over this sum, and the plaintiffs brought a suit for its recovery; and on the 13th September 1876 obtained a decree against defendant No. 2, for the amount due, and in execution of this decree caused the property bought by Gokoola Persad, the defendant No. 2, to be sold, and themselves became the purchasers at the sale on the 2nd April 1877, and were put into possession by the Court.

Defendant No. 2, on the 10th April 1875, had given a mortgage of the properties so purchased in execution by the plaintiffs, to defendant No. 1; and the latter, on the 18th May 1877, brought a suit on his mortgage-bond and obtained thereon a decree. Defendant No. 1 executed his decree by putting up the property to sale, and purchasing it himself on the 6th May 1878. The plaintiffs objected to the sale, alleging that they held [168] an equitable lien on the properties, as the money for which they had obtained a decree was in reality part of the purchase money which defendant No. 2 had to pay to Hem Nath and Ram Nath, and that they stood in the place of these two latter; and on their objections being overruled on the 23rd March 1878, brought this present suit on the 22nd March 1879 to have the sale of the 6th May 1878 set aside, and to reverse the execution-proceedings which disallowed their objections, on the ground that their purchase prevailed over the defendants' mortgage, inasmuch as they had a prior lien upon the property.

Defendant No. 1 contended that the decree obtained by the plaintiffs was merely a simple money-decree which could create no lien on the property in suit; that the property having been previously mortgaged by the judgment-debtor to him, the plaintiffs could, by their purchase, which extended merely to the rights and interests of the judgment-debtor, only acquire a right of redemption in the property, and not having redeemed it before it was brought to sale in execution of his decree, their right lapsed.

The Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that the plaintiffs only purchased the right of redemption, and not having exercised their right before the purchase of defendant No. 1, their right was annihilated.

The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge, who held, that defendant No. 1 acquired nothing by his purchase, the plaintiffs not having been made parties to the suit of defendant No. 1, and that the plaintiffs' purchase was not therefore affected; and that they being in possession, the order of the 23rd March 1878, made against them when objecting to the sale, was wrong, and for these reasons he reversed the decree of the Munsif and set aside the miscellaneous order of the 23rd March 1878.

The defendant No. 1 appealed to the High Court.

Moonshee Mahomed Yusuf for the Appellant.—The appellant has a preferential title to the property, his decree being a mortgage decree, the suit was brought upon a mortgage-bond, and the whole claim decreed, it must therefore be taken that not only the claim for money, but also the claim upon the property, [169] was decreed—Debi Churan v. Pirbhu Din Ram (1. L. R., 3 All., 388). The suit upon the mortgage-bond was instituted on the 17th January 1877, and the present plaintiff purchased in execution of his money-decree on the 2nd April 1877, therefore the doctrine of lis pendens applies.

Baboo Karuna Sindhu Mookerjee for the Respondents.—The decree obtained by the defendants was in reality a money-decree; the doctrine of lis pendens can have no application to the case of an execution-purchaser, but the doctrine would apply to cases of voluntary alienation—Sreemutty Gourmonee Dabee v. Charles Reed (2 Taylor and Bell, 83), Dhirendro Chunder Mookerjee v. Anund Moyee Dossee (1 W. R., 103), Nuffur Merdu v. Ram Lall Adhicary (15 W. R., 308), and Ali Shah v. Husain Baksh (1. L. R., 1 All., 588). If a third party purchases at an auction-sale pending suit, he may be made a party by a supplemental bill—Story on Equity Pleading, 342.

The doctrine of lis pendens was held to apply in the following cases: Rajkishen Mookerjee v. Radha Madhub Holdar (21 W. R., 349), Lala Kali Prosad v. Buli Singh (1. L. R., 4 Cal., 789, s.c., 3 C. L. R., 396), Rabia Khanum v. J. P. Wise (23 W. R., 329), and Manual Fruval v. Sanagapalli Latchmidevamma (7 Mad. H. C., 105), on the supposition that there was no distinction between voluntary and involuntary alienations; but the Privy Council, in the case of Donendro Nath Sanyal v. Ram Coomarr Ghose (10 C. L. R., 281) have decided that there is a distinction. If the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply, then even supposing that the decree which the defendant obtained was a mortgage-decree, still he would get nothing at the sale in execution of his decree. The mortgagee can only sell his lien and the property of the judgment-debtor; and if at the sale the judgment-debtor has no property, the lien cannot pass to the purchaser, because the lien is inseparable from the property—Metharam Das v. Boloram Phukan (9 C. L. R., 233). The only remedy which the mortgagee has, is to [170] enforce his lien against the person in possession of the property—Chowdhry Jonmajoy Mullick v. Dassi Moni Dass (9 C. L. R., 353).

Moonshee Mahomed Yusuf in reply cited Manual Fruval v. Sanagapalli Latchmidevamma (7 Mad. H. C., 105).

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Garth, C.J.—The facts of this case are briefly these: Two persons, Ram Nath and Hem Nath, took a loan of Rs. 192 from the plaintiffs, under a chitti dated the 17th Falgoun 1280 (March 1873). Hem Nath sold his share in Mauza Rizapore Damudur to Gokoola Persad, defendant No. 2, on the 24th July 1874. On the same date Hem Nath, as the guardian of his nephew Mothoora Persad, son of his deceased brother, the aforesaid Ram Nath, granted a zurpeshgi lease of Ram Nath's share in the same property also to Gokoola Persad, defendant No. 2. Out of the consideration-moneys of these two transactions, by an arrangement between the parties, Rs. 192 was left with the defendant No. 2 to be paid over to the plaintiffs in liquidation of the debt due under the chitti of the 17th Falgoun 1280 (March 1873), but this money was not paid by the defendant No. 2 to the plaintiffs, who brought a suit for its recovery; and, on the 13th September 1876, obtained a money-decree against the defendant No. 2.

Before this decree was passed, defendant No. 2, Gokoola Persad, mortgaged the mauza in suit, that is Rizapore Damudur, to the defendants, first party in this suit.

The plaintiffs, in execution of their decree, caused the property in suit to be sold, and purchased it themselves on the 2nd April 1877.

The defendants first party brought a suit against the defendant No. 2 to enforce their mortgage-bond dated the 10th April 1875, and obtained a decree on the 18th May 1877. The plaintiffs' decree was for a very small amount, viz., for Rs. 192, with costs and interest. The decree obtained by the first party defendants was for a very large amount, viz., about a lac of [171] rupees. The defendants first party, in execution of their decree, attached the property in suit. The plaintiffs thereupon intervened, and objected to the sale, on the ground of their prior purchase dated the 2nd April 1877; their case before the execution Court was that, under their decree, they held an equitable lien upon the property in dispute, because the money for which they had obtained a decree was really part of the consideration-money which Gokoola Persad, the vendee, had to pay to Hem Nath and Ram Nath. They contended that as Hem Nath and Ram Nath could claim a lien upon the property sold for that portion of the consideration-money which the vendee Gokoola Persad had not paid, they, standing in the shoes of Hem Nath and Ram Nath, were entitled to claim the same lien.

The execution Court, however, on the 23rd March 1878, disallowed the claim and directed the property to be sold, unless the plaintiffs should satisfy the mortgage-decree. The value of the property in dispute being only Rs. 751, the plaintiffs, of course, did not pay the amount due upon the defendant's decree, which was for upwards of a lac of rupees, in order to save it; and it was accordingly sold in execution of the defendants' decree and purchased by the defendants on the 6th May 1878.

The plaintiffs then brought this suit on the 22nd March 1879, for the declaration of their title to the mauza in suit, on the ground that their purchase should prevail over the defendants' mortgage, because they had a prior lien upon the property. The Munsif tried this question only, viz., whether the plaintiffs held a prior lien upon the property or not. This question was raised in the first and the second issues framed by the Munsif. The Munsif was of opinion that the plaintiffs' contention was not valid. The plaintiffs being only creditors of the vendors, in his opinion, could not claim the same lien upon the property sold for any unpaid portion of the purchase-money which the vendors had. He accordingly dismissed the suit.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge disposed of the case on an issue which was not raised by the parties. He decreed the plaintiffs' claim, because the plaintiffs were not made parties to the defendants' suit upon their mortgage bond. The Subordinate Judge was not right in disposing of the suit by allowing [172] the plaintiffs to alter the nature of their contention in the Appellate Court. The plaintiffs, it seems to us, purposely did not put their case on the ground upon which the Subordinate Judge has decided it, because it would have enabled them only to obtain a temporary victory. If the defendants were to bring a suit against them to enforce their lien, the property in dispute could not be saved unless they would pay the whole of the mortgage decree, which evidently they would not do because it is of small value compared with the amount of the mortgage-debt. The plaintiffs, therefore, put their case upon the only ground upon which, if they succeeded, they thought they would be able to reap a real benefit—that is, if they could establish their prior lien, they would be entitled to hold the property in dispute free from the defendants' mortgage. The Subordinate Judge was, therefore, not right in allowing the plaintiffs to make out a new case in the Appellate Court.

Then, as regards the Munsif's decision, we are of opinion that it is correct in law. It is true that an unpaid vendor holds a lien upon the property sold for the consideration-money, but a creditor of that vendor cannot claim the same right. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be reversed with costs, and the decree of the Munsif will be restored with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Sale for arrears of rent—Publication of notice of sale—Material irregularity—Reg. VIII of 1819, s. 8, cl. 2.

Clause 2, s. 8 of Reg. VIII of 1819, which provides that a notice of sale under the Regulation shall be stuck up in the catchery of the zamindar, is not complied with by serving the notice upon the zamindar himself or his agent. The object of the Regulation is to make known to the holders of under-tenures and ryots and the residents of the place that the patni will be sold if [173] the arrears are not paid off within the time specified, and if the notice is not stuck up in the cutchery, as prescribed by the Regulation, there is such a material irregularity in the publication as will avoid the sale.

Baboo Aushootosh Dhur, Baboo Rajender Nath Bose, and Baboo Gopal Chunder Ghose for the Appellants.

Baboo Gopi Nath Mookerjee for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and BOSE, JJ.), which was delivered by Tottenham, J.—This is an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Midnapore, setting aside a patni sale on the ground of certain irregularities, which the Court below considered to have been established, and which it thought had been the cause of the patni being sold for an inadequate price.

As to the irregularities found by the lower Court, we think that there is only one with which we need deal. As to the others we doubt whether they should be held to be irregularities at all; and even if they are, we do not think that the plaintiffs, the patnidars, can be said to have sustained any injury therefrom. The material irregularity, however, upon which the lower Court's decree must stand or fall is that relating to the service of the notice under s. 8 of the Patni Regulation. The Regulation requires that there shall be a three-fold publication of the notice: A notice is to be published in the Collector's office; a similar notice is to be stuck up at the Sadr Cutchery of the zamindari; and a copy or extract of such part of the notice as may apply to the individual case shall be sent by the zamindar to be similarly published at the cutchery or at the principal town or village upon the land of the defaulter. The Regulation further provides that the notice to be sent to the mufassal shall be served by a single peon, who shall bring back the receipt of the defaulter or his manager for the same, or, in the event of inability to procure this, the signatures of three substantial persons residing in the neighbourhood, in attestation of the notice having been brought and published on the spot.

[174] The dispute in the case relates to the notice which the law requires to be published on the spot,—that is, at the defaulter's cutchery.

The Court below has found it to be false that the notice was, as alleged, stuck up on the door of the cutchery.

The evidence shows that the service was accomplished by making the notice over to the karkoon of the defaulter in the absence of the defaulter himself and his naib. The karkoon admits having received it and having given a receipt for it. He also proves that, on the return of the naib, he made the notice over to him.

We have no doubt, therefore, upon the evidence, that the defaulter, or his manager, had notice of the intended sale of the patni for arrears; but the Court below holds that such service was not sufficient; and that, when the Regulation lays down that the notice shall be stuck up at the cutchery of the defaulter, or in some principal town or village upon his land, it is not sufficient to hand it over to one of his servants and take his receipt, that servant not being the manager of the defaulter.

Baboo Aushootosh Dhur, who appears for the appellants, admits that if the Regulation intended the local publication of the notice to be for the information of ryots and holders of under-tenures in the patni, then mere service of the notice on the defaulter's servant would be insufficient; but he contends that the Regulation does not contemplate any such publication as should inform the local public,—that is, the publication of the notice in the mufassal. He says, that the only information intended for the public is that to be gained from the notice suspended in the Collector's office and the zamindar's cutchery.

He contends that the notice prescribed for the defaulter's cutchery is simply intended to convey information to the defaulter or his manager that the patni is in jeopardy.

We do not take the same view of the law. If the notice were only intended to convey private intimation to the defaulter or his agent, the law would hardly have used the term 'published.' To publish is, in our opinion, to make public,—that is, to convey information to the public or all whom it may concern.

There is one point which merits observation, although it has [176] not been brought to our notice by the pleaders on either side; and it is this—that, in the notice issued by the zamindar to the defaulter, it is set out specifically that "it is the duty of the peon, who is entrusted with this notice, to proceed first of all to the principal mauza or cutchery of the aforesaid lot, stick up the same and bring back the receipt, according to the form of the publication of this notice, from the taluqdar himself or from his naib, or any other agent." It is quite clear, therefore, that the zamindar himself, or at any rate the person who prepared this notice for him, fully understood that the Regulation requires what we now hold to be its requirements. Baboo Aushootosh Dhur has referred us to the case of Hunooman Doss v. Bipro Churn Roy (20 W. R., 132) in which a Division Bench of this Court held, that when it was shown that the defaulter's cutchery was an empty and ruinous building, and the notice had therefore been served upon the gomashtha's residence, where the business of the patnidar was actually carried on, such service was an infinitely more exact compliance with the spirit of the law, than service of the notice at the deserted cutchery would have been. The Judges in that case said that the object of the Regulation in this particular was to ensure the publication of the notice to the defaulter or his manager. The pleader, therefore, asks us to infer that the Regulation does not intend any such notice to any body else, and that personal service upon a servant is equal, not to say superior, to the mode of service prescribed in the Regulation, that is, the sticking up of the notice on the cutchery. We need hardly say that we fully concur in the judgment pointed out to us so far as it goes. We fully agree that where the gomashtha's house has practically taken the place of an old and dilapidated cutchery, publication at that house sufficiently meets the requirements of the Regulation. We also agree that the object of the Regulation in this particular is to ensure the publication of the notice to the defaulter or his agent. But we do not find that the Judges in that case said that this was the exclusive object. Had they said so, we should have felt compelled to disagree with them. In our opinion the object of the Regulation is also to make known to the holder of under-[176] tenures and ryots and the residents of the place generally that the patni will be sold if the arrears are not paid off within the time specified; and in the case cited we find that the notice was not merely served personally on the gomashtha, and shut up by him in his box, but was, as prescribed by the Regulation, stuck up on the house. There is, therefore, nothing in that case which to our minds relaxes the rules laid down in s. 8 of the Regulation.

As observed before, Baboo Aushootosh Dhur has admitted that should we take the view we have just expressed of the object of the Regulation his case must fail. We have thus arrived at the result which he foreshadowed.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Luchmiput Singh.....One of the defendants

versus

Amir Alum (Plaintiff) and others.....Defendants.

Mahomedan Law—Wuqf—Provisions for payment of debts and maintenance—Minor plaintiff—Guardian.

A Mahomedan created a wuqf of all his property, and appointed his minor grandson mutwali, providing that, during the minority, the property should be managed by the minor's father. The deed contained a provision that, in the first place, certain debts should be paid, and then provided that the property should be applied towards the religious uses created and the maintenance of the settlor's grandsons and their male issue. In execution of a decree against the minor's father, the endowed property was attached and sold. In a suit by the minor through his sister, as guardian, to recover possession of the property, in which suit the sister was not made guardian ad litem by an order of Court, but was allowed to sue by the District Judge.

Held, that the suit was maintainable as framed.

Held also, that, notwithstanding the provisions for payment of debts and maintenance, the wuqf was valid.

By a wuqfnama, dated the 6th February 1872, one Shah Enayet Hossein endowed certain properties, which he had inherited from his wife Bibi Rujjan, for the expenses of the [177] musjid and the tomb of the holy personages of his family, the servants of a certain asthana, and for performing the urs and fateha at the tomb; and he appointed Shah Mahomed Amir Alum, his grandson, the minor son of Syed Shah Asudulla, as mutwali. The deed directed that so long as Shah Mahomed Amir Alum remained a minor, Syed Shah Asudulla should manage the property, and it directed that the manager should, in the first place, pay certain debts, and afterwards apply the property towards the religious uses created and the maintenance of the settlor's grandsons and their male issue. Besides the endowed property Syed Shah Asudulla was possessed of property which he had acquired by inheritance.

In execution of a decree obtained by Brij Mohun Thakur and Huri Mohun Takur, against Shah Asudulla, the endowed property was sold on the 7th August 1878 and purchased by Roy Luchmiput Singh.

Shah Amir Alum, who was still a minor, now instituted a suit through Mussamat Bibi Ommutul Fatema, his sister, against Roy Luchmiput Singh, Brij Mohun Thakur, Huri Mohun Thakur, and Shah Asudulla, for a declaration that the endowed property was not liable to be sold for the debts of Shah Asudulla, and for possession. Mussamat Bibi Ommutul Fatema was not appointed guardian ad litem by an order of Court, but was allowed to sue by the District Judge. The defendants, besides the usual pleas of fraud and collusion, pleaded that the plaintiff could not sue through Ommutul Fatema, and that the deed was invalidated by the condition for payment of debts.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 175 of 1880, against the decree of Moulvi Hufez Abdul Karim, Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore, dated the 16th of April 1880.

The Subordinate Judge held, that it was reasonable and proper that Mussamat Ommutul Fatema should be the guardian for the purposes of the suit, and that the endowment was valid.

The defendant Roy Luchmiput Singh appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Sreenath Dass and Baboo Rashbehary Ghose for the Appellant.

Mr. R. B. Twiddle, Mr. C. Gregory, and Moonshee Mahomed Yusuf for the Respondents.

[178] The Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by Tottenham, J. This is an appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpore, ordering restoration to the plaintiff, respondent, as mutwali, of certain property alleged to be wuqf, which had been acquired by the defendant No. 1, appellant, by auction-purchase in execution of a decree held by the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 against the defendant, No. 4. The wuqf was created in 1872 by Shah Enayet Hossein, the late father of the defendant No. 4, and grandfather of the plaintiff. The plaintiff, being a minor, the suit was, with the permission of the District Judge, instituted on his behalf by his sister, Bibi Ommutul Fatema alias Bibi Nur Jehan.

The defendant No. 4, Shah Asudulla Sahib, is the plaintiff's father.

When the property was attached in 1873, the debtor filed a claim on behalf of the present plaintiff, objecting that the property was wuqf, and not liable to be sold, the debtor being only the manager thereof during the minority of his son, the mutwali. That claim, however, was rejected, and the sale took place on the 7th of August 1878.

The judgment of the lower Court, after setting out the pleadings, held, that the suit was maintainable as brought; that the wuqf was a valid one in all respects; and that the purchaser at auction had acquired no right under the sale.

The contentions urged before us in appeal have been, first, that the suit was not maintainable by Ommutul Fatema as next friend to the minor plaintiff, and that there must be a formal order of the Court appointing a guardian ad litem; secondly, that the alleged wuqf is not a valid one under Mahomedan law; and thirdly, that the wuqfuana was never intended by Enayet Hossein, the maker of it, to be operative, and that, in fact, the property has always continued to be enjoyed and used as the means of support of the family.

As to the first point we think that the objection is not well founded. It was first assumed by the pleader for the appellant that the minor's father, the defendant No. 4, was his certificated guardian under Act XL of 1858. But it seems that this is not [179] so; and we consider that the District Judge, who undoubtedly had jurisdiction to try this suit, was competent, under s. 3 of the Act, to allow it to be instituted by the minor's sister, he considering that the father had neglected his interest in respect of the property in suit.

The next question is, whether or not the wuqf is a valid one according to Mahomedan law. There has always been a good deal of controversy in the Courts as to what is essential, and as to what will invalidate a wuqf. On the one hand, it has been contended that no wuqf is valid unless it is solely and wholly for pious and charitable purposes enduring throughout all times; and on the other hand, there have been those who considered that what is practically a perpetual provision for the dedicator's family may be a valid wuqf.

The fact that the Subordinate Judge who tried this case is himself a Mahomedan gentleman of considerable attainments in Arabic learning, entitles his opinion to peculiar weight in a case of this nature ; and he appears to have entertained no doubt, whatever, as to this wuqf being of a thoroughly legitimate character as to its constitution and objects. And singularly enough, the only matter which strikes us as one in respect of which, with reference to the decisions of the Courts, makes the character of this alleged wuqf at all doubtful, is the very one which the lower Court has treated as one as to which there could be no dispute as to its being a proper object of wuqf. For, in the wuqfnama, there is express provision for the maintenance of the dedicator's male descendants, in addition to the strictly pious and religious objects for which the wuqf purports to have been made. But the Bombay High Court has, by a Full Bench, decided that, to constitute a valid wuqf, there must be a dedication of the property solely to the worship of God, or to religious or charitable purposes : see Abdul Ganne Kasam v. Hussien Miya Rahimtula (10 Bom. H. C. R., 13). That view has been endorsed by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Mahomed Humidulla Khan v. Budrunnissa Khatun (8 C. L. R. 164).

The definition might seem to exclude from judicial recognition a wuqf of which one object is a provision for the family of the creator of it.

[180] The lower Court, however, easily disposes of this question by the observation that "it is quite evident, and there is no necessity to quote any authority on the subject, that a wuqf for one's-self and for one's children is valid."

In the Bombay case the Judges, after considering all the available authorities on this question, held, that the balance was in favour of the dictum to which they gave effect ; and this too was what the Division Bench, of which one of us was a member, decided in the case of Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Budrunnissa Khatun (8 C. L. R., 164). In that case the alleged wuqf, which we declined to recognize, had for its object nothing connected with the worship of God or religious observances, and provided only in a very remote contingency for the poor. It was simply a perpetuity for the benefit of the dedicator's daughter and her descendants so long as any should exist.

The wuqfnama now before us is of a very different character : and having regard to the passage in it reciting the fact of dedication, we think that, without saying whether or no we are prepared on further consideration to adopt to the full the ruling above-mentioned, we can treat this wuqf as actually fulfilling the condition described, for the maker of the wuqf, after reciting the whole of his property of every kind, proceeds to declare that all has been endowed by him for the expenses of the masjid and the tombs of the holy personages of his family the servants of the asthana, and for performing the urs and fatehu at the tomb.

These are the objects of the wuqf, and they are all distinctly religious. They also involve to some extent charity to the poor.

We are disposed to hold this, therefore, to be a valid wuqf within the purview of the rulings quoted.

The subsequent direction that the manager shall maintain the future male descendants of the maker of the wuqf does not necessarily alter its character. Whether or not the provision or direction can be lawfully carried out, it is not necessary for us now to decide. But apart from this we are of opinion that the wuqf was completed by the passage which we have quoted. And we accordingly decide this point against the appellant.

[181] As regards the third and last objections we are of opinion that the wuqf being found to be a legal and valid one, it is really immaterial for the purposes of this suit to enquire how the proceeds of the property have since been applied. For no amount of misappropriation or other misconduct on the part of the manager can alter the character of the wuqf or render it void.

That being so, we hold that the decree of the lower Court was right, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

This judgment will also govern Appeal No. 52 of 1881.

Appeal dismissed.

Mon Mohun Buksee.....Decree-holder

Execution of decree—Minor plaintiff—Application for execution by guardian—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 7.

A plaintiff, who has obtained a decree during his minority, has the option either of applying through his guardian to execute the decree during his minority or to wait until the expiration of his minority before executing his decree. The application of the guardian is the application of the infant. The minor is under disability during the whole period of his minority. His disability does not cease, because he, through his guardian, makes two or more applications for execution however long the interval between them, provided they are all made during his minority.

Baboo Kossory Mohun Roy and Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy for the Respondent.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 342 of 1881, against the order of F. J. G. Campbell, Esq., Judge of Rungpore, dated the 3rd September 1881, reversing the order of Baboo Denobundhoo Roy, Munsif of Kooreegram, dated the 3rd May 1881.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (WHITE and MACPHERSON, JJ.), which was delivered by White, J.—The Court below held that the execution was not barred by the law of Cooch-Behar, but that it was so by the law of British India, that being the law of the Court in [182] which the judgment was sought to be enforced, and the law defining the limitation for suits being part of the lex fori.

On appeal before us it is argued, that, assuming the question to be determinable by the Limitation Act now in force in British India (Act XV of 1877), yet by that Act the execution is not barred, for the plaintiff (the decree-holder) is a minor, and as such under disability, and therefore time does not run against him during his minority. It is not disputed that the decree-holder is a minor; and accordingly, under s. 7 of the Act, until his minority has ceased, he is not affected by the law of limitation. It is contended, however, for the respondent that, upon the true construction of s. 7, the minor must wait until he attains majority before suing out execution, and that, until then, he cannot, through his guardian, take any steps to enforce his decree. This contention is unsound, and is disposed of by the judgment of the Privy Council upon the corresponding section of the old Limitation Act, XIV of 1859, in the case of Mussumat Phoolbas Koonwur v. Lalla Jogeshur Sahoy (L. R., 3 L. A., 25-26). A plaintiff, who has obtained a decree during his minority, has the option either of applying through his guardian to execute the decree during his minority, or to wait until the expiration of his minority before enforcing his decree.

Another point was attempted to be argued, that, if the guardian of a minor commenced to execute the decree on his behalf during the minority, all subsequent applications by that guardian on the minor's behalf must be governed by the law of limitation. This argument also is unsound. It assumes, contrary to the law on the subject, that the application of the guardian is not the application of the infant, but something distinct. The minor is under a disability during the whole period of his minority. His disability does not cease, because he, through his guardian, makes two or more applications for execution, however long the interval between them, provided they are all made during the minority.

The order of the Judge is reversed, and that of the Munsif restored with costs in this Court and also in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

Mufassal Small Cause Court Act (XI of 1865), s. 6— Res judicata—

Interest in land —Jalkar District Road Cess Act (Beng. Act X of 1871.)

A suit to recover road cess and public works cess is not a claim for money on bond or other contract, but is a claim created and made recoverable by a special enactment of the Legislature, and does not fall within the provisions of s. 6 of the Mufassal Small Cause Court Act.

The decision of a District Judge deciding that the plaintiff is not entitled to sue in a suit for road cess, where the amount claimed is less than Rs. 100, and therefore no second appeal lies to the High Court, is a bar to a second suit in which the amount claimed is above Rs. 100.

A jalkar does not impart any interest in the soil itself, and therefore a patni of a jalkar is not "an interest in land" within the meaning of the definition in the District Road Cess Act.

 Baboo Rajendro Nath Bose for the Respondent.

The facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), which was delivered by Field, J. In this case the plaintiff is the proprietor of a sair mohal, or jalkar, which is No. 4000 on the rent-roll of the Furriddpore Collectorate. The defendant holds under the plaintiff a patni, apparently of the whole of this property. The present suit is brought to recover the sum of Rs. 302-4 annas, on account of road cess and public works cess. A preliminary objection is taken that this is a suit of the Small Cause Court class, and therefore, as the amount is under Rs. 500, no second appeal will lie. It is contended that, with reference to the language of cl. 1 of the proviso to s. 6 of Act XI of 1865—

[184] "for any claim for the rent of land or other claim for which a suit may now be brought before a Revenue Officer,"—the claim in the present case is not a claim for which a suit could have been brought before a Revenue Officer at the time when Act XI of 1865 was passed. It is said, therefore, that the case does not fall within the proviso, but comes within the general words of s. 6 of the Act; and that the suit is therefore maintainable in the Small Cause Court alone.

We think it unnecessary to consider whether the suit comes within the language of the proviso or not, because it appears to us that this particular suit does not come within the general words of the section itself. We think that this is not a claim for money on bond or other contract. It is a claim created and made recoverable by a special enactment of the Legislature; and, in our opinion, does not fall within the provisions of s. 6 of the Small Cause Court Act.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2376 of 1880, against the decree of Baboo Nobin Chunder Gangooly, Subordinate Judge of Furriddpore, dated the 10th of September 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Girindro Mohan Chuckerbutty, First Munsif of Bhanga, dated the 25th of August 1879.

The next contention is, that, so far as regards the road cess, the present claim is barred by a previous decision between the same parties, in which it was held that the plaintiff could not recover road cess. In that case the amount claimed was under Rs. 100; and inasmuch as the road cess is declared by the Act to be recoverable in the same way as rent, the provisions of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 were held applicable, and under the provisions of s. 102 of that Act, as the amount sought to be recovered was below Rs. 100, it was held that there was no second appeal; and the District Judge's decision was therefore final. It is now contended that, inasmuch as the amount sought to be recovered in the present case exceeds Rs. 100, and there is therefore a second appeal to the High Court, the principle of res judicata is not applicable. But it appears to us that the question as to the liability to road cess was decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction in the former case, and that therefore the principle of res judicata does apply. We may observe that the plaintiff could easily have secured his second appeal upon the point which he raises by waiting to sue until the amount sought to be recovered exceeded 100 rupees.

The third question raised is, whether public works cess can be recovered by the plaintiff upon this so-called patni. The [135] public works cess is provided for by Beng. Act II of 1877, which declares all immoveable property to be liable to the payment of a cess therein called the public works cess. Section 5 enacts that all holders of estates or tenures shall pay the public works cess at the rate determined under s. 4 and in the manner and the proportions prescribed for the payment of the road cess by the District Road Cess Act. Section 9 provides that the words and expressions 'house,' 'estate,' 'tenure,' 'district,' 'immoveable property,' 'holder of an estate or tenure' shall have the meanings attributed to them respectively in the District Road Cess Act. The District Road Cess Act is Act X of 1871 of the Bengal Council, and the definition of 'tenure' as given in that Act is: 'tenure' "includes every interest in land, whether rent-paying or not, save an estate as above defined, and save the interest of a cultivating ryot." Now the question admittedly to be determined is, whether this patni of a jalkar is a tenure within the meaning of the term as used in the District Road Cess Act (Beng. Act X of 1871). 'Land' is defined in the same section to mean "land which is cultivated, uncultivated, or covered with water." It is to be observed that the language of the definition of 'tenure,' which "includes every interest in land," etc. must be understood as not excluding all the usual and ordinary meanings of the word tenure.' It has not been contended before us that the word 'tenure,' apart from the above definition, would include a jalkar, and we think it impossible to say that it would.

Turning then to the definition, can we say that a jalkar is an interest in land, meaning by 'land,' land which is cultivated, uncultivated, or covered with water? It appears to us that we cannot say that it is such an interest. The question whether a fishery implies the ownership of the soil was discussed in England in the case of Marshall v. The Ulleswater Steam Navigation Company (3 Best and Smith's Reps., 732). It was there held that the allegation of a several fishery prima facie imports ownership of the soil,--BLACKBURN, C.J., dissenting, although he held that the Court was bound by the authorities to that effect. Now, in England, [186] a several fishery may undoubtedly exist apart from any ownership of the soil under the water. It may exist as an incorporeal right. Where it exists as an incorporeal hereditament, it has been held not to be the subject of occupation, and therefore not to be rateable for the relief of the poor; and it required express words in the Rating Act, 37 and 38 Vict., c. 54, s. 3, to make rights of fishing when secured from the occupation of land, rateable for the relief of the poor. In this country we think that a jalkar does not necessarily imply any right in the soil. In the case of Radha Mohun Mundul v. Neel Madhub Mundul (24 W. R., 200), it was said:—"It is quite familiar that jalkar rights are frequently granted extending over large estates, the property of other persons than the grantee of the jalkar; and it is clear that if, on the water drying up, the land below it become the property of these grantees, the most complicated questions of fact would constantly be arising, because long after the drying up of the beels, the Courts would be called upon to decide how far the water had originally extended, and, as in the very case before us, grants of jalkar are usually conveyed in such terms as to import the use and enjoyment of what may be called purely aqueous rights, such as fishing, gathering of rushes and other vegetation which arise from and are connected with water, and it may be very well conceived that if in such cases the right to the soil were implied in the grant of the jalkar, it would be wholly unnecessary to specify the particular rights. We have mentioned this because if the grantee were the owner of the land, he would, as a matter of course, be entitled to everything on it." Now, if a jalkar does not import any interest in the soil itself, we think it impossible to say that it is an interest in land within the meaning of the definition in the District Road Cess Act, land being there defined to mean land which is cultivated, uncultivated or covered with water. We may further observe that, in Act VII of 1868 of the Bengal Council, the word 'tenure' is defined to include "all interests in land, whether rent-paying or lakhiraj (other than estates as above defined) and all fisheries." Now, if the word 'tenure,' in its ordinary accepta-[187] tion, included fisheries, it would have been unnecessary for the Legislature to say in so many words that in Beng. Act VII of 1868 it was to include fisheries. Beng. Act VII of 1868, it is to be observed, was passed before the District Road Cess Act (Beng. Act X of 1871); and if it can be contended that, in the latter Act, the omission of fisheries in the definition was due to an oversight of the Legislature, it is important to observe that no steps have been taken to remedy that oversight in the Cess Act (Beng. Act IX of 1880). The result would seem to be that the Legislature, by deliberately inserting 'fisheries' in the definition of 'tenure' in one Act, and omitting the same matter in the definition of the same word in another Act, passed for different purposes, intended that the term 'tenure' should not include fisheries in the latter Act. We think, therefore, that a patni of a jalkar is not a tenure within the meaning of the Road Cess Act.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[On appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.]

Jaghir—Inclusion of jaghir lands in area of settled Zamindari—Ghatwali tenure—Reg. XXIX of 1814.

In the area of a zamindari were included at the Permanent Settlement the mauzas which made up the mehal of a jaghir, the succession to which was subject to the sanction of Government, the jaghirdar being bound to render public services. One-third of the revenue assessed upon the jaghir mehal was retained by the jaghirdar, forming no part of the zamindari assets on which the jama of the latter was fixed.

Held, that whether this jaghir was a ghatwali tenure or not, within the meaning of the term as applied in Reg. XXIX of 1814* (the zamindari being Pachit, adjoining, and at one time included in, Birbhum,) the jaghir was analogous to such tenure as described in the preamble to the Regulation.

[188] Held also, that the nature of the tenure had not been altered by the Permanent Settlement, after which the services due by the jaghirdar remained as before, public services, and continued to be due to the Government. That the zamindar became entitled only to the rent, or revenue, which was previously due to the Government, and in respect of which he was assessed, and did not become entitled to the services in respect whereof the one-third of the rent or revenue was allowed as compensation to the jaghirdar. That the jaghir, though hereditary, was not subject to the ordinary rules of inheritance according to the Hindu or the Mahommodan law, but was held upon the condition of approval of the heir by the Government. Thus were precluded both division of the jaghir mehal upon the death of the holder, and alienation during his life.

It followed that the jaghir mehal was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree against the father and predecessor in estate of a jaghirdar so approved, as assets by descent in the possession of the latter.

Raja Lelanund Singh v. The Government of Bengal (6 Moore's I. A., 101) followed.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court (9th June 1879), made under the 15th clause of the Letters Patent of the High Court, 1862, which reversed a decree (21st April 1877) of a Divisional Bench, and restored a decree (25th November 1875) of the Judge of the District of West Burdwan.

The question on this appeal was, whether lands within the area of a permanently settled zamindari were held in jaghir independently of the zamindari; and were held on such a tenure that, in the possession of the jaghirdar, they were not assets by descent from his father and predecessor in estate, liable to be attached for the judgment-debt of the latter.

The suit commenced in the Court of the Munsif of Gangajalghati, and transferred to that of the Judge of the West Burdwan District—was to obtain a declaration that nine mauzas, forming the mehal of a jaghir, in Pargana Moheshara, in the zamindari of Pachit, were not liable to attachment and sale under an order of 10th August 1871, in execution of a decree obtained in that year by the defendant, appellant, the Raja zamindar of Pachit, against Bir Singh, the father of the plaintiff, respondent, Bakranath Singh, the jaghirdar. The latter claimed the mouzas as held by him in jaghir, subject to certain public services due from him to the Government, which had sanctioned his succession to the jaghir in 1865.

[189] The Raja zamindar maintained that the mauzas were not jaghir mehal but part of his malguzari lands, settled with a tenant by one of the Raja's predecessors, for services to be rendered to him as zamindar. Having been the property of Bir Singh, deceased, the interest of the jaghirdar was liable to attachment in the possession of his heir, and could be brought to sale in execution of the decree of 1871, in conformity with the Code of Civil Procedure.

The Government, joined as a defendant, supported the claim in its written statement, alleging that the land was held in jaghir, as a service tenure, subject to the jaghirdar's discharging public duties, and to the approval by the Government of his succession to the jaghir. The zamindari of Pachit, at one time included in the Birbhum District, was placed under special administration under Reg. XVIII of 1805. In 1817, it was transferred from Manbhum to the District of West Burdwan.

In 1817, the jaghir mehal, then 14½ mauzas, was divided into two parts, as to both of which litigation ensued on the question of the Raja's rights as zamindar. In 1863 the Raja sued Bir Singh, the plaintiff's father, for resumption of 6½ mauzas, part of the above, alleging that they had been granted by an ancestor of the Raja's for personal service, which was no longer either required or rendered. The dismissal of this suit by the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum and the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpore was followed by the rejection of a special appeal in the High Court—Rajah Nilmoney Singh Deo v. The Government of Bengal (6 W. R., 121) - and an appeal to Her Majesty in Council was also dismissed (18 W. R., P. C., 321).

In 1867, a suit by the Raja against the present jaghirdar, for arrears of rent accrued during the lifetime of his father Bir Singh, was dismissed in the local Courts, and a special appeal to the High Court was rejected, it being held that a new jaghirdar was not responsible for the rent due from a former one as such—Rajah Nilmoney Singh v. Bakranath Singh (10 W. R., 255).

But, in 1871, a claim for some villages, part of the above mehal, but other than those now in dispute, founded on an [190] alleged appointment by the Government of the plaintiff as jaghirdar, was brought against the Raja in the case of Udaychund Chuckerbutty v. The Raja of Pachit (unreported). The High Court (Dwarkanath Mitter and Ainslie, JJ.), in dismissing this suit, decided that the tenure was one in which the Raja, as zamindar, was primarily interested.

In the present suit the Officiating Judge of the West Burdwan District (Mr. J. Tweedie) decreed for the plaintiff, finding that the service, of which the performance was a condition of the jaghirdar's tenure, was of a public nature, and was not rendered to the zamindar. The plaintiff's interest was not, in his opinion, saleable in satisfaction of the debt of his father and predecessor.

On appeal to a Divisional Bench of the High Court (MARKBY and ROMESH CHUNDER MITTER, JJ.), this decree was reversed, in accordance with the judgment of the senior Judge.

An appeal against this decree of the Divisional Bench was heard, under s. 15 of the Letters Patent of the High Court, by a Bench consisting of the Officiating Chief Justice, L. S. JACKSON, J., and AINSLIE and WHITE, JJ. The proceedings in the Divisional Court and an appeal under the Letters Patent will be found reported in the 3rd volume of the Calcutta Law Report, p. 583.

The result was the reversal of the decree of the Divisional Bench, and a decree for the plaintiff according to the concluding words of the judgment above set forth.

From this decision the defendant appealed to Her Majesty in Council.

Mr. R. V. Doyle appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondents.

The principal arguments on behalf of the appellant were, that the jaghir mehal had been included in, and assessed as part of, the lands of the permanently settled zamindari of Pachit; and that the jaghirdar's services, originally, were due to the Raja zamindar, as well as the rent for the land assessed. The jaghir was not a service tenure; and, having been Bir [191] Singh's property, could be attached in the hands of his son, who had succeeded him by hereditary right. The respondents had not shown that, at the Decennial or at the Permanent Settlement, the Government retained any right of dispossessing the holder of this tenure, or of interfering with the course of descent. They had also failed to adduce sufficient evidence of any right continuously exercised by the Government to require police services from the jaghirdar for the time being, and such evidence as there was of calls upon the jaghirdar in this respect related to matters which could be ascribed to encroachment or misapprehension, but could not be held to be inconsistent with the hereditary character of the tenure. Two conditions of tenure assumed to exist had been made the basis of the judgment appealed against, viz., the appointment of the jaghirdar by, and his rendering services to, the Government. But these had not been established as essentially belonging to the tenure; and notwithstanding the fact that the sanction of Government had been given to recent successions, still the tenure being ancient and of unknown origin had descended from father to son, and was held by hereditary right. In a great degree this had been admitted, the only qualification insisted upon being that the heir could not be a person considered by the Government to be unfit for the duties attached to the tenure. The estate had probably been created by a grant from some predecessor of the Raja zamindar before the year 1765, the services being originally due to the local chief, and it had not been shown that the services were other than such as, by usage, the zamindar responsible for the good order of that part of the soubah of Behar, would have been entitled to claim from the holder of a subordinate tenure. Zamindars under the nawabi were entrusted as well with the defence of the territory against foreign enemies as with the maintenance of order within their boundaries. For this purpose they were accustomed to employ armed retainers to guard against hostile inroads, as well as a general police force, under the description of thannadars, paiks, and chaukidars, to repress crime in the villages Joykishen Mookerjee v. The Collector of Burdwan (10 Moore's I. A., 16). From Bhagalpore to [192] Midnapore extended a chain of service tenures of which the holders were bound to assist their superiors in keeping the peace. Among these tenures the 'ghatwalis' of Bhagalpore had been held to form part of the permanently settled estate of the Raja of Karakpore, being included in his zamindari lands; and it had been decided that they were not thannadari or police lands, resumable on the Government's assuming charge of the police Raja Lelanund Singh v. The Government of Bengal (6 Moore's I. A., 101); Regs. XXXVII and XLII of 1793. The ghatwali tenures in Birbhum had been made the subject of special legislation in Reg. XXIX of 1811, which did not apply to the tenures now in question. Pachit, and the tenures within that zamindari, now forming part of the West Burdwan District, had been left to the operation of the general law. On the cardinal question what was the position of the zamindar in relation to this jaghir before the Decennial Settlement, the principal documentary evidence available was the following, as the records of the Birbhum Collectorate had been lost in the mutiny of 1857:

Letters from A. Higginson, Supervisor of Birbhum, to S. Middleton Chief Member of the Council of Revenue at Murshedabad in 1771 with Jamma-bandi Statement of the Pachit zamindari for that year.

A letter from the same, with enclosures, to the Hon'ble Warren Hastings, 10th April 1774.

A Revenue Report of Lalla Kanji, Tehsildar of Pachit, 18th June 1799.

Collectorate Papers issued in Manbhum and West Burdwan.

Analytical View of the Revenues of Bengal by Mr. J. Grant, addressed to the Court of Directors in 1786, printed as an Appendix to the 5th Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the affairs of the East India Company, 1820.

Shore's minute, and Harington's Analysis of the Regulations.

Proceedings before Colonel J. F. Ouseley, Political Agent to the Governor-General, May 1815.

[193] Neither in the first settlement of 1771 made by Mr. Higginson, nor in the Decennial Settlement of 1786 made permanent in 1793, was there anything to alter the hereditary character of the jaghir or its dependence upon the zamindari. Whether the settlement was mauzawar, or in the lump, did not appear; but the jaghir mohal was treated as part of the whole zamindari estate. That there might be such sub-tenures included in the Permanent Settlement, and covered by the jama, might be implied from the decision in Raja Lelanund Singh v. The Government of Bengal (6 Moore's I. A., 101) from which case it appeared that there might be lands not liable to resumption under clause 4, s. 8, of Reg. I of 1793, as having been included in the allowances made to zamindars for police purposes. Thus there might be a tenure held conditionally on the performance of service due to the zamindar. Also might be cited Joykishen Mookerjee's case (10 Moore's I. A., 16), above referred to, as showing that there might be chakeran tenures not resumable as thannadari lands under the Regulation, but annexed to the malguzari. Again it was to be noticed that it did not follow that, because the Government might disallow the succession of an unfit person, the jaghir could not be hereditary. It was hereditary, and because hereditary, it was alienable. Grants held 'nashen bad naslan,' 'butnan bad butnan,' as this jaghir was, were transferable by gift, sale, or otherwise, by the terms of Regs. XXXVII of 1793, and XII of 1805,—Bithul Bhut v. Lalla Raj Kishore (2 Agra H. C., 284). The supersession of the zamindari police establishments or thannadari system, discontinued on the 7th December 1792, had not altered the rights of the zamindar of Pachit over the jaghir in question. The new rules were enacted in Reg. XXII of 1793, which provided that the police of the country should, thenceforth, be under the exclusive charge of officers appointed by the Government. When this change took place, the Decennial Settlement (1789) had already been in force for some years; and therefore, until the Police Regulations of 1793, the jaghirdar must have been the subordinate of the zamindar for the repression of crime. After the latter date, the zamindar and the jaghirdar alike ceased to [194] be directly responsible in the police administration; but the effect of this was only to forbid the zamindar any longer to employ the jaghirdar in police duties. In other respects their relations to one another remained, and there was no transfer to the Government of the personal services due to the zamindar. Reference was made to Regs. XXII of 1793, VIII of 1814, XX of 1817, Mr. Shore's Minute (assessment of chakeran lands), and Harington's Analysis of the Regulations, vol. iii, pp. 239, 241. [Their Lordships inquired if the argument alleged that the jaghirdar, retaining one-third of the profits of the jaghir mehal, retained it free of services after the enactment of the Police Reg. XXII of 1793.] The jaghirdar no longer rendering police services to that extent gained. His duties, had he thenceforth been bound to render services to the Government, would have been defined. There was, however, no sufficient evidence as to the precise nature of the duties which the Magistrate could call upon him to undertake. The instances given did not, in any marked degree, exceed those services to which landholders were liable, as those services were defined in Reg. XX of 1817. The inference was, that such duty as he owed, he owed to the zamindar.

Reference being made to Lalla Kanji's Report (1799), (where it appeared that the jaghirdars acted under the control of the zamindar, upon whom fell the charges of police investigation, and where the duties of the digwar were distinguished from those of the jaghirdar), the true conclusion was, that the digwars rendering police services were paid by being maintained in holdings altogether rent-free. The jaghirdars, on the other hand, rendering only private services to the zamindars, held their mehals with only a partial remission of revenue. At this result the Judges had arrived in Udoghund Chucker-butt v. The Raja of Pachit (unreported), in which case the High Court considered that the ouster of jaghirdars, in certain instances, others being appointed in their places, was unauthorized. There was, in effect, no sufficient evidence of the Government's having had originally the right of appointment; and no such long and uniform series of appointments [195] by it had been shown, as would lead to the presumption that the right existed.

For the respondents it was argued that the jaghir mehal was not saleable in execution of the decree. It had been rightly decided that the jaghirdar's services were due to the Government, and not to the zamindar; also that sanction was necessary to the succession of each holder of the tenure. These two conditions were inseparable, and the right of the Government to approve the person who was to be responsible for the services would be defeated by alienation of the tenure; which, therefore, could not be transferred. Reference to the state of things before 1765 did not assist the argument for the appellant. For no zamindar, or any authority less than the ruling power of the day, could make any valid remission of the proportion of the produce of the lands due to it, without the sanction of that power: Regs. XXXVII and XLIV of 1793, preamble. Rajah Nilmoney Singh Deo v. The Government of Bengal (6 W. R., 121) decided, in accordance with general principles, that the zamindar had no right to grant rent-free tenures.

Again, it was an error to assume that lands could not be held subject to police services without such duties being identical with those which all landholders in Bengal had to perform, and setting aside any ambiguity that had arisen as to the question of the services, the main consideration on which the decision of the case would rest was that, at settlement, one-third of the profits of the mehal was not brought into the estimate of the zamindari assets. To this remitted revenue, a jaghir in its strict sense, the terms of the Regs. XXXVII of 1793, s. 15, and XII of 1805, in regard to the heritable and transferable quality of certain estates, were inapplicable, as also was the decision cited in Bithul Bhut v. Lalla Raj Kishore (Agra H. C., 284). In what way, save by the dismissal of the jaghirdar by the Government, the tenure could be alienated, did not appear.

In 1771, when first these jaghirs, which had existed from time immemorial, were brought to notice, the jaghirdars received recognition from the supervisor of Birbhum, paying two-thirds of [196] the profits of their lands, and retaining one third as their remuneration for their services. At the Decennial Settlement, the jaghirs were included in Ghakla Pachit, but the zamindar's jama was calculated on the two-thirds payable by the jaghirdars, and not on the one-third retained by them. Reference was made to 3 Harington's Analysis, 113, Bunde Ram Sen v. The Deputy Commissioner of the Sonthal Paraganas (7 W. R., 178), Rajah Nilmoney Singh Deo v. Bakranath Singh (10 W. R., 255), Raja Ichannud Singh v. The Government of Bengal (6 Moore's I. A., 101), Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Taqeer (13 Moore's I. A. Cal., 438), Koldeep Naram Singh v. The Government of Bengal (14 Moore's I. A. Cal., 247), and Sartakehunder-Bey v. Dharat Chunder Singh (7 S.D.A. (1853), 900). This tenure but for the operation of Reg. XVIII of 1805, would have remained within the Birbhum Zilla jurisdiction, and would have been subject to Reg. XXIX of 1811. The Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum, in Rajah Nilmoney Singh Deo v. The Government of Bengal (6 W. R., 121), showed how the tenure corresponded to the 'ghatwali' of Birbhum, adding that the jaghirs were spoken of in the district as 'ghats,' the jaghir in suit being 'Ghat Dhekia. The same arrangements were found in these jaghirs as in ghatwali tenures viz., of 'tabedars' working under the jaghirdar, who was also called the 'sirdar,' and holding smaller portions of land in his jaghir.

The admission made as to the hereditary character of the tenure went no further than the statement made in Harington's Analysis, 509, in connection with the Birbhum ghatwals: meaning only that the Government usually appointed the son unless there was something to disqualify him.

Mr. R. V. Doyle replied.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir B. Peacock.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Calcutta. The appellant is Raja Nilmoni Singh, the raja and zamindar of Pachit. He was the defendant in the suit out of which the appeal arises, and which was brought [197] against him by the respondent, Bakranath Singh, for confirmation of possession of a jaghir mehal, consisting of Mauza Dhekia and other mauzas specified in the schedule to the plaint, by establishing his title to the same, and reversing a summary order of the 10th of August 1874.

It appears that the appellant, having obtained a decree against Bir Singh, the father of the respondent, for the sum of Rs. 72 odd, awarded to him for costs, had caused the mauzas in question to be attached in execution of the decree; and that, on the 11th June 1874, a proclamation was issued for the sale of the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor therein on the 10th of August in that year. In the proclamation the plaintiff was described erroneously as the judgment-debtor, whereas he was only the heir-at-law against whom the decree had been revived after the death of his father, Bir Singh.

On the day appointed for the sale, the respondent presented a petition, stating that he was not in possession of any property of the deceased judgment-debtor, and that the Government jaghir mehal could not be sold on account of the debts of the deceased; that, since the death of his father, the late Bir Singh, he had been appointed jaghirdar, and was in possession of the mauzas attached as ghatwal appointed on the part of Government; that the decree-holder, without describing the mauzas to be jaghir, and without stating the nature of his father's interest therein, had secretly done the acts relating to the execution of his decree; and that the petitioner, having received information that the jaghir mohals would be sold on the 10th of August, had presented the petition stating his objections. Upon that petition the summary order referred to in the plaint was passed by the Munsif;—"This petition of claim has been filed to-day just before the sale; the claim cannot be allowed at such a time. It is ordered that the petition of claim be rejected." The sale accordingly took place, and the present appellant became the purchaser.

The suit, out of which this appeal arises, was originally instituted in the Court of the Munsif of Choki Gangajulghati, in the District of West Burdwan, and the Secretary of State for India was made a pro forma defendant. The suit was subsequently [198] removed into the Court of the Judge of West Burdwan.

The Government put in a written statement, in which they alleged that the lands were police service lands, and that they had been held by jaghirdars in lieu of wages for the performance of police duties from before the Permanent Settlement, as had been formerly determined in the presence of the Raja defendant by the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum, in case No. 105 of 1863, and the several Courts of appeal; that the lands not being transferable, and the Raja defendant having caused them to be sold without any specification that they were service lands, and having himself purchased them at the sale, could acquire no title by the purchase.

The Raja defendant, in his written statement, contended, amongst other things, that the mauzas were not a jaghir constituting Government property, but part of his permanently settled mal estates, and that they had been granted by his father to the plaintiff's father as a service tenure.

Further, he made the following statement:—

"Third 'Taruf Dhekia,' in which these mauzas are comprised, was divided into two (equal) parts, one of which is plaintiff's ancestral property, and the other was enjoyed by Dhurmo Das Chuckerbutty as a service tenure in the manner described above. Subsequently, the half share of Taruf Dhekia, held by the said Dhurmo Das, having been sold by auction for arrears of rent, his grandson, Uday Chuckerbutty, brought a civil suit to set aside the sale, alleging the share to be Government jaghir property; but, in the judgment of the High Court, the suit was dismissed, on declaration that the disputed estates appertained to the mal land, and in rejection of the allegation as to the Government jaghir lien, as will appear from the decision. Therefore, the plaintiff's suit is evidently false."

The plaintiff himself was examined, and stated that his profession was that of a ghatwali jaghirdar; that he was jaghirdar of Ghat Dhokia; that he was appointed in 1273 by the Magistrate of Bancoora, and served the Government and carried out the orders issued by the thanna; that the jaghir lands did not remain in his possession unless he performed the services; that the [199] person who is appointed in the place of a dismissed ghatwal holds possession of the land; that, after his appointment, the sub-inspector put him into possession; and that he never did any service for the Raja, and did not receive any permission from the Raja on his appointment.

Amongst other issues, the following were raised :—

2nd.—Whether the status or condition of the lands as Government service, —i.e., ghatwali or jaghir, had been decided in a former suit by a Court of competent jurisdiction?

3rd.—Whether the land in suit was held by the plaintiff as service land, —i.e., ghatwali or jaghir under Government, or as service land under the defendant, Raja Nilmonoo Singh?

4th.—Whether the land was land on account of which rent was paid to the Raja by the Raja's appointee, and whether this rendered the tenure a saleable one?

5th.—Whether the plaintiff's interest in the land was such an interest as admitted of being brought to sale in satisfaction of a decree due from the plaintiff's predecessor to the Raja.

The case was tried by the Officiating Judge of West Burdwan. On the trial the Government accepted the full burthen of the suit, and supported the plaintiff. It still holds the same position, having been made a respondent, and having appeared by Counsel before their Lordships and opposed the appeal.

The only substantial question to be decided is, whether the mauzas in question, which had been held by the plaintiff's father during his lifetime, and which at his death descended to the plaintiff as his heir, and to which the plaintiff was appointed by Government, were liable to be seized in execution of a decree against the father as assets by descent in the hands of the plaintiff, his son.

Neither the origin of the jaghir, nor the precise time at which it was created, is known; but it appears that, as far back as 1771, corresponding with 1178 B. S., the villages of which it was composed were held by jaghirdars, who paid to Government two-thirds of the annual value thereof as revenue, and retained the other one-third as remuneration for the services under which the jaghir was held. The villages included in the [200] jaghir were permanently settled as part of the zamindari of Pachit, of which the defendant, appellant, is the zamindar. In fixing the Government revenue at the time of the Decennial Settlement, the lands included in the jaghir were assessed at the two-thirds then payable by the jaghirdar to the Government, and the one-third retained by the jaghirdar in lieu of services formed no part of the assets of the zamindari in respect of which the Government revenue was fixed.

Jaghirdars were successively appointed or approved by Government up to the time of Gurucharn Mukerji, who was appointed in 1816 in the place of Rup Singh, who was dismissed for misconduct.

In February 1817, Gurucharn petitioned the Magistrate for leave to associate Durmo Das Chuckerbutty with himself as headman; this was sanctioned, and they divided the jaghir and the duties. On the death of Gurucharn, his son applied to be installed as his successor, but Rup Singh having applied to be reinstated, his application was granted. In 1831, Rup Singh attempted to oust Dhurmo Das Chuckerbutty, but this was not allowed, and the jaghir has ever since remained divided.

In was contended, on behalf of the appellant, that, as the lands were included in his permanently settled zamindari, the services as well as the rent belonged to him; that the services were private services, and that he had a right to cause the lands to be sold in execution of his decree.

In support of his case, the decision of the High Court referred to in the Raja's written statement was cited. It is set on in the appendix to the record, and was in a suit brought against the Raja by Uday Chuckerbutty, who had been appointed successor of Dhurmo Das Chuckerbutty, to obtain possession of the mauzas which constituted that portion of the jaghir, which, upon the division of it, had been allotted to Dhurmo Das, whose right and interest had been sold by the Raja in execution of a decree for rent obtained by the Raja against him. The Government was a party to that suit, and supported the claim of the plaintiff therein. The first Court held that the plaintiff had a right to recover possession of the jaghir lands, but that decision was reversed on appeal by the High Court. [201] In speaking of that case, the Officiating Judge in the present case remarked:—"It is not relevant as evidence in this case, but is useful as a precedent or in argument. The Court found in that case that the services exacted by Government were encroachments of the Raja's rights, and that the duties,—i.e. service,—attached to the holding of the land, and not the holding of the land to the appointment to perform the duties. With respect to the lands in dispute I have to remark that the Raja's evidence in this case, as well as that of the Government, shows that the opposite is true in this case." Then, after referring to the evidence, he says:—"I therefore conclude that the performance of the services is the chief title to the jaghir lands, and that no man has any right to hold these lands except on a title arising out of a valid appointment to discharge the services; to adopt the words of the High Court's judgment," or rather the converse of it, "to the facts of the case, 'the holding of the lands attaches to the duties, and not the performance of the duties to the holding of the land.'" On the 3rd issue he found that the land in suit was land held by the plaintiff, Bakranath Singh, as service under Government, i.e., not ghatwali but jaghir land, and was not held as service under the Raja. On the 4th issue he found that the land in suit was not land on account of which rent was paid to the Raja by the Raja's appointees; and on the 5th, that the plaintiff's interest in the lands was not such as admitted of its being brought absolutely, and without special conditions, to sale in satisfaction of a decree due from the plaintiff, or his predecessor, to the Raja: but that the interest was saleable for the purpose aforesaid, provided it be sold subject to the performance of the jaghir services by the purchaser, after he has obtained appointment to the duties at the hands of the Magistrate or his representative police authorities, and installation by the same authorities. He accordingly annulled the sale of the lands under the execution, set aside the summary order of the Munsif, and declared that the plaintiff had a right to continue in possession as the service tenant of the Government, and as the rent-paying tenant to the plaintiff. The case was appealed to the High Court. The appeal was heard by a Division Bench, consisting of Mr. [202] Justice MARKBY and Mr. Justice ROMESH CHUNDER MITTER, who differed in opinion. The decree of the Officiating Judge was reversed, and the suit dismissed in accordance with the opinion of the Senior Judge, Mr. Justice MARKBY, Mr. Justice ROMESH CHUNDER MITTER dissenting, and holding that the decree ought to be affirmed.

Mr. Justice MARKBY agreed with the Officiating Judge that the Raja had not shown that the plaintiff held as his appointee; he relied upon the fact that the lands were part of the revenue-paying lands of the Raja, and also upon an admission of the Advocate-General, on behalf of the Government, that the tenure was an hereditary one, unless there was some special objection to the person entitled to succeed. He also relied very strongly upon the decision in Uday Chund Chuckerbutty's case, already referred to, and added,—“An appeal against this decision was lodged in the Privy Council by the Government, but it has not been prosecuted; and it is admitted that there is no intention to prosecute it.” He stated that he thought it was his plain duty to follow the former decision, unless he had the clearest possible reasons for differing from it; and that so far from differing from the decision, having considered the evidence and heard the arguments, he entirely concurred in it. He then proceeded to discuss the question whether the fact that the holders of the lands were liable to perform some services of an exceedingly indefinite character, but something of a police kind, to Government, took away from this tenure the character of alienability, which it would otherwise possess, and expressed his opinion that it did not.

An appeal was preferred under s. 15 of the Letters Patent of the High Court from the decree of the Division Bench to the High Court, and was heard by Mr. LOUIS S. JACKSON, then Officiating Chief Justice, Mr. Justice AINSLIE, and Mr. Justice SEWELL-WHITE, when the decree of the Division Bench was reversed, and the decree of the first Court affirmed, by a majority consisting of the Acting Chief Justice and Mr. Justice SEWELL WHITE against the opinion of Mr. Justice AINSLIE. Their Lordships concur generally in the view taken by Mr. Justice ROMESH CHUNDER MITTER and the Acting Chief Justice, and are of opinion [203] that the decree now under appeal ought to be affirmed. The judgment of Mr. Justice WHITE was founded merely upon the form of the proclamation: he concurred with the first Court in holding that, as the proclamation did not describe the lands as held under a service-tenure, the sale to the Raja, under the execution, passed no title to the property; and he abstained from expressing an opinion upon the question as to which Mr. Justice MARKBY and Mr. Justice ROMESH CHUNDER MITTER differed,—viz., whether the interest of the plaintiff's deceased father in the lands was such, that when they came into the possession of the plaintiff they were assets of the father and as such liable to be attached and sold for his debts.

According to the report of Lalla Kanji, Tahsildar of Pachit, made on the 18th of July 1799, it appears that there were in Chakla Pachit, in addition to the digwars, three other classes of guards, whom he describes as jaghirdars, as ghatwals, and chauckidars. He says of the first, they hold their mauzas in jaghir, and whenever the digwars require assistance in arresting thieves or rioters, the jaghirdars assist them with their men. Of the second, that is the ghatwals, he says the second were posted at the ghats, 36 in number. In 23 of these the ghatwals were subordinate to the digwars, and were paid by them out of their jaghirs: 13 are occupied by the Raja's own immediate servants paid by him.

It is clear that the jaghirdar in question was not one of the ghatwals, referred to in the report as being subordinate to, and paid by, the digwars out of their jaghirs, for they were paid by the one-third of the malguzari, which they were allowed to retain as a compensation for their services.

Mr. Justice ROMESH CHUNDER MITTER held that the tenure in question was analogous to a ghatwali tenure. Mr. Justice AINSLIE treated it as one of the ghatwalis to the south of Birbhum. Their Lordships entertain no doubt that, whether it was a ghatwali or not, the tenure was analogous to a ghatwali tenure of the nature described in the preamble to Reg. XXIX of 1814; and the Acting Chief Justice appears to have entertained the same view, by referring to Mr. Harington's Analysis of the Regulations, vol. iii, p. 509, where, after mentioning Reg. XXIX [204] of 1814, he goes on to say,—"tenures of this description were mentioned generally in a note to the second volume of this Analysis, as held at a low rent by ghatwals or guards of passes."

The preamble to Reg. XXIX of 1814 is as follows:—"Whereas the lands held by the class of persons denominated ghatwals, in the district of Birbhum, form a peculiar tenure to which the provisions of the existing Regulations are not expressly applicable, and whereas every ground exists to believe that according to the former usages and constitution of the country, this class of persons is entitled to hold their lands generation after generation in perpetuity, subject nevertheless to a fixed and established rent to the zamindar of Birbhum, and to the performance of certain duties for the maintenance of the public peace and support of the police." Pachit was formerly one of the parganas and mehals of Zilla Birbhum, but by Reg. XVIII of 1805 was separated from the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of that Zilla; and placed under the jurisdiction of a distinct officer denominated Magistrate of the Jungle Mehals (see ss. 2 and 3 of that Regulation). Their Lordships consider that the jaghir in question, although not falling within the Regulation, was a tenure of the nature of those described in the preamble. In the case of Rajah Nilmoney Singh v. The Government of Bengal (6 W. R., 121), it having, been found by the lower Courts that the lands were held upon a ghatwali tenure, the High Court upon special appeal held, that they were not resumable by the zamindar, upon the ground that the tenure had been forfeited on account of the tenant's refusal to perform them. The Chief Justice remarked,—“If the Government received only two-thirds of the annual value of the lands as rent or revenue, and allowed the tenant to retain one-third on account of services, the services must have been public and not private. The Government would not have allowed any portion of their revenue in consideration of private services to be rendered to the Zamindar.”

That case was affirmed by Her Majesty in Council on appeal (18 W. R., P. C., 321).

The permanent settlement of the lands did not alter the nature of the jaghir or of the tenure upon which the lands were [205] held, nor could it convert the services which were public into private services under the zamindar. The zamindar became entitled only to the rent or revenue which was previously payable to the Government and in respect of which he was assessed, and not to the services in respect of which the one-third of the rent or revenue was allowed to the tenant as compensation for the services. Those services continued to be due to the Government.

In the very luminous judgment pronounced by Lord Kingsdown in the case of Rajah Lelannul Singh v. The Government of Bengal (6 Moore's I. A., 101) the origin and nature of the ghatwali tenures of Birbhum, and the effect of the Permanent Settlement thereon, were fully explained, and it was there held that lands held under that tenure were not resumable by Government under Beng. Reg. I of 1793, s. 8, cl. 4, as lands included in the allowances to zamindars for thana or police establishments. In that case it was no doubt held, that it was the province of the Raja of Khurruckpore to appoint and dismiss the ghatwals (p. 127), but it was also stated that ghatwals held their lands in virtue of sanads granted by the zamindar, except some who had received theirs from the former authorities (p. 123) : it was also found that in that case the lands had been granted by the ancestors of the Raja (p. 112), and it was said that the Regulation did not apply to lands which the zamindars had permitted other persons to hold free from rent, or at a reduced rent, or (referring to the cases in which the sanads had not been granted by the zamindar) to lands which such persons had a right to hold free from rent or at a reduced rent.

The above cases show that the jaghirs of which the lands in question formed one, and which were expressly found, in the case above referred to between the appellant and Bir Singh, the father of the plaintiff, and also in the present case, to be analogous to the ghatwali holdings of Birbhumi, are not resumable by the zamindar or by the Government.

In the case of Hurlal Singh v. Jorawan Singh (6 Sel. Rep., 204, Ed. of 1873), cited with approbation by Lord Kingsdown, in 6 Moore, 125, it was held, [206] that the ghatwali tenures were not divisible on the death of a ghatwal, but descended to the eldest son.

In delivering the judgment in that case Mr. F. C. Smith said,—“Reg. XXIX of 1814 says nothing on the subject; the point must, therefore, be decided with reference to the usual practice and the meaning and the intent of the term ‘ghatwal.’ Now the ghatwali lands are granted for particular purposes, especially of police, and to divide them into small portions amongst the heirs of the ghatwals would be to defeat the very ends for which the grants were made. I have submitted the question to the Judges of the Court, and all, with one exception, are of opinion, that a mahal of this nature cannot be divided, but should, on the death of an incumbent, devolve entirely on the eldest son, or the next ghatwal.”

It was stated by Mr. D. C. Smith, one of the Judges consulted, that the chakran lands of Bengal always go to the eldest son or to the nearest member of the family most capable of performing the duty. See also Kustoora Koomaree v. Monohur Deo (W. R., Sp., No., p. 39).

The jaghirs, although hereditary, are not governed by the ordinary rules of inheritance, under the Hindu or Mahomedan law, and are subject to the condition of the Government's approval of the heir.

The same principle which precludes a division of a tenure upon death must also apply to a division by alienation. Their Lordships are of opinion that the tenure is not transferable or saleable in execution of a decree, and that it is not one of the tenures referred to by the Beng. Reg. XXXVII of 1793, s. 15.

In the case of Rajah Lelamund Singh v. Doorgabutty (W. R. Sp., No., p. 249) it was held, that the ghatwalis of Khurruckpore were not capable of alienation by private sale or otherwise, nor liable to sale in execution of decrees except with the consent of the zamindar and his approval of the purchaser as a substitute for the outgoing ghatwal. In that case, however, as in the case already cited from 6 Moore's Indian Appeals, the ghatwal had been appointed by the Raja, and the Raja, and not the [207] Government, as in the present case, had a right to appoint and dismiss the ghatwal.

In the case of Binode Ram Sein v. The Deputy Commissioner of the Sonthal Parganas (7 W. R., 178) it was held, and in their Lordships' opinion rightly, that the surplus proceeds of a Birbhumi ghatwali tenure, which had passed by descent from ancestor to heir, were not liable, in the hands of the heir, for the debts of the ancestor; and reference was made to a decision of Mr. Hawkins in the Sudder Court, 2 Sevestre's Reports, 423, in which it was held that the lands were not alienable.

In a case also between the appellant and the respondent Bakranath Singh it was held, that the holder of the tenure in question in this suit is not responsible for the debts of a former jaghirdar. The Deputy Commissioner in his judgment said,—“As jaghirdar, the defendant has, what his father had, a life-interest in the jaghir. Whether the son will succeed or not is, notwithstanding the tenure is hereditary, uncertain, as he may at any moment be dismissed from Government employ,” rather he should have said ‘may never be sanctioned as jaghirdar.’ He proceeds,—“The jaghir is strictly a life-tenure as far as the jaghirdar is personally concerned, he holds the land in lieu of pay, and a new jaghirdar receiving the jaghir would not be bound by any arrangement made by his predecessor. A newly elected jaghirdar would not be held responsible for debts incurred by the late jaghirdar as such, as were he to be so, he would lose the benefit of his pay. Thus, a jaghirdar cannot be held responsible for arrears of rent due by a former jaghirdar.” That decision was upheld on appeal to the High Court (10 W. R., 255). The case is expressly in point, for if a successor is not liable for rent of the jaghir due from his predecessor, it follows a fortiori that he cannot be liable for an ordinary debt. It is unnecessary to decide whether the decision is res judicata or not.

The above decisions are more than sufficient to outweigh the decision in the case of Uday Chand Chuckerbutty (unreported) to which Mr. Justice MARKBY attached so much weight, even if that case had not been decided upon a different finding of facts. [208] Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that the learned Judges took an erroneous view in that case of the effect of the Permanent Settlement.

With reference to the argument upon which Mr. Justice AINSLIE so strongly relied as to the difficulty under which the zamindar would lie for the recovery of his rent if the lands could not be sold in execution of a decree for rent against his tenant, it is sufficient to say that the zamindar, at the time of the Permanent Settlement, must have been aware of the nature of the tenure upon which the lands were held, and that this case does not involve the necessity of deciding what remedy the zamindar has for recovering his rent, whether by sequestration of the estate or by application to the Government to remove the tenant, or by what other mode. Their Lordships, therefore, abstain from expressing any opinion which would be a mere obiter dictum upon the point.

It is quite clear that, if the jaghir were transferable without the consent of Government, either by descent to an heir, or by voluntary sale, or sale in execution, or otherwise, there would be no security that the transferee would be a proper person to discharge the duties in respect of which the lands are held at the reduced rent. The transferee might be a person of questionable or even of bad character, as remarked by the Court in 10 W. R., 240.

For the above reasons, their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the High Court, from which the appeal has been preferred, and to dismiss the appeal.

The appellant must pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

[209] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 2nd March, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Hurbans Sahye and others.....Defendants

Thakoor Purshad.....Plaintiff.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 630 Review of Judgment --Review granted on particular ground --Discretion of Court as to rehearing.

Where a review of judgment is granted on a particular ground, the Court is not bound to rehear the whole case under s. 630 of the Civil Procedure Code : it is in the discretion of the Court to rehear the whole case or only the particular point on which the review has been granted

THIS was an application for review in a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of certain property on the allegation that it was his self-acquired property.

The plaintiff's case was that the property in suit had been sold under a decree passed on a mortgage-bond executed by his nephews, the first three defendants, who had no right or interest in the property ; that, in execution of the proceedings following the sale, he had been dispossessed by the auction-purchasers, Zakur Alum and Hurbans Sahye, the fourth and fifth defendants ; and that after he had put in a petition of objection to the Court by which the decree had been passed, and which petition was rejected, he brought this suit, making the parties above-named, together with the two decree-holders, defendants.

The auction-purchaser defendants alleged, that the plaintiff was never in possession within twelve years before the institution of the suit, and therefore the suit was barred by the law of limitation ; that the property in dispute was acquired by the plaintiff's father, and in accordance with a tuksinnama, dated 5th April 1854, the property fell to the share of Ram Sahye Singh, the father of the first three defendants, other properties [210] being allotted to the plaintiff ; that Ram Sahye and his sons continued in possession of the property ; that his sons borrowed money from the sixth defendant, Neaz Mahomed, and gave him a bond, mortgaging this property ; and that the property had been sold in execution of a decree obtained on the bond and purchased by themselves. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, finding the facts as alleged by the defendants. On appeal, the High Court found that the property had been in the joint possession of the plaintiff and his two brothers, and afterwards, on the death of one brother, in the possession of the plaintiff and the other brother, and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff for one-half of the property claimed.

The defendants applied for a review of judgment, and a rule being issued to show cause why the application should not be granted, other evidence was brought forward to show that the plaintiff had, before the death of his brother, separated from them, taking one-third of the property, and that, therefore the decree should be altered; and it was contended that, in case the review was granted on this ground, the whole case should, under s. 630 of the Civil Procedure Code, be re-heard. On the review the Judges differed in opinion in one point,—viz., as to whether the plaintiff was, on his cause of action and allegations, entitled to the relief he had obtained; MITTER, J., being of opinion, that he was, and MACLEAN, J., that he was not.

Mr. Branson, Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, and Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose in support of the application.

Baboo Mohinimohun Roy and Baboo Taruknath Palit, contra.

The Judgments of the Court, omitting the portion on the merits as not being material to this report, were as follows:—

Mitter, J.—It has been contended that, if the review be granted on a particular ground, we are bound to re-hear the whole case under s. 630 of the Code of Civil Procedure; but the words “or make such order in regard to the re-hearing as it thinks fit,” in the section in question, leave it to our discretion either to re-hear the whole case or any particular point [211] that seems to us fit. The observation of the Judicial Committee in Bhugwandeem Doobey v. Myna Bacc (11 Moore's I. A., 499) supports this view. As we have re-heard the case with reference to the question of share, I am of opinion that we are in a position to make the final decree without another hearing. Our decree, therefore, should be altered as directed above. The petitioners are entitled to recover costs of this hearing, which I would assess at Rs. 200.

Maclean, J.—I find with regret that I am of a different opinion from my learned and more experienced colleague upon one of the points raised in this application,—namely, the first point discussed in the judgment just read.

On this question however, our former decision must stand for the present under s. 628 of the Code.

• On the other questions I do not differ from my colleague, and I think that we are not precluded from dealing with the case in part or as a whole by anything in s. 630, it being within our discretion to define the extent to which the review should be carried; see Bhugwandeem Doobey v. Myna Bacc (11 Moore's I. A., 499).

Decree varied.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 12th July, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT. CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE BOSE.

Beer Chunder Manickya.....Plaintiff

Hurro Chunder Burmon.....Defendant.*

Limitation—Rent Law (Beng. Act VIII of 1869), s. 30—Special agreement.

The defendant was tehsildar of one of the plaintiff's zamindaris, and after his dismissal on the 24th of August 1876, he submitted an account, which was found to be incorrect, and time was given to him to make good certain items on his executing an ikrar, promising to pay whatever balance should be found due from him to the plaintiff. In a suit brought on the 28th of October 1878 to recover the balance found on inquiry to be due,—Held, that s. 30 of Act VIII of 1869 had no application, the special agreement taking the case [212] out of the scope of that section, and therefore the suit was not barred by reason of having been brought more than one year after the defendant's dismissal.

Baboo Kali Mohun Dass and Baboo Durga Mohun Dass for the Appellant.

Munshi Seraful Islam and Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Respondent.

THE facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the judgment.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and BOSE, J.) was delivered by Garth, C. J. The circumstances under which this case arose are these :—

The plaintiff Moharaja appointed the defendant as tehsildar in one of his zamindaries on the 22nd Aghran 1283 T. S. The defendant worked as such up to the 9th Bhadur 1285 T. S., when he was dismissed. The defendant, on the 14th Bysack 1286 T. S., submitted an account of the collections and disbursements during the period of his service, but the Moharaja's officers took exception to several of the items, and made out a balance of Rs. 2,578 annas 15 pie 6 against him. The Moharaja was prepared to sue the defendant for recovery of this balance, but the defendant asked for time in order to enable him to make good the items by producing vouchers, as also by mofussil inquiry. The Moharaja consented to give time to the defendant upon his executing an ikrar, with a promise to pay whatever balance would be found due from him upon such inquiry. The defendant accordingly gave a registered ikrar on the 23rd Chyot 1286 T. S., which (amongst other things) provided that he, the defendant, "would furnish lowazima papers in support of his said account, and would wait on the Moharaja's officers in the mofussil while making the inquiry, and come to an adjustment of his account within six months from the date of ikrar; and would pay, without objection, whatever money should be found [213] due from him upon such mofussil inquiry and investigation by the Moharaja's agent within three months from the date of its ascertainment."

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1784 of 1880, against the decree of W. F. Meres, Esq., Officiating Judge of Tipperah, dated the 11th June 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Kalidus Dutt, Second Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 9th of May 1879.

An inquiry was subsequently made by the Moharaja's agent in the presence of the defendant, when, on the 25th Ashar 1287 T. S., a sum of Rs. 1,870 annas 7 pie 6 was found to be due from him. The Moharaja accordingly brought this suit on the 28th October 1878 for recovery of the said amount.

Both the lower Courts have applied s. 30 of the Rent Act to the case, and have held that the suit is barred, because more than one year has elapsed since the date of the defendant's dismissal, as also since the date when the misappropriation by the defendant was first detected.

We are clearly of opinion that the suit is not governed by s. 30 of the Rent Law. It is not a suit brought under ordinary circumstances for money in the hands of an agent, or for the delivery of accounts or papers. It is brought upon a special agreement, by which it was agreed on both sides that, for the purpose of ascertaining the correct amount due from the defendant to the plaintiff, an investigation was to take place and certain accounts and other papers were to be supplied by the defendant, in order to enable the plaintiff's agent to arrive at the truth, and a certain time was to be given to the defendant to pay the money, after this investigation had taken place.

A special agreement of this kind takes the case entirely out of the scope of s. 30. It would be a positive fraud upon the plaintiff, who has behaved very fairly in the matter, to allow him to be defeated by limitation under such circumstances; and it was nothing short of a fraud for the defendant to take such an objection.

Had a promissory note been given by the defendant for payment of the amount due at the end of two years, that clearly would have taken the case out of s. 30, and here we have a specific agreement for good consideration on both sides, which has the same effect.

If agreements such as these are virtually to be disregarded, the Rent Law would indeed be made a means of the grossest fraud and injustice.

• [214] The case will be accordingly remanded to the first Court for retrial on the merits. And as the defendant has set up the plea of limitation in fraud of his own arrangement, he must pay the costs of all the proceedings as far as they have gone.

The costs of the new trial will, of course, be in the discretion of the Subordinate Judge.

Case remanded.

MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM AND MR. JUSTICE BOSE.

Rameshari Dassee.....Judgment-debtor. *

Execution of decree --Stay of execution—Appeal from order—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 243, 244, 588.

A decree-holder having attached the property of his judgment-debtor in execution, the latter applied for a stay of execution until the decision of a pending suit brought by him against the judgment creditor. The Court allowed the application, continuing the attachment on the property, and struck the execution-case off the file. The decree-holder applied to the High Court.

Held, that no appeal lay.

THE facts of this case are fully set out in the judgment of the Court.

Baboo Tarruck Nath Sen for the Appellants.

Baboo Rama Churn Banerjee for the Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by Tottenham, J.—The order against which this appeal has been preferred purports to have been passed under s. 243 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the application of the judgment-debtor, on the ground that the judgment-debtor had brought a suit against the present decree-holders and others. The Court, in its discretion, stayed the execution of the present [215] appellants' decree pending the decision of the regular suit brought by the judgment-debtor. It ordered that the attached property should remain under attachment, but proceeded to strike the execution-case off its file.

It appears to us that the appellants have no right of appeal to this Court in this matter. They contend that it is an order determining a question between themselves and the judgment-debtor under s. 244, and that, that being so, the order amounts to a decree within the meaning of s. 2.

We think that there are two reasons against this contention being allowed. First of all we think that an order staying execution under s. 243 is not one which comes within the purview of s. 244: and secondly, if it could be said to come within the purview of s. 244, we do not think that this order amounts to a decree as defined by s. 2, as it is not an adjudication of any right claimed, nor does it appear to us to be a determination of any question mentioned in s. 244. It seems to us that the Court below has not finally determined any question as between the parties; it has simply postponed the determination of a matter before it. It is quite clear that, unless this order amounts to a decree, there is no appeal against it; for it is not one of those mentioned in s. 588, against which an appeal is allowed as against an order; and we being of opinion that it is not a decree, we are compelled to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

With reference to this case they remark, at page 235, "in so far as it held that the matter does not relate to execution, is no longer law, the section having been amended in this respect in 1888, though the question whether there is an appeal is another matter depending on whether the order is a decree."

Security for good behaviour—Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872), ss. 504, 505.

An accused person was convicted of theft and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment, and was further ordered to enter into his own recognizances for Rs. 50 and find two sureties, each for a like sum, for his good [216] behaviour for one year after the term of his imprisonment had expired; in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for one year.

* Criminal Reference, No. 149 of 1882, from the order made by W. V. G. Tayler, Esq., Magistrate of Nuddca, dated the 20th July 1882.

Held, that the latter part of the order was bad, and that the Magistrate should have proceeded under the provisions of s. 501, cl. 2, of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The Empress v. Partab * followed.

THIS was a criminal reference made by the Magistrate of Nuddea, under s. 296 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Act X of 1872). The terms of the reference were as follows:—"Umid Karigar was convicted by the Assistant Magistrate of Kooshtea, under s. 380, Indian Penal Code, and was ordered to be rigorously imprisoned for two years, to enter into his own recognizances in Rs. 50, and to find two sureties, each in a like sum, to be of good behaviour for one year after the term of his imprisonment had expired. In default, to suffer rigorous imprisonment for another year. The order for security and for a further term of one year's rigorous imprisonment failing security does not appear to be legal. The Assistant Magistrate, on being asked to report why this part of the sentence should not be quashed, stated that he was guided by the case of The Empress v. Partab; * but I am still of opinion that it is illegal to call [217] upon an accused person to find security for future good behaviour in addition to a sentence passed upon him for a specific offence, and this view appears to be concurred in by the Sessions Judge, who has lately in another case reversed a similar sentence. This portion of the sentence should, therefore, I think, be quashed."

No one appeared to argue the case.

The Judgment of the Court (MACLEAN and MACPHERSON, JJ.) was delivered by Maclean, J.—It would have been better had the Assistant Magistrate followed the course pointed out by the presiding Judge in the case of The Empress v. Partab * as the proper course to be adopted.

We direct that the order passed under s. 505 of the Criminal Procedure Code be set aside, and leave it to the Assistant Magistrate to follow the course prescribed in s. 501, cl. 2, if he thinks proper.

* I. L. R., 1 All., 666. In this case SPANKIE, J., said:—"In making an order for security for good behaviour, I presume that the Magistrate holds the powers of a first class Magistrate, and that he was acting under s. 505 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. I have some doubt whether the Magistrate had adduced before him such evidence as to general character as to justify his dealing with the accused for the offence of which he found he was guilty, and in the record of the trial I find no evidence from which it could be gathered that the accused was by repute a receiver of stolen property. But the prisoner certainly allowed that he had been punished twice for theft, and here he was again tried and found guilty of receiving stolen property. I am therefore unwilling to disturb the order. But the order should be no part of the sentence for the offence of which accused was convicted. There should have been a proceeding drawn out representing that the Magistrate, from the evidence as to general character adduced before him in this case, was satisfied that Partab was by repute an offender within the terms of s. 505 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and therefore security would be required from him. But as he had been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment, which term has not expired, an order should have been recorded to the effect that, on the expiration of the term, the prisoner should be brought up for the purpose of being bound (cl. 2, s. 504)."

Insolvency—Execution of decree—Decree against insolvent—Official Assignee—Purchaser at execution-sale—Setting aside sale—Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877), s. 313.

Where, in execution of a decree passed against a person who had previously been adjudicated an insolvent, portions of his property (then vested in the Official Assignee) are attached and sold, the purchaser is entitled to have the sale set aside under s. 313 of the Code of Civil Procedure, notwithstanding that the Official Assignee acquiesces in the sale, and is content to receive the sale-proceeds.

THE facts of this case are fully set forth in the judgment of the Court. The auction-purchaser appealed against the order [218] of the Subordinate Judge, on the ground that he should have found the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property at the time of the sale, and that he was wrong in taking into account the conduct of the Official Assignee subsequent to the sale.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Appellant.

Baboo Bycunt Nath Dass for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this case the appellant before us was the purchaser of a property sold at an execution-sale, and he applied to the Court below, in accordance with the provisions of s. 313 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have the sale set aside, on the ground that the person whose property purported to be sold had no saleable interest therein. The facts of the case are briefly as follows:—The judgment-debtor, under the decree in execution of which the property was sold, was adjudicated an insolvent by the High Court on the 19th January 1881. The decree was made in February 1881. The attachment in execution of the decree was in June 1881; and the sale was in August 1881. From this it appears that before the dates on which the decree was made, the attachment was made, and the sale was made, the judgment-debtor had been adjudicated an insolvent. Now the effect of that adjudication was, that all the property of the judgment-debtor vested in the Official Assignee. Section 7 of the Act, to consolidate and amend the laws relating to Insolvent Debtors in India, 11 and 12 Vict., c. 21, provides as follows (omitting the parts not essential to the present question):—“And be it enacted that it shall be lawful for the said Court to order that all the real and personal estate and effects of such petitioner, except the wearing apparel, etc., do vest in the Official Assignee for the time being of the said Court, and such order shall be entered on record in the said Court, and such notice thereof shall be published as the said Court shall direct; and such order, when so made, shall, by virtue of this Act, relate back to, and take effect from, the [219] filing of the said petition, and shall instantly, and without any conveyance or assignment, vest all the real and personal estate, effects and debts as aforesaid in the said Official Assignee, who shall have full powers for the recovery thereof, and shall hold and stand possessed of the same for the purposes and in manner hereinafter mentioned." Now we think that the effect of these provisions was, that this particular property vested in the Official Assignee from the 19th January 1881, and this being so, we are of opinion that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property at the time when the attachment and the sale were made. Section 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure describes the property which is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, and concludes thus:—"All other saleable property, moveable or immovable, belonging to the judgment-debtor, or over which, or the profits of which, he has a disposing power, which he may exercise for his own benefit." We think that, at the time of the attachment and sale, this particular property could not be said to have belonged to the judgment-debtor; nor could it be said that he had over that property or the profits thereof any disposing power which he could exercise for his own benefit. But it is contended that although the judgment-debtor may have had no saleable interest in the property at the time of the attachment and sale, yet that, inasmuch as the Official Assignee afterwards consented to receive the money for which the property had been sold, he by that act confirmed and ratified the sale. This is the view which has been taken by the Subordinate Judge, who says: "It is true, as appears from certain documents filed on the part of the Official Assignee, that, before the property was attached and sold in this execution-case, all the properties belonging to the judgment-debtor, excepting certain moveable articles, had been vested in the Official Assignee by a vesting order passed by the Court for the Relief of the Insolvent Debtors at Calcutta, still, as the Official Assignee, by his letter dated the 17th September 1881, and subsequently by his plea, has applied only for the assets realized by the aforesaid sale and not taken any objection to the sale, I am of opinion that the sale should not be set aside but affirmed, and the entire amount realized in this [220] case be remitted to the Official Assignee after necessary deductions." Now the assent of the Official Assignee can be put no higher than a conveyance by him to the appellant. We think that, as the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property, the appellant, the purchaser, could not obtain any title to the property by virtue of the execution-sale. If, in consequence of the assent of the Official Assignee and his subsequent ratification of the sale, the appellant would have a good title in so far that the Official Assignee might be afterwards estopped from disputing that title, it is clear that this title would be acquired not by reason of the sale, but by estoppel as against the Official Assignee; and we think that the purchaser is entitled to exercise his option as to whether he will accept the title which the Official Assignee can give him, is entitled to say, if he chooses, that he declines to take a title which, notwithstanding the Official Assignee's assent, might afterwards be called in question, on the ground that the Official Assignee had no power to allow the sale to stand; or had, by doing so, obtained less than the market-value of the property. The real question which we have to decide is, whether, within the terms of s. 313 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the person whose property purported to be sold had any saleable interest therein,—that is, at the time of sale; and we think that, in consequence of the vesting order, the judgment-debtor had, at the time of the sale, no saleable interest in this property; and therefore, under the provisions of this section, the purchaser is entitled to have the sale set aside. We must, therefore, reverse the order of the Subordinate Judge, and decree this appeal with costs. The purchase-money will be refunded to the purchaser. The costs will be paid by the decree-holder. We allow no costs against the Official Assignee.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 21 of 1882, against the order of Baboo Gunga Churn Sircar, Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 10th of December 1881.

Appeal allowed.

Wrongful confinement—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 346.

In an order to render person liable under s. 346 of the Penal Code, it must be shown that the wrongful confinement was of such a nature as to indicate an intention that the person confined should not be discovered.

On the 17th of February a Hindu woman went to the Court of the Magistrate of the 24-Parganas to complain of having been ill-treated and tortured by certain persons, relatives of the petitioners. The hearing of her complaint was not finished on the 17th, and she was told by her pleader to go away and come back the next day. The remaining facts are thus told by the Judge of the 24 Parganas in his judgment :—"As she was departing, she says she was accosted by the appellants, Gangadhar Dhali and Sreenath, who contrived to put her into a carriage, and drove her away, taking her to various places, at the time strange and unknown to her, at one or other of which she was kept, until a stir having arisen in the meantime on account of her disappearance after having had such a complaint recorded, she was brought back by the present appellants and produced by them before another pleader of the Magistrate's Court, in whose premises she remained till next day, the 9th March, when she was made over to the Police. It is for this abduction, and for this keeping the woman away from Court and from prosecuting her case there, that the present appellants have been convicted." The Deputy Magistrate convicted the accused under ss. 201 and 346, but passed sentence under the latter section only. On appeal the Sessions Judge quashed the conviction under s. 201, but affirmed the conviction [222] and sentence under s. 346. It was objected before the Judge that, "granting the truth of the woman's story as to her having been taken here and there, such treatment, she having been left admittedly to her own desires at each place of so-called confinement, and at liberty to go whither she pleased, and to invoke the assistance of the Police, is not confinement in law." But the Judge, in consideration of the timid and submissive natures of the lower class women of the country, when brought into contact with influential middle class men and Brahmins, and of the fact that the woman was taken away to strange places, miles from her home, overruled the objection. The Petitioners then moved the High Court to set aside the order of the Sessions Judge and have the conviction quashed.

Baboo Umbica Churn Bose for the Petitioners.

Baboo Ram Chundra Mitter for the Crown.

The judgment of the Court (McDONELL and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by McDonell, J. In this case the prisoners were convicted of offences under ss. 201 and 346 of the Penal Code. On appeal, the Sessions Judge properly acquitted them of any offence under s. 201, but upheld the conviction under the latter section. We are of opinion that the conviction cannot be sustained. To render a person liable under s. 346, it must be shown that the wrongful confinement was of such a nature as to indicate an intention that the person confined should not be discovered. In the present case it is clear that the element is wanting.

Again, it appears to us that the complainant was not at all in wrongful confinement. The Judge himself says that she was induced, not forced; and that her confinement was not actual, but, as he calls it, potential. This is not sufficient. We, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence, and acquitting the prisoners direct their release.

Conviction quashed.

In the matter of the Petition of Henry Kyte.*

The Crown

versus

Henry Kyte.

Excise Act (Beng. Act VII of 1878), s. 61—Imported liquor—Possession—Pass—Consignee—Agent.

Certain liquors arrived in Calcutta per s.s. Navarino, consigned to M. & Co. at Agra, who requested A to pay on their behalf the duty and landing charges, and forward the goods to Agra. While on the way from the steamer to the railway station, the goods were seized as being in the possession of A without a pass, within the meaning of s. 61 of Beng. Act VII of 1878, and A was convicted and sentenced to a fine under the provisions of that Act.

Held, that the conviction was bad.

IN this case Henry Kyte was, on the 1st of December 1881, charged before the Presidency Magistrate with having in his possession, in the Strand Road, Calcutta, on the 30th of November 1881, imported liquor without a pass or license (to wit thirty cases Port and twenty cases Sherry, each one dozen), in contravention of ss. 17 and 61 of Beng. Act VII of 1878, as amended by s. 8, Beng. Act IV of 1881. The accused pleaded not guilty. The facts of the case are fully set out in the judgment of Mr. Justice WILSON and Mr. Justice MACPHERSON. In convicting the accused the Magistrate said: "If the accused had a wholesale license, he would still require a pass to protect the liquor in transit. In this case he had neither a license nor a pass, and under the law he is liable to punishment, and the liquor to confiscation. Under all the circumstances of the case, however, I fine the defendant Rs. 30 (thirty) and order one-fifth of the liquor seized.—viz. 10 cases,—to be forfeited.

The accused now moved the High Court to quash the Magistrate's order.

Baboo Kalichurn Banerjee and Baboo Umerendro Nath Chatterjee for the petitioner.

[224] The following Judgments were delivered :—

Maclean, J.—The vakil for the petitioner has failed to satisfy me that the conviction, dated 1st December 1881, is not founded upon a correct view of the law; and, under any circumstances, I object to re-opening a case after the lapse of six months from the date of the conviction.

I am not prepared to say that the petitioner was not in possession of the liquor. It had, it is admitted, been passed out to him from the Customs, and he was about to despatch it to the consignee at Agra. Neither am I satisfied that the holder of a license, not granted by the Excise authorities here, is a licensed vendor within the meaning of Beng. Act VII of 1878. In this view of the law, the petitioner, whether in possession on his own account, or for the consignee, was a person "other than a licensed vendor," and being admittedly without a pass from the Collector or other officer duly empowered in that behalf, I see no illegality in his conviction under s. 61, Beng. Act VII of 1878.

Macpherson, J.—I am sorry to differ, but I certainly think the conviction is bad on the ground that no offence has been committed. The facts are, that certain liquor consigned to Martinez and Co., licensed vendors at Agra, was imported in the Steamer Navarino. The petitioner, at the request of the consignee, cleared this liquor by paying the duty and landing charges. The Abkari authorities seized it in the Strand Road while it was being conveyed to the Howrah station for despatch to the consignee. The petitioner was convicted of having the liquor in his possession in contravention of ss. 17 and 61 of the Excise Act (Beng. Act VII of 1878). He was not himself a licensed vendor, nor had he a pass from the Collector. The question then is, was the liquor in his possession within the meaning of those sections?

Putting a reasonable construction on the word 'possession,' I hold that it was not. There is certainly a distinction between possession and a bare temporary custody or charge on behalf of another person. The liquor belonged to a licensed vendor, and was in course of transit to him. It would be a very strained construction of the sections to say that it was in the [225] possession of the petitioner, who had merely done what was necessary to clear and forward the goods to their proper destination. If it was in his possession, it was equally in the possession of the cartmen who were carrying it. I think it makes no difference, so far as the petitioner is concerned, that the consignee was a licensed vendor not in Bengal, but in the Upper Provinces. If this conviction is right, then A, who had imported liquor for his own consumption and use, would be guilty of no offence once the liquor had come into his actual possession; but B, who acting for A had cleared the liquor and was conveying it from the Custom-house to A's house, would be guilty of an offence under s. 61, because B was in possession of it, and the possession was not for his private use and consumption. The Courts must certainly, before convicting, enquire into the purpose of the possession, and I think they must also enquire into the nature.

It may be noted that, in this case, though the usual notice was given to the Government Solicitor, no one has appeared for the Government to support the conviction; and though the Presidency Magistrate has, in two subsequent cases, come to an exactly contrary conclusion on precisely the same facts, the Excise authorities have accepted the decisions. Apart from this, however, I consider the conviction bad, and would set it aside.

As to the delay in making the application, this has been sufficiently accounted for. The delay might have been some ground for refusing the rule. It is no ground for rejecting the application when the rule has been granted.

The Judges having disagreed, the proceedings were laid before Mr. Justice WILSON, who delivered the following Judgment:—

Wilson, J.—I agree on the whole with MACPHERSON, J., that this conviction was wrong.

We must take the facts, I think, to be these, and these only, that certain liquors arrived by the s.s. Navarino for Martinez & Co., licensed dealers of Agra, in the North-Western Provinces; that the accused was requested by them to pay, on their behalf, the duty and the landing charges, and to forward the liquor to Agra. The liquor was seized in Calcutta as [226] being in the possession of the accused without a pass, within the meaning of s. 61, Beng. Act VII of 1878.

I do not think we can support this conviction unless we are prepared to lay down broadly that anybody who has anything to do with the transit of liquor is within the section. If the accused was within the section, I do not see why the ship-owners, if they landed the goods, were not equally so. I do not see how the Railway Company, if they had carried the goods, could have escaped the necessity of obtaining a pass, and perhaps a pass for each District of Bengal through which they carried them.

As to the delay that has occurred—taking into consideration the fact, that the Magistrate himself has since disapproved of the conviction, the efforts which the accused has made in other quarters to reverse or nullify it, and that no objection is raised on the part of the Crown,—I think we may properly set aside the conviction and direct the return of the fine and the release of the goods declared to be forfeited.

Where the testator does not himself sign the will, but some other person signs it in his presence and by his direction, then, besides this other person, there must be two witnesses who must sign the will in the presence of the testator.

In the goods of Roymoney Dassie (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 150) and Huro Sundari Dabia v. Chunder Kant Bhuttacharjee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 17) cited.

THIS was an application under Act V of 1881 for probate of the will of one Girish Chunder Banerji, who died on the [227] 2nd of April 1879. The applicant was Hemlota Dabee, widow of the testator's younger brother. It appeared from the evidence that the will had been written by the Magistrate's clerk; that seven witnesses then signed the will; that the testator and the witnesses then went to the Sub-Registrar's office; that the Sub-Registrar then requested the testator to sign, but he said "I am blind." Then one of the witnesses, Chunder Coomar Chatterji, signed the testator's name at his request in the following manner: "Girish Chunder Banerji, by the pen of Chunder Coomar Chatterji, of Amelia." And then wrote under this signature,

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 253 of 1881, against the order of J. Whitmore, Esq., Officiating Judge of Nuddea, dated the 22nd July 1881.

"Identified by Chunder Coomar Chatterji, Local Fund Clerk, Ranaghat Sub-Divisional Office. Chunder Coomar Chatterji, Local Fund Clerk, Ranaghat." Then follows the signature of the Sub-Registrar.

The District Judge refused probate, on the ground that the witnesses had signed before the testator's signature was affixed at his request. The applicant moved for review of judgment, but the motion was refused, the Judge saying:—"As regards the possibility of proving the will by means of the method suggested in the somewhat similar case of Hurro Sundari Dubia v. Chunder Kant Bhattacharjee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 17), there is this difficulty. In the present case there is no one on the back of the will to second the Sub-Registrar's possible testimony. Chunder Coomar Chatterji, no doubt, identifies the testator; but as he is the very man who signed for the testator, it cannot be said that he saw 'some other person' sign the will in the presence and by the direction of the testator, or received from the testator a personal acknowledgment of the signature of such other person. Section 50 would not, I think, be satisfied if there were only two attesting witnesses, and one of them signed for the testator; and although, perhaps in a strict grammatical sense, it may be said that 'some other' means some other than the testator, and not 'some other than the attesting witness' also, I do not think that that is the natural and proper interpretation of the third rule of the section. The present is a hard case, but I do not see any way of reversing my order." The applicant appealed to the High Court.

[228] Baboo Surendro Nath Motilal for the Appellant.

Field, J.—"This is an appeal against an order of the Judge of Nuddea refusing to grant probate of a will. The ground on which the Judge refused to grant probate is, that the witnesses signed before the testator's signature was affixed at his request. It appears that the witnesses first signed the will, which was then taken to the Sub-Registrar; and before the Sub-Registrar, the testator Girish Chunder requested Chunder Coomar Chatterji to sign for him, and Chunder Coomar Chatterji wrote his name for him accordingly at his request.

It is now contended before us, on the authority of the case of Roymoney Dassee (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 150) and of Hurro Sundari Dubia v. Chunder Kant Bhattacharjee (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 17), that there is in this case a sufficient admission of the signature of the testator, because there is upon the will an endorsement that the executor admitted the execution. Now this endorsement is signed "Girish Chunder Banerji, by the pen of Chunder Coomar Chatterji." Then come the words: "Identified by Chunder Coomar Chatterji, Local Fund Clerk, Ranaghat Sub-Divisional Office." Then come the names of two witnesses, Chunder Coomar Chatterji and the Sub-Registrar. Now it is clear that the signature to the admission was made by Chunder Coomar Chatterji writing the name of Girish Chunder Banerjee at the request of the latter; and this being so, there is, besides Chunder Coomar Chatterji, only one witness, viz., the Sub-Registrar. Section 50 of the Indian Succession Act, cl. 3, is as follows:—"The will shall be attested by two or more witnesses, each of whom must have seen the testator sign or affix his mark to the will, or have seen some other person sign the will in the presence and by the direction of the testator, or have received from the testator a personal acknowledgment of his signature or mark, or of the signature of such other person; and each of the witnesses must sign the will in the presence of the testator. "Now it is quite clear from this language that when [229] the testator himself signs the will, two witnesses are necessary, who must have seen the testator sign, and who afterwards must sign in the presence of the testator. When the testator does not himself sign, but some other person signs in his presence and by his direction, then, besides this other person who has so signed at the request of the testator, there must be two witnesses. In other words, when the testator does not himself sign, but gets some one else to sign for him, there must be three persons in addition to and besides the testator himself. Now in the present case it is quite clear, that the signature to the admission was made by Chunder Coomar Chatterji at the request of the testator, and there is only one witness, viz., the Sub-Registrar—that is, besides the testator there are only two persons, and not three. This being so, it appears to us that it was the clear intention of the Legislature that the person who signed for the testator at his request could not be one of the two persons who witnessed the admission of the execution itself. We may remark that, in the first of the above cases, viz., that of Roymoney Dasse (I. L. R. 1 Cal., 150), the admission before the Registrar was signed by the executrix Roymoney Dasse by the pen of Jadub Chunder Sen, and there were besides two witnesses, viz., Jogendro Nath Sen and C. M. Chatterji, Registrar—that is, there were three persons besides the testator. The facts of the second case in this respect do not appear from the report.

We think, therefore, that the decision of the learned Judge in the Court below is correct, and that this appeal must be dismissed without costs, as no one appears on the other side.

Appeal dismissed.

*Suit for possession—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 246—

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 317 of 1881, against the decree of J. F. Browne, Esq., Officiating Judge of the 24-Parganas, dated the 15th December 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Jogesh Chunder Mittra, Munsif of Alipore, dated the 23rd January 1880,

THE Judgment of the Court of First Instance in this case was as follows :—
 "This is a suit to establish the plaintiff's right to certain property and to obtain possession thereof jointly with the defendant No. 2. The property was attached in execution of a decree against the defendant No. 3, and the plaintiff preferred a claim under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859, which was disallowed on the 7th of September 1876. The limitation law which is applicable to this case is Act XV of 1877. The suit is one to establish the plaintiff's right to certain property and to recover possession thereof, not to set aside a summary order. It has been held that, for such a suit, the period of limitation is twelve years in cases in which Act IX of 1871 applies—Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry v. Preonath Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 610 ; s.c., 3 C. L. R., 25). But under cl. 11, sched. ii of Act XV of 1877 the period is only one year. Before Act IX of 1871 came into operation, [231] the period was only one year by reason of the last twelve words of s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859. The cases of Brijo Kishore Nag v. Ram Dyal Chudra (21 W. R., 133), and Kaminee Debia v. Issur Chunder Roy (22 W. R., 39) support that view. Be that as it may, the period of limitation prescribed by Act XV of 1877 being shorter than the period of limitation prescribed by Act IX of 1871, this suit, if instituted within two years from the 1st of October 1877, would, under s. 2 of Act XV of 1877, have been saved from limitation. But I find that this suit was instituted on the 9th of October 1879 ; it is therefore barred by limitation. The suit is accordingly dismissed with costs."

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge, who dismissed the appeal with costs, saying merely that it seemed quite clear that the suit was barred by limitation.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, on the grounds : (i) "that art. 2 of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877 cannot be applicable to the present case, as in the present case no order has been passed against the plaintiff under s. 280, 281, 282, or 355 of Act X of 1877 ; (ii) that the Courts below ought to have construed the Limitation Act most strictly, and as such ought to have held that the Act in question makes no provision for a regular suit brought by a party defeated in a claim under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859. There is no authority for substituting the section of the old for those of the new Civil Procedure Code in the schedules to Act XV of 1877."

Baboo Pran Nath Pundit for the Appellant.

Baboo Byddo Nath Dutt for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—The property which forms the subject of this suit was attached in execution of a decree against the defendant No. 3. The plaintiff preferred a claim under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859 in respect of this property. This claim was disallowed on the 7th of September 1876. The plaintiff now seeks [232] to establish his right to, and obtain possession of, the property which formed the subject of that claim. The present suit was instituted on the 9th of October 1879, that is more than three years after the order disallowing the claim, which order was made under s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859.

The Munsif was of opinion that the limitation law applicable to this case is Act XV of 1877, and he refers to art. 11 of sched. ii of that Act. Applying that article, he was of opinion that this suit ought to have been brought within one year from the 7th of September 1876, and that, having been brought more than a year after the date of the order disallowing the claim, it was barred by limitation under the article just mentioned.

It is now contended before us in appeal that art. 11 cannot be read as applicable to s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859. Article 11 is as follows :—"By a person against whom an order is passed under s. 280, 281, 282, or 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure, etc." The Code of Civil Procedure here referred to was the Code which was in force when Act XV of 1877 was passed, that is Act X of 1877. Section 3 of Act X of 1877 provides as follows :—"When in any Act, Regulation, or Notification passed or issued prior to the day on which this Code comes into force, reference is made to Act VIII of 1859, Act XXIII of 1861, or the Code of Civil Procedure, or to any other Act hereby repealed, such reference shall, so far as may be practicable, be read as applying to this Code or the corresponding part thereof." There is, however, no provision that when, in any Act passed after the passing of Act X of 1877, reference is made to Act X of 1877, or the Code of Civil Procedure, that reference shall be read as applying to the old Code, Act VIII of 1859, or the corresponding part thereof; and in order to make art. 11 of the Limitation Act applicable to the present case, we would have to import into the law such a provision as that which has been just mentioned, and which has not been specifically made by any Act of the Legislature. We think that we cannot import a provision of this nature more especially in construing the Limitation Act, to which the rule of strict construction is applicable according to [233] the practice of the Courts. The result is, that art. 11 of the present Limitation Act is not applicable to the present case.

Then arises the question, what period of limitation is applicable? It has been decided in the case of Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry v. Preonath Roy Chowdhry (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 610; s.c., 3 C. L. R., 25), that, in consequence of the repeal of the last twelve words of s. 246 of Act VIII of 1859 by Act IX of 1871, the period of limitation applicable to a suit such as that which the plaintiff has here brought is twelve years. The decision in that case has been followed in a number of cases decided by other Benches of this Court. See Matonginy Dassee v. Chowdhry Junmunjoy Mullick (25 W. R., 513), Joy Ram Loot v. Paniram Dhoba (8 C. L. R., 54), and Raj Chunder Chatterjee v. Shama Churn Garai (10 C. L. R., 435). It has been contended before us by the vakil for the respondents that these decisions are not correct, and that, upon the true construction of the law, the period of limitation is one year; and that it has been so decided by the Bombay High Court and the Madras High Court.* Having regard to the fact that this question was not raised in the Courts below, that it was there assumed that, unless art. 11 of the second schedule of Act XV of 1877 is applicable, the period of twelve years would apply, which is in accordance with several decisions of this Court, and that no cross-objection has been taken on appeal to this Court, we think it unnecessary to enter into this question upon the present occasion. We think, therefore, that this appeal must be decreed with costs, and the case must be remanded for trial on the merits.

Case remanded.

Mortgagor and mortgagee - Foreclosure - Suit for possession - Covenant to pay - Conditional sale - Damages, measure of - Costs.

Two out of several co-sharers mortgaged as their own, by way of conditional sale, a portion of the joint family property. The mortgagee foreclosed, and then instituted a suit for possession, which he withdrew with liberty to bring a fresh suit. He afterwards brought a suit for possession against the mortgagors and their co-sharers, on the suggestion of the mortgagors that it would be undefended. It was, however, defended by the co-sharers, and the suit was dismissed. The mortgage-deed contained no covenant to repay the money lent. In an action for damages brought by the mortgagee against his mortgagors—

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the money lent and interest, and the costs of the second suit.

THIS was a suit for damages. The plaint stated that, by a deed of conditional sale, dated the 17th of April 1869, the defendants mortgaged to the plaintiff's father certain land in consideration of a loan by the latter of Rs. 520. The defendants failed to pay off the amount due, and the plaintiff's father foreclosed. After the foreclosure the plaintiff's father died, and the plaintiff sued to obtain possession of the foreclosed lands. The defendants did not enter any appearance, but their co-sharers did, claiming the land as joint, and denying the right of the defendants to mortgage without their consent. That suit was withdrawn, with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The plaintiff then brought a second suit for possession against the defendants and their co-sharers, at the instance of the defendants, who stated they would get their co-sharers to confess judgment. They did not succeed in doing so, however, and the suit was dismissed. The plaintiff then asked the defendants to come to a partition of the [235] lands, and hand over their shares to him ; but this they neglected to do. The present suit was for damages calculated on the money advanced and interest and the costs of the abortive litigation. The deed of conditional sale contain no stipulation for the repayment of the debt.

The Court of First Instance dismissed the suit, but this decision was reversed on appeal, the Judge citing Kishen Mohun Shaha v. Ram Chunder Dey (3 W. R., 28), Bykunt Nath Sen v. Goboollah Sikdar (24 W. R., 391), Moonshee Syud Ameer Ali v. Syef Ali (5 W. R., 289), Sreemutty Debia Chowdhraïn v. Bimola Soonduree Debia (21 W. R., 423), and Sh-ikh Eida v. Ram Jug Pandey (19 W. R., 289). The defendants appealed to the High Court, on the grounds of no cause of action, limitation, no stipulation in the kut-kobala for the return of the money, that the costs of the litigation could not be recovered, and caveat emptor.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Obhoy Churn Bose for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (O'KINEALY and BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by

O'Kinealy, J.—In this suit certain property was mortgaged to the plaintiff by the defendants, under a kut-kobala, in the year 1869; and in that document the property was described as their own exclusive property which they had obtained by purchase. Subsequently, the plaintiff instituted foreclosure proceedings, and issued the usual notice to the mortgagors. After the year of grace had expired, he sued for the mortgaged property; but certain persons intervened, and he withdrew the suit with sanction to bring a new case. From the evidence on the record, which from the observations of the Judge who tried the case in the lower Court appears to have been believed by him, it appears that the mortgagors, on the representation of the [236] mortgagee, said, that if a new suit were brought for possession of the property, they would induce the recusant members of the joint family to which they belonged to confess judgment. This suit was accordingly brought, and those members of the family, instead of confessing judgment, opposed the claim; and the suit was dismissed both in regard to the entire property and also in regard to the share of the mortgagors. Failing thus to follow the property, the plaintiff now sues for the return of the money which his father had lent, and for the costs in the suit which was dismissed. The general rule is laid down in Macpherson on Mortgages at page 233:—"Ordinarily the mortgagee cannot sue for the recovery of the money lent by him instead of for foreclosure and possession, except when good and sufficient cause is shown for his adopting such a course. And only something which, without any blame on his part, renders it impossible for the mortgagee to obtain possession will be considered to be good and sufficient cause."

We concur with the lower Court in holding that the mortgagee is entitled to obtain his money.

Another point for consideration is, whether he is entitled to obtain the costs of the suit. It was decided, so long back as 1853, by the Sadr Dewany, where, in a foreclosure suit by a mortgagee, the suit is dismissed and he is made to pay the costs of the intervenor, that in a fresh suit he is entitled to those costs from the mortgagor and to his own costs in the suit. In the present case not only was the suit brought for the possession of the property as mortgagee, but in addition it is clear that it was brought under the advice of the mortgagors themselves. We think, therefore, that the mortgagee is entitled to obtain the costs in that suit incurred by him and the costs he paid to the intervenor.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[237] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd May, 1882.

PRESENT:

SIR R. GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE MITTER.

Obhoy Churn Ghose and another.....Defendants

versus

Gobind Chunder Dey.....Plaintiff.*

Hindu Law—Joint family property, Suit to recover—Onus of proof—Limitation Act, 1877, Arts. 127, 144.

The plaintiff sued for a share in certain property on the allegation that his ancestor K and the defendants' ancestor R were uterine brothers who, while they were living in commensality, purchased the property in question with their joint funds in the name of R; and that subsequently K left his home, and then his daughter, the plaintiff's mother, enjoyed the property jointly with R until her death, when the plaintiff succeeded to his right and interest applied to have his name registered as a joint proprietor, but his application was refused; hence this suit.

The defence was that R bought the property in question with his own funds after he and his brother K had separated; that Radha Mohun, and afterwards the defendants, had been in exclusive possession for more than twelve years; and that the suit was barred by limitation. Held (reversing the judgment of FIELD, J.) that the onus was on the plaintiff to prove that the property was joint property.

Before a plaintiff can bring his case within Art. 127 of schedule II of the Limitation Act, 1877, it is incumbent on him to show that the property in which he seeks to recover a share is "joint property."

THE plaintiff's case was that his maternal grandfather Krishto Mohun Raout, and Radha Mohun Raout, the maternal grandfather of the first defendant, were two uterine brothers, living together in commensality; that whilst so living they purchased with the joint funds a 6-anna share of a talook called Lobohai Runject in the name of the elder-brother Radha Mohun; that subsequently to this purchase Krishto Mohun went away and was not heard of for a long time, and during that time his wife messed together with Radha Mohun and was in possession of a moiety of the 6-anna share of the above talook ; that on her death the plaintiff's mother was in possession of the said moiety and received rent from the ryots ; and that on the death of the [238] plaintiff's mother, he succeeded to the right, title and interest of Krishto Mohun in the said moiety, and was in possession thereof, but on his applying to the revenue authorities for registration of his name under the Land Registration Act, as proprietor of the said moiety, his application was refused, and he consequently brought the present suit to establish his right to, and for possession of, the said share.

The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation ; that the disputed property had not been purchased whilst the brothers were living in commensality, but was bought by Radha Mohun alone with his own money long after his separation with Krishto Mohun in food ; and that neither Krishto Mohun, nor his wife, nor the plaintiff's mother, nor the plaintiff himself, were ever in possession of the share claimed.

The Munsif found on the evidence that Radha Mohun alone, and after his death the defendants, had been in possession of the disputed share, and that the suit was barred by limitation. He therefore dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed on the ground (inter alia) that, as it was admitted that Radha Mohun and Krishto Mohun lived in commensality, it was for the defendants, to prove that the property was acquired by Radha Mohun with his own funds, and this had not been proved.

The Judge agreed with the Munsif in his findings as to possession and limitation, and as to the ground of appeal above mentioned he found that, though it was admitted the brothers lived in commensality, yet it was not admitted that they were so living at the time the talook was acquired, and that it was consequently for the plaintiff to show that the talook was purchased when Radha Mohun and Krishto Mohun were living together, or that it was acquired with funds partly supplied by Krishto Mohun which he had not done. He therefore dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court, and the case came before FIELD, J., the material portion of whose judgment was as follows :—

“ As to the view of the Judge that, although it was admitted by the defendants that the brothers were at one time joint, still it lay upon the plaintiff to prove that they were joint at the time when this property was acquired, it is to be observed that this [239] view is not supported by authority. The normal state of a Hindu family is that of coparceners, and it lies upon the person who alleges separation to prove it. Now here it was admitted that a coparcenary existed, and it must be presumed that this coparcenary continued until there was evidence of a separation. The burden of proof was, therefore, on the defendants to prove that there was a separation, and at a time antecedent to the acquisition of this property. Having disposed of the presumption of Hindu law in the manner just indicated, the District Judge proceeded to deal with the question of limitation. He says : ‘ As the defendants have succeeded in proving to the Munsif's satisfaction and to mine that they have been in exclusive possession of the talook for more than twelve years, it is quite clear that the plaintiff cannot succeed in this suit.’ This is not correct as the law now stands. If the property was joint property twelve years' exclusive possession alone will not have the effect of barring the present claim. Article 127 of sch. II of the Limitation Act provides that in a suit by a person excluded from joint family property to enforce a right to share therein, the time from which the twelve years begin to run is when the exclusion becomes known to the plaintiff.

If, therefore, this were found to be joint property, it would be necessary to enquire when the exclusion of the plaintiff, or those under whom he claims, became known to him or them. The decree of the District Judge must be set aside, and the case remanded in order that he may come to a fresh decision with reference to the observations above made."

Baboo Ankhil Chunder Sen for the Appellants.

Baboo Sreenath Banerjee for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MITTER, J.)

Garth, C.J.—I am unable to agree in the view which the learned Judge has taken of this case.

There is no doubt, of course, that as a general principle, when a Hindu family is proved to have been joint, that state of things is presumed to continue, until the contrary is shewn. The question is, how far that principle can properly be applied in this case.

[240] The plaintiff sues to recover an undivided share in certain land, which is now, and has been for many years past, in the defendants' exclusive possession, and his case is this.

He says that his maternal grandfather Krishto Mohun, and the maternal grandfather of the defendant No. 1, were uterine brothers; and that whilst they were living in commensality they purchased the property in question with their joint funds in the name of Radha Mohun; that subsequently Krishto Mohun left his home, and then his daughter (the plaintiff's mother) enjoyed the property jointly with Radha Mohun till her death, when plaintiff succeeded to his right, and applied to the revenue authorities to have his name registered, but that having failed in this application, he sues to establish his right and to recover possession.

The defendants' case is that Radha Mohun bought the property himself with his own money, after he and his brother had separated; that Radha Mohun, and afterwards the defendant No. 1, under Radha Mohun's will, have been in exclusive possession; and that the plaintiff and those under whom he claims never had anything to do with it.

Both Courts have found in favour of the defendants. They say that the plaintiff has entirely failed to show that at the time when the property was purchased the two brothers, Radha Mohun and Krishto Mohun, were living in commensality, or that the property was purchased with their joint funds, or that Krishto Mohun had anything to do with it. It was purchased in Radha Mohun's name; it was left by his will to the defendant No. 1, and the defendants have been in exclusive possession of it for upwards of twelve years, so that the plaintiff is barred by limitation.

But the learned Judge of this Court has held that, as this is a suit brought by a Hindu to recover possession of joint family property, and as it is admitted that Radha Mohun and Krishto Mohun were at one time joint, the presumption is, till the contrary is shewn, that the property in suit was purchased during the time that the brothers were living joint, and that it was incumbent on the defendants to prove that the property was purchased after the separation.

He considers, moreover, that the ordinary rule of twelve years' [241] limitation does not apply; and that the case comes under s. 127 of the Limitation Act; so he has remanded the case for the further enquiry, at what time his exclusion from this property became known to the plaintiff.

Now it seems to me that before a Hindu plaintiff can bring his case within Article 127, he must prove that the property in which he seeks to recover a share is "joint family property;" and that it is not enough for him merely to call it joint family property, and to show that 30, 50 or 100 years ago his ancestors, and the defendant's ancestors, were joint; leaving the Court to presume from this, that any property of which the defendant may be possessed at the time of suit brought is joint family property.

In this case, the property in suit is found to have been in the exclusive possession of the defendants for upwards of twelve years; and I consider that under s. 144 they have a prima facie right to that property by force of the twelve years' limitation rule against all the world. If the plaintiff wants to bring himself within Article 127, which places him in a more advantageous position than other claimants, he is bound to show that the property which he seeks to recover was at some time joint family property. In this he has entirely failed.

The doctrine, which the respondent's pleader has advanced, and which has apparently been acted upon by the learned Judge in this Court, appears to me a very dangerous one. If that doctrine were well founded, it would seem to follow that however long a Hindu may have been in the exclusive possession of property, moveable or immoveable, he would always be subject to have his title to it questioned by any distant member of his family, who could prove that at some prior period, even 100 years before, their common ancestors were members of a joint family; and not only so, but that in all such cases the onus of proving that the property was not joint would lie upon the defendant.

I should be sorry to think that this was the law. I consider that in this case these defendants having a twelve years' statutory title to the property claimed, have a prima facie case of separate ownership, and that as the plaintiff has given no evidence that the property was ever joint, his suit was properly dismissed. As my brother MITTER is also of this opinion, the judgment of the District [242] Judge will, therefore, be restored, with the costs of both hearings in this Court.

Mitter, J.—I am also of the same opinion.

The plaintiff seeks to recover possession of a share in a property which the defendants claim as the exclusive property of their predecessor in title, Radha Mohun. The plaintiff is the daughter's son of Krishto Mohun, Radha Mohun's brother.

The plaintiff alleged that this property was a joint family property of Radha Mohun and Krishto Mohun. The lower Courts found that the plaintiff had utterly failed to establish that it was at one time their joint family property. They also found that the defendants and their predecessor in title have been in possession of this property for more than twelve years. Upon these findings the lower Courts dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground of limitation, as well as on the ground that the plaintiff's title was not made out.

On the second appeal the learned Judge in this Court held that the decisions of the lower Courts were erroneous in law. He is of opinion that the plaintiff's suit ought not to be dismissed as barred by limitation upon the finding that the defendants were in exclusive possession of the property in dispute for more than twelve years. He thinks that Article 127 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act is applicable to the facts of this case. As to the title of the plaintiff, the learned Judge is of opinion that it must be presumed in his favour, because the defendants failed to prove that the property in dispute belonged exclusively to Radha Mohun. He thinks that if two brothers are admitted or proved to have lived as members of a joint Hindu family at one time, it must be presumed that their joint status continued until the contrary was proved.

Acting upon this presumption he has come to the conclusion that at the time of the acquisition of the property in dispute Radha Mohun and Krishto Mohun were members of a joint Hindu family, because the defendants have given no evidence to shew that they had separated before that time.

Having thus arrived at the conclusion, that at the time of the acquisition of the property in dispute the brothers were joint, the learned Judge has thrown the onus of proving that it was the [243] exclusive property of Radha Mohun upon the defendants; because, according to another presumption of Hindu law, a property, purchased in the name of one member of a joint family, must be presumed to be the common property of the family until the contrary is shewn. As the contrary has not been shewn in this case, the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that the property in dispute belonged to the two brothers Radha Mohun and Krishto Mohun.

Now it seems to me that in this case there was no room for either of these presumptions. It was an admitted fact that at the time when the suit was brought the plaintiff and defendants were not members of a joint family; that being so, the case is brought within the ordinary rule, viz., that the plaintiff must succeed on the proof of his title. He must prove that the property in dispute is his, by reason of its being a joint family property belonging to his ancestor, and the ancestor of the defendants. This view of the law is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bannoo v. Kashee Ram (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 315). There also it was admitted, as in this case, that when the dispute arose, the family was separate. The Judicial Committee held that in this state of things no presumption arises in favour of the plaintiff. Their Lordships say: "In the case of an ordinary Hindu family who are living together, or who have their entire property in common, the presumption is that all that any one member of the family is found in possession of belongs to the common stock. That is the ordinary presumption, and the onus of establishing the contrary is thrown on the member of the family who disputes it. Having regard, however, to the state of this family when the present dispute arose, their Lordships think that the presumption cannot be relied upon as the foundation of the plaintiff's case, and therefore, as he seeks to recover property which was in the possession of Ramdyal, and was ostensibly his own at the time of his death, it lies upon him to establish by evidence the foundation of his case, viz., that the property was joint property, to which he and his brother Kashee Ram, as surviving members, were entitled."

[244] As regards the application of Article 127 of the Limitation Act, I fully agree with my Lord the Chief Justice, that it cannot be applied until the plaintiff proves that the subject-matter in dispute is joint family property.

In the opinion of the lower Courts the plaintiff has failed to prove that the property in dispute was at any time the joint family property of Radha Mohun and Krishto Mohun. This finding of fact must be accepted as correct in second appeal.

Appeal allowed.

*Partition—Hindu widow—Revenue-paying estate—
Beng Act VIII of 1876, s. 10.*

A Hindu widow who has succeeded to a share in a revenue-paying estate as heir to her deceased husband is not a person having a proprietary interest in an estate for the term of her life only, within the meaning of s. 10, Beng. Act VIII of 1876. Even if she were, a Civil Court would not be debarred from decreeing partition of a revenue-paying estate at her instance if a proper case for the passing of such a decree be made out by her.

Jadomoney Dabee v. Sarodaprasono Mookerjee (1 Boulnois, 120); Phool Chand Lall v. Rughoobuns Sahoy (9 W. R., 108); Katama Nuchuar v. The Rajah of Shivagunga (9 Moore's I. A., 539); and Bhagbutti Dace v. Chowdhry Bholanath Thakoor (L. R., 2 I. A. 256) referred to.

Principles on which Courts should order partition at the instance of a Hindu widow stated.

IN this case the plaintiff stated that she and the defendants were joint owners of a settled revenue-paying estate, her share in right of her deceased husband being 3 annas 10 gundas; that in order to remove all likelihood of future disputes she applied to the [246] Collector for a butwara of the estate, but that the application was, on the 4th of November 1879, rejected under the provisions of s. 10 of Beng. Act VIII of 1876. It appeared that the widow's application to the Collector was opposed by three of her co-sharers, Haruk Narain Chowdhry and his two brothers, and the widow then filed the present suit on the 9th of February 1880, praying for a reversal of the Collector's order and for partition. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, and delivered the following judgment :—

"The plaintiff, a Hindu widow, seeks in this suit for butwara of her share by the Collector under the law for the partition of estates. She is met by the defendant with the objection that such a partition could not be held under s. 10 of Beng. Act VIII of 1876. I am of opinion that the above section applies. It provides that 'no person having a proprietary interest in an estate for the term of his life only, shall be deemed to be a person entitled to claim partition under this Act.' Now this is the present butwara law, and if the partition were at all to be held, it must be under the provisions of this law. It is contended that a Hindu widow's estate is not that of a proprietor for life, but she holds absolutely as heir to her husband. It may be that her estate is not of a tenant for life, as understood in England, but there cannot be the least doubt that her interest is that of a proprietor for life. If such a person as a Hindu widow or other female heiress under the Hindu law is not intended by the above section, I cannot conceive what other individual could be contemplated by the Legislature. I therefore hold that a Hindu widow is a person within the scope and meaning of the aforementioned section of the law. If that is so, this Court cannot direct the Collector to make a butwara in this case, for that would be directing him to commit an illegality accordingly dismiss the suit and charge the plaintiff with the costs of the opposing defendants with interest. The costs of the consenting defendants will be borne by themselves."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court on the grounds (1) that the Court below was wrong in holding that a Hindu widow is a person within the scope and meaning of s. 10 of Beng. Act VIII of 1876; (2) that the Court below ought to have held that a Hindu widow, such as the plaintiff is, fully represents the estate inherited by her from her husband, and is not tenant for life; (3) that the Court below ought to have held that the plaintiff was entitled to claim partition.

[246] Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Pran Nath Pundit for the Respondents.

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot dismissing the (plaintiff's) appellant's suit for the partition of a revenue-paying estate, a fractional share of which is owned and held by her by right of inheritance from her husband. The defendants, 1st party, who own and hold another share of this estate, and who if they survive the (plaintiff) appellant are presumptively entitled to the share in her possession after her death, alone opposed her claim.

It appears that before this suit was instituted the (plaintiff) appellant had made an application to the Collector of the district to partition the estate under the provisions of Beng. Act VIII of 1876, but the Collector dismissed the application on the ground that the (plaintiff) appellant being in possession of a share of the estate as a Hindu widow was precluded by the 10th section of the Act from applying for the partition thereof.

The present suit was then brought, praying for the reversal of the Collector's order and for an order directing that officer to partition the estate under the provisions of Beng. Act VIII of 1876.

The lower Court framed the following issues:—

First.—"Whether under the butwara law the plaintiff is entitled to have a partition effected of her share."

Second.—"Whether the plaintiff has suffered any inconvenience in the enjoyment thereof by reason of the property being joint."

The suit has been dismissed on the first of these issues, and no evidence was taken with reference to the second issue, although we are informed that the parties were ready with their evidence in the lower Court.

The objections taken before us in appeal are, 1st, that the lower Court is in error in holding that the provisions of s. 10, Beng. Act VIII of 1876 apply to the estate of a Hindu widow; and, 2ndly, that supposing the view taken by the lower Court of the provisions of s. 10 of the Act in question is correct, a Civil Court is not precluded from decreeing partition of a revenue-[247] paying estate at the instance of a Hindu widow, when a proper case for passing such a decree is made out.

We are of opinion that both these objections are valid.

Section 10 of Beng. Act VIII of 1876 is to the following effect:—"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no person having a proprietary interest in an estate for the term of his life only shall be deemed to be a person entitled to claim partition under this Act." In order to decide whether a Hindu widow's estate comes within the purview of this section, we must determine what that estate precisely is.

In Jadomoney Dabee v. Sarodaprosono Mookerjee (1 Boulnois, 120, at p. 129) COLVILLE, C.J., said: "But the estate of a Hindu widow is very different from a mere life estate. The case of Cossinanth Bysack v. Hurro Soondery Dasi (Clarke's Rules and Orders, Ap. 91), which has long given the law to this Court, and since it is a decision of the Privy Council, ought to have given, if it has not given, the law to the Courts of the East India Company, establishes that the estate of a widow is something higher than a life estate; that it entitles her to the possession of the property without restriction; and that she has a qualified power of disposition in it, the limits of which it is difficult, if not impossible exactly, to define further than by saying that the propriety of any particular exercise of that power must depend upon the circumstances in which it is made, and must be consistent with the general principles of Hindu law regarding such dispositions".

In another case, viz., of Phool Chand Lall v. Rughoobans Sahoy (9 W. R., 108), PEACOCK, C.J., said: "The widow takes a widow's estate by inheritance from her husband. It is not an absolute estate for all purposes, and it is not merely an estate for life." Then again in Katama Natchiar v. The Rajah of Shiva-gunga (9 Moore's I. A., 539), in which one of the questions for decision was, whether a decree obtained against a Hindu widow was binding upon the heirs coming in after her, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council observed: "For assuming her (a Hindu widow) to be entitled to the zamindari at all the whole estate would for the time be vested in her absolutely for some purposes, though in [248] some respects for a qualified interest, and until her death it could not be ascertained who would be entitled to succeed. The same principle which has prevailed in the Courts of this country as to tenants in tail representing the inheritance would seem to apply to the case of a Hindu widow, and it is obvious that there would be the greatest possible inconvenience in holding that the succeeding heirs were not bound by a decree fairly and properly obtained against the widow."

It is clear from these cases (1) that the widow completely represents the estate; (2), that under certain circumstances she has the right to convey an absolute interest in it; and (3), that until her death it is impossible to ascertain who would be entitled to succeed to the estate after her. Such an estate as this cannot be merely an estate for life. The distinction between a mere life estate and a widow's estate is explained by the Judicial Committee in Mussamut Bhagbutti Dace v. Chowdhry Bholunath Thakoor (L. R., 2 I. A., 256). In that case one Odan Thakoor executed before his death a deed providing that after his death his property was to be enjoyed by his wife during her lifetime, appropriating the profits derived therefrom, and that after her death it was to devolve on his adopted son. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that the widow obtained in this case an estate for life, and that the remainder was vested in the adopted son. Their Lordships observed, "if she (the widow) took the estate only of a Hindu widow, one consequence no doubt would be that she would be unable to alienate the profits, or that at all events whatever she purchased out of them would be an increment to her husband's estate, and the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover possession of all such property real and personal; but on the other hand she would have certain rights as a Hindu widow; for example she would have the right, under certain circumstances, if the estate were insufficient to defray the funeral expenses or her maintenance, to alienate it altogether. She certainly would have the power of selling her own estate; and it would further follow that Giridhari (the adopted son) would not be possessed in any sense of a vested remainder but merely a contingent one."

[249] With all these decisions before the Legislature, defining what a widow's estate is, and which definition clearly shows that it is not a proprietary interest for the term of her life only, it seems to us not probable that if, by enacting s. 10 of Beng. Act VIII of 1876 they had intended to disentitle a Hindu widow from claiming partition under the aforesaid Act, they would have described her right as "a proprietary interest in an estate for the term of her life only."

The words "a proprietary interest in an estate for the term of one's life only" would imply an interest which, actually in the enjoyment of the owner at the time of his death, would terminate on the happening of that event, and would not pass on to his heirs, or if at that time that interest be in the hands of an alienee under an alienation made by him during his lifetime, it would cease to exist on his death. The first of these alternatives is true in the case of a Hindu widow, but not the second in all cases because, as already shown, she has the right under certain circumstances to convey an absolute interest in the estate inherited by her.

Then again under Regulation XIX of 1814 a Hindu widow was competent to apply for partition of a revenue-paying estate. Clause 2, s. 4 of the Regulation provided that on an application by one, two, or more of the proprietors of a joint estate being made, the Collector should publish an advertisement notifying the same to all parties concerned, and specifying that he should proceed to make the division applied for in 15 days from the date of the advertisement, unless any person in possession of the estate should, before the expiration of that time, deny the right of such claimant or claimants to the share or shares so claimed by him or them. The next clause provided that in the event of any such denial not being offered to the claim for separation, the Collector should proceed to make the division applied for.

It is clear from these provisions that a Hindu widow, who represents the estate of her husband completely, was entitled under Regulation XIX of 1814 to apply for partition of a revenue-paying estate. This Regulation was repealed by Beng. Act VIII of 1876 which has now taken its place. And if it was the intention of the Legislature to take away from a Hindu widow the right of applying to the Collector for partition of a revenue-[250] paying estate—a right which she undoubtedly had under the Regulation of 1814—the Legislature would have done so by a more clear provision than what is contained in s. 10 of Beng. Act VIII of 1876 which, in our opinion, applies only to the case of a simple life estate where the remainder is vested in some known person. The decision of the lower Court upon this point is not in our opinion correct.

But even if s. 10 of Beng. Act VIII of 1876 were applicable to a widow's estate, still a Civil Court would not be debarred from decreeing partition of a revenue-paying estate at the instance of a Hindu widow if a proper case for the passing of such a decree be made out by her. This is clear from the provisions of s. 29 of the Act, which says: "subject to the provisions of s. 11, a Civil Court may at any time direct the Collector to assign to any person lands representing a specified interest in any estate, etc., etc., etc., to be held by such person as a separate estate, etc., etc., etc., provided that an application for such partition and separation shall be presented by such person as required by ss. 16, 17, 18 and 19." But a decree of this nature must be executed in the manner indicated by s. 265 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Although the right of enforcing partition is generally a common incident in a joint undivided property, yet it by no means follows that a Civil Court would be bound to decree partition at the instance of a Hindu widow without a special cause or necessity being established for a partition. The estate of a Hindu widow is peculiar; although she completely represents the estate, yet the persons who take after her do not take it through her, but they take it as heirs of the last male owner. There is a further peculiarity, namely that until her death it cannot be known who would succeed to the estate after her death. Under these circumstances it would be the duty of a Court of Justice to see, before decreeing partition, that the interest of the presumptive heir be not affected by such decree. From the peculiar nature of a Hindu widow's estate, we are of opinion that the above restriction should be put upon her right to enforce partition—a right which is inherent in every owner of property: see Shama Sundari Debi v. Jardine Skinner (3 B. L. R., Ap., 120).

[251] Therefore, before a decree for partition is given in a suit by a Hindu widow brought for that purpose, the Court ought to be satisfied that it is a bona fide claim arising from such necessities as render partition desirable between two joint owners, and that she would properly represent the interest of the estate including that of the person who would come in after her. It is upon the ground of her representing the next-taker after her that a decree for partition at her instance is held binding upon such next-taker. The following observations in Story's Equity Jurisprudence, Vol. I, s. 656A, lend considerable support to the views expressed above: "Doubts were formerly entertained whether in a suit in equity for a partition, brought, only by or against a tenant for life of the estate, where the remainder is to persons not in esse, a decree could be made which would be binding upon the persons in remainder. That doubt is, however, now removed; and the decree is held binding upon them upon the ground of a virtual representation of them by the tenant for life in such cases; but if the partition is made in pursuance of an agreement between the tenant for life and the other party, under such circumstances the Court would direct it to be referred to a master to enquire and state whether it will be for the future benefit of the remainder-men that the agreement should be carried into execution without any variations, or, if with variations what the variations ought to be."

The same duty is cast upon a Court of Justice here, namely that it should be satisfied that the decree for partition, if made, would not in any way act injuriously to the interests of the future heir.

For the foregoing reasons we are of opinion that the decision of the lower Court is erroneous. The decree of that Court is, therefore, reversed, and the case remanded for re-trial in accordance with the observations made above. The costs of the hearing before us will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

[252] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 23rd June, 1882.

Section 4, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, entitles the holder of land for the time being, however he may have acquired it, to the benefit of the presumption prescribed in that section if he can show that there has been a continuous and uniform payment of the same rent for twenty years.

THIS was a suit to recover rent for the year 1287 M.S. at a rate which the defendant was required to pay by a notice of enhancement, dated the 6th of January 1879, and served on the defendant through the Sub-Divisional Collectorate. The plaintiff admitted that the defendant had previously been paying Rs. 3-4 a year as rent for 6 bighas 6 cottas of land, and the rent now demanded was one rupee per bigha. The defendant alleged that he held 8 bighas of land at a yearly rent of Rs. 3-4 only; that he had received this holding in 1273 M. S. (which commenced on the 12th of April 1865) from one Gopal Sahu, in whose family it had been from the time of the decennial settlement; that his name had been entered on the zamindar's registers; and that his rent was not liable to enhancement. It was found by the Munsif that the defendant had purchased the interest of Gopal Sahu, but on this part of the case the Judge said: Gopal Sahu was examined as a witness, and he says that he caused the defendant's name to be entered in lieu of his own in the zamindar's sherista, but he utters not a word, so far as I can find, about any transfer of rights by sale. On the contrary Gopal Sahu was, he tells us, only fourteen years of age when his father died, and he gave up the jote because he could not carry it on." The learned Judge then went on to say:—

[253] There is no evidence on the record to show that a transfer of a holding under such circumstances gives the transferee any right by local custom to count the previous holder's occupancy as his own. Had the question been whether Herdu Jha could add on to the time of his possession, the time during which Gopal Sahu or his father had held the jote, in order to establish an occupancy right under s. 6, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, it must have been answered in the negative. But the working of ss. 3 and 4 of the Act are peculiar, and if strictly read imply that, without reference to the fact of any transfer, when the rent of any land has not been changed from the time of the permanent settlement, that rent cannot be enhanced without the consent of the tenant for the time being in possession.

In the case of Ramnath Lal Bhagat v. Watson (Rev. Jud. & Police Journal Vol. I, p. 54), Sir BARNES PEACOCK observed that "sections 3 and 4 of Act X make no mention of the nature of the pottahs under which the land has been held, or of the right under which a fixed rent has been paid without alteration, but exempt from enhancement lands which have been held at fixed rents from the time of the permanent settlement under whatever circumstances the land has been so held. This is clearly shown by section 4" (section quoted). "The presumption required to be made is not that the land has been held by the ryot and his ancestors, or by him and the persons who had power to alienate it to him, but simply that it has been held at a fixed rent. The right of exemption from enhancement is founded upon the simple fact of the land having been held at a fixed rate of rent from the time of the permanent settlement." The same principle appears to be involved in Rajkishore Mookerjee v. Hurreehur Mookerjee (10 W. R., 117), and Kashinath Lushka v. Bamasoonduree Debia (10 W. R., 429). The case of Luteefoonnissa Beebee v. Poolin Beharry Sein (W. R. F. B., No. 31), explains the meaning of s. 4 to be that "where at the time of the commencement of the suit land is held by a ryot, and has been held by him, or by some person through whom he claims, at the same rent for a period of twenty years next before the commencement of the suit the presumption specified in the section shall be made. In other words there must have been a holding for twenty years next before the commencement of the suit, at a rent which has not been changed during that period." The words "through whom he claims" are wide enough to cover simple transfers of holding, and were made apparently to guard against the application of the presumption to cases in which there may have been a breach in the continuity of possession. In the present instance the acquittances go back to the year 1268 M. S., which began on the 12th of April 1860, and the plaint in this suit was filed on the 14th of July 1880. The Munsif appears to be correct in holding that the rent has been unchanged for a period of twenty years before [254] the commencement of this suit, and as though not without considerable hesitation and doubt I have come to the conclusion that a mere transfer of a holding with the consent of the zamindar, as in the defendant's case, is a sufficient continuity of tenancy to enable the tenant for the time being in possession to claim the benefit of s. 4 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, I must dismiss the appeal.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1773 of 1881, against the decree of F. Comley, Esq., Judge of Purnea, dated the 15th June 1881, affirming the decree of Baboo Hem Chunder Mitter, Munsif of Acarea, dated the 2nd March 1881.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court against the learned Judge's construction of s. 4 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

Baboo Taruck Nath Sen for the Appellant.

Baboo Saligram Singh for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by Tottenham, J.—In this appeal it has been contended that the lower Appellate Court has wrongly given the defendant-respondent the benefit of the presumption prescribed in s. 4 of the Rent Act VIII of 1869, although his tenancy commenced less than twenty years before the suit was brought, and he did not, as found by the Judge, acquire the land by any transfer from the previous tenant.

The words of the section are sufficiently plain; and seem to us to entitle the holder of the land for the time being, however, he may have acquired it, to the benefit of the presumption, if he can show that there has been a continuous and uniform payment of the same rent for 20 years. This interpretation is not inconsistent with what has been decided in this Court in previous cases, though in those cases it was not necessary to lay down more than this, that the holding of the ryot, or of some person through whom he claims, for a period of 20 years, was enough to raise the presumption.

In the present case it has been found that there was no break in the continuity of the payment of the rent alleged by the defendant, but that he, without any interruption of tenancy, was substituted by the zamindar for the previous tenant, and continued to pay the same rent.

[255] In our opinion, therefore, the lower Court has rightly given him the benefit of the presumption, having found the necessary facts in his favour.

The appeal is dismissed without costs, as nobody appears for respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Limitation—Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 29—Suit for arrears of rent.

After the expiration of the period prescribed by s. 29 of the Bengal Act VIII of 1869, a plaintiff suing for arrears of rent cannot insist on the pendency of another suit, brought by him for possession of the land, as preventing limitation from running, where there has been no time during which such rent could not have been recovered if he had acted on his right of suing for it.

In Rani Sarnomoyee v. Shoshee Mookhee Burmonea (12 Moore's I. A., 244; S.C., 2 B. L. R., P. C., 10), the claimant of rent was, until the setting aside of the sale that had taken place, in the position of a person whose claim had been satisfied. The right to sue in that case had been suspended; and it was, therefore, distinguishable from the present.

The plaintiff's ancestor purchased a talook from the Government, subject to an ijara, therein held by the defendants, which expired in 1866. A suit brought by the plaintiff in 1874 for possession was dismissed finally in 1876, the defendant's claim to remain in possession under another tenure being allowed. The plaintiff in 1876 sued the defendants for arrears of rent for the years 1866—1872.

Held, that the suit was barred under s. 29, notwithstanding the proceedings of 1874.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court (May 16th, 1878) affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of the district of the 24-Pargannahs (20th November 1876).

[256] The suit out of which this appeal arose was to recover from the defendants, who held certain chakdari tenures within the plaintiff's zamindari of Kassinagar in the 24-Pargannahs, the rent of their holdings from April 1872 to July 1876. Both the Courts in India held the claim barred by limitation under s. 29 of Act VIII of 1869, the "Landlord and Tenant Act, 1869," prescribing a three years' limitation in suits for rent.

The question raised was whether limitation had been prevented from running by the continuance of litigation between the parties.

The predecessors in estate of the respondents had formerly been proprietors of Kassinagar in which their zamindari interest was brought to sale by the Government for arrears of revenue in 1838. The Government at the sale purchased the proprietary right, and having held it khas for some years, granted portions of it in ijara to members of the family of the former proprietors. These leases expired in 1866. Meantime in 1861 the Government had sold to Tarapersad Rai, father of the present appellant Huopersad Rai, the zamindari interest in Kassinagar.

In 1866 Huopersad Rai having succeeded his father as zamindar, sued those who had been the lessees under the expired ijaras to obtain direct possession. These tenants then alleged their right to remain in possession under certain old chakdari tenures existing within the zamindari, and held by them under their own relations from before the time of the settlement and subsequent sale, as above-mentioned, of Kassinagar. Litigation ensued, commencing in 1872, when Huopersad Rai filed his plaint for possession, contending that these tenures, of which he denied the existence, had been, if they ever existed, rendered void by the sale for arrears of revenue in 1838, and the dealing with the estate by the Government afterwards. In 1874 this suit was dismissed, and in January 1876 the High Court confirmed this decision. Huopersad Rai then brought the present suit on the 7th February 1876, to recover arrears of rent from the years 1876 to 1872 on the basis that the chakdari tenures existed.

Meantime he appealed to Her Majesty in Council against the [257] decision of the High Court of January 1876, but without success. In advising the dismissal of the appeal, on the 26th May 1881, their Lordships expressed their opinion that the defendants, even if not in possession under a well-proved legal title, were in possession under colour of a title which had not been avoided, though it might have been, as far back as the year 1838, and that since then time had run in their favour. It had not been shown that the Government did anything to avoid the tenures under which the defendants were in possession.

The Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pargannahs district dismissed the suit for rent on the issue of limitation under s. 29 of Act VIII of 1869. The High Court on appeal upheld that decision. The judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and McDONELL, J.) is reported in I. L. R., 3 Cal., 819.

Mr. R. V. Doyné appeared for the Appellant.

The Respondents did not appear.

For the appellant it was argued that during the continuance of the litigation of 1874, in which the present appellant, bonâ fide believing that the alleged chakdari tenures did not exist, had contested the tenant's right of possession, he was unable at the same time to insist on his right against them as tenants, and, therefore, the course of limitation was suspended. Reference was made to *Ranee Surnomoyee v. Shoshee Mookhee Burmonea; Dindyal Paramanik v. Radhakishori Debi (8 B. L. R., 536); [258] Eshan Chandra Rai v. Khaja Asanula (16 W. R., 79); Mohes Chandra Chaklidas v. Ganga Moni Dasi (18 W. R., 59); Watson v. Dhorendra Chunder Mookerjee (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 6).

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir R. P. Collier.—In this case, the sole question is as to the application of the Law of Limitation. The claim is for rent from April 1866 to June 1872. The terms of the 29th section of Act VIII of 1869 of the Bengal Council are these: "Suits for the recovery of arrears of rent shall be instituted within three years from the last day of the Bengal year, or from the last day of the month of Jeyt of the Fasli or Willayatti year in which the arrear claimed shall have become due." It is admitted that in this case the suit was not instituted within three years from the end of the year when the last rent became due, and, therefore, prima facie, it is barred by the Law of Limitation. This prima facie case is endeavoured to be answered in this way: The plaintiff says that in 1874, that is to say, two years after the last instalment of the rent sued for had accrued due, the Statute ceased to operate because he instituted a litigation which had the effect of preventing it from running, and that, therefore, a portion at least of his claim is not barred. That litigation was this: He brought three suits in the year 1874 against the tenants with respect to whose arrears of rent the present action is brought, for the purpose of ejecting them from their holdings, which were called chukdari holdings, in a certain zamindari of which he was possessed. These suits were dismissed by the first Court, and on the 25th July 1876, by the Appeal Court, on the ground of limitation.

On the 7th September 1876 the appellant commenced the present suit, concurrently with which he prosecuted an appeal to Her Majesty in Council from the decree of the 25th July 1876. His appeal was dismissed on the 26th May 1881.

The appellant contends that the Statute did not run against his claim for rent after the year 1874, when he commenced these suits; and for that proposition he relies solely on the authority of the case of Ranee Surnomoyee v. Shoshee Mookhee Burmonea (12 Moore's I. A., 244; s.c., 2 B. L. R., P. C., 10). [259] Both Courts in India have decided against the appellant upon the ground that the Statute applies, and that his case does not come within the exception to the operation of the Statute established in the case of Ranee Surnomoyee—an exception rather apparent than real.

The effect of that case may be very shortly stated. The zamindar brought a certain patni taluk to sale, and sold it to a purchaser who was put in possession of it, and out of the purchase-money the arrears of rent were paid. Subsequently this sale was set aside for irregularity; the zamindar had to refund the purchase-money received by her, and the patnidar, who succeeded in setting it aside, obtained also the mesne profits for the time during which he was ousted. Under those circumstances this Committee, whose judgment was delivered by Sir JAMES COLVILLE, observe: "It is clear that until the sale had been finally set aside, she"—that is, the plaintiff—"was in the position of a person whose claim had been satisfied, and that her suit might have been successfully met by a plea to that effect." In other words, the effect of the judgment of this Board is, that under the peculiar circumstances, the patnidar having recovered possession, together with mesne profits, it was equitable that he should pay the amount of rent which was in arrear; but that amount of rent did not accrue until the sale of the patni had been set aside, and, therefore, until that time the Statute could not run. This examination of that case shows it altogether to differ from the present. Here there was no period of time in which the rent could not have been recovered. There was no period of time in which, therefore, the Statute might not have run.

* 12 Moore's I. A., 244; s.c., 2 B. L. R., P. C., 10. In that case an auction sale under Beng. Reg. VIII of 1819 of the rights of patnidars in a patni talook by the Zamindar for arrears of rent, was set aside by the Zilla Court for informality in the notices, under that Regulations and the patnidars who had been dispossessed were restored with mesne profits. The zamindar then brought a suit against the patnidars, under Act X of 1859 to recover the arrears of rent, which had accrued before and during the time they were out of possession. A decision that this suit, not having been brought within three years from the time when the rent first became due, was barred by s. 32 of Act X of 1859; was reversed on appeal. The Judicial Committee held that the cause of action accrued at the date of the decree cancelling the auction sale, and that the suit having been brought within three years from the date of that decree, limitation had not run.

This case, therefore, being inapplicable, and no other case being relied upon, their Lordships have only humbly to advise Her Majesty that the judgment appealed against be affirmed, and that this appeal be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal—Failure to produce evidence at hearing.

At the hearing of a suit a party, though he had sufficient warning of what was necessary, did not take the proper steps to cause the production of the documentary, and only admissible, evidence of a material fact which had to be proved by him; and the decision was against him.

The record of another proceeding would, it was said, have supplied this evidence; and an application had been previously made on which the order of the Judge was that "the matter would be decided when the case was tried, and the record would be sent for, if necessary." No further application to the Court was made, and no attempt to supply this evidence. Held, that if there had been, as there might have been, an oversight by the party in not calling the attention of the Judge to the above order, and in not tendering the evidence, there had been no omission on the Judge's part affording ground for appeal.

APPEAL from a decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court (26th June 1878) affirming a decree of the Judge of the Midnapur District, (31st December 1877) affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of the same district (18th November 1876).

The question raised on this appeal, preferred by a defendant against, whom a decree for the possession of land had been made, related to the proceedings at the hearing of a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the Midnapur district, who finding no proof of a material fact, the affirmative whereof was a necessary part of the defendant's case, had decided against him.

All the facts relevant to this report are fully stated in their Lordships' judgment.

After an appeal to the District Court had been dismissed by the Officiating Judge, a special appeal was dismissed by a Divisional Bench of the High Court (L. S. JACKSON and TOTTENHAM, JJ.).

Among the grounds of appeal filed in the High Court was one to the following effect viz., that even if the non-filing of the record (which would have supplied the required evidence), had [261] arisen through the inadvertence of the defendant's pleader, yet it would have been the duty of the District Judge, under the circumstances, to have admitted the same in regular appeal, as he was asked to do; and that as he had not done so, the Divisional Bench of the High Court should have remanded the case.

On this appeal --

Mr. R. T. Doyne appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Respondent.

Their Lordships Judgment was delivered by

Sir R. Couch.—This suit is brought for two parcels of land, containing 290 bighas, which are part of a parcel of 632 bighas. The case of the plaintiff is, that Mohunt Hoigrib Dass had obtained a money decree against Adjudhia-nath Manna and Sambhunath Manna, who held the 632 bighas on the 14th of January 1863, and had purchased the lands at the sale in execution thereof, and sold them to the plaintiff.

The defendant claims under a lease from the Government which was made in December 1871 for three years, and was renewed in April 1874.

The facts with regard to the 632 bighas, of which the 290 in suit form a part, are these:—The Government before 1816 was in possession of a large tract of land along the sea-shore in the district of Midnapur, which was used for the purpose of making salt. In 1816 it granted a perpetual lease of 632 bighas of that land to Koinolokant Manna, the predecessor in title of the above mentioned Mannas. The Government after that made an embankment by which the land thus leased was left outside next to the sea, and subsequently, in 1858, there was an arrangement between the Government and the Mannas by which, as the lands which were left outside the embankment became less valuable for the purpose of cultivation, but were valuable for the purpose of making salt, the Mannas were to have an equal portion of land inside the embankment, and the Government was to take the lands which were outside. Before this a local Rajah, who (and whose successor) was called in the suit "the Rajah," had brought a suit against the Government to recover the lands [262] which lay outside the embankment, and had obtained a decree for all the lands which were outside. In consequence of this the Government directed the Mannas to pay to the Rajah the rent which had been reserved on the lease; and thus after the arrangement the Mannas were in possession of 632 bighas lying inside the embankment, but paying rent to the Rajah as for the land which was outside. The Mannas having allowed their rent to fall in arrear, the Rajah brought a suit, on the 19th of July 1862, to recover arrears of rent from 1855 to 1862. The suit was brought for a moiety of the rent, as, in consequence of death, it would seem that the Rajah's estate had become divided. A decree was obtained by him on the 27th of March 1863, and an order for attachment and sale was made on the 18th of August 1863. It was contended by the defendant that on the 27th of February 1865, at the sale under that attachment, the whole of the 632 bighas outside the embankment was sold, and the Government was ousted from it, and that in consequence thereof the Government ejected the Mannas from the land which had been taken in exchange, and which was inside, the suit having been brought about, and the loss of the outside land by the Government having been caused by the failure of the Mannas to pay the rent. Therefore the material question in the case was, whether the outside land originally leased had been sold at the auction on the 27th February 1865, and an issue was framed raising that question. It was the third issue, "Whether or not, in consequence of Sambhuram and another's"—that is the name used for the Mannas—"non-payment of the rent of their mal lands, the zamindar obtained a decree and effected the sale of those lands; and the Government, again taking the disputed lands from Sambhuram and another,"—being the lands inside the embankment,—“were in possession from 1865, and settled the lands with the defendant,” referring to the lease in 1871. An application appears to have been made shortly before the suit came on for hearing on the part of the defendant in which he asked to have the documents relating to the exchange of the land in dispute, which had been filed in another suit numbered 141, referred to in this suit, and the order made on that occasion was, that the matter would be decided when the case [263] was tried, and the record would be sent for, if necessary. The other suit was one which had been brought by the defendant against a brother of the plaintiff, and related to another portion of the 632 bighas. It was said that the exhibits in that suit would furnish evidence of what was sold on the 27th February 1865.

The case came on to be heard before the Subordinate Judge, and it would appear that no further application was made to him to send for the record of the other suit, and no attempt was made to use the documents which had been filed in that suit, but the case was decided upon the oral evidence, and the Judge held that it had not been satisfactorily proved that the lands outside the embankment had been sold. He said: "It is true that some of the plaintiff's witnesses have said in their depositions that the lands on the outside were sold, but it has not been satisfactorily proved;" and upon the said oral evidence it cannot be said that the lands on the outside were sold on account of debts due to the zamindar, nor, supposing they were sold, does it appear for what reason they were sold. "The defendant should have given evidence to prove this matter by means of papers of the Court." If there had been, as there might, an oversight on the part of the pleaders for the defendant in not calling the attention of the Judge to the order which had been made on the 3rd of November 1876, or in not tendering in evidence, which might have been done, the sale proceedings of the 27th of February 1865, he might have applied to the Judge for a review ; and if he had refused it, the case might have been carried to the Court of Appeal, and an application made that the evidence should be received. There was an appeal, but in the grounds of appeal, instead of this matter being brought to the attention of the Court, the ground taken was that "it has been proved by the evidence of the witnesses of both the parties that the lands given in exchange by Adjudhianath were sold by auction, and that the sale certificate has been filed." The sale certificate which was filed did not prove it. "The plaintiff does not object on the ground that the said lands were not sold." The issue had been raised on that very point. "Consequently the lower Court should [264] have held that the lands given in exchange had been sold by auction." The Court, in the judgment on the appeal, stated that it had been urged before it "that the Subordinate Judge ought to have sent for the record of the suit No. 141 abovementioned, which contains copies of the papers relating to the auction sale of February 1865, in order that it might be seen that the lands formerly held by Adjudhianath"—that is, the Mannas—"outside the embankment were really sold;" and therefore, although the objection was not taken in the grounds of appeal, it seems to have been allowed to be taken at the hearing. The judgment was : "This Court is of opinion that it ought not to interfere with the judgment appealed against. It was the duty of the defendant-appellant, who raised a special plea, to adduce proof in support of it ; but he failed to do so ; and he neither pressed for the production of the misl. of suit No. 141 in the lower Court, nor urged any objection on this subject in his petition of appeal. To allow the objection now would be taking the plaintiff-respondent by surprise. Oral evidence is, of course, inadmissible to prove the particulars of the auction sale of February 1865. No objection in point of law could be taken to that judgment, considering what had been done. It was a perfectly correct judgment. There was a special appeal from it ; and the High Court, as might have been anticipated, held that there was no ground for the special appeal. The defendant, the appellant, now comes on appeal to Her Majesty in Council, and says :—

"This appellant now humbly submits there is error in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, and of the High Court, and that they should be reversed or varied for (among others) the following reasons : because the fact on the supposed non-proof of which the Judge put his judgment was not in issue or disputed ; and if supposed to be disputed, this appellant should have been allowed to prove it by the production from the other record of the papers therein relating to the said sale in execution."

Their Lordships have already mentioned that it was put in issue and was disputed, and the present appellant had no right to assume that he need not prove it. He had sufficient warning that it was necessary for him to do so ; and as to his saying that he should have been allowed to prove it by the production from [265] the other record of the papers, the answer is that if he had produced those papers or if he had taken the proper steps to have them in the first Court, and had tendered them in evidence, he might, if they had been rejected, have made it a ground of appeal. But he did not do what was proper and necessary, and their Lordships are of opinion that he has shown no ground for reversing the decisions of the lower Courts.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal be dismissed ; and the appellant will pay the costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Estoppel—Evidence Act, s. 115—Sale in execution of decree—

Intervenor in rent suit.

A purchase by a mortgagee, at a sale in execution of a decree upon his mortgage, of the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor, who has been estopped from asserting a title to the property as against certain parties, does not place such mortgagee in a better position as regards the estoppel.

A suit for rent by a zamindar and patnidar against a darpatnidar, was defeated by the defence of the latter that he had conveyed his interest to others, against whom the former afterwards obtained a decree, and brought the darpatni to sale in execution, buying their right, title, and interest therein himself. From the darpatnidar, who had thus disclaimed title, a third party claimed to be mortgagee, and set up a decree on his mortgage followed by a purchase of the tenure at a sale in execution. He was thereupon allowed to intervene in a suit for rent brought by the zamindar and patnidar against an ijaradar of lands within the darpatni estate.

Held that, notwithstanding this purchase, the intervening mortgagee was bound by the estoppel arising out of the mortgagor's disclaimer of title in the suit abovementioned.

APPEAL from a decree of a Divisional Bench of the High Court, [266] (21st November 1878), see Anathnath Deb v. Bistu Chundra Rai, I. L. R., 4 Cal., 783) reversing a decree of the Judge of the Birbhum District 1877, and dismissing the suit of the plaintiff, now represented by the appellant, with costs.

Among certain patni, darpatni, and se-patni tenures, under the zamindari of Shah Alampur, of which the late Aushotas Deb and Promotho Nath Deb were formerly joint proprietors, a certain darpatni estate, having been sold under Regulation VIII of 1819, for arrears of rent, was purchased in 1852 by Ishan Chandra Sein. In 1858 Ishan Chandra Sein executed a document purporting to convey this estate to his wife Kripamoyi, his son Dhun Krishna, (and another son, then a minor), and in their favour were executed instruments, completing the darpatni title by the executors of Aushotas Doh's estate. In 1871 Bistu Chandra Rai took an ijara for five years of lands called Loba Bhadra, within this darpatni estate.

The present respondent, Anathnath Deb, son of Promotho Nath Deb, succeeded to the zamindari, and also patnidari, as well as other estates in that part of Shah Alumpur which included the darpatni estate; and on the 22nd August 1872, he sued Ishan Chandra Sein in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Birbhum for rent due in respect of Loba Bhadra. In answer to that suit Ishan Chandra Sein put forward the above-mentioned conveyance of 1858 of the darpatni, including the mehal Loba Bhadra, to his wife and son, alleging that he had sold the estate to them for value, and had no title therein himself. The suit for rent was, accordingly, on this evidence supported by Dhun Krishna's, dismissed.

Thereupon Anathnath Deb, on the 13th March 1873, sued Kripamoyi and Dhun Krishna, for the rent of the mehal, and obtaining a decree, he brought it to sale in execution, purchasing their right, title, and interest therein himself. The present suit was brought by Anathnath Deb on the 5th June 1876, against Bistu Chandra Rai, the ijaradar, to recover the rent due from him for the last seven months of his term, amounting with interest, and with the addition of a sum due for road-cess, to about Rs. 1,024. The defence was that the person entitled as darpatnidar to the rent of the Loba Bhadra mehal, was Poreshnath Mookerjee, who was permitted to [267] intervene in the suit. His allegation was that before the suit of 13th March 1873 was brought, viz., on the 11th January 1873, Ishan Chandra Sein, being in debt, hypothecated the Loba Bhadra mehal to him, and that he, afterwards in September 1875, obtained a decree upon his mortgage, and in the same month purchased at a sale in execution of that decree all Ishan Chandra's rights in Loba Bhadra.

Whether the representatives of Poreshnath Mookerjee, (who had died pending these proceedings), were not bound by an estoppel that would have prevented Ishan Chandra Sein from contesting the title made through the conveyance of 1858 to his wife and sons, was the question now raised.

The judgment of the Court of First Instance was that the intervenor's allegation was proved, and that the plaintiff Anathnath Deb had no right to the rent claimed against the ijaradar of Loba Bhadra. On appeal to the High Court that decision was reversed. It was held that Anathnath Deb had acted on the belief, induced by Ishan Chandra's representations, that the darpanti estate had been transferred by him and that he had purchased from those who had thus been represented to be the owners; and that as Ishan Chandra would himself have been precluded from setting up the opposite state of facts, so also Poreshnath Mookerjee was estopped.

The judgment of the Divisional Bench (SIR R. GARTH, C.J., and TOTTENHAM, J.) is reported in the I. L. R., 4 Cal., 783.

On this appeal Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. R. V. Doyne, appeared for the Appellants.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondents.

For the appellants it was argued that the evidence showed that Anathnath Deb had notice that the transfer by Ishan Chandra Sein in 1858 to his wife and sons was only benami; nor was it merely the representation of Ishan Chandra Sein, that he had bonâ fide transferred to them, that had induced the respondent to purchase from the benamidars. The decisions of the Courts had led him to treat them as the owners. On the other hand Poreslnath Moorterjee had not set up a claim founded only on a mortgage or [268] assignment from Ishan Chandra Sein, but claimed as purchaser at the sale in execution of the decree obtained by him.

Reference was made to the Evidence Act 1872, s. 115. Co. Litt. 352a; Comyn's Digest title Estoppel: Richards v. Johnston (4 H. and N., 660 and Dinendronath Sanial v. Ramkumar Ghose (I.L.R., 7 Cal., 107; s.c., L. R., 8 I. A., 65).

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, for the Respondent, was not called upon.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir R. Couch.—The question in this appeal, which is from a decision of the High Court at Calcutta on an appeal from the District Court, is stated by the learned Chief Justice in giving the judgment of the High Court, in which he says: "The point upon which, in our opinion, this case should be decided is rather of a peculiar nature. The plaintiff is the zamindar of a share in a property called lot Shah Alumpur, and he also claims to be the darpatnidar of a portion of the same property. In his character of darpatnidar, he brings this suit against the defendant No. 1, Bistu Chandra Rai, as ijardar of part of the estate for rent and for road-cess. The defendant resists the claim upon the ground that Poreslnath, the defendant No. 2, is the real owner of the darpatni; and the defendant No. 2 has intervened for the purpose of supporting his title to the rent as against the plaintiff. It appears that some time ago, in the year 1259 (A.D. 1852), one Ishan Chandra purchased, and was the undoubted owner of this darpatni estate. In the year 1265 (A. D. 1858), Ishan Chandra, being in difficulties, sold or professed to sell the darpatni to his wife Kripamoyi and his son Dhun Krishna; and thereupon the names of Kripamoyi and his son Dhun Krishna were entered in the plaintiff's serishta as the owners of the darpatni." It has been suggested that this is not correct; there is a question whether it was in the plaintiff's serishta, but it is not material: "After this sale, the rent of the darpatni being in arrear, the plaintiff (whether in ignorance of the sale or not does not appear) brought a suit for the rent against Ishan Chandra who defended the suit upon the express ground, that he was no longer the tenant, and that he had parted with his interest in the darpatni to his wife [269] and son; and he not only defended the suit on this ground, but he stated in his evidence that the sale to his wife and son was an absolute and bonâ fide one; that the darpatni really belonged to them, and that he had no right or interest in it."

It appears from what has been stated by the learned Counsel for the appellant that in this suit Ishan Chandra put in a written statement to this effect on the 7th November 1872, and the suit was dismissed on the 18th November 1872. The learned Chief Justice proceeds: "Upon the strength of this evidence Ishan Chandra defeated the plaintiff's suit, and the plaintiff had to pay the costs of it. Having failed in that suit, the plaintiff then brought another suit for the same rent against Kripamoyi and Dhun Krishna. He obtained a decree against them, and under that decree the darpatni was sold, and the plaintiff himself became the purchaser of it. Upon the title thus acquired the plaintiff brings the present suit against the defendant No. 1"—Bishtu Chandra Rai,—“the ijardar of that portion of the property; and assuming that the title derived in this way is a good one, there is no doubt as to his right to recover the rent as against the defendant No. 1.” Then the learned Chief Justice alludes to the question of the amount to be recovered which the appellant was willing to give up, and, in order to avoid the necessity of a remand, says: “Consequently the only point for our consideration is, whether the plaintiff on the one hand, or the intervening defendant on the other, is entitled to the rent of the darpatni. The claim which the intervening defendant sets up is by right of Ishan Chandra. He says that Ishan Chandra mortgaged the property to him, and that such proceedings have been taken upon that mortgage that he is now entitled, in Ishan Chandra's rights, to the rent of this property as the owner of it.”

The proceedings thus alluded to were these: On the 11th January 1873, about three months after the written statement had been put in by Ishan Chandra and the suit had been dismissed, a mortgage bond was given by Ishan Chandra to Poreshnath, who brought a suit upon it and obtained a decree on the 6th September 1875, which Mr. Leith, who was counsel for the appellant, stated, although the form of the decree does not appear, was the ordinary decree as upon a mortgage bond. On the 13th September [270]ber 1875 he obtained an order for sale in execution of that decree, and the sale took place on the 18th December 1875, being a sale of the right, title, and interest of Ishan Chandra, and Poreshnath became the purchaser for the sum of Rs. 5,600. The certificate of sale was granted on the 24th March 1876, and in that it is stated that Poreshnath purchased the property for Rs. 5,600, and had put in a receipt crediting the amount of consideration against the decretal amount receivable by him. In fact, he did not pay any money upon the purchase which he had made at the sale, but became the owner of the property in satisfaction of his mortgage. It was decided by the first Court that the intervening defendant had a right to go into the question whether Ishan Chandra were the real owner of the darpatni or not, and that Court found upon the evidence that the sale by him to his wife and son was a benami transaction, and that Ishan Chandra was the owner. Consequently the question really is, whether Poreshnath is estopped by the written statement which Ishan Chandra made in the former suit. The learned Chief Justice says: “It appears to us that, inasmuch as the intervening defendant claims under Ishan Chandra and can take no better title than Ishan Chandra himself, and as Ishan Chandra has directly induced the plaintiff to believe that he had sold his property absolutely to his wife and son, and led him to bring a suit against them for the rent, and under the decree obtained in that suit to purchase their interest in the property, it does not lie in the mouth of Ishan Chandra, or any one claiming under him by a subsequent title, to set up a claim to the rent in this suit as against the plaintiff.”

Their Lordships think that is a right conclusion; that, looking to what took place, Poreshnath cannot be considered as having put himself, by reason of his purchase at the sale which he had brought about in execution of his decree on the mortgage bond, in a better position than he was in as mortgagee taking from Ishan Chandra. It is admitted that if he had claimed as a mortgagee or as an assignee of Ishan Chandra he would be estopped: and their Lordships think that he is substantially in the same position; that he did not by purchasing in this way put himself in a better position, and consequently that he is estopped by the statement which [271] Ishan Chandra made, and that the decree of the High Court is correct.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss the appeal; and the costs thereof will be paid by the appellant.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 23rd June, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Sale for arrears of revenue, Suit to set aside—Act XI of 1859, ss. 6, 20, 35

—Beng. Act VII of 1868, s. 8—Certificate of title—Secretary of State—

Parties—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 32, 424.

A notification by the Collector under s. 6 of Act XI of 1859, fixing the 31st May 1879 as the date for holding the sale, was affixed in the places mentioned in the section on the 2nd May 1879. Subsequently the 31st May being ascertained to be a holiday, and the 1st June being a Sunday, the Collector, purporting to act under s. 20 of the Act, issued a notification on the 26th May, postponing the sale till the 2nd June. On that day the sale was held, and the Commissioner having upheld it on appeal, a certificate of title was given to the purchasers.

Held, in a suit to set aside the sale, that inasmuch as the notification under s. 6 of the Act had not been affixed thirty days before the day fixed by it for holding the same, the requirements of that section had not been fulfilled, and the irregularity was not cured by the notification of the 26th May.

Held further, that the Court was not bound under s. 8 of Beng. Act VII of 1868 to presume conclusively that the provisions of s. 6 of Act XI of 1859 as regards the fixing of the date of sale, had been complied with. Under s. 8 of Beng. Act VII of 1868 the effect of a certificate of title having been given to the purchaser is merely that the Court is bound to presume conclusively the due service and posting of notices.

[272] The Secretary of State is not a necessary party to a suit to set aside a sale for arrears of revenue, but the Government have such interest as would, on their application, entitle them to be made a party.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 80 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Abinash Chunder Mitter, Rai Bahadoor, Officiating Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated the 14th February 1881.

Section 424 * of the Civil Procedure Code does not preclude a Court from adding the Secretary of State as a necessary party under s. 32 of the Code.

THE facts and arguments in the case appear from the Judgments of the Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ.).

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Srinauth Banerjee for Appellants.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee for the Respondents.

Mitter, J.—This suit was brought to set aside a revenue sale held under Act XI of 1859 on the ground that the sale was made contrary to the provisions of the aforesaid Act, and that the plaintiffs had sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity complained of in the plaint. The suit was brought under the provisions of s. 33 of the Act. The lower Court has awarded a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. It has found that the notification required to be affixed in the Court of the Judge of the District, and in the Office of the Collector under s. 6 of the Act was not affixed 30 days before the date fixed in the notification for holding the sale. The lower Court has further found that the notifications required by s. 7 of the Act to be affixed in his own office, as well as in the Munsif's Court and Police Thanahs within which any part of the estate is situated, as also at the cutcherry of the owner of the estate, or at some conspicuous place upon the estate, were not duly affixed and promulgated. Upon the question whether the plaintiffs have sustained any substantial injury or not, the finding of the lower Court is that the property sold is worth at least Rs. 10,000, and that it was sold for Rs. 2,200 only. With reference to this last point, which involves only a question of fact, the evidence bearing upon it has been placed before us, and we agree with the lower Court that the conclusion to which it has come is correct. As to the question raised with reference to the provisions of s. 6, Act XI of 1859, the admitted facts are these: The sale notification under that [273] section was affixed in the particular places mentioned in the section on the 2nd May 1879, and the date fixed in that notification for holding the sale was the 31st May of that year. It so happened that the 31st May was a holiday, and the day following, viz., the 1st of June, was a Sunday. The collector, therefore, professing to act under the provisions of s. 20, Act XI of 1859, issued a notification, either on the 25th or 26th May 1879, that the sale was to be held on the 2nd of June, and accordingly the sale in question was held on that date. The question is whether under the circumstances stated above the notification was issued and affixed in accordance with the provisions of s. 6, Act XI of 1859.

Section 6, omitting the words, which are not material to the question now before us, is to the following effect “The Collector or other officer duly authorized to hold sales under this act, shall issue notifications in the language of the district, to be affixed in his own office, and in the Court of the Judge of the district, specifying the day on which the sale of the same will commence, which day shall not be less than thirty clear days from the date of

* [Sec. 424 :—No suit shall be instituted against the said Secretary of State in Council or against a public officer until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been in the case of the Secretary of State in Council delivered to, or left at the office of a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the District, and, in the case of a public officer delivered to him or left at his office, stating the cause of action and the name and place of abode of the intending plaintiff; and the plaint must contain a statement that such notice has been so delivered or left].

affixing the notification in the office of the Collector or other officer as aforesaid." It is contended on behalf of the appellant that this section should be read as if laying down two distinct provisions, viz., one requiring the issuing and affixing of a notification in which the date of the sale should be specified, and the other laying down that the actual sale should not take place until after the lapse of 30 clear days from the date of the affixing of the notification. I am of opinion that this construction cannot be reasonably put upon the section in question; because it says that the notification shall specify the day on which the sale of the estate will commence, which day shall not be less than 30 clear days from the date of affixing the notification in the Office of the Collector or other officer as aforesaid. Therefore the date of sale to be specified in the notification should be one which should happen to be more than 30 days from the date of its affixing. If this is the proper construction of this section it is quite clear that its provisions were not complied with in this case, because in the notification which was affixed on the 2nd of May the date of sale specified was the 31st May, and therefore it was less than 30 days from the date of affixing the [274] notification. If the other construction had been intended by the legislature, then in that case we should have found some other provision in the Act which would have authorized the Collector, in a case like this, to alter the date of the sale. It was contended before us that this power is given to the Collector under the provisions of s. 20 of the Act, but I am of opinion that under s. 20 the Collector had no power in a case like this to alter the date of the sale. Section 20 says: "In case the Collector or other officer as aforesaid shall be unable, from sickness, from the occurrence of a holiday, or from any other cause, to commence the sale on the day of sale fixed, etc." It was contended that the words "any other cause" would authorize the Collector to alter the date of the sale in a case like the present, but I am of opinion that this contention is not correct. It is a well-known rule of construction that general terms following particular ones apply only to such things as are ejusdem generis. The particular causes for altering the day of sale under section 20 are sickness or the occurrence of a holiday. "Any other cause" mentioned after these words must be one similar in its kind to those specified in the section. Therefore I do not think that the Collector could, in a case like this, under s. 20, alter the date of the sale. That being so I am of opinion that the requirements of s. 6 were not fulfilled.

Then it was contended that under the provision of s. 8, Beng. Act VII of 1868, the Court is bound to presume conclusively that the provisions of s. 6, Act XI of 1859 even as regards the fixing of the date of the sale were complied with. Section 8, Act VII of 1868 is to the following effect: "Every certificate of title which may be given to any purchaser under the provisions of s. 28 of the said Act XI of 1859, or of s. 11 of this Act, shall be conclusive evidence in favour of such purchaser and of every person claiming under him, that all notices in or by this Act, or by the said Act XI of 1859, required to be served or posted, has been duly served and posted." In this case it is not disputed that the defendant obtained a certificate of sale under the provisions of s. 28, Act XI of 1859. The effect of obtaining that certificate under Act VII is in my opinion simply this: That the Court will be bound to presume conclusively [275] that any notice or notification required to be posted or served under Act XI of 1859 and Beng. Act VII of 1868 was duly served and posted. This section does not mean that the Court is bound to presume that the notification was affixed in the places mentioned in s. 6 thirty days before the date fixed in the notification as the date of sale. This view is further confirmed by the latter part of the section itself, which says: "And the title of any person who may have obtained any such certificate, shall not be impeached or affected by reason of any omission, informality, or irregularity as regards the -serving or posting of any notice in the proceedings under which the sale was held, at which such person may have purchased." This shows that any omission, informality, or irregularity as regards the serving or posting of the notification would not be a ground for setting aside the sale, but it does not lay down that an omission to fix the date of sale, in accordance with the provisions of s. 6, Act XI of 1859, would not affect the title of the purchaser. I, therefore, entirely agree with the lower Court that in this case the provisions of s. 6, Act XI of 1859 were not complied with. In this view of the case it is immaterial to enquire whether the finding of the lower Court with regard to the serving or affixing of the notification under s. 7 is correct or not.

The learned pleader for the appellant has raised another question before us, viz., that under s. 33 of the Act under which the present suit was brought, the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed in this action unless he shows that the ground of irregularity, upon which he impeaches the sale, was the ground upon which he preferred the appeal to the Commissioner which is provided for in the Act. Now s. 33, so far as it is material with reference to this point, is to the following effect: "No sale for arrears of revenue or other demands, realizable in the same manner as arrears of revenue are realizable, made after the passing of this Act, shall be annulled by a Court of Justice, except upon the ground of its having been made contrary to the provisions of this Act, etc." Therefore, it seems to me that if the plaintiff had impugned the sale before the Commissioner in his application for appeal upon the ground that the sale was made contrary to the provisions of Act XI of 1859, it would be a sufficient compliance [276] with the provisions of s. 33. Referring to the petition filed by the plaintiff before the Commissioner, we find that the ground taken was sufficiently general to bring it within the purview of s. 33. The sixth ground is to the effect "that irregularities took place in all the proceedings of sale, hence the sale is by all means fit to be set aside." This is tantamount to saying that the sale was made contrary to the provisions of Act XI of 1859. I am, therefore, of opinion that this ground of appeal also should fail. This disposes of all the questions raised before us regarding the merits of the case.

Then a question was raised to the effect that the plaintiff was bound to make the Secretary of State a party to this suit, and in support of the appellant's contention upon this point our attention was drawn to the provisions of s. 35, Act XI of 1859. That section says: "In the event of a sale being annulled by a final decree of a Court of Justice, and the former proprietor being restored to possession, the purchase-money shall be refunded to the purchaser by Government, together with interest at the highest rate of the current public securities." Comparing this section with the analogous section in Regulation VIII of 1819, viz., s. 14, which is to the effect that "the purchaser shall be made a party in such suits, and upon decree passing for reversal of the sale, the Court shall be careful to indemnify him against all loss, at the charge of the zamindar or person at whose suit the sale may have been made," it appears to me that this section 35 by itself does not afford any ground for the contention that the Secretary of State was a necessary party to the suit. It merely provides that in the event of a sale being annulled by a final decree of a Court of Justice, and the former proprietor being restored to possession, the purchase-money shall be refunded to the purchaser by Government, together with interest at the highest rate of the current public securities. But although it appears to me to be clear that s. 35 does not afford any support to the contention raised before us, yet it is by no means clear that the Government was not interested in the question raised in the suit, because, if the sale be set aside, the Collector will have to proceed de novo in the matter for the realization of the arrears of revenue. The Government, therefore, [277] have such interest in the suit as would, on their application, entitle them to be made a party to it.

Further the lower Court was not, in my opinion, right in holding that under the provisions of s. 32 it could not add the Secretary of State as a party to the suit. The section referred to by the lower Court, viz., s. 424 of the Procedure Code, does not preclude the Court from adding the Secretary of State as a necessary party under the provision of s. 32 of the Act. Section 424 only says that no suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State in Council or against a public officer in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, unless a certain notice be given. But be that as it may, I am of opinion that in this case the defect of parties (if there was any) does not entitle the defendants on the record to contend that the present suit should be dismissed. I am, therefore, of opinion that this ground of appeal should also be overruled.

Then there remains the question of costs. It is true that in this case if any party should have been made liable for the costs of the suit it was the Collector, by whose irregular proceedings the sale took place; but the Collector was not made liable, and he is not before us in this appeal. It would be, in my opinion, unjust to make the defendants liable for the costs of the lower Court, and, therefore, the defendants should have been declared entitled to recover the costs of the lower Court from the plaintiff; but then after the decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs, the defendants had no valid grounds of appeal to come up to this Court. They have, therefore, rendered themselves liable to pay the costs of the plaintiffs, respondents, in this appeal. Under these circumstances we think it will meet the ends of justice if we direct that each party should bear their own costs throughout the litigation.

Norris, J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Sarun, dated 14th February 1881, setting aside a revenue sale on the ground of irregularity, and that consequential injury had taken place. We are now asked to set aside the decision of the Court below. I agree with my learned brother that that judgment should be confirmed, and I will [278] deal very shortly with the points made by the learned pleader who has appeared for the appellant before us to-day. His first ground of argument was that, assuming the Court below was right in holding that there had been an irregularity in the advertisement of the sale, that irregularity was not sufficient to warrant the sale being set aside; secondly, he urged that there was no irregularity; thirdly, that the plaintiffs could not be permitted to urge that ground here to-day, because they had not, in their petition of appeal to the Commissioner, complied with the requirements of s. 33, Act XI of 1859; and, lastly, it was urged before us as a matter of fact that the evidence on the paper book did not prove substantial injury. I will notice the last ground—the question of fact—first, beginning with the general observation that I should hesitate to reverse a decision passed in the Court below on a question of fact unless irresistibly compelled so to do, for this reason, that the Judge in the Court below has the inestimable advantage of having the witnesses examined and cross-examined before him, and is, therefore, able to form a far better opinion as to the value of their evidence than we can do sitting here in a Court of appeal. Upon that general ground I should hesitate long before I reversed a decision of a lower Court on a question of fact. But in this case the evidence abundantly bears out the facts necessary for the plaintiffs to prove that there had been substantial injury or damage caused to them by reason of the irregularities which have taken place in the conduct of the sale. I need not go into the evidence in detail ; it has been laid before us at length by the learned pleaders, and it satisfies my mind fully that on the question of fact the plaintiffs' case was made out.

The next point to consider is, has there been an irregularity in the proceedings connected with the sale ? That depends upon the construction to be placed upon s. 6, Act XI of 1859. (His Lordship read the section.) Now the object of this Section, I apprehend, was to give what the Legislature thought, reasonable publicity to the sale, and the real meaning of the section is that this should be done by means of affixing the prescribed notices strictly in time, or not less than thirty days before the date fixed for the sale. That is the real meaning of the [279] section and if that be so, we have to consider whether that has been done in this case. It is admitted that this notice was not posted till the 2nd of May, and it is said that the sale was to take place on the last day of May. It is clear, therefore, that if the sale had taken place on the 31st of May the statutory period would not have elapsed. Then it is urged that this irregularity may be cured by reference to s. 20 of the Act of 1859, the marginal note of which is "adjournment of sales." The section is as follows: "In case the Collector or other officer as aforesaid shall be unable, from sickness, from the occurrence of a holiday, or from any other cause, to commence the sale on the day of sale fixed as aforesaid, or if, having commenced it, he be unable, from any cause, to complete it, he shall be competent to adjourn it to the next day following, etc." I agree with all that my learned brother has said as to the non-applicability of this section to cure the defect under s. 6, but further, when in s. 20 we find the words "to commence the sale on the day of sale fixed," this must refer to a day of sale which has been legally fixed. You could not adjourn a meeting which an Act of Parliament requires to be convened at 12 days' notice if only an 11 days' notice has been given ; you cannot adjourn an illegally called meeting, and you can only adjourn a sale fixed for a certain day when it has been legally fixed for that day. Therefore s. 20 will not avail to cure the defect which, in my opinion, manifestly has arisen under the provisions of s. 6. Then the learned pleader says: "Assume all that against me I crave in aid s. 8, Beng. Act VII of 1868. I am of opinion that this section will not avail to help the appellant in this case. The Act does not say that it shall be conclusive evidence that the proper statutory notice was given ; it does not say it shall be conclusive evidence that a notice having been posted the right notice was posted, and that the contents of the notice were such as by s. 6, Act XI of 1859, they are required to be ; all that this section intended to do was to render it unnecessary to call evidence to show that the notice itself had been posted, but it is still necessary to prove that the contents of the notice are such as are required by s. 6, Act XI of 1859. Then it is further urged that this ground of appeal was not available because the provisions of s. 33 of [280] the Act of 1859 had not been complied with. Section 33 says: "No sale for arrears of revenue or other demands realizable in the same manner as arrears of revenue are realizable, made after the passing of this Act, shall be annulled by a Court of Justice, except upon the ground of its having been made contrary to the provisions of this Act ; and then only on proof that the plaintiff has sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity complained of ; and no such sale shall be annulled upon such ground, unless such ground shall have been declared and specified in an appeal made to the Commissioner under s. 25 of this Act." Therefore what the plaintiffs have to show is, in sending in this petition of appeal, that substantial injury has been sustained, and that the sale has been made contrary to the provisions of this Act. Now it seems to me that if the petition of appeal to the Commissioner, instead of being as precise and elaborate as it is, had simply said that the sale had been made contrary to the provisions of the Act, and that the plaintiff had sustained substantial injury, and confined itself to these two narrow statements, it would have been amply sufficient to have enabled the plaintiffs to raise the point here to-day.

Upon the questions of the non-joinder of the Secretary of State and of costs I entirely concur with my learned brother, and I do not think that I should add anything to what he has said.

On the whole I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 7th July, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE ROSE.

Imam Buksh Mondul.....Defendant

Momin Mondul.....Plaintiff.*

Limitation—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 27 —Landlord and tenant—Possession, Suit for, on dispossession by landlord —Title, Claim for declaration of.

Where a suit by a tenant against his landlord is both in form and [281] substance one to recover possession on the ground of illegal dispossession by the landlord, and no question of the plaintiff's title is raised, the insertion in the plaint of a claim for declaration of the plaintiff's title is not sufficient to prevent the application of the limitation prescribed by s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

Mussamut Dhurjobutty Chowdrain v. Chamron Mundul (25 W. R., 217), distinguished.

THE plaintiff, alleging that his father Sona Mondul had been in possession of a certain jote, and that on his death the plaintiff and other co-sharers had succeeded to, and had been in possession of, the jote until the 14th July 1878,

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1429 of 1880 against the decree of L. B. B. King, Esq., Judge of Dinagapore, dated the 14th May 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Nil Madhub Shamunto, Munsif of Patnitola, dated the 5th January 1880.

when the landlord had illegally dispossessed them, instituted this suit on the 30th August 1879 against his co-sharers and the landlord, for possession of his share in the joto on his title thereto being established.

The landlord alleged that the plaintiff and his co-sharers had voluntarily relinquished possession of the joto.

Both the lower Courts having decided in favour of the plaintiff, the landlord appealed to the High Court upon the ground, amongst others, that the suit was barred by limitation under s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

Baboo Kishori Mohun Roy for the Appellant.

Baboo Ram Churn Mitter for the Respondent

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and BOSE, J.) was delivered by

Garth, C.J.—The plaintiff, as one of the sons of Sona Mondul, a deceased Mahomedan, sued for possession of a 4-anna share in a certain joto, on the allegation of dispossession therefrom by the defendant (landlord) in Assar 1279 (June 1872). The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff and his brothers, not being able to hold on the joto by paying its rent, relinquished the same in Joisto 1279 (May 1872), and fled away to a different village.

Both Courts have found that the plaintiff and his brothers were forcibly turned out from the lands by the defendant's predecessors, [282] and have consequently decreed the plaintiff's claim; the lower Appellate Court holding that one year's limitation under s. 27 of the Rent Law did not apply to the suit.

It has been argued here that the lower Appellate Court was wrong on this question of limitation; and we think the contention is well founded. The plaintiff's suit, both in form and substance, was to recover possession of his joto, having been forcibly dispossessed by the defendant.

The defendant's answer was that he did not dispossess the plaintiff, but that he voluntarily relinquished his holding. No question of title was raised in the case; and it was not denied that at the time of the dispossession or relinquishment, as the case might be, the plaintiff held the joto which he claims.

Under these circumstances it seems to us that this is a suit for possession within the meaning of section 27 of the Rent Law, and that the plaintiff cannot make it other than a suit for possession by inserting in his plaint that he desires to have his right established. If this were enough to take the case out of the operation of the section, a plaintiff might always get rid of the one year's limitation by inserting a claim of right in his plaint.

A case, decided by MITTER, J., was referred to—Mussamut Dhurjobutty Chowdhram v. Chamroo Mundul (25 W. R., 217), in which that learned Judge appears to have held, under circumstances somewhat resembling the present, that the case did not come within s. 27 of the Rent Law, because the suit was brought to establish the plaintiff's title. The case is not very fully reported, and is very probable that it did involve some claim of title. It was upon that ground entirely that the decision proceeded, and it is, therefore, distinguishable from this case, because here we consider that no claim of title was involved.

The judgments of the lower Courts will, therefore, be reversed, and the plaintiff's claim will be dismissed.

Appeal allowed.

Monohur Lall and others..... Defendants

Gouri Sunkur.....Plaintiff.*

Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859, ss. 7, 8, 9, 10)--

Cause of action, including whole claim arising out of - Mesne profits, Suit for—Possession, suit for.

Under s. 7, read with ss. 8, 9 and 10 of Act VIII of 1859, a plaintiff suing for mesne profits of land is not precluded from afterwards maintaining a suit for possession of such land.

Pratap Chandra Burua v. Rani Swarnamayi (1 B. L. R., F. B., 113), commented on. THIS suit, in which the defendants are persons in possession, namely Monohur Lall and three others, claiming title through him, was instituted on the 24th September 1879, for possession of the difference between a one-third and a one-fourth share in all property left by the plaintiff's uncle Koonj Behari, except in mouzah Balwa, and of the difference between a two-thirds and a one-fourth share in mouzah Balwa, and for a declaration of the plaintiff's title to such larger shares. The property in dispute belonged to the plaintiff's grandfather Moorlidhur. The following is a genealogical table of his descendants :—

On the death of Moorlidhur each of his four sons inherited a four-anna share. Luchmi Narain, the third son, died in 1845 without issue, leaving his widow Ajoodhia him surviving. Ajoodhia died some time before the year 1864. Koonj Behari also died without issue in the year 1842, leaving him surviving a widow Rutton Dai. On the death of Ajoodhia, Rash Behari, the eldest son of [284] Bishnath, retained possession of the whole of Luchmi Narain's share under ticcalseases, etc., alleged to have been executed by Ajoodhia.

Some time after the death of Koonj Behari, Rash Behari similarly took possession of his share under a deed of gift executed by his widow Rutton Dai.

On the 5th March 1864, Gouri Sunkur, the plaintiff in this suit, brought an action for the recovery of possession of a four-annas share of the properties left by his uncles Luchmi Narain and Koonj Behari, against Rash Behari as the principal defendant, making his brother Cheyt Bahadoor, his cousin

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 31 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Poresnath Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Patna, dated 30th of September 1880.

Bisseshwar, and Rutton Dai, the widow of Koonj Behari, pro forma defendants. Ajoodhia the widow of Luchmi Narain was not then alive. One of the reliefs sought for in this suit was the cancellation of the deed of gift alleged to have been executed by Rutton Dai.

While this suit was pending Bisseshwar died. On the 10th January 1865, Gouri Sunkur obtained a decree in this suit. Rash Behari appealed to the High Court against that decree. The High Court, on the 29th November 1865, affirmed the decree, with this modification, that Rash Behari was entitled to retain possession of the share of the estate transferred to him by Rutton Dai, widow of Koonj Behari, during the lifetime of the said Rutton Dai.

On the 28th January 1865, a similar suit was brought by Gouri Sunkur's brother, Cheyt Bahadoor, and on the 11th December 1866, a similar decree was made in that suit.

In the year 1867, Parmessur, son of Bisseshwar, brought a similar suit against Rash Behari and other members of the family, and obtained a similar decree in the Court of First Instance; but on appeal the High Court modified it, dismissing his suit in respect of Koonj Behari's estate.

Rutton Dai, the widow of Koonj Behari, died on the 10th May 1870. On her death the plaintiff, Gouri Sunkur, made an application to execute his decree for possession in respect of Koonj Behari's estate; he was, on the admission of Rash Behari's son, Monohur Lall (Rash Behari having died in the meantime) put in possession of a one-fourth share of that estate which had been decreed to him in his suit. The plaintiff thus obtained possession of a one-fourth share of Koonj Behari's estate in the year 1874.

[285] The plaintiff Gouri Sunkur then, on the 30th May 1874, brought a suit against Monohur Lall, the defendant No. 1, for mesne profits in respect of a one-fourth share of the estate of Koonj Behari from the date of the death of Rutton Dai to the date of his recovery of possession thereof. In the plaint in that suit he stated that at the time when his first suit was brought, Bisseshwar having been alive, he had claimed only a one-fourth share of Koonj Behari's estate; but Bisseshwar died during the lifetime of Rutton Dai, and therefore on her death the estate of Koonj Behari devolved on his surviving brother's sons, namely, himself, his brother Cheyt Bahadoor, and his cousin Rash Behari. The plaintiff further alleged in that plaint that he was entitled under the Hindu law of inheritance to one-third of Koonj Behari's estate, but as he was in possession of one-fourth only he would bring a suit for the difference. This wassilat suit was decreed on the 27th August 1865.

On the 28th December 1872 the rights of Cheyt Bahadoor in one of the mouzahs in dispute, viz., Balwa, were sold in execution of a decree and purchased by the plaintiff Gouri Sunkur.

An application was made by the plaintiff Gouri Sunkur for registration of his name under the Land Registration Act, in respect of a one-third share of the estate of Koonj Behari in mouzahs other than Balwa, and in respect of a two-thirds share in that mouzah; this application was opposed by the defendant Monohur Lall, who alleged that the plaintiff was entitled only to a one-fourth share; the order in the Land Registration Act was passed in accordance with the defendant's contention.

The lower Court having made a decree in the plaintiff's favour for the relief sought in the present suit, the defendants appealed to the High Court on the ground, amongst others, that the present suit was barred under s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859.

Baboo Rajender Nath Bose for the Appellants.

Mr. M. L. Sandel for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J., who after stating the facts as above, continued—

[286] “The main ground urged in appeal by the defendants, appellants, is that the present suit is barred under the provisions of s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859. It is contended that the present suit is based upon the same cause of action upon which the suit for possession during the lifetime of Rutton Dai, and the suit for wassilat after her death, were brought.

As regards the first of these two suits, it is quite clear that it was not brought upon the same cause of action upon which the present action is based. The succession to the estate of Koonj Behari devolved upon the plaintiff, respondent, and his other co-heirs on the death of Rutton Dai; therefore, the cause of action of the present suit accrued on the date of her death, viz., 10th May 1870; consequently it is not identical with the cause of action of the suit which the plaintiff, respondent, brought during the lifetime of Rutton Dai. The cause of action in this latter suit was that the plaintiff, respondent, as one of the presumptive heirs of Koonj Behari after the death of his widow Rutton Dai, was entitled to have the property alienated by her restored back on the ground of waste committed by the widow; therefore, the contention raised before us upon the basis of the first of these two suits has no validity.

But the question is not altogether free from difficulty as regards the other suit. It was brought after the death of Rutton Dai; it was also brought upon the same title upon which the present suit is founded; and if s. 7 had stood alone, it would have been difficult to say that the claim for the mesne profits of the estate of Koonj Behari, and the claim for the recovery of that estate, were not parts of a claim arising out of one cause of action, namely the death of Rutton Dai and the unlawful possession of the whole of Koonj Behari's estate by the defendants, appellants, to the exclusion of the other heirs. But s. 7 must be read along with the provisions of the following three sections, viz., 8, 9 and 10. It has been uniformly held, with reference to these sections, that a plaintiff, suing for possession of land first, is not precluded from maintaining a second action for mesne profits of such land.

In the Full Bench decision of Protap Chandra Burua v. [287] Rani Swarnamayi (4 B. L. R., F. B., 113) the plaintiff first brought a suit for possession of land in the month of April 1855 with mesne profits from the date of Ouster, viz., 14th September 1852 to the date of suit. A decree was passed in his favour for the possession of the land only on the 18th February 1863. In execution of that decree he obtained possession on the 25th December 1864, and on the 28th August 1865 he brought a second suit for mesne profits from the 14th September 1852 to the 25th December 1864. The Division Bench, before which the case was first heard, held that the claim for mesne profits from September 1852 to April 1855 was clearly barred by limitation, and as regards the remaining portion of the claim, the learned Judges who constituted the Bench were inclined to the opinion that it was barred under the provisions of s. 7 of Act VIII of 1859. But as there were decisions conflicting with their view, they referred the point to a Full Bench. PEACOCK, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench, said: “Section 7 says that every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action. The plaintiff's claim to mesne profits from the time he might obtain a decree to the time he might obtain possession under that decree, was not a claim which he had at the time when he filed his plaint; and he could not therefore include that claim for mesne profits in his plaint. Independently of that, I think that he was not bound to include his claim for mesne profits in the suit for possession.

“Section 10 of Act VIII of 1859 is very clear upon that point, etc., etc., etc.”

It appears to us that this decision was based upon two grounds: 1st, that assuming s. 7 was applicable, the suit was maintainable, because the claim for mesne profits from the date of decree to the date of recovery of possession had not arisen when the first suit was brought; and, secondly, s. 7 was not applicable by reason of the provisions of s. 10 (see also upon this point Chowdhry Imdad Ali v. Boonyad Ali 14 W. R., 92); and Mussamut Rookminee Kooer v. Ram Tokul Roy (21 W. R., 223). The present is the converse of these cases. There, suits for land were brought first, and then the suits for mesne [288] profits were brought. Here, the suit for mesne profits was brought first. But this difference is immaterial, so far as the question of construction of ss. 7 to 10 is concerned. We are, therefore, of opinion that the contention of the appellant is not valid. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Jurisdiction—Appeal—Revision—Offence committed out of British India.

The High Court has no power, either by way of appeal or revision, to interfere with a sentence passed by the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals when exercising jurisdiction over offences committed in Mohurbunj, a place not situated within the limits of British India.

Empress v. Keshub Mahajun (I. L. R. 8 Cal., 985); and Hursee Mahapatro v. Dinabundhu Patro (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 523), referred to.

In this case the appellant, Hurro Kole, was charged with murder by intentionally causing the death of one Ghashye Kole on the 6th October 1881, at Higli, in Mohurbunj. The prisoner was tried and convicted by the Superintendent of the Tributary Mehals, at Balasore, on the 1st of March 1882, and sentenced to transportation for life. He thereupon appealed to the High Court.

* Criminal Appeal No. 166 of 1882, against the order of A. Smith, Esq., Superintendent, Tributary Mehals, Cuttack, dated the 1st March 1882.

No one appeared to argue the case.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—This is an appeal from a conviction by the Superintendent of the Cuttack Tributary Mehals. The offence was committed in Mohurbunj. The accused is a native of Mohurbunj. The trial took place at Balasore. It has been decided by a Full Bench that Mohurbunj is not a part of British India.—The [289] Empress v. Keshub Mohajan (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 985). The Superintendent of Tributary Mehals and his Assistant exercise jurisdiction over offences committed in those mehals, including Mohurbunj, under regulations and instructions which were examined in the case just referred to and in Hursee Mahapatro v. Dinabundhu Patro (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 528).

We have not now to consider whether the jurisdiction as exercised is in accordance with law or not, but only whether we have any power to interfere with the decision of the tribunal. We think this Court has no such power, either by way of appeal or of revision. The Letters Patent now in force (those of 1865) by s. 27, make this Court a Court of Appeal "from the Criminal Courts of the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William and from all other Courts subject to its superintendence." Those words, according to the well-known rule of construction, must mean British Indian Courts, that is to say Courts established in and for British India. Section 28 makes the Court "a Court of reference and revision from the Criminal Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction." This section, therefore, carries the case no further. The Criminal Procedure Code gives an appeal to this Court only from Sessions Judges and certain other specified officers, all of whom are British Indian officers and exercise their functions in and for British India. The revisional powers given by the Code are likewise limited to the Courts subordinate to this Court, which, for the reasons already pointed out, must be restricted to British Indian Courts. This appeal must be rejected on the ground that we have no power to entertain it.

Appeal dismissed.

perty, it is in the discretion of the Court to authorize the Collector or not, as it thinks fit, to provide for the satisfaction of the decree in the manner proposed; and the Court is bound to hear any objections which may be made by the decree-holder to the feasibility of the proposed scheme, and any evidence that may be offered, in support of those objections; and if after hearing the decree-holder's objections, and the evidence which may be offered in support of them, the Court is not fully satisfied that the proposal is feasible or that it can in all reasonable probability be carried out within the specified period, the Court ought, in the exercise of its discretion to refuse its sanction.

THE facts of this case, so far as they are material, are fully set forth in the order of reference, which was as follows:—

An important question has arisen in this case as to the proper construction of s. 326 of the Civil Procedure Code; and as there appears to be some difference of opinion upon the subject, we think it right to refer the point to a Full Bench.

After 50 years' litigation, the plaintiff, Huro Prosad Chowdhry, had at last succeeded in obtaining a decree in the Privy Council against the defendants Kali Prosad Roy Chowdhry and others, for a sum of Rs. 36,000, and a further sum of Rs. 6,000, for interest.

Execution upon this judgment was first issued by the decree-holder in the 24 Pergunnahs; but as there was little or no property there to satisfy the amount, the proceedings were transferred to the District Court of Jessore, where the Judge ordered certain properties of the judgment-debtor to be sold on the 1st of April 1880.

[291] On the 30th of March 1880 (two days before the sale), an application was made by the Collector of Jessore, under s. 326 of the Civil Procedure Code, proposing a scheme for the payment of the decretal money within eight years.

The Subordinate Judge made an order approving of this scheme, but the order was afterwards set aside upon a point of law upon application to this Court.

Upon this, the Collector proposed an amended scheme, which was also approved by the Subordinate Judge, for payment of the debt within ten years; but that was again set aside by an order of this Court.

The Collector then proposed a third amended scheme to the Subordinate Judge, proposing to pay the decretal debt within thirteen years; and on the hearing of this application, the decree-holder (amongst other objections) contended that the scheme of the Collector was not feasible, and stated that he was prepared to prove by evidence that, having regard to the real income of the property, it was impossible that the scheme could be carried out within the thirteen year's period.

The Subordinate Judge, however, overruled the objection upon the ground that "the Court in a matter of that kind ought to take the Collector's statement of the scheme as a sufficient guarantee for its fulfilment," and that in case the Collector should fail to fulfil the terms proposed, the decree-holder would be at liberty to move the Court to reconsider its order.

The Subordinate Judge then made an order sanctioning the Collector's scheme.

Upon this, a rule was obtained before the First Bench, calling upon the judgment-debtors and the Collector to show cause why the last-mentioned order of the Subordinate Judge should not be set aside, upon the ground that he had accepted the representation of the Collector without inquiry, and without allowing the decree-holder to show, by argument or evidence, that the scheme of the Collector was not feasible.

Upon this rule coming on to be argued, it was contended on behalf of the Collector and the judgment-debtors :

First.—That according to the true meaning of s. 326, the Court was bound to accept the representation of the Collector [292] as true, without any inquiry at all as to whether the scheme which he proposed is reasonable or feasible ; and

Secondly.—That at the most the Court could only inquire as to whether the period within which satisfaction of the decree was to be obtained, is a reasonable one.

It was further contended that if the scheme upon the face of it appeared feasible, the decree-holder had no right to call evidence to show that it was not so.

In support of this view, we were referred to a decision of Mr. Justice WHITE and Mr. Justice FIELD, dated 9th September 1880, in which those learned Judges had apparently expressed an opinion, that it was not competent for the judgment-creditor to go into evidence to contest the feasibility of the Collector's scheme.

On the other hand, it was contended by the decree-holder that the Court was bound to make inquiry into the feasibility of the scheme, and to allow the decree-holder to call evidence.

We were rather disposed to think that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in refusing to allow the decree-holder to go into evidence ; and we had great doubt whether the Court had any right, having once sanctioned the scheme, to reconsider its order.

But having regard to the doubtful language of the section, and the opinion which had been expressed by Mr. Justice WHITE'S Bench on a previous occasion, we have thought it right to refer the matter to a Full Bench.

The questions which we desire to refer are

First. Whether under s. 326 of the Code, the Court is bound to accept the representations of the Collector with regard to the scheme which he proposes as being reasonable and feasible ?

Second.—Whether upon such representation being made to the Court, the decree-holder is at liberty to satisfy the Court, if he can, by argument and evidence, that the scheme proposed by the Collector is not feasible ; or that satisfaction of the decree cannot be made within the period mentioned by the Collector ?

Mr. Evans in support of the rule.

The Advocate General (Officiating, Mr. Phillips) showed cause.

[293] The following Judgments were delivered by the Full Bench.

Garth, C.J.—(MCDONELL, WILSON and TOTTEHAM, JJ., concurring)—We think that under s. 326, it is in the discretion of the Court to authorize the Collector or not, as it thinks fit, to provide for the satisfaction of the decree in the manner which the Collector recommends, and for the purpose of effectually exercising that discretion we consider that the Court is bound to hear any objections which may be made by the decree-holder to the feasibility of the proposed scheme, and any evidence that may be offered in support of those objections.

It is clear that under s. 320, the word "may" is used in a discretionary sense only, and it would appear to be used in the same sense in the intervening sections; and there certainly seems good reason why the Court should enquire closely into the feasibility of the Collector's proposal, seeing that its effect would be to deprive the decree-holder of the right, which the law gives him, of executing his decree, and not only so, but to protect the debtor's property during all that time from execution at the suit of other creditors.

If upon hearing the decree-holder's objections, and the evidence which may be offered in support of them, the Court is not fully satisfied that the proposal is feasible, or that it can in all reasonable probability be carried out within the specified period, the Court ought, in the exercise of its discretion, to refuse its sanction.

Field, J.—Section 326 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows: "When, in any local area in which no declaration under s. 320 is in force, the property attached consists of land or of a share in land, and the Collector represents to the Court that the public sale of the land or share is objectionable, and that satisfaction of the decree may be made within a reasonable period by a temporary alienation or management of the land or share, the Court may authorize the Collector to provide for such satisfaction in the manner recommended by him, instead of proceeding to a sale of the land or share." In the case which has led to the present reference, the Collector proposed two schemes, both of which were set aside for reasons which it is unnecessary to refer to. The Collector then proposed a third scheme, and the decree-[294]holder alleged that this scheme was not practicable, and asserted that if he were allowed to do so, he could prove this allegation by evidence.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that he was bound to take the Collector's statement of the scheme, and he declined to receive the evidence offered by the decree-holder.

Now, in order to understand the provisions of s. 326, it is, I think, necessary to refer briefly to the preceding ss. 320 to 325C. Section 320 provides as follows: "The local Government may, with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, declare, by notification in the Official Gazette, that in any local area the execution of decrees in cases in which a Court has ordered any immovable property to be sold, or the execution of any particular kind of such decrees, or the execution of decrees ordering the sale of any particular kind of, or interest in, immovable property, shall be transferred to the Collector;" and then follow certain provisions which enable the Collector to proceed in a particular manner, in order to the execution of any decree that has been so transferred.

Now, the object of these provisions is well known. In different parts of India, the effect of sales in execution of decrees was to transfer landed estates from the old families to modern speculators. A strong opinion was entertained by certain Members of the Government of India, that these results of the administration of civil justice were impolitic and inexpedient; and it was suggested that some procedure might be devised by which the Chief Executive Officer of the district would be enabled to liquidate the debts of encumbered land-holders without the immediate sale of their estates, and so to preserve the old landed gentry of the country. The provisions of ss. 320 to 325C were inserted in the Code of Civil Procedure, in order to give effect to these suggestions. Now, there can be no doubt that when the local Government makes a notification under s. 320, in regard to any local area, the execution of all decrees of the class specified in that notification, is transferred from the Civil Court to the Collector, and the Civil Court has no option whatever in the matter. Then comes s. 326, and this section is clearly intended to provide for isolated cases, in which the Collector is of opinion that the [295] public sale of the land is objectionable, and that satisfaction of the decree may be had, within a reasonable period, by a temporary alienation or management of the land. There is an important difference between the language used in s. 326 and the language used in preceding sections, which latter is imperative. It appears to me that the words in s. 326, "Court may authorize," are not imperative, but leave a discretion to the Civil Court. If then the Court has a discretion, that discretion can only properly be exercised upon materials placed before it, and I think that it is open to the decree-holder to place those materials in the shape of evidence before the Civil Court, and to satisfy the Court, as well by evidence as by argument, that the proposal of the Collector is not feasible or practicable. In this view, I would answer both the questions referred to the Full Bench in the affirmative.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 18th May, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR R. COLLIER, SIR R. COUCH, AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE.

Nilmoni Singh Deo.....Decree-holder

versus

Taranath Mukerjee.....Judgment-debtor.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Superintendence of the High Court 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104, s. 15 - Execution of decrees for rent Act X of 1859, ss. 23, 77 and 160—Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859), ss. 284, 294—(Act X of 1877) ; ss. 223, 228.

Whether a decree for rent, under Act X of 1859, made in one district, can be transferred to another for execution, is a question which the High Court can decide in the exercise of its "superintendence over all Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction," under 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104, s. 15. Decrees for rent made by the Collector under s. 23 of Act X of 1859 can be executed by a Civil Court to which they may be transferred under the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to "the execution of a decree out of the jurisdiction of the Court by which it was passed."

APPEAL from an order of the High Court (7th July 1880), made in exercise of its power of superintendence over all Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction under 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104, s. 15. This stayed proceedings upon an order made by the Deputy [296] Commissioner of Manbhūm on 11th March 1872 as Collector of the District, transferring a decree of rent made in that district to another for execution ; it also cancelled a similar order dated 29th May 1879.

The respondent held for some years a patni in the district of Manbhūm under a grant made in 1861 by the appellant Rajah Nilmoni Singh ; and during his tenure two decrees for rent one in 1863 and another in 1864 were made against him under Act X of 1859, s. 23, in favour of the Rajah. Afterwards the respondent having ceased to hold the patni in that district, in which also unsuccessful attempts had been made to execute the above decrees, application was made by the decree-holder for a transfer of them to another district. On this the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhūm as Collector of the district, on the 11th March 1872, made the earlier of the two orders, in regard to which the question on this appeal arose. This order referring to the application made for execution of the decrees for rent in the district of Nuddea, in which district it was stated that the judgment-debtor then resided and had property, recorded that the Deputy Commissioner found nothing in Act X of 1859 to prevent such a transfer, and directed that a copy of the proceedings should be sent to the Judge of Zillah Nuddea with a view to the amount of the decrees being realized.

The decree-holder not having obtained satisfaction in Nuddea again applied to the Deputy Commissioner for a transfer of his rent decrees under s. 223 of Act X of 1877 in May 1879. He applied for execution of them in twelve other districts which he named, undertaking that execution should be issued in not more than one at a time. The second of the two orders was thereupon made on the 27th May 1879, and copies of the rent decrees, with certificates of their non-satisfaction, were sent to the different districts.

The respondent, after attempting in vain to obtain the withdrawal of the above orders, petitioned the High Court to cancel them on the ground that they had been made by the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhūm in excess of his jurisdiction as Collector. On the 7th June 1880 a Divisional Bench (MITTER [297] and MACLEAN, JJ.) stayed proceedings on the order of 1872, and cancelled that of 1879, giving judgment as follows : -

" If the orders complained of are passed without jurisdiction, we think we have the power to interfere under section 15 of the Act of Parliament constituting this Court. (See In the matter of the petition of Gobind Koomar Chowdhry (B. L. R. Sup. Vol., 714 : s.c., 7 W. R., 520).)

" We are also of opinion that a Revenue Court under Act X of 1859 has no power to transfer a decree of its own to be executed by another Court within the jurisdiction of the latter. Such power cannot exist without an express provision of the law granting it. It is clear, therefore, that both the orders complained of are such as the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhūm had no authority to pass under Act X of 1859, or any other law applicable to rent suits in that district.

" But one of the orders was passed so far back as the 11th March 1872, and we understand that sales and other proceedings have been held and completed under it without any objection on the part of the applicant. Under these circumstances, we do not think it right, in the exercise of our extraordinary power under s. 15 of the Statute referred to above, to quash it now.

"The other order complained of is comparatively of a recent date, viz., the 27th May 1879, and from the time the petitioner came to know of it he has been diligently endeavouring to have it set aside. Besides, if proceedings be allowed to proceed in accordance with it, it may unnecessarily involve the parties to this suit (and possibly also third parties) in profitless litigation. Under these circumstances, we think it right to exercise our extraordinary jurisdiction in respect of this order. We accordingly set it aside, and direct the Deputy Commissioner to recall the certificates of non-satisfaction from the District Courts to which they have been sent, informing them at the same time that the order under which they were sent has been reversed.

"We are informed by the parties that proceedings are still pending in the District Court of Nuddea under the first-mentioned order. Although we decline to quash it formally on the grounds mentioned above, we have yet expressed our opinion that it was [298] also ultra vires. We think, therefore, that the District Court of Nuddea should be informed that it should not proceed further in the matter, and return the record back to the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum."

On this appeal -

Mr. R. V. Doyne appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was argued that, assuming this question to fall within the High Court's jurisdiction under s. 15 of 24 and 25 Vic., c. 104, it had been wrongly held that the Collector had acted without legal authority in transferring the rent-decrees for execution. On a review of the past state of the law on this point, it was contended that so long as suits for arrears of rent were brought (Regulation V of 1831) before the ordinary Court as civil suits, the law relating to the execution of rent-decrees, as well as that relating to other decrees, was given by Act XXXIII of 1852, until its repeal when superseded by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, by Act X of 1861, the repealing Act. Originally a rent decree might have been treated like any other decree, and the Deputy Commissioner's order of March 1872 correctly stated that there was nothing in Act X of 1859 to alter the law in this respect.

The latter enactment in s. 23 providing that all suits for rent should be cognizable by the Collector, did not alter the law relating to the execution of decrees out of the jurisdiction of the Courts by which they were passed. The Code of Civil Procedure, as enacted in Act VIII of 1859, was extended to Manbhum, by notification under s. 385, in June of that year; and the contention was that the procedure provided in s. 284-296 for such execution superseded the former law. The High Court had taken for granted that these sections were inapplicable, and this was the error in the judgment under appeal. If, however, that Court had correctly supposed that the provisions of the Code on this point were inapplicable, then the previously existing law should be held to prevail. The latter view was, however, not the correct one, which, in effect, was that the sections of the Code had come [299] into force with reference to the execution of rent-decrees out of the jurisdiction of the Collectors making them.

For the respondent it was argued that the judgment of the High Court was correct, there being neither express language conferring the power to transfer rent-decrees from district to district for execution, nor any, intention, apparent upon the construction of Acts VIII of 1859 and X of 1859 to confer this power. Rent suits had been made cognizable by the Collector by Act X after Act VIII had become law, so that Act VIII would not, of its own force, apply to the proceedings of Courts afterwards established; nor did Act X refer generally to the procedure of Act VIII. On the contrary it contained special provisions on the subject of procedure thereby furnishing a presumption against the intention to supplement its sections by any implied reference to s. 284 et seq., of Act VIII, and showing what appeared in several parts of Act X (to which reference in detail was made) viz., that rent suits were not treated as "civil" suits.

Mr. R. V. Dwyer was not called upon to reply.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir A. Hobhouse.— The question presented to their Lordships in this appeal is whether the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum, who has made decrees in rent suits under the Bengal Rent Act No. X of 1859, can transfer those decrees for execution into another district. That officer possesses the jurisdiction conferred on Collectors of Land Revenue, and having made decrees in exercise of such jurisdiction, has further proceeded to make two orders transferring two decrees for execution. The High Court in the exercise of their power of revision, have substantially quashed his orders; in point of form, they have quashed one of the orders; and they have stayed proceedings on another. It is hardly necessary to enter into the details of the litigation. The High Court have decided that the Deputy Commissioner, as Judge of the Rent Court of Manbhum, had no authority to pass the orders under Act X of 1859, or any other law applicable to rent suits in that district.

A question was raised with respect to the jurisdiction of the High Court to entertain this question in revision at all. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to say anything upon that [300] point, except that they entirely agree with the view taken by the High Court of their own jurisdiction.

The other question depends upon the construction of Act X of 1859. That Act was passed for the purpose, among other things, of transferring suits for arrears of rent to the jurisdiction of the Collectors of Land Revenue; and it provided by s. 23, paragraphs 4 and 7, that all such suits "shall be cognisable by the Collectors of Land Revenue, and shall be instituted and tried under the provisions of that Act, and, except in the way of appeal, as provided in this Act, shall not be cognisable in any other Court, or by any other officer, or in any other manner."

It is not contended on behalf of the appellant that Act X of 1859 in any express way gave to the Collector the power of transfer which has been exercised. Neither is it contended for the respondent, that the words which have been read would, without more, prevent the provisions of Act VIII of the same year from applying to the execution of a Collector's decrees beyond the jurisdiction of his Court. The contention of the respondent is, that there is something in the language of Act X of 1859 which excludes this power from the jurisdiction of the Collector sitting as the Judge of the Rent Court established by that Act. For that purpose the respondent's counsel refer to a number of sections which may be illustrated by a single one. Section 77 deals with cases in which a third party appears to claim title in a rent suit; it gives the Collector certain powers of deciding the question before him, and then contains this proviso: "The decision of the Collector shall not affect the right of either party who may have a legal title to the rent of such land or tenure to establish his title by suit in the Civil Court." There are a number of other sections of similar frame; and the contention is, that the expression "Civil Court" is used in all those sections in such a way as to show that the framers of the Act X of 1859 did not consider that the Rent Courts established by that Act are Civil Courts.

It must be allowed that in those sections there is a certain distinction between the Civil Courts there spoken of and the Rent Courts established by the Act, and that the Civil Courts referred to in s. 77 and the kindred sections mean Civil Courts exercising all the powers of Civil Courts, as distinguished from the [301] Rent Courts, which only exercise powers over suits of a limited class. In that sense there is a distinction between the terms; but it is entirely another question whether the Rent Court does not remain a Civil Court in the sense that it is deciding on purely civil questions between persons seeking their civil rights, and whether, being a Civil Court in that sense, it does not fall within the provisions of Act VIII of 1859. It is hardly necessary to refer to those provisions in detail, because there is no dispute but that, if the Rent Court is a Civil Court within Act VIII of 1859, the Collector has, under s. 286, the power of transferring his decrees for execution into another district.

The consequence of holding, as the High Court have held, is, that wherever Act X of 1859 applies, persons seeking their rent against a tenant who is insolvent, in the district in which he is sued, have absolutely no remedy against him, though he may be possessed of great wealth in another district. No reason has been assigned, or so much as suggested, why such a distinction should exist between a person who is claiming a debt, founded on rent, and a person who is claiming a debt, founded on any other transaction. The distinction does not exist in any other part of India, neither indeed does it exist in those provinces of Bengal in which Act X of 1859 has been repealed, and the Bengal Act VIII of 1869 has taken its place. Therefore, although it is not impossible that the Legislature should have intended to establish in Manbhum and adjacent districts a distinction between claims for rent and all other claims which does not exist elsewhere, it requires very clear and cogent evidence on the face of the enactments to support the conclusion that they really do intend such a distinction.

That consideration is somewhat emphasised by referring to Act XXXIII of 1852, which was an Act passed to facilitate the enforcement of judgments in places beyond the jurisdiction of the Courts pronouncing the same. It provides that with respect to all Courts—not making a distinction between one Court and another, but with respect to all Courts—judgments may be enforced in the manner provided in the Act viz., by a transfer of the judgment out of the district of the Judge who pronounces it, into the district of some other Judge within whose jurisdiction [302] the debtor possesses property. It is true that in this Act it is said that the word "judgment" means a judgment in a civil suit or proceeding. But suits for the recovery of rent are civil suits or proceedings; and nothing can be clearer on the face of this Act than that the Legislature intended that everybody, who obtained a decree in a Court of Justice, should have a remedy against his debtor, wherever the property of that debtor might be.

The provisions of the Act of 1852 are substantially repeated in Act VIII of 1859; and though that Act speaks of Civil Courts, and not all Courts as Act XXXIII of 1852 does, yet the intention expressed is the same, viz., that all Courts entertaining civil suits of any kind should have this power of transferring their decrees for execution into another district. We find that Act XXXIII of 1852 was repealed in the year 1861, and it is repealed as being simply obsolete, the only reason expressed for repealing it being that Act VIII of 1859 had been passed. If Act VIII of 1859 covered the same ground as Act XXXIII of 1852, the earlier Act had become useless, and might be swept out of the Statute Book. But the earlier Act would not have become useless unless the latter Act covered the same ground.

In the opinion of their Lordships it is clear that looking outside Act X of 1859, no intention of making a distinction between rent suits and other suits in respect to the point now under consideration can be ascribed to the Legislature.

Turning to Act X of 1859, the preamble recites that "it is expedient to re-enact, with certain modifications, the provisions of the existing law in connection with demands of rent, to extend the jurisdiction of Collectors, and to prescribe rules for the trial of such questions." It was pointed out by Mr. Doyno that the particular process now under consideration was not the trial of any question regarding rent. But when we look at the provisions of the Act, it is clear that they go beyond the trial of such questions, and provide for the execution of decrees. At the same time the scope of the Act appears to be only to provide for the execution of the decrees of the Collector within his jurisdiction. There is nothing in the Act which provides for any execution beyond his [303] jurisdiction, and there is nothing to forbid the conclusion that such executions are left to the operations of Act XXXIII of 1852, or the corresponding portion of Act VIII of 1859.

Section 160¹ of Act X of 1859 has a bearing on this question. That section provides that an appeal from the judgment of a Collector or Deputy Collector shall lie to the Zillah Judge. But the Zillah Judge is a Civil Court to all intents and purposes. It was not disputed that if an appeal went from the Collector to the higher Court, to the Zillah Judge or to the High Court, and the decree of the Collector for rent was there affirmed, it would become the decree of a Civil Court, which could not be excluded from the operation of Act VIII of 1859. Then this consequence would follow, that the act of the parties would alter the nature of the decree; as long as the decree remains the decree of the Collector it is incapable of enforcement in any other district; but let the decree be affirmed by a Court of appeal, and though it is between the same parties for the same subject matter, it then becomes enforceable in another district. It is very difficult to suppose that any such result as that could possibly have been intended by the Legislature.

These considerations lead to the conclusion that the Rent Courts, established by Act X of 1859, must be held to fall within s. 284 of Act VIII of the same year.

The result is, that their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that the order of the High Court of the 7th July 1880 be set aside, and that it be ordered that the rule nisi of the 17th of May 1880, therein referred to, be discharged with costs. The respondent must pay the costs of the appeal.

Right of Occupancy, Conditions necessary for acquiring—Non-payment of Rent—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 6, 22 and 52.

Two conditions only are necessary for the acquiring of a right of occupancy, viz., (1), the cultivation or holding of land for a period of twelve years ; and (2), that the person holding or cultivating the land should be a ryot.

The essential conditions of s. 6, Beng. Act VIII of 1869 are fulfilled without showing the payment of rent, that only being a condition necessary for the maintaining of the right when created.

In a suit brought to evict a tenant who had been in possession of certain land for a longer period than twelve years, when it was shown that rent had not been paid, and notice to quit had been given —

Held, that a right of occupancy had been acquired, and that the ryot had the power to prevent forfeiture under the provisions of s. 52, Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

THIS was a suit brought by the plaintiffs to evict the defendant and obtain khas possession of certain land after serving him with a notice to quit. The facts of the case are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the Court.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and Baboo Shreesh Chunder Chowdhry for the Appellant.

Mr. Branson, Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Aubinash Chunder Banerjee for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) :—

Mitter, J—The land in dispute in the possession of the defendant in this case amounts to 13 bighas out of an area of 78 bighas. The whole of the 78 bighas at the time of the thakbust in the year 1864, was the subject-matter of [303] a dispute between the Maharajah of Domraon on the one hand, and Dewan Ram Jewan Singh and Ram Coomar Singh on the other. The former claimed it as a part of Chuk Nowrunga, which is in the district of Gazeepore, and the latter as part of Baharwar in the district of Shahabad. The land in question was entered in the survey map as part of Baharwar.

The plaintiffs seek to evict the defendant after serving him with a notice to quit.

In September 1876 two suits were brought (one by the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4, and the other by the plaintiff No. 5), to recover possession of the whole of the aforesaid 78 bighas against the present defendant and several other persons. It was alleged by the plaintiffs that the defendants were trespassers, who had, under the color of some favourable orders passed by Criminal Courts, taken possession of the disputed land in the year 1283 (1876-77) the defendants took exception to the form of the suit on the ground that they were separately in possession of separate plots of land, and that they should not have been sued jointly in one suit. On the merits they alleged that they were in possession of the land as tenants and not as trespassers.

The plaintiffs obtained decrees in the lower Court which were confirmed on appeal. Two special appeals were preferred to this Court, and it was urged on behalf of the (defendants) appellants that the suits should have been dismissed both on the grounds of multifariousness as well as of limitation.

A Division Bench of this Court decreed these appeals. The learned Judges were of opinion that, although the suit, as framed, was bad on the ground of multifariousness, yet the defendants were not prejudiced thereby. They further held that as the defendants had held the land in dispute as tenants from 1265 (1858-59), limitation could not be set up against the landlords. But they dismissed the suits upon the ground that the defendants having been in possession as tenants could not be evicted by suits brought on the allegation that they were trespassers.

Then the plaintiffs joined together and brought this and five other suits giving to the defendants in Baisak 1286 (April-May 1879) notices to quit.

[306] The defendants contend that they are guzashta tenants, and therefore cannot be ejected otherwise than under the provisions of. 52, Beng. Act VIII of 1869.

They allege that the whole of the 78 bighas is part and parcel of 200 bighas which formed their guzashta holding in Mouzah Sarendra, the property of the Maharajah of Domraon. That by the action of the river Ganges the 78 bighas remained submerged for a certain time. That when the land reappeared Dewan Ram Jewan Singh and Ram Coomar Singh claimed it as appertaining to Baharwar, a mouzah contiguous to Sarendra. The Maharajah did not choose to claim it as part of Sarendra, but alleged that it appertained to Chuk Nowranga. The takbust authorities ultimately decided the dispute in favour of the Dewans. That at the time of the settlement in the year 1868 it was treated as lowfir land of Baharwar, and was settled with Dewan Ram Jewan and Ram Coomar, their (the defendants') rights as cultivators being recognized. They further alleged that they were always willing to pay to the settlement-holders the proper rent due, but it was not received, the landlords demanding higher rents. They admit that the rent was not deposited in Court as provided by law.

The Munsif decreed the suits, holding that the defendants could not plead right of occupancy, as they, upon their own showing, had not paid any rent on account of the land in dispute either to the plaintiffs or to the maliks. The District Judge has upheld the decrees upon the ground that the defendants had failed to prove possession of the identical land now in dispute for more than twelve years.

It is clear that the ground taken by the District Judge is untenable. In the former suit this Court came to the conclusion that the defendants were, upon the judgments of the lower Courts, found to have been in possession of the land in dispute from 1265 (1858-59). Therefore the fact that they held the disputed land as tenants of the plaintiffs and their lessors for more than twelve years was conclusively found in the former litigation. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs fairly admitted this; but he contented that the Munsif's view of the law is correct, and that the payment of rent is a condition precedent to a ryot's acquiring a right of occupancy.

[307] Several cases were cited in the course of the arguments; but it seems to us that none of them contain any authoritative ruling upon this point. They contain mere expressions of opinion supporting either the one or the other view of the question.

Neither have we been able ourselves to find any case in point. The question, therefore, comes on for decision for the first time before us.

We are of opinion that the decision of the Munsif upon this point is not correct. Section 6, Act VIII of 1869, says: "Every ryot who shall have cultivated or held land for a period of twelve years shall have a right of occupancy in the land so cultivated or held by him, whether it be held under pottah or not, so long as he pays the rent payable on account of the same." It is clear from the language of the section that for the acquiring of the right of occupancy two conditions only are necessary, viz., (1), the cultivation or holding of land for a period of twelve years; and (2), that the person holding or cultivating the land should be a ryot. No doubt in many cases the fact of non-payment of rent would be a valid ground for holding that the land was held not as a ryot but as a trespasser. But where, notwithstanding non-payment of rent, the holding or cultivation as a ryot is established for twelve years, the essential conditions of the section are fulfilled. The Munsif was of opinion that the words "so long as he pays the rent payable on account of the same" show that the payment of the rent is an essential requisite for the acquiring of the right of occupancy. But he is mistaken in this, because the section says that a ryot, etc., shall have a right of occupancy so long as he pays the rent, etc.; i.e., a ryot who fulfils the two conditions mentioned above shall have a right to occupy the land (which means he cannot be evicted against his will) so long as he pays rent, etc. Therefore, the acquiring of a right of occupancy is dependent only upon the two conditions mentioned above, but the maintaining of it is further dependent upon another condition, viz., payment of rent.

It was contended that it would be anomalous to hold that, although a right of occupancy may be acquired by a ryot who has not paid any rent, yet the moment it is acquired it would be extinguished if the payment of the rent be withheld. But [308] reading s. 6 along with ss. 22 and 52 of the Rent Act, it would appear that the construction we adopt is not open to this objection. No doubt non-payment of rent works as a forfeiture of the rights of occupancy and renders a ryot, whether he has a right of occupancy or not, liable to be evicted (see s. 22). But a ryot having a right of occupancy cannot be evicted otherwise than in execution of a decree or order under the provisions of the Rent Act. Therefore, before a landlord can really reap the benefit of the forfeiture of a right of occupancy incurred by non-payment of rent, he must bring a suit to eject the ryot, and whenever such a suit is brought, the ryot will have the power to prevent the forfeiture by paying the arrears of rent under the provisions of s. 52. In this respect s. 52 makes no difference between an occupant and non-occupant ryot. Both have the same privilege of preventing eviction by the payment of the arrears of rent within a certain time.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the defendants are ryots possessing a right of occupancy. The decrees of the lower Courts are, therefore, set aside, and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs throughout.

This judgment governs Ap. Decrees Nos. 1693 to 1697.

Maclean, J.—I concur in dismissing the plaintiff's suits.

The position of the defendants as tenants since 1265 (1858-59) is conclusively established by the decision of this Court, dated 23rd July 1877 ; and , although there are some passages in that decision which may have led the plaintiffs to suppose that the defendants could not successfully set up a right of occupancy, I am unable to find authority for the proposition that an occupancy tenant (ryot) who, from any cause, has not paid his rent during his occupancy, can be ejected save under a decree for arrears. It seems clear to me that an occupancy right is " the right resulting from the connexion between the occupying tenant and the land which he occupies for a space of twelve years." Narendra Narayan Roy Chowdhry v. Ishan Chandra Sen (13 B. L. R., 274, see p. 289 per Jackson, J.). It is no doubt true that the right which is acquired by occupation as a tenant must be maintained by payment of rent, and [309] that on " the tenant failing to do so either from inability or from unwillingness the possession returns to the proprietor, the contract between him and his tenant being no longer in force ;" Prosono Koomar Tagore v. Rammohun Doss (S. D. A., 1855, p. 14). But the law provides for the reentry of the landlord in a particular manner, viz., by ejectment upon a decree for arrears under the provisions of s. 22, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, subject however to the occupying tenant's privilege of avoiding the ejectment by payment within fifteen days of (s. 52, Beng. Act VIII of 1869).

In this view of the law I find that the defendants are not liable to be ejected under notice.

Appeal allowed.

Second Appeal—Findings of fact—Procedure of the High Court— Interest—Mortgage bond.

Where the lower Appellate Court has clearly misapprehended what the evidence before it was, and has thus been led to discard or not give sufficient weight to important evidence, and to give weight to other evidence to which it is not entitled, and has thus been led not into any mere incidental mistake, but totally to misconceive the case, the High Court will interfere in second appeal, though it is not the ordinary course of procedure for it to interfere in such cases with any findings of fact which have been arrived at by the lower Appellate Court.

In a suit on a mortgage bond the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the agreed rate of interest without any deduction.

THIS was a suit for the recovery of Rs. 1,000 as principal, and a further sum as interest due on a bond executed by defendant No. 1, Mohamed Ausur, and his deceased wife Shurifunnissa Bibi on the 29th Choitro 1274, corresponding with the 10th April [310] 1868, in favour of one Khotiza Sultan, the sister of the first two plaintiffs, and the mother's sister of the third plaintiff.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 496 of 1881, against the decree of T.M. Kirkwood, Esq., Judge of Mymensing, dated the 29th December 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghose, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 29th March 1880.

Originally separate suits were brought by plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 in the Bazitpur Munsiff's Court, in the year 1875, for their separate shares in this debt, of which they each claimed a $5\frac{1}{2}$ -anna share. The Munsiff in both cases decreed the claims, but the Subordinate Judge, on appeal, reversed that judgment, both on the merits and also on the ground that the plaintiff's could not sue separately, the bond being one and the same. The two plaintiffs then proffered a special appeal to the High Court, when all the proceedings were set aside, and they were directed to bring a joint suit, if so advised, on condition of their depositing the costs of the respondents in all Courts within two months. The Subordinate Judge's order was dated the 11th July 1876, and the High Court's conditional order was passed on the 3rd July 1877, and that was made absolute on the 3rd September following, all costs having been deposited. The present suit was instituted on the 30th May 1879 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

Several issues were raised by the defendants, and amongst them were the following:—

(1) Whether the suit could be maintained in the absence of a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860.

(2) Whether the suit was barred as res judicata by reason of the judgment of the Appellate Court in the former suit.

(3) Whether, assuming the order to withdraw the former claim to have been unjustly made, a second fresh suit could lie.

(4) Whether by reason of a portion of the money covered by one and the same bond not having been included in the former claim, the same should not now be held to have been relinquished.

(5) Whether the suit was not barred by limitation.

(6) Whether the plaintiffs were the rightful heirs of Khotiza Sultan, and whether the solenama was a bond fide document.

(7) Whether the money bond was genuine, and the loan had been actually advanced.

The Subordinate Judge found that a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 had been granted; that the suit was not barred as res judicata as the decision had been set aside by the High Court; and also decided the fourth and fifth [311] issues in favour of the plaintiffs. He also found that plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 were the heirs of Khotiza Sultan, who each of them taking a $5\frac{1}{2}$ -anna share had given up by a deed of agreement a 5-anna share to the plaintiff No. 3, who was the son of the first plaintiff.

With regard to the bond he held it proved that defendant No. 1 and his wife had borrowed Rs. 1,000 from Khotiza Sultan, the bond being executed on behalf of the wife by one Amzad, by virtue of an am-mokhtarnama, and that the property was mortgaged for the debt. The bond was duly registered. He accordingly decreed the suit with costs.

On appeal this decree was set aside by the District Judge, and the defendants were awarded their costs in both Courts.

The plaintiffs now preferred a special appeal to the High Court.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by

Wilson, J—It is not the ordinary course of procedure for this Court to interfere in 2nd appeal with any findings of fact which have been arrived at by the lower Appellate Court; but we are well within the scope of the authorities in holding that where the lower Appellate Court has clearly misapprehended what the evidence before it was, and has thus been led to discard or not give sufficient weight to important evidence, and to give weight to other evidence to which it is not entitled, and has thus been led not into any mere incidental mistake, but totally to misconceive the case, this Court may interfere. Now in this case there were several material questions to be decided; the first was whether the bond sued upon was executed by Ausur. As to that the Judge of the lower Appellate Court said in his judgment at p. 15 of the Paper Book: "It appears to me that the evidence as to Ausur's signature to the bond is most unsatisfactory, and that that signature is in no way proved; (s. 67)* Evidence Act." If that finding stood by itself it might probably be that we should not interfere with it, [312] but it clearly refers to an earlier paragraph in the judgment, and that earlier paragraph shows that the reason why the lower Appellate Court was dissatisfied with the evidence of the witnesses was that he did not think they were present at the time, for he observes that not one of them says that he saw Ausur execute the bond; in other words he understands them not as speaking of something which was done while they were present, but of a transaction, the description of which they had heard from others. It appears to us that this is a clear misapprehension on the part of the Judge, and that these witnesses clearly intended to speak as of a thing they had themselves seen. That seems to us clear from their direct examination, and in the case of several of them it is made still more clear from their cross-examination, from the tenor of which it seems to us that all parties present at the trial understood that they were speaking of a transaction effected in their presence. This misapprehension on the part of the Judge in the lower Appellate Court justifies us in remanding the case for him to reconsider his finding upon that point. The next point is as to the execution of the bond by Amzad on behalf of Shurifunnissa. As to that the case stands on precisely the same footing as it does as regards the execution of the bond by Amzad. Then there remains the question as to the existence of the mokhtarnama, under which it is said that Amzad executed the bond on behalf of Shurifunnissa, and there the Judge in the lower Appellate Court appears to us to have again fallen into somewhat similar errors. The most important witness as regards this is Gour Chunder Dass, and the learned Judge distrusts the evidence of this witness as to the mokhtarnama on the ground that it was not produced in the 1875 suit. That is an observation that would be entitled to great weight if it was suggested that it had been fabricated since 1875, but when it is clear on the evidence that it existed long before 1868, it appears that the Judge has been seriously misled. Then, again, speaking of the evidence of the same witness, he says that according to him the mokhtarnama was given by Shurifunnissa only and not by her and Ausur; and in this he finds a discrepancy between the evidence of this and the other witnesses. That is also clearly a mistake. The witness only says that a mokhtarnama on the part of Shurifunnissa was produced, and he is [313] speaking of a time at which the only question of the slightest importance would be whether it was executed by Shurifunnissa. Ausur the husband went there to execute for himself, and the question was how was the wife represented.

Proof of signature and hand-writing of person alleged to have signed or written document produced.

* [Sec. 67:—If a document is alleged to be signed or to have been written wholly or in part by any person, the signature or the hand-writing of so much of the document as is alleged to be in that person's hand-writing must be proved to be in his hand-writing.]

Then according to him the mokhtarnama on his behalf is produced to prove her authority for the execution of the bond. There is, therefore, a clear misapprehension on the part of the Judge as to the meaning of this evidence. Then speaking of the same document he says that one of the witnesses, Mohurru Mir, to whom a power was given to register the document, and who may have been presumed to have some acquaintance with its contents, has been examined, but has not been asked a word about it, while it appears on the evidence that Mohurru was examined about it, and made certain statements concerning it. These seem to be the considerations which led the Judge of the lower Appellate Court to reject the truth of the story as to this mokhtarnama, and as they seem to us to be founded on mistakes of fact, the learned Judge should have an opportunity of reconsidering his views. In remitting the case to him and asking him to reconsider his findings, we think it right to point out that the matters mentioned by him at page 18 with regard to the registration in 1868, and the use of the mokhtarnama during the same year, and the other evidence in the case as to the existence of this document at and about that time that these matters appear to us entitled to very great weight.

The case will, therefore, go back to the Judge in the Court below for reconsideration. That being so, it becomes necessary to deal with two questions that have been raised before us—one the question of certificate, and the other the question of interest. If the ultimate finding in the lower Appellate Court should be still in favour of the defendants, these two questions do not arise; otherwise they do. It was held in the lower Appellate Court that this suit could not be maintained for want of a certificate to the estate of Rabia. But on the facts of the case it does not appear to be so, because, under the exception in the section in question, no certificate is required when there is no doubt as to the title of the party claiming the money. Section 2, Act XXVII of 1860 says: "Unless the Court shall be of opinion that payment of the debt is withheld from fraudulent or vexatious motives, and not [314] from any reasonable doubt as to the party entitled." Now if the plaintiff's story be true, then the defendants who deny their liability must be acting fraudulently, as there can be no reasonable doubt that all the parties who may be entitled to these sums of money are plaintiffs in the suit. Then the question of interest arises in this way. The Judge says (page 13 of the Paper Book): "But for my finding on the certificate matter, and supposing the bond to be genuine, I should allow 18 per cent. per annum interest from the 10th April 1868 to the 10th October 1868, and (as damages) six per cent. per annum from the date on which the 1875 suit was instituted, to the date of decree in the present suit;" and so on: that is to say, he disallows the interest at the rate agreed in the bond for a certain very considerable period. That, it appears to us, is wholly irregular and contrary to law. If the bond be genuine, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the agreed rate of interest without any deduction. It would be a grave injustice if it were not so, as the defendants would thereby be allowed to keep the money in their pockets without paying interest for it. The costs will follow the result.

As the case has been pending for a very long time, the record will be sent down at once.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

[=7 Ind. Jur. 415]
[316] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 9th August, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER, OFFICIATING CHIEF JUSTICE AND

MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Ananda Bibee.....Plaintiff

versus

Nownit Lal and another.....Defendants.*

Hindu Law—Inheritance—Mitakshara—Daughter-in-law.

Under the Mitakshara and usages obtaining in the district of Behar a daughter-in-law, whose husband has predeceased his father, is not in the line of heirs of her father-in-law.

Per MITTER, J.—A daughter-in-law, not being a joint owner with her father-in-law, cannot after his death take his estate by right of survivorship.

THIS suit was instituted on the 10th May 1879. The plaintiff, the widow of Mangli, who predeceased his father Gocul Chand, whose father Muni Lal was the son of one of two sisters Dukho Bibi and Sukho Bibi. The defendants were the representatives of Lal Bahadur and Ram Bahadur, the two brothers of Dukho Bibi and Sukho Bibi.

The plaintiff alleged that by a deed of gift, dated the 17th Magh 1195, F.S. (8th Feb. 1788) Lal Bahadur and Ram Bahadur had granted the ancestral property in dispute to their sister Dukho Bibi, and had put her in possession of it; that on her death Muni Lal had come into possession, and on his death Gocul Chand had come into, and held possession till his death in 1280 (1873); and that since then the plaintiff had been, and still was, in possession. That by an order, dated the 14th December 1878, in a mutation proceeding under Beng. Act VII of 1876, an application by her for the registration of her name as proprietor had been rejected, and the names of the defendants had been ordered to be registered.

She claimed that on her right as proprietor being established, her possession might be confirmed.

The plaintiff did not produce the deed of gift, but alleged that it had been fraudulently taken from her possession by the first defendant.

The defendants denied the gift set up, and the alleged wrongful [316] abstraction of the deed. They alleged that possession of the land had never been parted with by their ancestors or by themselves, and also that Gocul Chand had been their servant. They further questioned the plaintiff's title as heiress of her father-in-law Gocul Chand.

Three issues were framed by the lower Court—

1st.—As to the plaintiff's right as heiress of her father-in-law.

2nd.—As to the truth of the alleged gift to Dukho Bibi and the abstraction of the deed.

3rd.—As to the plaintiff's possession and that of her ancestors.

Except as to the alleged abstraction of the deed of gift by the first defendant, the lower Court found in favour of the plaintiff on the second and third issues, but found against her on the first. The suit was therefore dismissed.

* Appeal from Original Decree, No. 212 of 1880 against the decree of Baboo Koylash Chunder Mookerjee, Officiating Second Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpore, dated the 18th May 1880.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court on the issue found against her, and the defendants filed a cross appeal.

Baboo Guru Dass Bannerjee and Baboo Golap Chunder Sircar for the Appellant.

Baboo Hem Chunder Bannerjee and Munshi Mahomed Yusoof for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered :—

Mitter, J., after referring to the facts and evidence, continued as follows :—

The possession of the disputed mouzah by Gocul Chand and his father is not therefore shown by any evidence to have been permissive. Whether this possession was referable to the title derived under the alleged deed of gift to Dukho Bibi is not made clear upon the evidence. If the plaintiff's allegation of the abstraction of the deed of gift from her by the defendant No. 1 be not correct, then there is no evidence to connect the possession of Gocul Chand and his father with the title under the alleged deed of gift. The lower Court has rejected this part of the plaintiff's story. I see no reason to dissent from that opinion.

But although the title under the deed of gift is not proved, the possession of Gocul Chand and his father for more than [317] twelve years being established, and it being not shown that that possession was with the permission of the defendants and their ancestors, it seems to me that we must hold that Gocul Chand had a good title to this property.

This brings us to the question of the Hindu law raised in the case, viz., whether, after the death of Gocul Chand, the plaintiff can claim any right to the disputed property entitling her to the possession of it as against the defendants.

As to the question of possession after Gocul Chand's death it seems to me to be clear upon the evidence that it remained with the plaintiff till the Land Registration order was passed. The Sub-Judge says that the possession of the plaintiff "is not yet extinct"; but it is difficult to understand how it can be said, after the adverse order was passed under the Registration Act under s. 59, that the plaintiff's possession continued. The present suit may, under the Rulings of this Court, be considered as one for recovery of possession. Upon the face of the plaint it is clear that the plaintiff, at the time of the institution of the suit, could not have been in possession, and if she can make out her title she, in my opinion, would be entitled to a decree for possession.

As regards the title of the plaintiff derived from Gocul Chand it has been contended before us (1) that a daughter-in-law, under Mitakshara law, is entitled to inherit; (2), that, supposing that she is not in the line of heirs, the plaintiff is entitled to the property in dispute by right of survivorship, as she, during Gocul Chand's lifetime, was a member of a joint Hindu family with him; and (3), that, supposing that these contentions are not valid, the plaintiff having undoubtedly a maintenance charge upon the disputed property, is entitled to the possession of it, and to have her title declared as against the defendants, who have no sort of right to it.

We shall deal with these three questions in the order in which they have been raised before us.

On a careful examination of the digests of Hindu law which are considered of authority in the district from which this case comes, I am clearly of opinion that the daughter-in-law is not in the line of heirs at all.

The authorities most respected in Behar are the Mitakshara [318] and the Viramitrodaya. It was contended before us that, according to the Mitakshara, a daughter-in-law is entitled to succeed as a gotraja sapinda. It has been settled now by more than one decision that the word sapinda is used by the author of the Mitakshara in the chapters on inheritance, in the same sense in which it is defined by him in the Achara Kanda, i.e., in chapters on Rituals. See Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mankuwarbai (I. L. R., 2 Bom., 388); also Bharmangavda v. Rudrapgavda (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 181); and Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 119). It has been contended that, according to this definition of sapinda, a daughter-in-law comes within that class, and that as the author of the Mitakshara in part II, chapter II, s. 5, page 1 lays down, "if there be not even brothers' sons, gotrajas share the estate. Gotrajas are the paternal grandmother and sapindas and samanadakas"—all female sapindas succeed gotrajas. But this contention cannot be maintained in the face of paras. 3, 4 and 5 of the same section. Para. 3 says that on failure of the paternal grandmother, the heirs are samana-gotraja sapinda; then in para. 4 the author thus explains the rule laid down above: "Here, on failure of the father's descendants, the heirs are successively the paternal grandmother, the paternal grandfather, the uncles and their sons"; then para. 5 says: "On failure of the paternal grandfather's line, the paternal great-grandmother, the paternal great-grandfather, his sons and their issue inherit. In this manner to seventh degree must be understood the succession of kindred belonging to the same family generally."

In these passages the author of the Mitakshara lays down a compact series of heirs from the father down to the issues of the great-grandfather entitled to succeed as sapindas. There is no room for introducing the wives of the sapindas as heirs in this compact series. For instance, on the failure of the father's descendants, the paternal grandmother succeeds. This being an inflexible rule, the wives of the father's descendants cannot have any place in the compact series of heirs from the father down to the grandmother. If the contention under consideration were correct, then, in a competition between the paternal grandmother and a brother's widow, the latter would be entitled to inherit, but in the [319] face of the positive rule laid down in paragraph 4, a brother's widow cannot have any claim to inheritance in preference to the paternal grandmother. The same observations will apply to the wives of the descendants of the paternal grandfather.

But it has been contended that paragraphs, 3, 4 and 5 cited above do not exhaust all the sapinda heirs; they only lay down that collaterals, who are the descendants of the father, grandfather, and great-grandfather, two degrees removed, are entitled to the inheritance in the order laid down in them; and that the other sapindas would come in under the class gotrajas. The words "descendants and sons" used in these paragraphs have been held in the decision of Mr. Harrington, quoted in Rutheputty Dutt Jha v. Rajunder Narain Rao (2 Moore's I. A., 132), as used in their generic sense, meaning descendants generally. Mr. Harrington says: "The term putra or son, in the Mitakshara and its commentary the Sabodhene, is frequently used as a generic term for male issue or descendant, and must be so construed in several parts of the Mitakshara, or the grandson, as well as the great-grandson would be excluded from the immediate succession, though acknowledged in every system of Hindu law to represent their deceased father and grandfather, and entitled with sons to share the estate of a person leaving sons, grandsons, and great-grandsons, the father of the grandson, and father and grandfather of the grandson being previously dead. This principle appears to be recognized in the Mitakshara and both its commentaries, in the third paragraph of the introductory section and notes referring thereto. (See page 238 of Mr. Colebrooke's Translation.) In that paragraph, after stating that the wealth of the father, or of the paternal grandfather, becomes the property of his sons or of his grandsons in right of their being his sons or grandsons, and this is an inheritance not liable to obstruction,' it is immediately added, 'but property devolves on parents or uncles' brothers and the rest, upon the demise of the owner, if there be no male issue, and thus the actual existence of a son and the survival of owner are impediments to the succession, and on their ceasing, the property devolves on the successor, in right of his being uncle or brother; [320] this is an inheritance subject to obstruction. The same holds good in respect to their sons and other descendants.' Here it is manifest the words translated 'male issue' and a 'son' were not meant to exclude grandsons before mentioned, and the two commentators agree in construing the last clause to intend 'the sons or other descendants of the son and grandson.' The same construction must, I think, be put on the words 'sons' and 'issue' (putra and śiṣya), in the 4th and 5th paragraphs of the fifth section, and second chapter of the Mitakshara, and this interpretation is indeed indicated by expressions in the same paragraphs, viz., 'on failure of the father's descendants' (santana), and 'on that of the paternal grandfather's line' (santana). To adopt the construction proposed by the appellant would be to cut off all the descendants below the grandson of the father, grandfather and every other ancestor, and would render nugatory the provisions in the Mitakshara, as well as in the other books of law which expressly state 'the succession of kindred belonging to the same family, and connected by funeral oblations to the seventh degree, or if there be none such, the succession devolves on kindred connected by libations of water, and they must be understood to reach to seven degrees beyond the kindred connected by funeral oblations of food, or else as far the limits of knowledge as to birth and name extend.' (See Translation of Mitakshara, part II, chap. II, sec. V, paras. 5 and 6)".

If this be the correct meaning of the words, "sons and descendants" as used in paragraphs 3, 4 and 5, it is quite clear that they contain an exhaustive enumeration of all the sapindas, and the females, excepting those that are enumerated by name, would be necessarily excluded. But, according to the spiritual benefit theory, which, in the opinion of the author of the Viramitrodaya, determines the position of gotrajas and other heirs the words "sons or descendants" would include only grandsons and great-grandsons. According to Apararka, a digest writer of later date than the Mitakshara, the word "sons or descendants" include only sons, grandsons and great-grandsons. See Tagore Law Lectures, 1880, p. 648. If this latter view be correct, then no doubt paragraphs 3, 4 and 5 cited above would not be an exhaustive enumeration of the sapindas. But the last words [321] of paragraph 5, viz., "in this manner must be understood the succession of samanagotra sapindas," indicate the mode in which the list of enumeration is to be completed. If we are to complete the list by following that mode, then the wives of sapindas would have no place in that list.

Then again the author of the Mitakshara is a very strong advocate of woman's right; he has gone to the length of laying down that where women inherit their right is absolute. If in his opinion the wives of sapindas were entitled to succeed, he would have certainly expressly indicated his opinion in the section treating of the succession of gotrajas.

There is one more consideration arising from the passages cited above, which, in my opinion, almost conclusively shows that it was not the intention of the author of the Mitakshara to confer any heritable rights upon female sapindas not specifically mentioned. It is thus an unmarried daughter of any ancestor within six degrees would be entitled to inherit as a sapinda according to the contention under our consideration. Thus, for instance, an uncle's unmarried daughter would be entitled to inherit in preference to a brother's great-grandson, and supposing she dies after marriage leaving a son, that son, who is merely a bandhu of the last male owner, would obtain the property, although there is a samanagotra sapinda in existence. This could never have been the intention of the author of the Mitakshara; because, according to the scheme of succession laid down by him, a bandhu has no heritable rights in the presence of a gotraja, however remote his connection may be with the deceased.

Then, again, a married daughter of a sapinda would not be in the line of heirs at all, because she would not be a samanagotra sapinda, neither would she come within the category of bandhus, because it is admitted that the class of heirs indicated by the term bandhu includes males only. It seems to me that it could not have been the intention of the author of the Mitakshara to make such a distinction between a married and an unmarried female sapinda relative. In the one case she would occupy a very high position in the line of heirs; in the other, she would be nowhere.

For these reasons it appears to me that, on the Mitakshara [322] itself, there is no foundation for the contention that the wives of the sapindas are entitled to inherit as sapindas.

Whatever doubts there may be as to the validity of the contention under our consideration with reference to the Mitakshara, the Viramitrodaya is clearly against it. The author of the Viramitrodaya in chapter III, part 7, treats of the succession of gotrajas. He quotes paragraph 1, chapter II, section V of the Mitakshara as defining who the gotrajas are. Then he refers to the opinion of the authors of the Smṛiti Chandrika and Dayabhaga to the effect that the term gotraja is a compound denoting males only; then he controverts this opinion. Having controverted it he says: "According to the previously cited interpretation put upon the text of Sruti (therefore women are devoid of the senses, etc.) by the venerable Vidyaranga in that text Sruti does not refer to a prohibition of inheritance, and therefore no difficulty arises, nor is any explanation necessary. But it should be remarked that how can that interpretation be accepted when it is in conflict with the text of Baudhayana. Granting that the word Indriya does mean the Soma juice in conformity with the context, yet, inasmuch as there is an absence of another text declaring the incapacity of females to inherit, and as it is not possible for the present Smṛiti to be unsupported, and as therefore the inference of the existence of a prohibition is necessary to justify the assertion of a fact, viz., (that females are deemed incompetent to inherit), we should explain the present text just as in the instance, 'therefore an unknown embryo being killed (a man becomes) murderer of a Brahmana.'"

A few words of explanation are here necessary to explain the above passage. The text of Baudhayana, referred to above, is to the following effect: "A woman is not entitled to inherit, for thus says the Veda. Females and persons deficient in the organs of sense are deemed incompetent to inherit." This Vedic text Vidyaranya, a commentator on the Taittiriya Veda, interpreted in a different way, so that it would have no reference to inheritance.

Referring to this interpretation, the author of the Viramitrodaya says that this interpretation cannot be accepted, because it is in conflict with the text of Baudhayana. Then he argues that [323] supposing the interpretation of the Vedic text of Vidyaranya is correct, it must be presumed that there is another text in the Sruti justifying the exclusion of the females, for a text of Smṛiti must have a text of Sruti to support it. The existence of a text of Sruti in this instance must be presumed in the same way as in the instance of the text of Smṛiti to the effect, "therefore an unknown embryo being killed, etc., etc."

According to the opinion of Viramitrodaya, therefore, women are not generally entitled to succeed unless they are specially mentioned. A daughter-in-law is not one of these enumerated female heirs as given in the Viramitrodaya. The author of the Viramitrodaya expresses the same opinion in another passage, see page 175 of Baboo Golap Chunder Sirkar's translation. It is to the following effect: "As for the text of Sruti, viz., 'therefore women are devoid of senses and incompetent to inherit,' and for the text of Manu based upon it, viz., 'indeed the rule is that women are always devoid of senses and incompetent to inherit,' these are both to be interpreted to refer to those women whose right of inheritance has not been expressly declared." Then again in another passage in page 244, the author of the Viramitrodaya expressly lays it down that a daughter-in-law is only entitled to maintenance and not to inheritance. He says, "but the daughter-in-law and others (of the same sex) are entitled to food and raiment only, for the nearness as a sapinda is of no force when it is opposed by express texts. Since a text of the Sruti declares: 'Therefore women are devoid of senses and incompetent to inherit,' and a text of Manu founded upon it says, 'indeed the rule is that devoid of the senses, and incompetent to inherit, women are useless.' The conclusion arrived at by the author of the Smriti Chandrika, Haradatta and other southern commentators as well as by all the Oriental commentators, such as Jimatavahana, is that those women only are entitled to inherit, whose right of succession has been expressly mentioned in texts such as 'The wife and the daughters also, etc.,' but that others are certainly prohibited from taking heritage by the texts of Sruti and of Manu."

The learned pleaders for the plaintiff, appellant, further relied upon passages from Nirnaya Sindhu, Ballambhatta, Subodhini and [324] Baijanti. In none of these works on Hindu law is there any authority for the broad contention that all female sapindas are entitled to inherit. All that can be said on their authority is, that some of them have enlarged the list of female heirs entitled to succeed. Of these the daughter-in-law is mentioned as one of the heirs in Baijanti, in Ballambhatta and Nirnaya Sindhu. This last mentioned work treats of Rituals, and is therefore hardly entitled to any authority on a question of inheritance. Kamalakura, the author of Nirnaya Sindhu, is also the author of Vivada Tandava, a treatise on the law of inheritance. In this latter work he in most emphatic words deprecates the heritable rights of women other than those expressly enumerated as heirs. See Tagore Law Lectures of 1880, page 664. Baijanti's and Ballambhatta's opinion being not in accordance with the usage obtaining in Behar and the North-Western Provinces, as will be shown hereafter, cannot be followed in preference to the Vironiboddy.

Before examining the decided cases upon this point it may be noticed here that of the European text writers, Sir Thomas Strange, in Vol. I, page 146, lays down broadly that, "according to the general principles of Hindu law, the sex is not entitled to inherit except in a few specified instances." West and Buhlor discuss this question, and are inclined to the opinion that, in countries governed by the Mitakshara law, wives of sapindas are entitled to inherit as sapindas.

As Smriti Chandrika and Dayabhaga are quite clear upon the point (i.e., their opinion is against the contention of the appellant), we shall not refer to any cases decided in accordance with these two digests. We shall not also refer to any Bombay cases, because the law upon the subject has now been settled in that Presidency by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Cassibai (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 110). This last mentioned decision is entirely based upon the usage obtaining in the Presidency of Bombay. Their Lordships distinctly say that the Mitakshara is silent upon the point. They are also of opinion that the contention is not sound according to the Viramitrodaya.

Of the cases decided by this Court and the late Sudder Dewany Adawlut of Calcutta, we find instances in which the right of inheritance [325] of the wife of a deceased sapinda was not set up, although if it had been set up it would have materially affected the decision of the Court. For instance, in Baboo Shewsahai Singh v. Balwunt Singh [S. D. A. (1858) 400], the competition to inheritance lay between a daughter's son and a daughter-in-law. The daughter-in-law's right was put upon the question of fact, whether or not her husband survived his father. Similarly in Maharajah Ram Kissen Singh v. Rajah Sheonundun Singh (23 W. R., 412), the daughter-in-law's right was not set up. It is quite clear, if it could have been set up successfully in that case, the plaintiff would have been defeated, because he was a mere bandhu. In determining a question of usage, it seems to me that instances, where the particular usage in dispute was not set up, although it was of the utmost importance to set it up, are of great value. Such instances afford a very satisfactory basis for the conclusion that the usage in dispute is not really in existence. The Full Bench decision in Lala Jot Lal v. Durani Koor (B. L. R. Sup. Vol., 67), and the Full Bench case cited at page 669 of Tagore Law Lectures of 1880 by Baboo Raj Koomar Surbhadhikari, are also instances of this kind. The questions for decision in these cases were, whether the step-mother and the step-grandmother were heirs according to the Mitakshara law. It was decided that they do not come within the purview of the texts relating to the succession of the mother and the grandmother. It was not contended that, although they did not come within those texts, still they were entitled to inherit as sapindas.

In Mussamut Soodeso v. Bisheshshur Singh (S. D. A., N.-W. P., 1864 Vol. II, 375) it was decided that a sister-in-law (deceased brother's widow) is not in the line of heirs according to the Mitakshara law. See also Thakooranee Deo Koonwur v. Thakooranee Gumbheer Koonwur (S. D. A., N.-W. P., 1864, Vol. II, 284). In Mussamut Murachee Koor v. Mussamut Ootma Koor (S. D. A., N.-W. P., 1864, Vol. I, 171), it was decided that a daughter is entitled to succeed in preference to a son's widow, who is only entitled to maintenance. In Ditraj Koonwur v. Sooltan Koonwur (S. D. A., N.-W. P., 1862, Vol. I, 240), it was held that a son's widow is not an heir according [326] to the Mitakshara law. The last case upon the point is the decision of the Allahabad Court in Gauri Sahai v. Rukko (I. L. R., 3 All., 45). This case clearly lays down that, of the females, none but those that are specified by name are entitled to succeed. Against this consensus of opinion as expressed in these cases there is a solitary decision of the Court of the N.-W. P., which may be considered to lend some support to the contention of the appellant. It is the case of Mussamut Bhuganee Daice v. Gopaljee (S. D. A., N.-W. P., 1862, Vol. I, 306). The plaintiff in that case was the widow of the first cousin of the deceased proprietor, and the defendant was his great grandfather's great grandson. The plaintiff was joint in food with the deceased, while the defendant was separate from him. The case was decided in favour of the plaintiff on the ground of the right of survivorship. The Pundit upon whose opinion it was decided, did not put the right of the plaintiff upon the ground of sapinda relationship. This case has no relevancy to the question now under consideration, because it did not uphold the plaintiff's right on the ground of sapinda relationship. On the other hand, the circumstance that the Pundit consulted did not base his opinion upon the ground of sapinda relation ship, affords some grounds for the conclusion that the usage in question does not exist in these districts.

Therefore, applying the same test which was applied by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Lalubhai Bapubhai v. Cassibai (I.L.R., 5 Bom., 110), viz., the test of usage, it seems to me that the contention of the appellant is not sustainable. For all these reasons I am of opinion that, according to the Mitakshara law and usage obtaining in the district from which this case comes, a daughter-in-law is not in the line of heirs at all.

The next contention is that the plaintiff in this case is entitled to succeed by right of survivorship. It has been said that she, while her father-in-law, Gocul Chand, was alive, was living with him as a member of a joint Hindu family, and therefore on his death she is entitled to the property left by him. It seems to me that this contention is wholly untenable. The foundation of the right of survivorship is joint ownership. In this case it cannot for [327] a moment be contended that the plaintiff had any sort of ownership in the property in dispute during the lifetime of her father-in-law, Gocul Chand. This contention, therefore, in my opinion, fails.

Lastly, it has been urged that, as the plaintiff is entitled to her maintenance out of the property in dispute, and that as the defendants have no sort of right to it, she is entitled to have her right and possession confirmed as against them. But this argument proceeds upon the assumption that the defendants have no sort of right to the property in dispute. It seems to me that upon the facts admitted in this case, the defendants, as father's bandhus of Gocul Chand, are entitled to inherit the property left by him. According to the plaintiff, Muni Lal, the father of Gocul Chand, was the sister's son of Dukho, to whom the property in dispute was given by her brothers Lal Bahadur and Ram Bahadur. According to the defendants, Muni Lal was Dukho's own son. Whether the one or the other statement be correct, it is clear that Muni Lal was the sister's son of Lal Bahadur and Ram Bahadur. The defendants are the grandsons of either Ram Bahadur or of Lal Bahadur, therefore Muni Lal and the defendants are sapindas to each other. The defendants consequently being the father's bandhus of Gocul Chand in the absence of nearer heirs are entitled to the property left by Gocul Chand as his heirs. See Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 119). The plaintiff is certainly under the Mitakshara law entitled to maintenance out of the property left by Gocul Chand, but she has no title to the property as the heiress-at-law of her father-in-law.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Maclean, J., after referring to the facts and evidence, came to the conclusion that if the possession continued with the plaintiff's father-in-law and his father, the proprietary title was still in the defendants and their ancestors, and continued as follows :—

I would therefore reject the plaintiff's claim for a declaration of her title as proprietor. Neither do I think that she is entitled to a decree confirming her possession, inasmuch as (apart from the question as to the position of a daughter-in-law whose husband has predeceased his father) she has failed to prove her title.

[328] Upon the question so elaborately discussed, and depending on considerations of Hindu law, I shall say but little. In the view of the plaintiff's case which I have taken, the decision of the question is not necessary.

The claim of the plaintiff as daughter-in-law is founded upon the 5th section of the second chapter of Part II of the Mitakshara: "If there be not even brother's sons, gentiles (gotraja) share the estate" and again V. 3: "on failure of the paternal grandmother the kinsmen sprung from the same family with deceased and connected by funeral oblations (samana gotraja sapinda) namely, the grandfather and the rest inherit the estate."

It is perhaps unnecessary to say that the wife must be recognised as samana gotraja sapinda. Sapinda because she and her husband are the generators of one body; sagotraja or samana gotraja because on her marriage she enters the gotra of her husband. The next step for consideration is, whether she inherits under the rule "to the nearest kinsman (sapinda) (male or female) the inheritance next belongs," Manu IX, 187.

We have express authority for the heritable right of the widow, daughter, mother, grandmother, &c. (Mitakshara, Chapter II). The commentaries of Kiseswara and Balambhatta make no distinction between males and females, both being included in gotraja. The latter, Balambhatta, assigns a specific place to the widow of a predeceased son, next after the paternal grandmother. Nandu Pandita also (Vaijyanti) prefers the sons' widow to the daughter; but at present we are not called upon to assign a place to the daughter-in-law, having merely to decide whether she is entitled to take property which her husband would have taken in preference to the male representatives of a remote branch (cognates). The author of the Viramitrodaya, referring to a text of Baudhayana, deduces from it that females as a class are not entitled to heritage. He accepts, however, the right of those expressly mentioned, but he expressly mentions the daughter-in-law as entitled to food and raiment only. At the same time he points out that the paternal grandmother is not expressly mentioned any more than the wives of other gotraja sapindas by Jogeswara.

Upon such consideration, therefore, as I am able to give to the subject, it appears to me that we have three positions established:—

[329] (1) That while the grandmother and great-grandmother, etc., only are expressly mentioned, the wives of other sapindas would also succeed.

(2) That the Mitakshara does not exhaustively enumerate the sapindas.

(3) That the son's widow is a gotraja sapinda.

But while effect is given to these propositions in the Bombay Presidency, it seems to be conclusively understood that up to the present day females, not expressly mentioned, have never been recognised (perhaps it may be said have seldom claimed to be recognized) as entitled to succeed in Benares and the western portion of the Lower Provinces. A case was recently before us in reference to other matters in which an examination of the facts will show that the right of a daughter-in-law to succeed was raised but was rejected. The pundit's Vyavastha was opposed to the claim of the daughter-in-law as against that of the daughter's son, on consideration of Mitakshara law (A. O. D. 187-80). In Gauri Sahai v. Rukko (I. L. R., 3 All., 45) it is expressly noted that none but females expressly named can inherit, and the widow of a paternal uncle (a gotraja sapinda) is declared not to be an heir.

In Ranee Pudmavati v. Baboo Doolar Sing (4 Moore's I. A., 259) the widow of a deceased brother was defeated by gotraja sapindas of her husband and his brother (great-grandfather's grandsons). Perhaps this case is not clear authority, except as showing that the widow of a brother who predeceased was not recognized in preference to other sapindas.

No case has been cited as directly supporting the plaintiff's claim, and under these circumstances, though decidedly inclined to view it with favour,

I think that her success "would have such an effect in disturbing existing titles that it is safer not to run counter to that which appears to be the current of authority." The more so as my learned colleague comes to a conclusion which is opposed to the inclination I have in the plaintiff's favour. I concur in the order that the appeal should stand dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The 31st July, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER, OFFG. CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE WHITE
AND MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.

Prasidha Narayan Koer.....Plaintiff

Man Koch.....Defendant.*

Occupancy, Right of, in Assam—Act X of 1859—Ejectment, Suit for.

Per MITTER and WHITE, JJ. (MACPHERSON, J., dissenting).—Act X of 1859 does not apply to lands situated in the Assam Valley district.

In a suit brought to eject a tenant of certain land situated in Assam on the ground that he was a trespasser, where it was shewn that he had held the land direct from the Government for a considerable time, and that the land had been made over during his tenancy to the plaintiff in exchange for certain other lands made over to the Government, and where the tenant claimed to have acquired a right of occupancy under Act X of 1879, and not to be liable to ejectment in the manner sought for.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 825 of 1880, against the decree of W. E. Ward, Esq., Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, dated the 4th February 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Guru Persid Das, Extra Assistant Commissioner, vested with the powers of a Munsif of Mungaldai, dated the 25th June 1879.

Held, per MITTER and WHITE, JJ., that as that Act did not apply to lands situated in Assam, no such right could be claimed, and the suit being properly framed, the plaintiff was entitled to the relief he asked for.

IN this suit the plaintiff sought to eject the defendant from certain land situated in mouzahs Durgagon and Barowtola, in the sub-division of Mungaldai, Darrang, in the province of Assam. The land in question was formerly Government kheraj land, but at the time of the survey operations in 1283 (1876), it was transferred to the plaintiff by the Government in exchange for an equal quantity of land belonging to his estate. The appeal originally came on for hearing before a Division Bench composed of WHITE and MACPHERSON, JJ., and the judgment of that Bench, which sufficiently states the facts, was as follows :—

White, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decree of the Judge of Assam, affirming a decree of the Extra Assistant Commissioner of Mungaldai dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

The suit is to eject the defendant from 5*b*, 4*c*, 17½*d*, of rupit land, occupied by him in mouzah Mungaldai. The defendant [331] originally held the land under Government, executing annual pottahs for the same at varying rents, and sometimes holding less, and sometimes a larger quantity of land than the land in suit. In 1283 (1876) an exchange of lands took place between the Government and the plaintiff, on which occasion the land in suit was by Government made over to the plaintiff. The defendant's last annual Government pottah expired in 1875. The suit was brought in 1879, and the defendant has paid no rent in the interval.

The plaintiff alleges in his plaint that, after the exchange was effected, he repeatedly asked the defendant to make some settlement with him or quit the land, and that in 1284 (1877) the defendant refused to come to a settlement.

The defendant, on the other hand, alleges in his written statement that he had from a long time before the British Government came to the country been in possession of the land in dispute from generation to generation; that he had got a pottah from Government and a right of occupancy in the land; and that he has a right to hold the land in dispute under the plaintiff in the same way that he held it under Government.

The pleadings of both the parties leave it vague as to the rate of rent or description of rent, about which the parties are disputing; but it appears from the judgment that the defendant is willing to accept the plaintiff as his landlord, provided he exacts no higher rent than he (the defendant) paid to Government, before the exchange was made. The plaintiff insists that the defendant must come to a new settlement with him, which means submit to an increased rent or to some new description of rent, or on the other hand must quit possession. The plaintiff has applied to him to take one or the other course, but he will do neither.

The first Court has dismissed the suit because, in its opinion, having regard to the annual pottahs which the defendant used to receive from Government, and to the Assam settlement rules, the defendant stands as regards the liability to ejectment, at least in as high a position as, and in some respects in a better position than, a Bengal ryot having a right of occupancy.

The lower Appellate Court draws a distinction between a ryot who has held under an annual pottah from Government, and one [332] who has held under a ten years pottah, and puts a totally different construction upon the annual pottah and the Government rules, and arrives at a totally different conclusion as to the rights enjoyed by the defendant, but agrees in dismissing the suit on a not very intelligible ground, having regard to the above conclusions. He says "the Government may," in the case of a tenant holding under an annual pottah, as the defendant did, "rackrent up to any limit it pleases, and in this way if it was so minded would compel the cultivator to relinquish his land. As is well known Government doubled the rates all round ten years ago, and it may double them again to-morrow."

We had an abstract prepared of the annual pottahs which had been granted by Government to the defendant and his predecessors prior to the exchange, and it fully bears out this statement of the Judge.

The Judge proceeds to say that "though the annual tenant in Assam has no legal property in the lands held by him, there is no doubt that for a long series of years he has been practically given to understand that it will recognize his right to have his pottah renewed every year, so long as he consents to pay the Government revenue demanded of him." This demand, as is evident from the previous passage, may be an increased demand, or even an exorbitant one according to the Judge. What would be the remedy if the defendant refused to pay the increased demand? Or if he refused to come to a new settlement at the increased rent? I can see no other than an action of ejectment. His annual pottah having expired, he is holding on without a pottah; and although he is entitled to have another annual pottah offered to him at the expiration of the former pottah, yet if the rent in the new pottah may be an increased one, his right of re-settlement amounts to nothing more than a right to have the renewed pottah offered to him in the first instance, and if he won't accept the renewed pottah because the rent is increased, he must make way for some person who will agree to pay the increased rent, and if he will not quit, the Government must sue to eject him.

The District Judge, however, agrees with the First Munsif in dismissing the suit on the ground that the plaintiff is not entitled to [333] treat defendant as a trespasser, and this conclusion he came to in consequence of some hazy agreement which is to be collected from the evidence of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, and which the Judge himself states was unfortunately not put into writing. This agreement is in the early part of the judgment stated in these words: "The plaintiff was given clearly to understand that the exchange would not be permitted unless he respected the rights of the Government tenants in the lands made over to him." Now this is merely a statement of the position in which the plaintiff would after the exchange stand to the tenants of Government according to law. The exchange would not affect their rights in any way. They would acquire no fresh rights by the exchange, but what rights they had before the exchange they would retain.

Towards the end of the judgment this supposed agreement assumes a rather different shape. It is stated thus: "The plaintiff agreed to respect that guarantee by receiving the same rent from defendant as the defendant would have been called upon to pay Government had no exchange been effected." This guarantee in a few lines above is described as "an implied guarantee from Government that their lands shall be re-settled with them every year subject to the condition of paying the Government revenue demanded. This sets the whole thing at large again, for Government may, as the Judge has found, increase the rent, and accordingly their demand, as it likes.

I can make nothing of this hazy agreement. It appears to me not to affect the question at all. The effect of the exchange was to put the plaintiff in the place of Government having the same rights as Government possessed, neither more nor less.

I see no reason to differ from the construction put by the Judge upon the form of the annual pottah and upon the settlement, and as the defendant will not take out an annual pottah at an annual rent, or at such a rent as the plaintiff may fix, and will not adopt the alternative of quitting possession as he has been requested to do, I think the present suit will lie, and I would reverse the decree of both Courts, and decree that the plaintiff recover from the defendant possession of the land in dispute.

It is argued by the Government Pleader, who appeared for the defendant, that the latter had a right of occupancy under Act [334] X of 1859. If this be so, I agree with the Government Pleader that the plaintiff could not succeed in this suit, but would be confined to bringing a suit for enhancement. Neither of the judgments of the Court below proceeded upon this point; but the Government Pleader contended that he is entitled to support the judgment appealed from, on any ground on which it can be supported. This appears to be so, and we have heard some argument on the question whether Act X of 1859 is in force in Assam. That Act, although in the title (which however is no part of the Act) mention is made of a limited part of India, has no clause in the body of the Act confining its operation. Prima facie, therefore, it applies over the whole of India—I mean that part of it for which the Legislature is empowered to legislate; but this extended operation may be confined, if it can be gathered from the context that its operation is intended to be limited, or if the circumstances of the locality and the incidents of the tenures prevailing there are so peculiar that a comparison of them with the clauses of the Act shows that it could not be intended to extend to such locality. As regards the circumstances and incidents of the occupiers of the land in Assam, we have not sufficient materials before us to enable us to form an opinion.

But upon a consideration of the various clauses of the Act, I incline to think that at the time when the Act was framed, its operation was confined to the Regulation Provinces of the Bengal Presidency of which Assam was not one. Another question then arises as to whether it has, since its date, been legally extended to Assam. I have been referred to a notification on the subject, but am not satisfied that the Act has been so extended, or if as a matter of fact it has been so, that it was legally extended.

We have been referred to a recent case decided by a Division Bench, in which it appears to have been the opinion of the two learned Judges composing that Bench that the Act was in force in Assam, but that decision was an ex parte one and the point was not argued (Konaram Guonburah v. Dhatoram Thakoor (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 196)). It also appears from an earlier case that [335] DWARKANATH MITTER, J., was of opinion that the Act had been extended to Assam (Jullow Surma Patwaree v. Madhub Ram Atoi Boorha Bhukul (16 W. R. 202)), but a long search has failed to unearth a notification (if any one exists) which supports that learned Judge's statements. The question, no doubt, is of considerable difficulty, and I should prefer not to decide it, but if I must decide it, then my decision is that the Act is not in force. My brother MACPHERSON is inclined to think that the Act is in force.

Under these circumstances this question will have to be re-argued before a third Judge or before another Bench. Subject to the result of that re-argument, and also of the determination of the further question whether, supposing Act X of 1859 is in force, the defendant has acquired a right of occupancy under that Act, my brother MACPHERSON agrees with me that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court should be reversed, and the plaintiff's suit decreed. Costs of this hearing reserved.

The appeal was accordingly subsequently re-argued before MITTER, J. (Offg. C. J.)

Mr. Piffard and Baboo Bykuntnath Dass for the Appellant.

The Senior Government Pleader (Baboo Annoda Persad Banerjee) for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was as follows :—

Mitter, J.—I am of opinion that in the Assam Valley Districts, Act X of 1859 is not in force. That Act was passed by the Legislative Council of India which was constituted by the 16 and 17 Vic., Cap., 95. There is no clause in the body of the Act to show that its operation was limited only to a particular portion of British India. Prima facie, therefore, it applies to the whole of British India, unless it can be shown from the context that its operation was intended by the legislature to be limited to any particular portion of British India. But from the provisions of the Act itself it is quite clear that it does not apply to the whole of British India. For instance, the systems of land tenures and the settlements of Government revenue prevailing in the Presidencies of Bombay and Madras would make the provisions of this Act [336] wholly inapplicable to those Presidencies. We have, therefore, to determine to what portion of British India the Act in question was intended by the Legislature to apply.

The preamble of the Act says :—

“Whereas it is expedient to re-enact with certain modifications the provisions of the existing law relative to the rights of ryots, with respect to the delivery of pottahs and the occupancy of land to the prevention of illegal exaction and extortion in connection with demands of rent and to other questions connected with the same ; to extend the jurisdiction of Collectors and prescribe rules for the trial of such questions, as well as of suits for the recovery of the arrears of rent and of suits arising out of the distraint of the property for such arrears ; and to amend the law relating to distraint, it is enacted as follows.” Therefore, it is clear that the object of the Act was three-fold—first, to re-enact, with certain modifications, the existing laws regulating the rights of landlord and tenant regarding certain specified subjects ; secondly, to extend the jurisdiction of Collectors ; and, thirdly, to prescribe a law of procedure for the trial of the questions relating to those rights as well as for the trial of rent suits. Therefore, the provisions made in the Act for the carrying out of the first object can only apply to those districts in which the laws, which were re-enacted with certain modifications, were in force. Now these laws are the Regulations on the subjects in question which were repealed by the Act under our consideration. These regulations are specified in the repealing section of the Act., viz., section 1.

Referring to those Regulations, it is quite clear that they were not in force in the Assam Valley Districts. These districts were conquered in the year 1826. After their conquest, the upper portion was granted to certain Chiefs who were to govern them in accordance with the conditions of certain treaties concluded with them : see Aitchison's Treaties, Vol. 1, page 126. The Government of the lower portion was assumed by the E. I. Company :—The administration of justice in these provinces was entrusted to certain officers appointed by the Governor-General in Council. They were never brought within what were called the Regulation districts of the Presidency of Fort William. The whole of Upper Assam, for certain reasons. [337] to which it is not necessary to refer here, was gradually brought under the British rule, and the same system of administration of justice was introduced there as was in force in Lower Assam. By a Government Resolution of 1834, it was directed that the Commissioner of Assam shall, from the 1st October next, be subject to the Courts of the Sudder Dewany and Nizamut Adawlut in all matters connected with the Civil and Criminal Administration, and to the Sudder Board of Revenue at the Presidency in revenue matters. The 4th paragraph of this Resolution contained the following direction: "The Assistants will continue to perform their duties at present entirely under the direction and control of the Commissioner." By the 5th paragraph it was directed that certain special rules, which had been sanctioned for the Sagur and Narbudda Districts, should be forwarded to Captain Jenkins, who was then the local head in charge of the administration of the District, to enable him to submit a draft of rules which he might consider best suited for the district of Assam. These rules were subsequently framed and sanctioned by the Governor-General in Council, and I shall refer to them hereafter.

It is clear from Regulation I of 1829, by which the office of Commissioner of Revenue was created, that it was not the intention of Government to extend to Assam the system of administration of justice prevailing in the Regulation Districts. It has been contended before me that by the Regulation in question a Commissioner of Assam was appointed with powers similar to the Commissioners in the Regulation Districts constituted by it. This contention is not correct, because the Commissioners of Revenue and Circuit, constituted by the Regulation in question, and vested with the powers recited in s. 4, were the Commissioners enumerated in s. 2. Assam is not one of the districts recited in this section. Section 9 says, that the Commissioners of Arracan and Assam shall possess and exercise within the districts of Bengal, which are by this Regulation attached to their respective divisions, the same powers as belonged to the Commissioners of Cuttuck, modified as above. By this provision the Commissioners of Arracan and Assam, who were not appointed under the provisions of Regulation I of 1829, and [338] whose powers were not defined by s. 4 of the Regulation, were declared to be ex officio Commissioners in certain Regulation Districts, viz., Chittagong, Noakhally, Sherepore and Sylhet, exercising the power in these districts defined by s. 4. But so far as Arracan and Assam were concerned, they were not appointed under the provisions of Regulation I of 1829, and their powers were not defined by s. 4. This Regulation, therefore, instead of showing that Assam was brought in any respects within the Regulation Districts, shows just the contrary.

The next Act passed by the Governor-General in Council relating to Assam was Act II of 1835. This Act only embodied the provisions of the Government resolution already referred to. It declared "that the functionaries who are or may be appointed in the provinces of Assam * * * * * be henceforth placed under the control and superintendence in civil cases of the Court of the Sudder Dewany Adawlut, in criminal cases of the Court of the Nizamut Adawlut."

Then rules for the administration of Civil and Criminal justice in Assam were from time to time framed. The last set of rules on this subject were prepared and sanctioned in the year 1847. They form a complete Code providing for the trial of all kinds of suits. By the 9th rule, the assistant in charge of a district was empowered to try, in his capacity of Collector, suits for arrears of rent or undue exactions of rent. These rules and not any of the regulations mentioned in the repealing section of Act X of 1859, i.e., s. 1, were in force in Assam in 1859. It is therefore clear that the provisions of Act X of 1859, which were intended to replace the Regulations repealed by s. 1, were intended to apply only to the districts in which those Regulations were in force. Those provisions of Act X of 1859 which deal with the subject of relative rights of landlords and tenants cannot, therefore, apply to the Assam Valley Districts. These reasons are sufficient to warrant the conclusion that s. 6 of Act X of 1859 at least is not applicable to the districts in question.

It seems to me further that the provisions of Act X of 1859, which were intended to carry out the second and the third [339] objects mentioned in its preamble, also do not extend to the Assam Districts.

The second object was to extend the jurisdiction of Collectors. I have shown above that in 1859 there were no such officers as "Collectors" in existence in Assam. The assistants in charge of districts only exercised the powers of Collectors. If by the use of the word "Collectors" in Act X of 1859 the Legislature had intended to include these officers, we should have found in the Act an interpretation clause to that effect.

Then as regards the last object, it appears to me from s. 67 of Act of 1859, that the provisions relating to it were not intended to apply to Assam. Act X of 1859 does not contain any provision relating to the examination of witnesses, for procuring their attendance, etc. The section referred to above provided that the provisions of Regulations and Acts and all other rules for the time being in force relating to the subjects mentioned above in cases before the Civil Court in the Presidency of Bengal, shall, with a certain exception, apply to suits under Act X of 1859. The section does not refer to the Assam Rules on the subject. It is therefore clear to me that the procedure laid down in Act X of 1859 for the trials of suits under that Act, was not intended to apply to similar suits in Assam.

Furthermore, if it had been the intention to extend Act X of 1859 to Assam, we should have found in the repealing section a provision for the repeal of the Assam rules in force in 1859, relating to the trial of suits similar to those which were declared exclusively cognizable by the Collectors of land revenue under s. 23 of the Act. Then, again, by Act XIV of 1863, Act X of 1859 was amended so far as it related to the territories under the Government of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces. The 19th section of this Act provides that it shall be lawful * * * for the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces to extend Act X of 1859 to any territories under his government in which the said Act was not then in force. This section does not give to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal any such power.

If Act X of 1859, when it was passed, was intended to extend to the whole of the territories under the Lieutenant-Governor [340] of the North-Western Provinces and Bengal, this provision would not have been necessary. It is clear to me, therefore, that it was intended when it was passed to apply only to what are called Regulation Districts.

Then the next question is, whether this Act has been, since 1859, extended to Assam. The only notification that I have been able to trace on this subject is one of the Bengal Government dated 28th May 1864. It is published in the Calcutta Gazette of that year, page 1133. It says: "For carrying out the provisions of Acts VIII and X of 1859, the officers employed in the Civil Administration of Assam and Chota-Nagpore Division are hereby vested with the following powers." Then certain officers are vested with the powers of Zillah Judge, of a Collector and of a Deputy Collector. This notification does not purport to extend the provisions of Act X of 1859 to Assam. It assumes that that Act is in force there. If it be assumed even that it was intended to extend the Act to Assam, then the notification cannot be acted upon, because it was not in the power of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to extend the Act by a simple notification. There is no provision to that effect in Act X of 1859, and in the subsequent Act of 1863, referred to above, no such power was given to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

For these reasons I am of opinion that Act X of 1859 is not in force in the Assam Valley Districts. As upon the other questions raised in this appeal, the learned Judges who heard this case first are agreed that if Act X of 1859 is not in force in the Assam Valley Districts, the judgment of lower Appellate Court should be reversed, and the plaintiff's suit decreed, the result is that a decree should be made in this Appeal in accordance with that opinion. Accordingly the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is reversed, and the plaintiff's suit is decreed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Estate of Henry Tombs, deceased.....Defendant.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh and from the Court of the Commissioner of the Lucknow Division.]

Liability of public servant for injury done by his act, illegal though bonâ fide—Act XVIII of 1850—Protection of Judicial Officers—Cantonments Act (XXII of 1864), s. 11—Lunatic Asylums Act (XXXVI of 1858), s. 4.

Act XVIII of 1850 is for the protection of Judicial Officers, acting judicially, and of officers acting under their orders.

An Officer Commanding in Cantonments, acting bonâ fide in the discharge of his public duty, and under the belief that a person was dangerous by reason of insanity, caused him to be arrested, in order that he might be examined by medical officers, and caused him to be detained in his house for that purpose, he not being a dangerous lunatic. The medical officers, while reporting him sane, recommended that he should be placed under the observation of the Civil Surgeon of the station, for which purpose the same officer caused his further detention. The Commanding Officer, who under Act XXII of 1864, s. 11, had control and direction of the police in the Cantonment, did not proceed, or intend to proceed, under s. 4 of Act XXXVI of 1858.

Held, that, although his belief might have justified the Commanding Officer, if he had proceeded under the provisions last mentioned, yet he not having done so, and not having any legal authority for what he had done, was not protected from liability in respect of the above acts.

APPEAL, in formâ pauperis and by special leave, from a decree of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh (17th November 1874), which dismissed the plaintiff's suit, reversing on appeal a decree of the Commissioner of the Lucknow division (2nd July 1874). The latter decree in part maintained and in part altered, a decree of the Civil Judge of Lucknow (12th May 1874), reducing the damages thereby awarded to the plaintiff.

[342] Appeal, also, against the Commissioner's decree in respect of such reduction of damages.

The principal question was whether protection was given to the Officer Commanding in a Cantonment, from liability in respect of acts done by him in the discharge of his duty, and bond fide, but not in due course of law, in restraint of the liberty of the plaintiff, appellant.

The plaintiff, who shortly before bringing this suit in February 1873, was employed as an Accountant in the Department of Public Works at Lucknow, sued General Tombs, Commanding the Lucknow Division, and therefore Commanding in the Lucknow Cantonments, for Rs. 25,000 for damages for wrongfully causing him to be confined on the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd November 1872 in his house at Lucknow. For the defence (which the Government of India undertook under ss. 69, 70 † and 71 of Act VIII of 1859) the defendant alleged in his written statement that he had acted bond fide for the public safety, believing the plaintiff to be dangerous by reason of insanity, actual or impending.

The defendant dying shortly after, his estate was represented by the Administrator-General of Bengal, who was made defendant on the record. The facts are stated in their Lordship's judgment.

The issues settled on the 24th February 1874 in the Court of the Civil Judge of Lucknow, Mr. F. Lincoln, were the following :—

- (1) Was there a false imprisonment? (2) If so, can the defendant justify it?
- (3) Was the defendant, as the Officer Commanding in Cantonments, competent to take up the duties of the police under s. 11 of Act XXII of 1864? ‡
- (4) Was the defendant authorized under Act XXXVI of 1858 § or otherwise, to make over the plaintiff to the Cantonment Magistrate?

[343] The rest of the issues related to the treatment of the plaintiff and to the damages.

The Civil Judge found that the confinement had taken place, and that no formal procedure had been observed; that the opinion of two medical officers, deputed by General Tombs to examine the plaintiff, was certified by them to the following effect :—

"The undersigned, after having carefully examined Mr. Sinclair, do not consider that they are justified in giving a decided opinion on the case until it

If Government undertake defence, Government Pleader to appear and move that a note of his appearance be entered in the Register.

* [Sec. 70 :—If the Government shall undertake the defence of the suit, the Government Pleader shall be furnished with authority to appear and answer to the plaint; and, upon motion made by him, the Court shall order a note to that effect to be entered in the Register.]

† Act XXII of 1864 (Cantonments) s. 11 enacts that "the administration of the Police, within the limits of any Cantonment in which there shall be a Cantonment Magistrate, shall be vested in the District Superintendent, subject to the general control and direction of the Commanding Officers of such Cantonments."

‡ Act XXXVI of 1858 (Lunatic Asylums), s. 4 enacts that "it shall be the duty of every Darogah or District Police Officer to apprehend and send to the Magistrate all persons found wandering at large within his district who are deemed to be lunatics, and all persons believed to be dangerous by reason of lunacy." The Magistrate is to examine, with the assistance of a medical officer, any person so apprehended, and may issue a certificate and order his reception in a lunatic asylum.

has been longer under their observation. They consider it necessary to recommend that Mr. Sinclair be kept under European guard until his case is decided on." "(Sd.) A. Guthrie, Surgeon, 8th R. A. H. Scott, M. D., Staff-Assistant Surgeon." He also found that the plaintiff was sent under a guard to the Cantonment Magistrate's Court.

In the opinion of the Judge neither of the acts above mentioned, nor any other law, gave authority for these proceedings. It was, he thought, however, clear that the defendant had not acted under any personal feeling against the plaintiff, nor had the latter suffered any violence. The damages were assessed at Rs. 3,000.

The Commissioner of the Lucknow Division, on appeal, upheld the decision, reducing the damages to Rs. 300, and disallowing costs on Rs. 2,700, the difference between the sums decreed in the Original and Appellate Courts.

The Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, on appeal, reversed the decrees of the lower Courts. His opinion was, that if by law a duty was imposed upon a person, the law protected him in the bond fide performance of it. On General Tombs, as the Officer Commanding in Cantonments, a duty had been imposed to act upon his belief that the plaintiff was dangerous by reason of insanity. Upon that belief he acted bond fide. The Judicial Commissioner was, therefore, of opinion that the defendant was not liable for a wrong that had been unintentionally done.

[344] On this appeal the appellant appeared in person.

Mr. R. V. Doyne and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe for the Respondent.

The material part of the appellant's argument was, that the restraint to which he had been subjected was not warranted by law. General Tombs, not having acted in a judicial capacity, was not protected by Act XVIII of 1850, and no law protected an executive officer under such circumstances. He also urged that the continuing to confine him was not a bond fide act.

For the respondent it was argued that the Indian Courts having found bond fides on the part of General Tombs, that question was no longer open, and that officer was brought either within the protection of the rule declared by this Committee in the case of Spooner v. Juddow (4 Moore's I. A., 353), or within the protection of Act XVIII of 1850. General Tombs, as the Officer Commanding in the Cantonment, had the general control and direction of the police administration within it, under Act XXII of 1864, s. 11, referring to Act V of 1861. He had to exercise a discretion upon the question, whether it was his duty to apprehend Mr. Sinclair, when the conduct exhibited by the latter, on the 1st November 1872, was brought to his notice. That section required the apprehension by the police of any person believed to be dangerous by reason of lunacy; and General Tombs, as the proper officer, had been put in motion upon grounds that were reasonable, and he had acted bond fide in the course of his public duty. This was enough to exonerate him. It was all that was necessary for his protection. Whether this exoneration could take place under Act XVIII of 1850—the act of discretion required on the part of the Police officer under Act XXXVI of 1858, s. 4 being, it was argued, of such a character that it might be called “quasi-judicial”—was next discussed; and it was contended that, if the operation of Act XVIII of 1850 should be held to be restricted to judicial officers, and to those who acted under their orders, still the defendant was protected. He was within the protection of the rule that “if parties bond fide, and not absurdly, believe that they are acting according to law, they [345] are entitled to the special protection which the legislature intended for them, although they have done an illegal act." This was declared in the judgment in Spooner v. Juddow (4 Moore's I. A., 353), where it was said that there could be "no rule more firmly established." General Tombs had taken all proper steps to enable him to form a just belief, and he had acted upon it bond fide, thus bringing himself within the protection cast over subsequent error. Reference was then made to the passing of Act XVIII of 1850, "for the greater protection of Magistrates and others acting judicially," after the decision in Calder v. Halket (3 Moore's P. C., 28; s.c., 2 Moore's I. A., 293); and it was argued that when the law had imposed upon a public servant a duty requiring the exercise of a discretion, in the bond fide exercise whereof he erred, acting in an illegal manner and causing damage to another, such officer could not be held responsible in a suit by the person injured.

To secure for him this protection it was not necessary that the public servant should be acting as a Judge, sedente curia. In support of this proposition reference was made to the judgment in Ferguson v. The Earl of Kinnoul (9 Cl. and Fin., 251), where the liability of the body which in that case had violated the law, to the injury of the complainant, was expressly placed upon their not having had vested in them any discretion whatever to refrain from performing the ministerial duty, imposed upon them by law, for the omission whereof they were held liable in a suit. It was further argued that when public duties required the exercise of judgment, as to whether a certain course should be adopted by an executive officer, the forming such a judgment was for this purpose "acting judicially" within the scope of Act XVIII of 1850, which referred to magistrates, who, as a class, had many executive functions bordering on their judicial powers. Reference was made to Hughes v. Buckland (15 M. and W., 346); Lucas v. Nockels (4 Bing., 729; 10 Bing., 157); Onsley v. Plowden (1 Boulnois, 145). It was further contended that, though the confinement might [346] have been with a view to the obtaining a medical opinion as to Mr. Sinclair's state of mind, and not with a view to sending him to the magistrate according to the direction in s. 4, yet the intention of General Tombs did not deprive him of any protection to which he would otherwise have been entitled; for no practical difference in the custody of the plaintiff resulted. This was in consequence of the absence, shown at the hearing of the suit, of the magistrate of the district, to whom the plaintiff could not, even if General Tombs had purposed to send him, have been sent.

Lastly, it was argued that no doctrine of agency could link the conduct of General Tombs with the acts and omissions of the Brigade Major who had delayed the transmission of the medical officer's report to the former, and also treated the summons as a warrant. Reference was made to Addison on Torts, 665 (fifth edn.) and to Nicholson v. Mounsey (15 East., 384).

The Appellant was heard in reply.

On a subsequent day (23rd June), their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir B. Peacock.—This is an appeal brought in forma pauperis by the appellant Mr. Edward D. Sinclair, by special leave of Her Majesty in Council, from a judgment of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated the 19th November 1874, in a suit brought by the appellant in the Court of the Civil Judge of Lucknow against the late Major-General Sir Henry Tombs, and also from a judgment of the Commissioner of Lucknow in the same suit.

The suit was commenced as far back as the year 1873, and was for the recovery of damages laid at Rs. 25,000, alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the defendant's having put him under an unlawful arrest of European soldiers of Her Majesty's Royal Artillery, and having wrongfully confined him in his own premises for three successive days, viz., from the 1st to the 3rd of November 1872, and having caused violence to be used against his person and property. The plaintiff also complained that the defendant, subsequently to the first step, viz., on Sunday, the 3rd November 1872, forcibly delivered the plaintiff into the custody of the late Lieutenant Gubbins, the then Cantonment Magistrate.

[347] The defendant, who was the officer in command of the Military Cantonments in Lucknow, put in a written statement, and thereby alleged that at about 8 A.M. on the 1st November 1872 he was riding towards his house in the cantonments, when he noticed a flag flying from the thatched roof of a house in which plaintiff resided, and saw plaintiff walking about in a very strange and excited manner; that on being informed by Mrs. Gully (wife of Captain Gully, of the Royal Artillery), who resided in the house opposite that of the plaintiff, that she was alarmed at the conduct of the plaintiff, and on being asked by Mrs. Gully for protection against the plaintiff (Captain Gully being absent from the house), defendant caused due inquiry to be made regarding the plaintiff, and, on information received by him, he directed two medical officers, Doctors Guthrie and Scott, to examine the plaintiff as to his soundness of mind; and that the medical officers, on examination of the plaintiff, considered it necessary to recommend that he should be kept under an European guard until they could form a decided opinion as to his sanity. He further stated that, in the absence of the Cantonment Magistrate from the station on the 1st and the 2nd November 1872, defendant, as officer commanding the Cantonments of Lucknow, and consequently in general control of the Police employed in the Military Cantonments (see Act XXII of 1864, s. 11), considered that he was bound and justified, in the interests of public safety, to act on the recommendation of the two medical officers aforesaid, and believing the plaintiff to be dangerous, by reason of lunacy, actual or impending, placed over plaintiff a guard of unarmed European soldiers, to prevent him doing harm to himself and others. That the substitution of unarmed European soldiers for native policemen was in accordance with the usual practice, in case of European lunatics, when European policemen are not available.

That on the return of Lieutenant Gubbins, the Cantonment Magistrate, to the station, on the 3rd November 1872, the plaintiff was made over in due course to the said Magistrate (s. 4, Act XXXVI of 1858), to be dealt with according to law, and that defendant was in no way concerned, nor could he be held [348] responsible for any proceedings that might have taken place in the Court of the Cantonment Magistrate, or subsequently.

That defendant acted throughout in perfect good faith, and in the interests of public safety, and that no violence was used by the defendant's order, or at his request.

That the amount of damages claimed by the plaintiff was excessive, with reference both to the plaintiff's late position in life, and the nature of the alleged wrong.

The case was tried in the first instance by the Civil Judge of Lucknow, who gave judgment for the plaintiff, and assessed the damages at Rs. 3,000.

From that decree the defendant appealed to the Commissioner of Lucknow, who upheld the decision, but reduced the damages to Rs. 300, and ordered the plaintiff to pay the defendant's costs on Rs. 2,700, the difference between the Rs. 300 and the sum awarded by the Civil Judge.

It appears that, on the morning of the 1st of November 1872, the defendant, who was then the Commanding Officer of the Cantonment at Lucknow, having reason to believe that the plaintiff was a dangerous lunatic, caused him to be confined on his own premises under a guard of unarmed European soldiers of Her Majesty's Royal Artillery, and caused him to be soon afterwards visited and inspected against his will by Drs. Guthrie and Scott, in order to ascertain the state of his mind. Those gentlemen on the same day reported that, having carefully examined the plaintiff, they did not consider themselves justified in giving a decided opinion on the case until it had been longer under their observation, and that they considered it necessary to recommend that the plaintiff should be kept under a European guard until the case should be decided on. The defendant in his written statement admits that he felt himself bound, in the absence of the Cantonment Magistrate, to act upon the recommendation of the medical officers, though he there states his case as if the recommendation had preceded the confinement, which was not the fact. However, the plaintiff was kept under confinement, from the 1st to the 3rd of the month, and the medical officers were ordered to visit him during his confinement, and did so, against his will.

[349] The defendant signed on the report a memorandum as follows:—

"Mr. Sinclair is a civilian, not belonging to the cantonments, and it is hard on the troops to have to furnish a guard over him. I hope, therefore, Drs. Guthrie and Scott will not be long in making up their minds.

"I believe Mr. Sinclair's late chum, 'Mr. Reid,' could prove the insanity at once.

"Dr. Cannon is quite willing to receive him, and it is my opinion then that he should be observed before being sent to Bhowanipoor and not in cantonments.

"Make the substance of this known to Dr. Guthrie.

"Mr. Sinclair must be subsisted by the Cantonment Magistrate."

It is clear that the District Magistrate, or the officer exercising the powers of the District Magistrate, would have had jurisdiction in the case if the plaintiff had been taken before him under Act XXXVI of 1858, s. 4. It is clear, however, from the memorandum signed by the defendant, that he intended to keep the plaintiff under the European guard until the medical officers could decide on the case, a detention which he was not authorized to inflict.

The report of the medical officers, with the memorandum thereon signed by the defendant, was delivered to Captain Beadon, the Brigade Major, and on the following day, Saturday, the 2nd November, Drs. Guthrie and Scott forwarded a further report to the effect that they considered the plaintiff perfectly sane, but that they recommended him to be placed under the observation of the Civil Surgeon. This recommendation, it must be observed, was quite in accordance with the opinion of the defendant expressed in the memorandum on the first report of which he directed that the substance should be made known to Dr. Guthrie. The certificate is, unfortunately, not forthcoming, and has not been accounted for, but it appears from the evidence of Major Beadon, the Brigade Major, that he forwarded it on the 2nd to the Officiating Deputy Commissioner, with a docket, which was in the following terms:—

"No. 4,071. Lucknow Brigade Office, 2nd November 1872.

"Forwards medical certificate regarding Mr. Sinclair's state of mind, and to request that very early steps may be taken to remove him to the charge of Civil Surgeon.

[350] Mr. Sinclair is at present under restraint and in charge of a military guard.

"(Sd.) R. BEADON, Capt.,

"Brigade Major."

"To the Officiating Deputy Commissioner, Lucknow."

B

Q 9297.

In answer to that request Major Beadon received from Deputy Commissioner the following communication:—

"No. 4928, 2nd November 1872.

To the Brigade Major, Lucknow.

"Sir,

"In reply to your memorandum No. 4071, dated 2nd instant, I have the honour to state that the medical officers who have examined Mr. Sinclair, having reported him to be perfectly sane, I should not be justified in placing him under restraint, or under observation, against his will, of the Civil Surgeon. The law relating to lunatics is clear on this point, that a Magistrate has no power to act against any person (under Act XXXVI of 1858), unless that person has been declared by medical authority lunatic.

"2. I therefore regret that I cannot comply with your request to move Mr. Sinclair to the charge of the Civil Surgeon.

"4. The Cantonment Magistrate will be directed to give attention to Mr. Sinclair's proceedings, and, should occasion require, to bind him over to keep the peace, and consign him to custody should sureties not be forthcoming.

"I have, &c.,

R. H. DEMONTMORENCY,

"Officiating Deputy Commissioner."

"No. 4929, 2nd November 1872."

"Copy of the foregoing forwarded to the Cantonment Magistrate, Lucknow, for compliance with reference to the last paragraph.

J. H. PHILLIPS, Head Assistant for

"R. H. DEMONTMORENCY,

"Officiating Deputy Commissioner."

Major Beadon states his belief that he received that communication on Sunday, the 3rd of November, about 11 o'clock, but that, as he never did business on Sunday, he did not show the letter to the defendant on that day, but did so on the following Monday.

The plaintiff was not released from confinement either on the second report of the medical officers received by Major Beadon on the Saturday, or on the receipt of the letter from the Deputy [351] Commissioner, at about eleven o'clock on the Sunday. On that day, however, a summons was issued by the Cantonment Magistrate directed to the plaintiff, requiring him to appear at one o'clock on that day, to enter into his personal recognizance in Rs. 500, and two sureties in Rs. 250 each, to keep the peace for six months. That summons was delivered to and treated as warrant by Major Beadon, who forwarded it on the same day to the officer commanding the Royal Artillery, with a letter, of which the following is a copy:—

"Memorandum, No. Urgent.

"From the Brigade Major to the Officer Commanding Royal Artillery, Lucknow, 3rd November 1872.

"Has the honour to request that Mr. Sinclair, at present under a guard of the R. A., may be taken at once before the Cantonment Magistrate, in accordance with the enclosed warrant, when further orders will be given to the N. C. officer in charge as to his disposal.

"RICHARD BEADON, Capt.,

"Brigade Major."

The plaintiff was accordingly detained in confinement in his own house until about two or three o'clock in the afternoon, when he was taken by the European guard against his will before the Cantonment Magistrate, not to be dealt with as a dangerous lunatic, but in consequence of the summons, and was committed for want of bail. Subsequently the Colonel commanding the European Artillery addressed the following letter to the defendant :—

Lucknow, 3rd November 1872.

" Has the honour to report, for the information of the Major-General commanding, that Mr. Sinclair has been removed to the Magistrate's office, as herein directed, but considerable delay has taken place in doing this, owing to Mr. Sinclair refusing to be removed, and refusing to put on his clothes.

" The bungalow in which Mr. Sinclair resided is not in charge of any servant, and there are several articles of his property there. A gunner has been left to the care of these things as also two ponies, supposed to be Mr. Sinclair's, till further orders are received as to their disposal.

NEIL MACKAY, Col.,

" Commanding R.A. Oude Division."

It was contended by the defendant in his written statement that he was not liable for the detention of the plaintiff after he [352] was made over to the Cantonment Magistrate, and the first two Courts very properly adopted that view. It does not appear, however, upon whose information and complaint the summons was obtained, and their Lordships cannot help remarking upon the great irregularity of the forcible execution of it as if it were a warrant. The defendant, however, is not liable for any force used in compelling the plaintiff to go before the Magistrate.

Their Lordships must also point out that Colonel J. Reid, the Commissioner, in his judgment, has referred to several matters which do not appear in evidence. Their Lordships have, however, entirely rejected those statements from their consideration, and have not been in any manner influenced by them.

Sir Henry Tombs having died, the Administrator-General of Bengal, as administrator of his estate, appealed to the Judicial Commissioner of Oude, who, on the 17th November 1874, held that an officer commanding in cantonments is vested within cantonments with all the police powers which a Magistrate of a district may exercise within his district, and that as there was a duty imposed on the defendant, as officer commanding in cantonments, to take action in consequence of his bona fide belief that plaintiff was dangerous by reason of lunacy, actual or impending, and that as the action taken was in perfect good faith, and in performance of the duty thus imposed, the defendant was not liable at law for damages in consequence of any wrong that might have been unintentionally done to plaintiff.

It may be taken as a fact, upon the evidence and upon the findings both of the Civil Judge and of the Commissioner, that the plaintiff was not, at the time when the acts complained of were committed, a dangerous lunatic. At the same time, there can be no doubt that the defendant acted bona fide in the discharge of a public duty, and under the belief that the plaintiff was dangerous by reason of lunacy.

That belief might have justified the defendant, who as commanding officer of the cantonment had the control and direction of the police, in directing proceedings to be taken by the police under the 4th section of Act XXXVI of 1858, but it is clear that the defendant did not proceed, or intend to proceed, under that Act.

[353] The Commissioner in his judgment, referring to Acts XXII of 1864 and XXXVI of 1858, says :—

"It is not alleged that the defendant proceeded under either of the Acts above cited, or, indeed, under any particular law, but it is contended that he felt bound to take immediate steps himself, in the absence of the Cantonment Magistrate and the Magistrate of the district, and that he acted as a sensible and considerate man, and that subsequent inquiry into the legality of his proceedings shows that they were justifiable by the law."

The Legislature has been careful in providing for the protection of lunatics, and it would be extremely dangerous if the doctrine enunciated by the Judicial Commissioner could be held to be law. He draws no distinction between a mistake in fact and a mistake in law, if bonâ fide. He says: "The main point raised in the appeal to this Court is one of principle, namely, when a public officer, who is bound by his duty to take some action, fully intending in good faith to do what is right, makes a mistake and causes wrong, is such officer liable to be mulcted in damages by a Civil Court?" And he held that he is not. Again, he says: "Holding, then, that there was a duty imposed on the defendant, as the officer commanding in cantonments to take action, in consequence of his bonâ fide belief that the plaintiff was dangerous by reason of lunacy, actual or impending, and that whatever action was taken was taken in perfect good faith, and in performance of the duty thus imposed upon him, I am of opinion that the defendant was not liable at law for damages in consequence of any wrong that may have been unintentionally done to the plaintiff. I am of opinion, therefore, that a verdict should have been given for the defendant."

There is no law which authorizes the police or a Magistrate in the exercise of police duties, or an officer in command of a cantonment, in consequence of a bonâ fide belief that a person is dangerous by reason of actual lunacy, to put him into confinement in order that he may be visited and examined by medical officers, and to keep him in confinement until such officers can feel themselves justified in reporting whether the person is a dangerous lunatic or not; a fortiori, this cannot be done in the case of a bonâ fide belief of danger from impending lunacy. The defendant had no authority for causing the plaintiff to be put under restraint [354] for such a purpose, nor had he, after the report of the medical officers that the plaintiff was perfectly sane, any colour of authority for keeping him under restraint in order that he might be removed from the cantonment, and placed under the observation of the civil surgeon, even though recommended so to do by the medical officers.

Neither the police, nor a Magistrate in the exercise of police duties, could, under Act XXXVI of 1858, have had any colour for doing that which the defendant caused to be done.

The Appellant appeared in person, and argued his case with considerable ability.

The Respondent appeared by Counsel, who, amongst other arguments, contended that the defendant was protected by Act XVIII of 1850.

But there is no foundation for that contention. That Act was for the protection of judicial officers, acting judicially and officers acting under their orders. It is clear that the defendant was not a judicial officer, and that he did not act judicially. Mr. Woodroffe, one of the learned counsel for the defendant, cited many authorities, and amongst others, Calder v. Halket (3 Moore's P. C., 28; s. c., 2 Moore's I. A., 293); Spooner v. Juddow (4 Moore's I. A., 353); Hughes v. Buckland (15 M. and W., 346); and Ferguson v. Lord Kinnoul (9 Cl. and Fin., 251); but none of those authorities have any bearing upon the present case. He also referred to Lucas v. Nockels (4 Bing., 729; 10 Bing., 157); but there is a great distinction between that case and the present.

The plaintiff has complained before their Lordships that he was not allowed by the Civil Judge to give his own evidence in chief on his own behalf, and that he was merely examined in the nature of cross-examination on behalf of the defendant. It does not appear that the Judge refused to allow the plaintiff to give evidence as a witness for himself; but, assuming that the plaintiff is correct in his statement, the fact would be merely a ground of appeal from the Civil Judge, and such appeal is expressly [355] excluded from the leave given by the order of Her Majesty in Council.

The plaintiff is entitled to a decree, and the only question remaining is as to the amount of damages to which he is entitled.

Their Lordships see no sufficient reason to alter the judgment of the Commissioner of Lucknow in that respect. They will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decree of the Judicial Commissioner, and also to reverse the judgment of the Commissioner of Lucknow as regards the order that the plaintiff shall pay the costs on Rs. 2,700, being the difference between the Rs. 3,000 awarded by the first Court, and the Rs. 300 awarded by the Commissioner, but to affirm the last-mentioned judgment in other respects. The respondent must pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the Respondent: Mr. H. Treasure.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 31st July, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Manickya Moyee.....Plaintiff

versus

Boroda Prosad Mookerjee and another.....Defendants.*

Principal and Surety—Agreement to mortgage, assignment of—Bond of indemnity—Guarantee—Interest—Appeal—Respondent—Adding Parties—Civil Procedure Code, Act (XIV of 1882), s. 559—Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877).

Liability of parties discussed and form of decree given in a case where, by an agreement in writing, one of the defendants, in consideration of money lent to him by B, the other defendant, agreed to execute a mortgage to B, containing the usual covenants (in default the agreement to stand as a mortgage), and B assigned the agreement to the plaintiff, guaranteeing by bond of even date the payment of the principal and interest specified in the agreement.

The discretionary power of directing a person to be made a respondent, conferred on the Appellate Court by s. 559 of the Civil Procedure Code, is not limited by any provision in the Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877).

[356] THE facts of this case are set out in the judgment.

The lower Court fixed the following issues:—(1) Is the suit bad by reason of misjoinder? (2) Is the plaintiff entitled to have a lien declared on the properties in suit? (3) Is the plaintiff entitled to costs and the interest claimed? (4) What is the extent of Boroda Prosad's liability under the indemnity bond? The Munsif found the first three issues in favour of the plaintiff. On the fourth issue he said :—

"It is said that the defendant Boroda Prosad has not only guaranteed the payment of the principal and interest under the agreement to mortgage, but also covenanted, under the indemnity bond, to pay interest at the rate of 18 per cent., from the date of the agreement to mortgage to the date of realization. In the first place, I would observe that there are two things in the indemnity bond which render it ambiguous; and a portion of it is admittedly meaningless, under the rules of grammatical construction. It is said that the particle "thereof" has been interpolated for "hereof"; but there is no evidence to that effect. The words "date of payment" may be construed to mean "due date" or "date of realization." Under such circumstances I shall put such a construction on the document as under the nature of things would render it plausible and consistent. Boroda Prosad sold his interest in the agreement to mortgage. Rs. 38,000 and odd were due under the agreement. He gave up Rs. 3,000 and odd, and effected the transfer for Rs. 35,000. If it is contended that under the indemnity bond Boroda Prosad covenanted to pay interest at the rate of 18 per cent., I would say there was no consideration for such an agreement. Why should Boroda Prosad pay more than what was due under the agreement to mortgage? He assigned over his interest at a disadvantage, and it is not fair to make him liable for more than what was due under the original document. If he had made any such contract, it was nudum pactum. I am, therefore, not inclined to render him liable for more than what is due under the agreement to mortgage."

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Srinath Doss, and Baboo Doorga Mohun Doss, for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General (Offg. Mr. Phillips), and Baboo Rajendro Nath Bose, for the Respondents.

The following Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.), was delivered on the 25th of May by Field, J.—In this case one Kali Dass Roy mortgaged certain property to Boroda Prosad Mookerjee by an instrument, dated [357] the 17th June 1878. This instrument was not a formal deed of mortgage; it was an agreement for mortgage only, but it was the intention of the parties that a formal mortgage deed should be subsequently executed. The agreement of the 17th June 1878 contained a provision that, until the formal mortgage deed should be executed containing all such covenants, provisions, stipulations, and agreements as are usually or properly introduced into mortgages of estates of a similar nature, the mortgage-property should remain charged with the amount of the loan, and the mortgage agreement (which was correctly stamped under Act XVIII of 1869) should be considered as a deed of mortgage. Under the agreement the money lent on mortgage, together with interest at 18 per cent., was to be paid within one year from the 17th June 1878, and the agreement further provided that this interest was to be payable in four quarterly instalments, and that if any instalment was not paid on the due date, compound interest was to be allowed thereupon. The money lent or the interest was not paid within the year, and Boroda Prosad Mookerjee, on the 28th June 1879, transferred his interest in the mortgage to Manickya Moyee Chowdhraim, the plaintiff in the present suit. It is not necessary to refer further to the contents of the deed of transfer for the purposes of the present case.

Boroda Prosad Mookerjee, further, on the same date, executed an instrument of guarantee. This is in the common form of a bond, by which Boroda Prosad Mookerjee is held bound in the sum of Rs. 50,000 to be paid to Srimoti Manickya Moyee Chowdhraim; such bond to be void if the amount due upon the mortgage, together with the stipulated interest, be paid by or recovered from the mortgagor. This instrument recites the mortgage agreement executed by Kali Dass Roy in favour of Boroda Prosad Mookerjee, and the transfer of Boroda Prosad Mookerjee's interest thereby created to the plaintiff Manickya Moyee Chowdhraïn. Then comes the condition of the obligation, and after this we have the following passage which is material to the questions which we have to decide in the present case :—

[338] " Provided alway, and it is hereby agreed and declared by and between the said Boroda Prosad Mookerjee and Srimoti Manickya Moyee Chowdhraïn that, if the said Kali Dass Roy, or his heirs, executors, administrators, representatives or assigns does not or do not pay to the said Srimoti Manickya Moyee Chowdhraïn, or her heirs, executors, administrators, representatives, or assigns amicably and without the institution of any suit, the whole of the said principal sum of Rs. 32,000, and the simple and compound interest thereon according to the terms of the said indenture of mortgage at the rate of eighteen per cent., per annum from the said 17th day of June 1878 to the date of payment within one year from the date THEREOF the said Srimoti Manickya Moyee Chowdhraïn or her heirs, executors, administrators, representatives, and assigns shall bring a suit or suits in the proper tribunal to enforce payment of the monies secured by the said indenture of agreement for mortgage ; but if she or they fail to do so, then the said Boroda Prosad Mookerjee, or his heirs, executors, administrators, and representatives shall not be liable to the said Srimoti Manickya Moyee Chowdhraïn or her heirs, executors, administrators, representatives or assigns for payment of any interest that may grow or become due on the said indenture of agreement for mortgage from the date on which under this proviso the said suit or suits ought to be brought, and the date on which the said suit or suits shall be actually brought ; and that if under any decree that may be passed against the said Kali Dass Roy, or his heirs, executors, administrators, representatives or assigns in favour of the said Srimoti Manickya Moyee Chowdhraïn, or her heirs, executors, administrators, representatives, or assigns on the said indenture of agreement for mortgage, simple and compound interest be not allowed at the rate of eighteen per cent. per annum, from the said 17th day of June 1878 to the date of payment, the said Boroda Prosad Mookerjee, or his heirs, executors, administrators, and representatives, shall nevertheless be liable to pay to the said Srimoti Manickya Moyee Chowdhraïn, or her heirs, executors, administrators, representatives and assigns the difference between the amount which will be allowed by such decree for interest and the full amount of simple and compound interest according to the terms of the said indenture of agreement for mortgage, from the said 17th day of June 1878 to the date of payment, minus the interest for the period between the date on which under this proviso the said suit or suits ought to be brought, and the date on which the said suit or suits shall be actually brought. And lastly it is hereby expressly understood that upon this bond or obligation the said Srimoti Manickya Moyee Chowdhraïn, her heirs, executors, administrators, representatives, and assigns shall be competent to recover from the said Boroda Prosad Mookerjee, his heirs, executors, administrators, and representatives, only the amount of the difference between what shall be recovered by the said Srimoti Manickya Moyee Chowdhraïn, or her heirs, executors, administrators, representatives, and assigns on the strength of the said indenture of agreement for mortgage and transfer of mortgage from the said Kali Das Roy, or his heirs, executors, administrators, representatives or assigns, and the said sum of Rs. 32,000, and simple and compound [359] interest thereon according to the terms of the said indenture of agreement for mortgage at the rate of eighteen per cent., per annum from the said 17th day of June 1878 to the date of payment, subject to the agreement in the hereinbefore proviso contained."

It is contended before us that the word "thereof" in the commencement of this passage is a mistake for "hereof." This contention supposes that the word "hereof" suggested for substitution, is together with the six preceding words to be read with the verb "pay," thus "do not pay within one year from the date hereof;" but it appears to us that it is not necessary to substitute "hereof" for "thereof," because a sufficient sense is to be obtained from the passage as it stands if the word "thereof" be taken and construed with "interest thereon according to, etc.," in other words, be read as defining or describing the interest.

Having regard to the words "any interest that may grow or become due on the said agreement for mortgage from the date on which, etc.," and what immediately follows these words, we think that interest after and besides the interest for the year specified in the mortgage agreement was within the intention of the parties to the guarantee bond.

Then comes the essential passage, "if under any decree that may be passed against the said Kali Dass Roy simple and compound interest be not allowed at the rate of eighteen per cent., per annum from the said 17th day of June 1878 to the date of payment, the said Boroda Prosad Mookerjee shall nevertheless be liable to pay to the said Srimoti Manickya Moyee Chowdhraïn the difference between the amount which will be allowed by such decree for interest and the full amount of simple and compound interest according to the terms of the said indenture of agreement for mortgage from the said 17th day of June 1878 to the date of payment minus the interest, etc." It is contended before us that the words "date of payment," are to be construed to mean, not the due date of payment inserted in the mortgage agreement, namely, within one year from the 17th of June 1878, but the date on which the money may be or shall be realised, and it is further contended that inasmuch as it was stipulated between the original parties that the agreement for mortgage was to have the same effect as a formal mortgage deed containing the usual covenants, the original mortgagee is entitled to interest at eighteen per cent., and [360] also compound interest calculated in the manner specified in the mortgage agreement; entitled, that is, in respect of the time (after the year allowed for payment by the mortgage agreement) during which the debt was not paid, because, if a formal mortgage deed had been executed, covenants securing the payment of such interest and such compound interest would have been inserted therein.

Now, so far as regards compound interest, we are not able to agree with this contention; but it does appear to us that if a formal mortgage deed had been executed between the original parties, it would have been a usual and ordinary covenant to insert in such a deed that interest shall be paid on the principal sum, for any time during which such sum remained unpaid after the expiry of the year fixed for payment, at the rate of eighteen per cent., specified in the agreement; and it therefore appears to us that the original mortgagee was primâ facie entitled to recover interest at this rate until such principal sum were realized from the mortgagor.

We think that what was guaranteed by the guarantee bond was that interest would be recoverable upon the true construction or interpretation of the mortgage agreement.

But it is contended that inasmuch as the Subordinate Judge has decided that interest after the year is not recoverable at the rate of eighteen per cent., from the mortgagor Kali Dass Roy, the plaintiff is bound by that decision, and is precluded from recovering such interest from her assignor. It has also been pressed upon us that Kali Dass Roy ought to have been made a party to this appeal, and that the present defendant is entitled to say that unless and untill

Kali Dass Roy is a party to this appeal, it is unjust and inequitable to make him (the present defendant) liable for the further amount of interest, from liability for which Kali Dass Roy has been discharged by the decree of the Court below, because that decree was made in a suit to which the original parties to the mortgage, as well as the assignee of the mortgagee, have all been parties.

Two questions thus arise : (1) If upon the true construction of the mortgage agreement we think the mortgagor liable to pay interest at eighteen per cent. after the year allowed for payment, can the assignee of the mortgagee recover this interest from his [361] assignor upon the guarantee, when such assignee has failed to recover such interest from the mortgagor ? (2) Can the assignee recover such interest in this appeal, notwithstanding that he has not made the mortgagor a party to his appeal ?

We think that, as to the first question, if the assignee had sued the mortgagor in a separate suit to which the mortgagee (assignor) was not a party, and had failed to recover the after interest, the guarantee bond would entitle the assignee to recover such interest from the assignor in a second suit subsequently brought on the guarantee against the assignor alone ; but it is not so clear to us that he is equally entitled to recover in a suit to which all three are parties. The second question we do not propose to decide, as we think that the proper course will be to let the hearing of this case stand over, and to direct that Kali Dass Roy be made a party to the appeal. So far as regards Kali Dass, the time for appealing as against him has expired ; but we think that this is a case in which we may reasonably exercise the discretion vested in us by s. 5* of the Limitation Act ; and it may be quite possible that, apart from that section, we have power to direct that Kali Dass Roy be made a party to the appeal, inasmuch as the mortgagee, respondent, has in a way a right to relief over against him, and it is proper that all questions in dispute should be settled so as to prevent as far as possible further litigation.

It has been stated to us by the learned counsel for the appellant that Kali Dass Roy was not made a party to this appeal because Boroda Prosad Mookerjee made common cause with him in resisting the plaintiff's claim ; and the plaintiff cannot in consequence be supposed to show him much consideration, while at the same time she believes that upon the true construction of the contract of guarantee she is entitled to recover the after interest at eighteen per cent., in any event from him.

This is a question upon which we pronounce no opinion at the present stage of the proceedings. If this really were so, it may be a matter for consideration when we come to deal with the question of costs. All we say at present is that having regard to the fact that Kali Dass Roy, together with the mortgagee and the assignee of the mortgagee, were parties to the present proceedings [362] in the Court below, we think that the case should be so finally disposed of as to do complete justice between all parties.

The appellant will take steps within a fortnight from this date to serve notice upon Kali Dass Roy, and the usual time for his appearance will be allowed.

Kali Dass Roy having been made a party respondent to the appeal appeared by Baboo Rash Behary Ghose, who addressed the Court on his behalf.

The following Judgment was delivered on the 31st July 1882, by Field, J.—Kali Dass has now been made a party to the appeal, and we have heard Baboo Rash Behary on his behalf. The learned pleader has contended that Kali Dass has been improperly made a party to this appeal. His argument is based upon the rule of limitation applicable to the institution of appeals, and he contends that as the period for filing an appeal against his client has expired, it is not now competent to the Court to make him a respondent to the appeal. We think that s. 559 of the Code of Civil Procedure gives us full power to make him a respondent, and that the discretion conferred by that section is not limited by any provisions to be found in the Limitation Act. We may observe in the first place that s. 32 of the Code, which provides for adding parties in the Court of First Instance, contains an express reference to s. 22* of the Limitation Act. No such express reference is contained in s. 559, and the language of s. 22 of the Limitation Act deals with plaintiff and defendant. There is no general clause, which provides that plaintiff shall include appellant, and defendant, respondent. Then again what is done under s. 559 is done not upon the application of the parties but by the Court suo motu. If a rule of limitation were applicable to s. 559, it would be in the power of the appellant to exclude the discretion of the Court by filing his appeal on the last day allowed by the Limitation Act for that purpose. We think, therefore, having regard to this consideration, that it was not the object of the Legislature to limit the operation of s. 559 by any rule of limitation, and we think that we had full power to direct that Kali Dass be made a respondent in this appeal. We entertain no doubt that Kali Dass is liable for interest at 18 per cent. Until the date of realization, and we shall direct a decree to be [363] made to the following effect: Interest at 18 per cent. will be allowed up to the date of the decree of this Court. That interest will be realized in the first instance from Kali Dass; and the original mortgagee, that is the assignor of the plaintiff, will be liable upon the guarantee bond only if the interest cannot be realized by the usual execution proceedings from Kali Dass. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case and the omission of Kali Dass as respondent, when the appeal was originally filed, we shall give no costs upon the additional interest now decreed. The total sum allowed by the decree will carry interest at 6 per cent. from the date of the decree of this Court to the date of realization.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER, OFFG. CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Bundhoo Lall.....Plaintiff.*

Evidence—Local investigation—Judgment on facts observed by Judge but not proved.

In a suit respecting boundaries, the Munsif, before settling the issues in the case, visited the locality, and in his judgment relied upon certain facts which had come under his observation during his visit. These facts were not proved by any evidence, and the Munsif did not make any report as to them. The District Judge reversed the Munsif's decision on the oral evidence given in the case, holding that he could not take notice of the facts observed by the Munsif himself, and on which he had based his judgment.

Held, that though the result of the enquiry instituted by the Munsif was not evidence according to the definition in the Evidence Act, it was a matter before the Court which might have been taken into consideration.

Held, also, that the Munsif should have put the result of his investigation upon paper.

Mr. Branson and Munshi Mahomed Yusuf for Appellants.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Choudhry and Mr. Sandel for the Respondent.

[364] THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) which was delivered by Mitter, J.— We are of opinion that in this case the judgment of the lower Appellate Court cannot stand.

The question between the parties was whether the plaintiff was entitled to have the alang or singha, marked B. C. in the Munsif's map, removed, the plaintiff's allegation being that it was placed there in the month of August 1879 by the defendants, who are the proprietors of mouzah Rathni.

The plaintiff alleges that the land upon which the alang has been put up belongs to him, being part of a jagir of eight bighas within mouzah Titaria.

The defendants do not deny that the alang or singha B. C. is upon a piece of land appertaining to mouzah Titaria, but they allege that this piece of land does not appertain to the plaintiff's jagir of eight bighas, but to the khalisa land of mouzah Titaria; that it is really a part of an alang or singha of an har called ahar uparata, and that it has been in existence for more than twenty years.

The Munsif came to the conclusion that the alang or singha B. C. was constructed upon land not belonging to the plaintiff's jagir, but to the khalisa land of mouzah Titaria, and that the alang or singha had been in existence for more than twenty years as a protection to the band of a portion of ahar uparata. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 287 of 1882 in Rule No. 569 of 1882, against the decree of J. Tweedie, Esq., Officiating Judge of Cya, dated the 16th November 1881, reversing the decree of Baboo Mohendro Lal Ghose, Second Munsif of that district, dated the 27th June 1881.

It appears that the Munsif visited the locality, and in his judgment he relies upon certain facts which he says came under his observation when he was on the spot. This local investigation was held by the Munsif before the issues in the case were settled. Some of these facts, which are not proved by any evidence, but which came, according to the Munsif's judgment, under his personal observation while he was on the spot, appear to us to have a material bearing upon the questions at issue between the parties.

The District Judge on appeal has reversed the decisions of the Munsif. He has come to the conclusion that the land upon which the disputed along B. C. is situated appertains to the [365] plaintiff's jagir. He is also of opinion that the defendants have failed to prove that this along or singha B. C. has been in existence for more than twenty years. He bases his decision mainly upon the oral evidence on the record.

As regards the result of the investigation held by the Munsif, the District Judge seems to have excluded it entirely from his consideration. It is not very clear from his judgment whether he means to hold that, before the result of that investigation could be taken into consideration, it was necessary that the Munsif should be examined as a witness in the case. However that may be, it is clear from his decision upon this point that he has entirely excluded the result of the Munsif's investigation from his consideration. In his opinion it was not a material which he was legally competent to take into consideration in arriving at a conclusion in this case.

We are of opinion that his decision upon this point is not correct. There are many decisions of this Court in which results of investigations, made by the Judges personally, have been made the basis of judicial conclusions. In some of these cases it has been pointed out that it is the best material upon which a decision can rest. Looking at the language of s. 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is clear that the result of a local investigation, made by the presiding judicial officer, is a material which may be taken into consideration in arriving at a conclusion upon disputed questions of fact. Section 392 says: "In any suit or proceeding in which the Court deems a local investigation to be requisite or proper for the purpose of elucidating any matter in dispute, and the same cannot be conveniently conducted by the Judge in person, the Court may issue a commission to such person as it thinks fit." It is clear from this that the delegation of the duty of elucidating any matters in dispute by local investigation is to be made only when the presiding Judge cannot conveniently conduct the enquiry himself.

The District Judge also appears to have been of opinion that the result of the enquiry, conducted by the Munsif in this case, could not be considered by him because it was not evidence according to the definition of that word in the Evidence Act. He is perhaps right in this view. The definition of the word [366] "evidence," as given in the Evidence Act, means and includes (1) all statements which the Court permits or requires to be made before it by witnesses in relation to matters of fact under enquiry; such statements are called oral evidence; (2) all documents produced for the inspection of the Court: such documents are called documentary evidence.

The result of a local enquiry by a presiding judicial officer does not come under either of these two heads; but the District Judge has not taken into consideration the definition of the word "proved" which comes immediately after. It is to this effect: "A fact is said to be proved when after considering the matters before it the Court either believes it to exist, or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists."

It would appear, therefore, that the Legislature intentionally refrained from using the word "evidence" in this definition, but used instead the words, "matters before it." For instance, a fact may be orally admitted in Court. The admission would not come within the definition of the word evidence as given in this Act, but still it is a matter which the Court before whom the admission was made would have to take into consideration in order to determine whether the particular fact was proved or not.

But though we are of opinion that the District Judge was in error in not taking into consideration the result of the Munsif's local investigation, we entirely agree with him in his remark that the Munsif ought to have put upon paper the result of his investigation when it was completed. It is very desirable that judicial officers conducting local investigations should place upon record the results of their investigations as soon as they are completed, so that the parties may have an opportunity of seeing what the facts are which the judicial officers consider to be established by the local investigations.

But in this case we find that none of the facts upon which the Munsif relied as coming under his personal observation while the local investigations were being conducted, or objected to in the petition of appeal filed by the defendants in the Court below as being incorrect. In referring to this circumstance we do not by [367] any means wish it to be understood that we consider that those facts which the Munsif says came under his personal observation are to be taken as absolutely correct. All that we say is that the District Judge should not have excluded them from his consideration. Whether there are good grounds for accepting the result of the local investigation as correct, or rejecting it as incorrect, are matters with which we have nothing to do. It is for the District Judge to decide these questions.

For these reasons the rule will be made absolute; the order of this Court made under s. 551 of the Code of Civil Procedure will be set aside; and this appeal will be decreed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court being reversed; and the case remanded to that Court for re-trial.

The costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE WILSON AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Krishna Gobind Dhur and others.....Plaintiffs

versus

Hari Churn Dhur and others.....Defendants.*

Landlord and Tenant---Suit for possession---Cause of action---Limitation--- Act XV of 1877, sch. ii, cls. 139, 144.

The plaintiff stated that in the year 1862 he purchased a talook in which some of the defendants then held an ijara for a term of years expiring in 1868. The talook had previously been a khas mehal in the possession of the Government, and was bought by the plaintiff at an auction sale held by the Collector. The plaintiff also stated that the ijaradar defendants, in collusion with the other defendants, had continued in possession of the lands held in ijara after the term of the ijara had expired, and had refused to give up possession thereof to the plaintiff. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court found that the defendants (other than the ijaradars) had been in possession previously to the sale in 1862, and he also found that there was no evidence to support the charge of collusion with the ijaradar defendants. He therefore dismissed the suit (which was brought in 1880) on the ground of limitation.

Held, on second appeal, that the plaintiff's cause of action arose on the expiration of the ijara, and that the suit, whether governed by Articles [368] 139† or 144 of the Limitation Act, Act XV of 1877, was not barred on the ground of limitation. Woomesh Chunder Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy (10 W. R., 15) cited.

THIS was a suit for the recovery of possession of land brought by some of the joint owners thereof. The other joint owners were made pro forma defendants. The plaintiff stated that the plaintiffs and their co-sharers had bought the talook, in which the lands in question were situated, on the 4th of June 1862; the talook had been a khas mehal of Government, and they bought at an auction-sale held by the Collector. Before the date of the auction sale certain relatives of the principal defendants became ijaradars of the lands in dispute for a term of years which expired with the year 1274 (11th April 1868). The plaintiff stated that at the end of the term the ijaradars did not give up the lands, but allowed the principal defendants "to hold possession of the land along with them under an adverse right." The Munsif found in favour of the plaintiffs, and decreed the claim.

On appeal, the Judge said : "The Munsif has found that the case is not barred by limitation; but I hold that this finding is erroneous, because the Munsif has considered the case as similar to one brought by a reversioner for setting aside a sale made by a Hindu widow, and he says that, as the term of the ijara ran up to the year 1274, the plaintiffs could not bring a suit before. But in my judgment the analogy drawn by the Munsif does not apply. The reason is that the possession of a purchaser from a Hindu widow, or the possession of anybody with the consent of the widow, is not a possession adverse to the right of the reversioner. Had the plaintiffs in the present case proved their statement that the contending defendants held possession of the land in collusion with the ijaradars, then the analogy drawn by the Munsif would have applied to this case; but on reference to the evidence adduced in this case, I do not find any proof to that effect. On the other hand, it has been proved by the evidence of the witnesses examined by the defendants, as well as by the thakbust papers that, for a period of more than twenty years, the contending defendants and their predecessors were in possession of the land in question." The [369] Subordinate Judge then reversed the Munsif's decree, and dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Wilson, J.—We think that this appeal must be allowed. It appears to us that the lower Appellate Court has mistaken the application of the law of limitation to the case. The judgment of that Court says: The plaintiffs, therefore, are bound to prove that the ijaradars were in possession of the disputed land to the end of the term of their ijara, and if it comes out that the ijaradars did hold possession up to the end of the term of the ijara, then the cause of action of the plaintiffs may be held to have arisen just as the ijara terminated, otherwise the plaintiffs were bound to bring this suit within twelve years from the time at which the ijaradars were dispossessed from the land, or from the time at which their (the ijaradars) predecessors had been dispossessed, in case the defendants were never in possession.

That appears to us to be a misapprehension of the law. The facts are very short. The land was purchased by the plaintiffs, and at the time when they acquired their title it was subject to an ijara to certain persons. During the currency of the ijara, the ijaradars were dispossessed. When did limitation begin to run against the plaintiffs? Did it run from the dispossession of the ijaradars, or from the termination of the ijara? It appears to us that it clearly runs from the determination of the ijara. Prior to that date they might possibly have a right to bring a suit for declaration of their title, and the Court would have power, probably in its discretion, to give them a declaratory decree; but they certainly had no power to sue for possession. Now by what rule in the Limitation Act is their right to sue governed? It may fall either under Article 140 of the second schedule, or under Article 144. It will be convenient first to refer to Article 139. That deals with a case where the suit is by a landlord to recover possession from a tenant, and there the time runs from the determination of the tenancy. That is the only section dealing expressly with the case of a landlord as such. The next article says that in a suit by a remainder man, a reversioner (other than a landlord) or a devisee, for possession of immoveable property, the point from which time runs is, "when his estate falls into possession." Probably in this article, the expression "other than a landlord," means "other than a landlord as such suing his tenant." If that be so, then that article would apparently govern this case, and the time would run from the termination of the ijara. If the case does not fall within that article, then it must fall within Article 144, as being a suit "for possession of immoveable property or any interest therein not hereby otherwise specifically provided for." Then the period of limitation begins to run from the time when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff. "Plaintiff," by the interpretation clause, includes any person through whom the plaintiff claims; but the plaintiffs do not claim through the ijaradars. Therefore, possession adverse to the ijaradars is not possession adverse to the present plaintiffs. This conclusion is entirely in accordance with the construction put upon our earlier Limitation Act, in the case to which we have been referred, Woomesh Chunder Goopto v. Raj Narain Roy (10 W. R., 15). We think, therefore, that the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be reversed, and the decree of the Munsif in plaintiff's favour affirmed.

The Appellant will have his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[I. LIMITATION AGAINST THE LANDLORD—

Limitation as regards third persons—

As regards the right of the landlord to bring a suit against the trespasser during the subsistence of the lease, see also 10 Cal. 577; 13 Cal. 101; 18 Bom. 51; 19 Bom. 138; 10 Cal. 1076; 21 Mad. 288.

In these cases, the landlord is not barred and time does not run against him until the expiration of the term, even if the tenant himself be barred:—Walter v. Yalden (1902) 2 K. B. 304; and in such cases the tenant, being barred, and having no possession himself, cannot by his surrender confer a right of possession.

Suppose a determination of the tenancy by surrender accompanied by a renewal; limitation runs or not against the landlord according as the person in actual possession is the lessee (including those deriving title from him) or a trespasser. In the former case, as there is no moment when the lessor has a right of entry, time does not run against him, Corpus Christi College v. Rogers (1879) 49 L. J. Q. B. 4 C. A.; Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Tremer (1893) 1 Ch. 166 (sub-lessee). In the latter case time runs against him, in favour of the third person, the new lease being carved out of the possession vested in the lessor, Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Rowe (1880) 5 A. C. 736.

2. Limitation as regards the tenant—

The subject of the tenant's incapacity to prescribe adversely to his landlord was exhaustively dealt with by Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in his judgment in (1892) 25 Mad. 507; see also 29 Cal. 518, P.C.

Upon the determination of the tenancy, limitation runs against the landlord:—(1903) 26 Mad. 535. As regards tenant holding over after expiry of the term of the lease, see that case and 24 Bom. 504; 1 A.L.J. 201; 31 Mad. 163. There may, however, be adverse possession by the tenant of land other than those demised by the lease (16 C.W.N. 634,) but it will have to be yielded up on the determination of the tenancy.

If limitation had commenced to run against the landlord before the commencement of the lease, the fact of the lease is no bar to its running against both the landlord and the tenant—5 All. 1; 17 Cal. 137; 26 Mad. 410. Similar principles are applicable to the case of mortgagor and mortgagee:—4 Bom. L.R. 721; 27 All. 395. Adverse possession may run against the real owner when, though by mistake, he himself holds the land as tenant of a third party, and his real title will be extinguished on the expiry of 12 years:—29 Cal. 518 P.C. Principles, similar to those in this case, were laid down in 13 Cal. 101; 10 C. W. N. 343; 29 All. 593; 4 A. L. J. 726; (1907) A. W. N. 1855; 27 Bom. 43; 4 Bom. L. R. 721. The case of 26 Cal. 460 is an erroneous decision, as pointed out in 29 All. 593; and it would appear that the case of 1 C. W. N. 246 is likewise erroneous, since the material factor in adverse possession is not the right to rent nor the tenant's dealing with the land or attorning to another, but the right of the landlord to possession. The landlord having parted with it to the tenant, does not regain it until determination of the tenancy, and so, until then, his right to possession is not barred.]

Joinder of charges Offences of the same kind committed in respect of different persons—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 452, 453, and 455.

Where an accused was charged under one charge including four counts, viz.,¹

- (1) House-breaking by night with intent to commit theft in the house of A ;
- (2) Theft from the same house ;
- (3) House-breaking by night with a like intent in the house of B ;
- (4) Theft from that house ;

And where he pleaded guilty to the first and third charges,

Held, that the case was within the terms of s. 453, and that the words " offences of the same kind " are not to be limited by the explanation to that section, but include a case like this, where a man has within a year committed two offences of house-breaking.

Held, also, that the words " offences of the same kind " are not limited to offences against the same person.

Per FIELD, J. : The explanation to s. 453 must be understood as extending and not as limiting the meaning of that section.

Per NORRIS, J.—Care should be taken that accused persons are not prejudiced by charges being joined, and the Court should at all times be anxious to lend a willing ear to any application upon their behalf by separation of charges and for separate trials upon separate charges.

Empress v. Murari (I. L. R., 4 All., 147) dissented from.

THE facts of this case appear sufficiently from the judgment of Mr. Justice NORRIS.

No one appeared for either side.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (FIELD and NORRIS, JJ.):—

Norris, J.—In this case there were four heads of charge or counts against the prisoner, viz., first, house-breaking by night [372] with intent to commit theft in the house of one Baroda Prosad Das ; second, theft from the same house ; third, house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft in the house of one Tarini Churn Butta ; and, fourth, theft from the same house.

At the trial before the Sessions Judge the prisoner pleaded guilty to the first and third heads of charge, and was sentenced upon the first to three years rigorous imprisonment, and upon the third to three years rigorous imprisonment, to commence at the expiry of the sentence passed under the first head of charge.

It does not appear that any plea was recorded upon the second and fourth heads of charge ; the Judge merely says : " No sentences are given under the second and fourth heads of charge as they are included in the first and third heads."

* Criminal Appeal, No. 454 of 1882 against the order of H. Muspratt, Esq., Sessions Judge of Sylhet, dated the 21st June 1882.

The Magistrate committed the prisoner upon one charge only, including therein the four heads of charge to which I have referred; and the Sessions Judge tried him upon that one charge as sent up by the Magistrate.

We do not think that the courses followed by the Magistrate and Sessions Judge are illegal. Section 452 of the Code of Criminal Procedure says: "There must be a separate charge for every distinct offence of which any person is accused, and every such charge must be tried separately, except in the cases hereinafter excepted." Section 453 says: "When a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind, committed within one year of each other, he may be charged and tried at the same time for any number of them not exceeding three." Then follows the explanation: "Offences are said to be of the same kind under this section if they fall within the provisions of section four hundred and fifty-five." Section 455* says: "If a single act or set of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused person may be charged with having committed any such offence; and any number of such charges may be tried at once, or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences."

Now if we are to hold that the words "offences of the same kind" in s. 453 refer to, and include only "offences that fall [373] within the provisions of s. 455," then undoubtedly there has been an illegality; there has been an "error or defect either in the charge or in the proceedings on the trial," which would call for our interference if we were of opinion that such error or defect had prejudiced the prisoner in his defence; but as the prisoner pleaded guilty, he cannot be said to have been thus prejudiced. But we are of opinion that we cannot so hold. To do so would be equivalent to striking s. 453 out of the Code altogether. We are of opinion that the words "offences of the same kind" in s. 453 are not to be limited by the explanation to that section, but include such a case as this where a man has within a year committed two offences of house-breaking. The "offences" mentioned in s. 455 are not in fact "offences of the same kind," but offences of different kinds arising out of "a single act, or set of acts." Moreover, these offences of different kinds arising out of "a single act or set of acts" must, in the contemplation of the section, have been committed at one and the same time, whereas s. 553, by the use of the words "within one year of each other," clearly points to offences committed on distinct occasions, separated, it may be, by 364 days. Upon the words of the Act, therefore, we are of opinion that there has been no illegality.

We now proceed to consider another point, viz., whether the "offences of the same kind," mentioned in s. 453, must be held to mean offences against one and the same person. We are of opinion that they must not be so limited. There is nothing in the words of the section itself so limiting them, and we are not at liberty to introduce words of limitation unless it is absolutely necessary to do so. We are aware that in this holding we are refusing to follow the decision of the High Court at Allahabad in the case of Empress v. Murari

* [Sec. 455 :—If a single act or set of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of Where it is doubtful several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, what offence has been the accused person may be charged with having committed any committed. such offence; and any number of such charges may be tried at once, or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences.]

(I. L. R., 4 All., 147), but with the greatest respect for the learned Judges who decided that case, one of whom, STRAIGHT, J., has a most deservedly high reputation as a criminal lawyer, we do not think it is correct. As I said before, there are no words in the section limiting its operation as the Allahabad High Court would limit it. This of itself would, in our opinion, be sufficient ground for supporting our present ruling, but [374] we think it well to refer to the practice of the Criminal Courts in England as furnishing authority in support of our view. According to the Common Law of England, there is nothing to prevent a prisoner being charged on different counts of the same indictment on the several different felonies. In Hale's Pleas of the Crown, Vol. II, p. 173, it is laid down that "if there be one offender and several capital offences committed by him, they may be all contained in one indictment as burglary and larceny: larcenies committed of several things, though at several times, and from several persons, may be joined in one indictment"; and see Reg. v. Heywood (I. L. and C., 451). In the case of Castro v. The Queen (L. R., 6 App. Ca., 229) Lord Blackburn, at p. 243, makes the following observation: "The course taken with regard to one indictment was this: The Queen having sent her Commission to the Grand Jury or any other Commission to a proper tribunals, the tribunals so authorized presented all the offences that came to their knowledge; if it was brought sufficiently to their knowledge that a man had committed ten murders, fifty burglaries, and a score of larcenies, they would find, not one finding as to them all, but they would find in separate counts that he had committed each of those charged offences; and if there were many other persons (as generally there are) it would also be found that those other persons had committed the offences proved against them also, and of this presentment one record was made up. Upon that process could be issued against a man so charged, to bring him upon his trial before a petty jury, to try whether he was guilty of those offences so charged or not.

"Now, at Common Law, there was no objection whatever, in point of law, to bringing a man who was charged with several offences if those charges were all felonies, or were all misdemeanours, before one petty jury, and making him answer for the whole at one time. The challenges and the incidents of trial are not the same in felony and misdemeanour, and, therefore, felony and misdemeanour could not be tried together; but any number of felonies and any number of misdemeanours might. The contrary was asserted by the learned Counsel, but though repeatedly challenged to do so, he did not cite any authority in support of his contention. There was no legal objection to doing this; it was frequently not fair to do it, because it might embarrass a man in the trial if he was accused of several things at once, and frequently the mere fact of accusing him of several things was supposed to tend to increase the probability of his being found guilty, as it amounted to giving evidence of bad character against him. Whenever it would be unfair to a man to bring him to trial for several things at once, an application might be made, to the discretion of the presiding Judge, to say, 'try me only for one offence, or try me only for two offences; if one was the real thing, let me be tried for one, and one only'; and whenever it was right that that should be done, the Judge would permit it. For these mixed motives it was well established by a long series of decisions, (I confess I doubt whether they were right at first, but certainly they have been both well established now, and sanctioned by Statute—that is quite clear) that where the several charges were of the nature of felony, the joining of two felonies, in one count was so, necessarily I may say, unfair to the prisoner that the Judge ought, upon an application being made to him, to put the prosecutor to his election, and send them to two trials. It never was decided, even in:

felony, that if that application for the election was not made, the joining of several felonies, that is to say, the taking several felonies which had been found together, and trying those several felonies before one petty jury, was wrong in point of law; on the contrary, it was repeatedly held that it was right enough, although, if the proper application had been made at the proper time in a case of felony, the party prosecuting would have been put to his election or made to take one felony only, and not both at the same time. But in cases of misdemeanour, it was by no means a matter of course that that should be done. I think that if the Judge, upon an application made to him, had been satisfied that to try the man for several misdemeanours together would work injustice to the prisoner, he had a perfect right to say 'I will not work this injustice by trying them together, let us diminish them in number, and try a reasonable number and no more. [376] I do not know whether that was ever done in a case of misdemeanour, but I feel very little doubt that it may have been.'

The Legislature has enacted in two cases that three charges of felony may be charged in one indictment. 24 & 25 Victoria, cap. 96, enacts that "it shall be lawful to insert several counts in the same indictment against the same person for any number of distinct acts of stealing, not exceeding three, which may have been committed by him against the same person within the space of six months from the first to the last of such acts, and to proceed, thereon, for all or any of them;" and s. 71 of the same Act contains similar provisions with regard to three distinct acts of embezzlement.

Such is the law and practice in England with regard to felonies. In cases of misdemeanour there is no limit to the number of counts charging distinct offences that may be inserted in one indictment. In prosecution of what are called "long firm swindles" it is not unusual to insert ten or fifteen counts, each charging a separate offence against different persons. Within my own experience there was a case tried before Mr. Justice HAWKINS at the last May Sessions of the Central Criminal Court, where the indictment contained some 120 counts, and at least 25 or 30 of these charged separate offences against different persons. The offences in this case, house-breaking by night, or as called in England burglary, were, according to English law, felonies; and, no doubt, had the prisoner been tried in England, two separate indictments would have been preferred against him; but here, happily, we know nothing of the antiquated distinction between felony and misdemeanour, and, therefore, if our view of the law is correct, the question in this case is reduced to one of practice, and upon this point we are of opinion that the practice prevailing in England with regard to misdemeanour, is the one that should be followed here. But the Judges should take care that prisoners are not prejudiced by that course being taken, and they should, at all times, be anxious to lend a willing ear to any application for separation of charges and for separate trials upon separate charges. The prisoner in this case having been convicted on his own plea, there is no appeal under s. 273* [377] of the Criminal Procedure Code, except as to the extent or legality of the sentence as I have already

* [Sec. 273:—There shall be no appeal in cases in which a Court of Session, or the Magistrate of a District or other Magistrate of the 1st class, passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only, or of fine not exceeding fifty rupees only, or of whipping only.

There shall be no appeal from a sentence of imprisonment passed by such Court or Magistrate in default of payment of fine when no substantive sentence of imprisonment has been passed.

When an accused person has been convicted on his own plea, whether on a trial with assessors or by jury, there is no appeal, except as to the extent or legality of the sentence.]

pointed out. We are of opinion that there is no illegality, and having regard to the offences to which he pleaded guilty, we are of opinion that the sentences are not at all too severe.

This appeal will, therefore, be dismissed.

Field, J. - I am of the same opinion. I think that the explanation to s. 453 of the Code of Criminal Procedure must be understood as extending not as limiting the meaning of the section itself. As pointed out by my brother NORRIS, there are in the section no words which limit the three offences for which an accused person may be charged and tried at the same time to offences against the same person; and I think the explanation cannot operate to impose any such limitation or restriction upon the general language of the section.

by one co-sharer for another.*

Where a co-sharer of a portion of a talook is compelled to pay a quota of the Government revenue due on account of a share, not his own, in order to save the portion of the talook from being sold, he is entitled to a charge upon such share for the money so paid, and such share should be charged even when it has passed subsequently into the hands of a third party.

Enayet Hossain v. Muddun Monee Shahoon (14 B. L. R., 155; S.C., 22 W. R., 411). followed.

IN this suit the plaintiffs sought to have it declared that a sum of money paid by them in respect of Government revenue for a seven-anna share in a certain talook should be declared a charge [378] on the defendants' share in the talook, it having been paid on their account to prevent a sale taking place.

In the suit, as originally framed, there were seven defendants, and the first Court gave a decree as against only the first defendant, but on appeal this decree was varied and the amount decreed in favour of the plaintiffs was,

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and FIELD, JJ.) was as follows :—

Field, J.—This is a case somewhat complicated by details, but the point which has to be decided is a very simple one when eliminated from these details. It appears beyond all doubt, and in fact it has now been admitted before us, that the plaintiffs and defendants 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, and 7 were joint proprietors of a seven-anna share in a talook, and for this seven-anna share a separate account had been opened, under the provisions of Act XI of 1859, in the Collectorate. By some mistake upon an arrear of revenue falling due, the whole talook was advertized for sale, but this mistake was afterwards corrected and what was about to be sold for the unpaid balance of revenue was only the seven-anna share just mentioned. The plaintiffs, in order to prevent the sale, paid Rs. 87-6-10, which was the amount of the unpaid balance of revenue, and they have brought this suit to recover this amount from the defendants other than defendant 5, who are, as has already been pointed out, the plaintiff's co-sharers in the seven-anna share. The defendant No. 4 had before the transaction which has given rise to this case purchased a nine-anna share out of 5 annas 15 gundas treated as 16 annas, [379] that is, 5 annas 15 gundas cut of the seven annas share. It has been found as a fact by the lower Courts that defendant No. 4 had paid his quota of revenue in respect of the nine-sixteenths of 5 annas 15 gundas so purchased by him, and of which he was the proprietor when the seven-anna share fell into arrears. The present appeal is concerned with another share consisting of 11 gundas $3\frac{1}{4}$ cowries, that is, a share of the seven annas share. Now, in respect of this 11 gundas $3\frac{1}{4}$ cowries share the defendant No. 4 was a mortgagee under a mortgage granted by defendant No. 1, and after the payment by the plaintiffs of the balance of revenue, the defendant No. 4 became the purchaser at an execution sale of this 11 gundas $3\frac{1}{4}$ cowries share. The Judge in the Court below, applying the principle laid down in the case of Enayet Hossain v. Muddun Monce Shahoan (14 B. L. R., 155; s.c. 22 W. R., 411), has directed that the revenue paid by the plaintiffs be a charge upon this 11 gundas $3\frac{1}{4}$ cowries share. It is now contended before us that the principle of that case ought not to be applied to the present case, because in that case the whole estate was about to be sold, and in the case before us it was merely a share, i.e. the seven annas share which was about to be sold. It appears to us that this really makes no difference. The principle on which that case proceeded was, that inasmuch as by the payment of the Government revenue the estate was saved and protected from sale, the person who afterwards became the owner of the estate, and was benefited by this protection, could not justly say that the money paid to effect that protection ought not to be a charge on the thing protected, and we think that that principle is just as applicable to a share of an estate as it is to the whole of an estate. An argument has been raised upon s. 54 of the Sale Act, but we do not see that that has any application to the case now before us. The defendant No. 4 having purchased has become the assignee by law of defendant No. 1, and inasmuch as the amount of revenue paid to protect the seven annas share from sale would justly be made a charge upon the 11 gundas $3\frac{1}{4}$ cowries share in the hands of defendant No. 1, it is equitable that it should be a charge upon the same share in the hands of the [330] assignee by law of the same defendant No. 1. We think, therefore, there are no grounds for this appeal, which will be dismissed with costs. We may observe that no question has been raised by either party as to there not being a personal decree against defendant No. 1, and the amount being leviable upon the share only in case it cannot be levied from him personally. This judgment will admittedly govern appeals Nos. 466 and 467 of 1881.

McDonell, J. I am unable to distinguish this case from that of Enayet Hossain v. Muddun Monce Shahoan (14 B. L. R., 155; s.c., 22 W. R., 411), and following that ruling I concur in dismissing these appeals.

Appeal dismissed.

Bholanath Roy.....Judgment-debtor

Landlord and Tenant—Rent decree—Execution of decree—Limitation—
Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 58.

Where an application for the transfer of a rent decree for execution has been made and granted by the Court which passed the decree within three years from the date of the decree, but no application for execution is made to the Court to which the decree has been transferred within three years from the date of the decree, the execution of the decree will be barred by limitation, under the provisions of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 58.

THIS was an application for execution of a decree for rent. The facts are thus stated by the Court of First Instance: "The decree in question is a rent decree, and for a sum less than Rs. 500, and the application under s. 230 of Act X of 1877 has been made to this Court, after expiration of three years from the date of the decree; but the application under s. 223 of the said Act for the transfer of the decree was made to the Munsif's Court, Putnitollah, in which these decrees were passed within three years from the date of the decree. The judgment-debtor objects to the execution on the [381] plea that limitation bars. The point to be decided is whether the execution of the decree is barred by limitation." The Munsif, while holding in conformity with Heera Lall Seal v. Poran Maiteah (6 W. R., (Act X), 84), and Rhidoy Krishna (Ihose v. Kailas Chandra Bose (4 B. L. R., F. B., 82: s.c., 13 W. R. (F. B.), 3), that s. 58 was not to be construed literally, yet held that an application under s. 223 of Act X of 1877 could not be considered an application to execute the decree; and as the application under s. 230 for execution of the decree had not been made within three years from the date of the decree, he held the execution of the decree was barred by limitation. On appeal the Judge said :

* Appeal from Appellate Order No. 94 of 1882, against the order of C.A. Kelly, Esq., Judge of Pubna, dated the 20th January 1882, reversing the order of Baboo Lokhenath Nundi, Munsif of Nawabgunge, dated the 13th September 1881.

"In this case I think the Munsif's judgment may be set aside. There is nothing in s. 230, Act X of 1877, that prohibits the presentation of an application for execution to the Court which passed the decree, although another application is put in afterwards before the Court to which the decree has been sent for execution. In this case it appears that an application was put in for transfer before the Munsif of Putnitollah within time; that the decree was sent for execution to the Munsif of Nawabgunge in this district, reaching the Munsif, it appears, on or about the 5th of May 1881; and that application for execution, with talubana for notice, was put in on the 10th of May 1881, the Munsif having directed by order of the 5th of May that a notice should be put up at the catcherry for the decree-holder to appear, and directing that the case be put up on the 1st of June. It appears that notice subsequently issued, and that objection was made by the judgment-debtor. It is stated by the pleaders for the decree-holder that the application, which they contend was an application for execution, was in tabular form, though I do not consider it proper that any document showing this should be admitted on the record at this time. It appears, however, that the prayer in this application may be considered as an application for execution so far as allowing execution to proceed goes. On this view I reverse the order of the Munsif and decree the appeal with costs."

The judgment-debtor appealed to the High Court on the grounds that the Court of appeal was wrong (1) in holding execution was not barred by s. 58, Beng. Act VIII of 1869; and (2) in holding that an application under s. 223 for transfer of a decree to another Court is an application for execution within the meaning of s. 230 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and that the said application under s. 223 saved the application for execution from being barred.

[382] Baboo Bama Churn Banerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Joy Gobind Shome for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.— In this case the question turns wholly upon the construction of s. 58 of the Rent Act, which says that "no process of execution of any description whatsoever shall be issued on a judgment in any suit for any of the causes of action mentioned in ss. 27, 28, 29 or 30 of this Act, after the lapse of three years from the date of such judgment, unless the judgment be for a sum exceeding five hundred rupees." In the present case the judgment or decree is for a sum less than Rs. 500, and the question raised is whether the right to execute is barred.

Now what appears to have happened is this : that within three years from the date of the decree an application was made for the transfer of a certified copy of the decree from the Court by which the decree was made, to the Court of the Munsif of Nawabgunge. A certified copy was transmitted. After the lapse of three years from the date of the decree, an application was made for execution to the Munsif of Nawabgunge. He held that the application was made too late. The District Judge reversed that decision. We think that the Munsif was right, and the District Judge wrong. There are several decisions modifying the severity of the result of the absolutely literal construction of the terms of s. 58, as that section says that "no process of execution of any description whatsoever shall be issued." Acting upon the ordinary rule of construction that the delay on the part of the Court is not to prejudice any man's rights, that section has been construed to mean that no process of execution shall issue unless it is properly applied for within three years. We have no right to relax the meaning of that section any further. We are asked to put such a construction upon it as to make it mean that no process shall issue unless some step, with a view to making an application, has been taken within three years. We do not think we are at liberty to put any such construction. The appeal will be allowed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

The 23rd August, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE WILSON AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Bhugwan Chunder Roy Chowdri and others..... Plaintiffs

Act X of 1859, s. 23—Revenue Court, jurisdiction of—Surety for payment of rent—Binding decree.

In a suit for arrears of rent in a Revenue Court under Act X of 1859, the lessors joined as defendants the lessee, and another person whom they alleged to be a surety for the payment of the rent. An ex parte decree was made in favour of the plaintiffs, but it did not expressly make the alleged surety liable for the money awarded. In execution of the decree certain of the alleged surety's land was sold, and the decree-holders were the purchasers at the sale.

An application under Beng. Act VII of 1876 for the registration of their names as proprietors of the land purchased having been rejected, the decree-holders brought the present suit to establish their title to, and to recover possession of, the land.

Held, that the plaintiff's title was bad on the ground that the decree did not purport to bind the surety for the payment of the money awarded, and on the ground that a Revenue Court is not competent to entertain a suit against a person who has become surety for payment of rent.

THE plaintiffs, alleging that they had been in possession of the land in dispute previous to an order dated the 30th June 1879 of the Collector in a proceeding under Beng. Act VII of 1876, rejecting their application to be registered as proprietors, instituted this suit on the 26th June 1880 to establish their title to, and to recover possession of, the land. The facts material to this report appear from the judgment of the High Court.

The suit having been dismissed by the lower Court, the plaintiffs appealed.

Bahoo Kally Mohun Doss, and Bahoo Sharada Churn Mitter for the Appellants

Bahoo Hurry Mohun Chuckerbutty for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and FIELD, JJ.), was delivered by.

Wilson, J.— We think that this appeal should be dismissed.

[384] The suit is one to recover certain land, and the case made is this : That the plaintiffs, or rather those from whom the plaintiffs claim, granted an ijara in December 1867 to the son-in-law of the present defendant, one Fuzur Ali ; that Fuzur Ali executed a kabuliati in accordance with the ijara ; that the present defendant executed at the same time through her mokhtar a bond for the purpose of securing payment of rent ; that subsequently in a suit brought in the year 1868, in the Court of the Deputy Collector of Moonsheegunge in the district of Dacca, under Act X of 1859, against both Fuzur Ali and the defendant to recover arrears of rent, a decree was recovered ; that after the Act had ceased to be law, and after Act III of 1870 had been passed, the decree (which would seem to have been transferred in accordance with the last mentioned Act by the Deputy Collector to the Subordinate Judge's Court at Dacca) was remitted for execution from the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Dacca to the Court of Tipperah, and that there in execution of the decree the right, title, and interest of the present defendant in the land sued for was sold and purchased by the plaintiffs. This is the title on which they now sue.

It is obvious that, this title being founded upon a decree followed by execution, it must be shown, in order to make out a good title, first, that the decree was one purporting to bind the present defendant for the payment of money ; secondly, that it was a decree made by a Court of competent jurisdiction.

The decree was made in a suit in which the son-in-law and the present defendant were both made defendants. The son-in law, Fuzur Ali, is described as the principal defendant, and the other as merely a pro formâ defendant. The decree states, first, that the claim is for recovery of arrears of rent under Act X of 1859 ; it then goes on to recite the ijara, and it says :

"The defendant No. 1, on the strength of a deed of security executed by defendant No. 2, took a Tahoot settlement of jowar" so and so, which it describes in detail, and then it says : "The present suit was instituted on the 31st August 1869 for recovery [383] of the balance Rs. 1,213-1-10-3, inclusive of interest, from the defendant," the word used being not in the plural.

"According to the reasons given in the judgment passed to-day in English" (which judgment was not put in evidence) "it is ordered that a decree be passed in favour of the plaintiffs together with costs, fee, and interest."

That decree throughout points out that one defendant is the principal debtor, and the other is a surety. It speaks of the money as due by the one, and it says that a decree is given without saying against whom. It says nothing about the principal debtor being, or possibly hereafter becoming, unable to pay the money decreed against him. It contains no such provision as the law directs in case of decrees against principal and surety requiring the money awarded to be levied from the principal in the first instance, and it does not anywhere expressly say that any amount of money is awarded against the surety.

It is quite consistent with the terms of the decree that the surety may have been made a party to it only to have a decision binding upon her as to the indebtedness of the principal debtor in case of subsequent proceedings against the surety. It is for the plaintiff to make out his title, and show clearly that the decree is a decree for money against the present defendant, and he has failed to do so. All the subsequent proceedings must, therefore, fall to the ground.

On the second question it appears to us also that the title of the plaintiff fails. That is the question of jurisdiction.

The decree relied upon was a decree given by the Deputy Collector, and it could be given by that officer only under s. 23, Act X of 1859. Now, that is an Act which, according to its preamble was intended to re-enact, with certain modifications, the provisions of the existing law relative to the rights of ryots with respect to the delivery of pottahs and the occupancy of land, to the prevention of illegal exaction and extortion in connection with demands of rent, and to other questions connected with the same, to extend the jurisdiction of Collectors, and to prescribe rules for the trial of such questions, as well as of suits for the recovery of arrears of rent, and of suits arising out of the distraint of property for such arrears, and to amend the law relating [386] to distraint. That is to say, the preamble describes the law as a law relating to matters which arise between landlord and tenant as such. Then s. 23 describes what suits are to be brought in the Collector's Court. The 4th clause says: "All suits for arrears of rent due on account of land, either kheraj or lakhiraj or on account of any rights of pasturage, forest rights, fisheries, or the like."

The Act does in some parts deal with rights of persons different from landlord and tenant, and where it does, it does so expressly. The very next section, (s. 24) in dealing with suits by zamindars against their collecting agents, expressly allows the sureties of such agents to be brought into such suit. Now taking the Act by itself, it appears to us to be free from reasonable doubt that sub-section 4 of s. 23 applies only to suits for rent by a landlord against his tenant as such, and not to suits against sureties or other persons not tenants. The authorities are very strong to the same effect. The most important of these is the Full Bench case, Prosonno Coomar Paul Chowdry v. Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdry (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 759; s. c., 8 W. R., 428). That case appears to us to be a clear and unqualified decision to the effect that the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts under the sub-section in question was limited to cases between landlord and tenant as such, and did not extend to claims against any person other than a tenant. That has been followed in a series of cases: for instance, in Kishen Buttee Misra v. Hickey (11 W. R., 406), and in Ram Tann Acharji v. Komal Lochan Roy (3 B. L. R., Ap. 37; s. c., 11 W. R., 407). In a more recent case, Bipinbehari Chowdry v. Ramchandra Roy (5 B. L. R., 234) there was some difference of opinion between the learned Judges before whom the case came as to the precise bearing of the rule of law upon the particular case before them, but all agreed that the only questions that the Revenue Courts could try were those between landlord and tenant as such. It is true that there are cases in which the jurisdiction has been upheld where the person sued has not been the person in whose name [387] the holding was taken, because the doctrine of benami has been recognized, and a suit might lie against the real tenant who had taken his holding in the name of a benamidar. An example of this will be found in Heeraloll Bukshee v. Rajkishore Mozoomdar (W. R. Sp. No., 58).

Two cases, however, were relied upon on the other side. Those are Bhoobun Mohun v. Bhubo Soonduree Debia Chowdrain (8 W. R., 452), and an earlier case, Koomeroonissa Begum v. Khyroonissa Begum (S. D. A. Jan. to June, 1862, p. 297). These are said to be authorities for holding that a surety might be sued in a Revenue Court together with the principal for whom he had become surety.

The earlier of those cases appears to us to be by no means an authority for that proposition. The plaintiff in that case appears to have alleged the so-called surety to have been the actual tenant, and in actual occupation of the demised premises, and, therefore, liable to pay the rent. The defence set up suretyship. The facts brought before the Court do not appear from the report, and we are left wholly in the dark as to what the materials upon which the Court acted really were. All that we know is, that the Court sent the case back to be re-tried.

Then in Bhoobun Mohun v. Soonduree Debia Chowdrain (8 W. R. 452) the decision taken by itself does appear to be inconsistent with the series of cases to which we have referred. But there again there is no report of the facts of the case, or of the arguments, and nothing to enable us to say what kind of case the Court was really dealing with. When we observe that this case was decided within a few months after the Full Bench decision in Prosunno Coomar Paul Chowdhry v. Koylash Chunder Paul Chowdhry (B. L. R. Sup. Vol., 759; s.c., 8 W. R., 428), and that one of the learned Judges, before whom the case came, was himself a member of the Full Bench, it is impossible to suppose that the Court can have intended to decide something in apparent conflict with the decision of the Full Bench without stating its reasons for holding it not to be in conflict. We are bound, therefore, to assume that [388] there must have been facts in that case of such a nature as to put the matter on a different footing from the other cases.

These considerations are sufficient to dispose of the present case, and the appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and BOSE, JJ.), which was delivered by Tottenham, J.—We are of opinion that the lower Courts' judgment is correct. The question involved in the suit is whether a shikmi ghatwali tenure, held under the superior ghatwal, is liable to be sold in execution, or its proceeds liable to attachment for satisfaction of the debt due from its holder. The lower Court has held that it is not liable for such debts, and we entirely concur in that opinion. The shikmi tenure partakes of the nature of the superior ghatwali tenure, and as the latter has been repeatedly held by this Court to be not liable for such debts, the former will be necessarily so. The inferior tenure cannot have larger incidents attached to it than the superior.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Alienation by father—Joint family—Sale in execution of money decree against father of Mitakshara family.

The mere fact of a decree being passed against the father only of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law will not lead necessarily to the conclusion that what was sold in execution of that decree is only the father's interest in the joint family property. Notwithstanding the decree being against the father only under certain circumstances, there may be a valid sale of a joint property belonging to the family in execution thereof.

In execution of two money decrees against A alone, the right, title and interest of A in certain joint family property was sold, and the entire share of the joint family was taken possession of by the auction-purchasers.

In a suit by the minor son and the wife of A who with A, constituted a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law to recover possession of their shares in the property sold, Held that, although the plaintiffs were not parties to the decrees, in execution of which the sales took place, the mere fact of A being sued alone was not sufficient to justify the finding that only his right, title and interest passed under the sales; and that as the facts of the case showed that the decrees were passed with reference to transactions which clearly concerned the joint family, the whole of the share of the joint family in the properties sold passed to the auction-purchaser, the plaintiff having failed to show that the debts, which were the foundation of the decrees in execution of which the sales were held, were contracted for immoral purposes.

Umbica Prosad Tewary v. Ram Sahay Lall (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 898), and Ponnappa Pillai v. Pappuayyengar (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 1), followed.

Ramphul Singh v. Deg Narain Singh (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 517) dissented from.

THIS was a suit in which the plaintiffs, who were the minor son and wife of one Kali Sahai, sought to recover possession of a two-third share out of seven annas in certain mouzahs which had formerly belonged to Kali Sahai, but had been taken possession of by the plaintiffs, who alleged that they had purchased them at sales in execution of two decrees against Kali Sahai.

[390] The plaintiffs claimed to be entitled as members of a joint family, and alleged that one of the mouzahs in question, viz., Dowlatabad, had not been sold. The lower Court was of opinion that Dowlatabad had not passed under the sales, and with regard to the other mouzahs, held that the case was governed by the ruling in the case of Deendyal Lall v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198), and that consequently the defendants who contested the claim had only purchased the right, title and interest of Kali Sahai in the properties, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for possession of the share claimed.

The facts of the case are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court, to which Court the defendants appealed against that decree.

Mr. Branson and Baboo Pran Nath Pundit for the Appellants.

Mr. R. E. Twidale for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by

Mitter, J.—The following genealogical table of the family will be of help in stating the facts of this case:—

From the above tree it will appear that the plaintiffs are the minor son and wife of Kali Sahai, who has been made a pro forma defendant. The appellants before us were the defendants who defended the suit in the lower Court. At the time of the institution of the suit, they were in possession of seven annas of Jufferabad Ashi, Aurungabad, Jehanabad, and Dowlatabad, dakils of which plaintiffs claim to recover possession of a 4 annas 8 pie share.

It appears that these mouzahs constitute an estate, the towji [391] number of which is 1,300, and the Government revenue of which is Rs. 27-13-11. Eight annas of these mouzahs were held and owned by Kali Sahai, who, on the 28th February 1873, sold a one-anna share in each of these mouzahs to a third party. On the 15th September 1874, in execution of two decrees against Kali Sahai, it is alleged by the plaintiffs that the first three mouzahs were sold, but that the auction-purchasers under their purchase took possession of the whole seven-annas share of these mouzahs, including Dowlatabad, on the 12th Bysack 1282 (April 24th, 1875). The plaintiffs' case is that under these auction-sales only the interest of Kali Sahai in the first three mouzahs passed ; therefore, they claim to recover possession of two-thirds of seven annas of these mouzahs, i.e., a 4 annas 8 pie share on partition thereof, between Kali Sahai on the one hand and the plaintiffs on the other.

It will be convenient here to state the transactions which led up to the auction-sales mentioned above. Muni Lal and Pertab Narain, father of Kali Sahai, borrowed from one Khajeh Mohamed Rs. 1,200, and executed a bond in favour of the creditor on the 30th June 1858, hypothecating certain properties other than those in suit. This bond was renewed on the 28th April 1862 by Muni Lal, who executed it for himself, and as guardian of Kali Sahai, who was then a minor, his father Pertab Narain having died in the meantime. There was a second renewal of this debt by Muni Lal for self and as guardian of Kali Sahai on the 29th January 1866. Khajeh Mohamed, after the death of Muni Lal, brought a suit against his widow, Deoti Koor and Kali Sahai, for the recovery of the money due under the last-mentioned bond. On the 18th August 1870 he obtained a decree. It appears that on the 15th February 1872, Kali Sahai borrowed from Jugger Nath Singh and Janki Sahai Rs. 5,000, to pay off the debt due from him to the decree-holder Khajeh Mohamed. The creditors, on the 8th February 1873, obtained a decree against Kali Sahai for the money due under this bond. Certain properties, other than those in dispute, having been hypothecated in the bond executed in favour of Jugger Nath Singh and Janki Sahai, the decree of the 8th February 1873 declared that the money decreed should continue to be a charge upon the [392] properties hypothecated. In execution of this decree, the right, title, and interest of Kali Sahai in mouzah Jufferabad, towji No. 1300, and bearing a sudder jumma of Rs. 27-13-11, were brought to sale on the 15th September 1874, and purchased by Peary Lal and Girdharee Mahto for Rs. 4,300. The appellants before us are purchasers from Peary Lal and Girdharee.

On the same 15th September 1874, in execution of another decree, dated the 18th April 1874, against Kali Sahai, his right, title, and interest in seven annas of mouzahs Aurungabad and Jehanabad, were sold and purchased by the same auction-purchasers. Aurungabad was purchased for Rs. 775, and Jehanabad for Rs. 1,750. The history of this decree is as follows : After the death of Muni Lal there was a dispute between Kali Sahai and Deoti Koor his widow, regarding Muni Lal's property. Kali Sahai claimed the whole of it on the ground that the family was joint. The dispute between these parties was settled by a compromise filed by them in a regular appeal pending in this Court between them in 1870. By this compromise, Muni Lal's properties were divided between Kali Sahai and Mussamut Deoti Koor in certain proportions, Kali Sahai having taken over all the debts due from the estate of Muni Lal. One Ram Dhoni Sahai was a creditor of this estate, and it was for Ram Dhoni's debt that the decree of the 18th April 1874 was passed against Kali Sahai. It has been already stated that in execution of this decree Kali Sahai's right, title and interest in seven annas of mouzahs Aurungabad and Jehanabad were brought to sale on the 15th September 1874, and purchased by Peary Lal and Girdharee Mahto. The appellants before us are the purchasers from these auction-purchasers in this instance also. They contend that in execution of the first-mentioned decree, the whole seven annas share of the estate No. 1300, including all the dakhili mouzahs, was sold, and that the auction-purchasers took possession under their purchase in April 1875 of the whole seven annas share of the estate.

The lower Court held that in the first auction-sale only mouzah Jufferabad was sold, and the dakhili mouzals Aurungabad and Jehanabad were sold in execution of the other decree. Mouzah Dowlatabad was not sold at all. Then as regards the interest that was sold, it was of opinion that, as the plaintiffs [393] were not parties to the decrees, the interest of the father alone in these properties was sold.

We agree with the lower Court that Dowlatabad was not sold. If under the first auction-purchase the purchasers had acquired a seven annas share of the whole estate, they would not have bid for the dakhili mouzals of Aurungabad and Jehanabad which were brought to sale on the same date. It was said in the course of the argument before us that the purchasers in the first sale bid for the dakhili mouzas in the second sale, because they wanted to avoid litigation, which might have ensued if they had allowed third parties to purchase the dakhili mouzas. But it appears to us that, if they had really purchased in the first auction-sale all the dakhili mouzas, they would have at least made an attempt to prevent a second sale of two of them. On this point we agree with the lower Court in the conclusion to which it has come.

With reference to the question as to what was sold, we are of opinion that the decision of the lower Court is not correct. That Court was of opinion that, because the plaintiffs were not parties to the decrees, in execution of which the sales in question took place, therefore, according to the principle laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198), only the interest of the father passed. It has been shown that the circumstance of the father being sued alone will not necessarily bring the case within the ruling in Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh. See Umbica Prosad Tewary v. Ram Sahay Lal (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 898). The same view was taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Ponappa Pillai v. Pappuwayyanganar (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 1).

In a recent case decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (Muttayan Chetti v. Sangili Vira Pandia Chinnatambiar (I. L. R., 6 Mad., 1), in which the judgment was delivered on the 10th May last) the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court has been approved as laying down the law correctly. A contrary view seems to have been taken by a Division Bench of [394] this Court (PRINSEP and FIELD, JJ.) in Ramphul Singh v. Deg Narain Singh (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 517). This decision is dated the 1st August 1881, but Mr. Justice PRINSEP in another case, the judgment of which has not yet been reported, took the same view as was taken in Umbica Prosad Tewary's case. This judgment was delivered on the 16th June last. Under these circumstances, and specially as the Madras Full Bench decision has been approved by the latest judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on this point, we do not think that we are bound to refer this question to a Full Bench on the ground of there being a conflict in the decisions of this Court. The preponderance of authorities, therefore, is in favour of the proposition that the mere fact of a decree being passed against the father only will not lead necessarily to the conclusion that what was sold in execution of that decree is only the father's interest in a joint family property. Notwithstanding the decree being against the father only, under certain circumstances there may be a valid sale of a joint property belonging to the father and the son in execution thereof.

What we have to determine in this case is whether the whole seven annas share belonging to Kali Sahai and his son was sold or only the father's interest. If the former, can the sale stand?

Although the plaintiff No. 1 was not of age at the time of the sales, yet it is quite clear upon the evidence that both his father and mother, who are interested in protecting his interest, were under the belief that the whole seven annas share was sold. The auction-purchasers were allowed without any opposition or protest on their part to take possession of the whole seven annas share. The decree in execution of which the first sale took place, was passed with reference to a transaction which clearly concerned the joint family. The bond, which was the basis of that decree, was the final outcome of a loan which had been originally contracted by Pertab Narain, Kali Sahai's father. Having regard to these circumstances, we are of opinion that the whole seven annas share in Mouzas Jufferabad, Aurungabad and Jehanabad passed by the auction-sales.

The next question is whether these sales are binding upon the [395] minor son, Jung Bahadoor. According to the principle laid down in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Prosad Singh (I. R., 6 I. A., 88; s.c., I. L. R., 5 Cal., 148), the plaintiffs can set aside the sales if they can prove that the debts, which were the foundations of the decrees in execution of which they were held, were contracted by the father for immoral purposes. This the plaintiffs in this case have failed to prove. Their suit, therefore, as regards Jufferabad, Aurungabad and Jehanabad, will fail. We, therefore, modify the decree of the lower Court to this extent, viz., that we dismiss the plaintiff's suit as regards these mouzas, but we affirm the decree so far as the Mouza Dowlatabad is concerned. As the major portion of the plaintiff's claim has failed, they must pay the defendant's costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed and decree modified.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 27th July, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE WILSON AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Ramjoy Surma.....Defendant

Joy Nath Surma.....Plaintiff.*

Contribution, Suit for—Money paid in satisfaction of joint decree—Small Cause Court, Jurisdiction of.

A suit for contribution for money paid by one judgment-debtor in satisfaction of a joint decree against him and others cannot be entertained by a Court of Small Causes.

IN this case the plaintiff alleged that he and the defendant jointly had borrowed a sum of money from one Ram Kanai Das, who on the 9th of September 1876, obtained a joint decree for the amount, with costs, against the plaintiff and the defendant. In 1877, the decree-holder took out execution against the plaintiff alone, and recovered from him Rs. 250. The decree-holder applied [396] for further execution, but while his application was pending he came to a compromise and sold the decree to the plaintiff for Rs. 90. The plaintiff claimed to recover in the present suit Rs. 170 from the defendant, being half of the total amount paid by him under the decree of the 9th of September 1876. The suit was dismissed by the Court of First Instance, but this decision was reversed on appeal. The defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Joy Gobind Shome for the Appellant.

Baboo Juggut Chunder Banerjee, for the Respondent, objected that no second appeal lay, as the suit being one for contribution and the amount claimed being under Rs. 500, it was of a nature cognizable in a Court of Small Causes.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—This is a second appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Sylhet modifying a decree of the Munsif of Nubeegunge. A preliminary objection was raised that under s. 586 of the Procedure Code this appeal does not lie, on the ground that the claim is under Rs. 500, and the cause of action of such a nature that a Small Cause Court had jurisdiction over it.

The claim is for contribution. The case found is that the plaintiff and the defendant, being jointly liable on a bond, were jointly sued, and a decree was made against them jointly. The plaintiff was compelled to satisfy that decree and in this suit seeks to recover his share from the defendant. In Rambux Chittanjeo v. Mudhoosoodun Paul Chowdhry (B. L. R., Sup., Vol., 675 ; 7 W. R., 377), the general rule was laid down by a Full Bench that a suit for contribution does not lie in a Small Cause Court under s. 6 of the Mofussil Small Cause Courts Act (XI of 1865), in the absence of a contract to contribute. In Shaboo Majee v. Noorai Mollah (B. L. R., Sup., Vol., 691), the plaintiff and defendant had been jointly sued upon a joint bond, and a joint decree obtained against them, plaintiff having had to pay the amount sued for contribution. It was held by a Full Bench that he could not sue in a Small Cause Court. This case is on all fours with the present, and we are bound to follow it, unless some- [397] thing has since occurred by which the law has been altered. It was argued before us that ss. 43,* 69 and 70† of the Contract Act (IX of 1872) have made a change in the law on this point, and that such a suit as the present has become one for "money due on bond or other contract, or for damages." We are unable to accede to this view. The sections referred to appear to us to do no more than state in written form what was the law before the Contract Act, and the consequences of a given rule of law must be the same whether it be written or remain unwritten.

A somewhat different view has been taken in a partially analogous case by the Allahabad High Court in Nathprasad v. Baignath (I. L. R., 3 All., 66) : but that view has not been followed in this Court. Nobin Krishna Chukravati v. Ram Kumar Chakravati (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 605) and Special Appeal No. 2350 of 1879 unreported. The appeal must therefore be heard on its merits.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Each promisor may compel contribution.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 12th October, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE FIELD AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

In the matter of the Petition of Charoo Chunder Mullick and others.

Charoo Chunder Mullick
The Empress.*

High Court's Criminal Procedure Act (X of 1875), ss. 14 and 147—Commitment, application to quash—24 and 25 Vict., c. 104, ss. 13 and 15.

The words "or other proceeding" in s. 147 of Act X of 1875, do not include a commitment, and an application to have a commitment quashed can be entertained under the provisions of that section.

Applications under s. 14 of that Act should be disposed of by the High Court in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction.

IN this case three persons, named Bunwari Lall, Charoo Chunder Mullick, and Chintamoney Doss, were charged before Mr. B. L. [398] Gupta, one of the Presidency Magistrates, with certain offences under the Penal Code and Act XIV of 1866 (The Post Office Act).

The first accused Bunwari Lall, who was a Post Office peon, was charged under s. 406 of the Penal Code, with criminal breach of trust in respect of a number of voting papers entrusted to him to deliver to the address of one Kedar Nauth Dutt. He was also charged under s. 409 of the same Act with criminal breach of trust as a public servant in his capacity of Post Office delivery peon in respect of the same voting papers; and he was further charged with having committed an offence punishable under s. 47† of Act XIV of 1866 (The Post Office Act).

The other two accused, Charoo Chunder Mullick and Chintamoney Doss, were charged with having aided and abetted the first accused in committing the offences charged under ss. 406 and 409 of the Penal Code, and also with having abetted the offence charged under s. 47 of Act XIV of 1866; and thereby having committed an offence punishable under s. 52 of that Act; and they were further charged with having fraudulently retained or wilfully kept or shall not use proper care and diligence safely to convey or deliver any such bag, letter, or other article, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees, and any person employed to deliver a letter or other article sent by the post, who shall not duly deliver the same, shall, within a reasonable time not exceeding twenty-four hours, report the fact at the Post Office where he received such letter or other article, and return the same, and if any such person shall wilfully make a false report, he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees.]

obtained a voting paper, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 45^a of Act XIV of 1866, while Bunwari Lall was also charged with having abetted the commission of that offence.

The case was heard and inquired into by Mr. B. L. Gupta, who committed all of them to the High Court for trial.

Thereupon the accused petitioned the High Court, and applied that the record might be sent for, and the order of commitment quashed and their discharge directed, on the ground that the said commitment was illegal, because the evidence given in the investigation before the Magistrate was not sufficient to justify the charges; and, even supposing it to be true, it was not sufficient in law to form a ground for the commitment, and consequently that the Magistrate should have either dismissed the charges or discharged the accused, and should not have committed them or any of them to stand their trial before the High Court.

Upon this application the record was sent for, and the case came on to be argued before a bench consisting of Mr. Justice FIELD and Mr. Justice NORRIS.

[399] Mr. Branson and Mr. M. Ghose appeared for Charoo Chunder Mullick.

Mr. L. M. Ghose, for Chintamoney Doss.

Mr. M. P. Gasper, appeared on behalf of the Crown.

The Judgment of the Court (FIELD and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.—In this matter an application has been made asking us to call up the proceedings connected with the commitment of three persons, Baboo Charoo Chunder Mullick, Chintamoney Doss, and Bunwari Lall, with a view to such commitment being quashed, on the ground, first, that as regards one of these persons, Baboo Charoo Chunder Mullick, there is no evidence which can in any view of the case incriminate him; and, secondly, that as regards all three accused, even if the truth of the facts deposed to by the witnesses examined before the Magistrate be assumed, those facts do not constitute any offence punishable by the Criminal law.

The application at first purported to be made under s. 147 of the High Courts' Criminal Procedure Act X of 1875, but it comes before us to-day as an application under either this section or s. 14 of the same Act.

The first question with which we now propose to deal is whether an application of this nature, an application that is to quash a commitment made by a Presidency Magistrate, can be entertained, and an order quashing such commitment made under the provisions of s. 147.

This section is as follows: "Whenever it appears to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William, Madras, or Bombay, that the direction hereinafter mentioned will promote the ends of justice, it may direct the transfer to itself of any particular case from any Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its ordinary original Criminal jurisdiction, and the High Court shall have punished, on conviction before a Criminal Court, with imprisonment of either description as defined in the Indian Penal Code, for a term not exceeding two years, and shall also be liable to fine.]

power to determine the case so transferred, and to quash or affirm any conviction or other proceeding which may have been had therein, but so that the same be not quashed for want of form, but on the merits only."

The proceeding which we are asked to quash on the present [400] occasion is not a conviction but a commitment; and what we have to decide is whether a commitment is a proceeding within the meaning of the words "or other proceeding." We have considered this question since the application was first made to us the day before yesterday, and we are both of opinion that a commitment is not a proceeding within the meaning of these words. According to the usual construction, the words "or other proceeding" must be taken to mean other proceeding of the same nature, ejusdem generis, with a conviction. Now a conviction is a definitive decision of a Judge or Magistrate having jurisdiction to deal definitively with the matter before him, whereas a commitment is merely a preliminary proceeding by which a Magistrate, not himself having jurisdiction to deal definitively with the matter before him, sends that matter to be definitively disposed of by another tribunal. That this is a distinction well understood and indeed made by the Indian Legislature itself will appear from section 10 of the Penal Code and illustrations (b) and (d) to that section. It appears to us, therefore, that a commitment is not a proceeding ejusdem generis with a conviction. It was asked in the course of argument what proceedings can the Legislature be supposed to have intended by the words "or other proceeding," if these words do not include a commitment? The answer to this question is not difficult. There are numerous cases in which a Presidency Magistrate has jurisdiction to make a definitive order other than a conviction. For example, he can make an order punishing for contempt of Court (ss. 205* to 207, Chapter XV of the Presidency Magistrate's Act, IV of 1877). He can make an order requiring security to keep the peace (ss. 208 to 211 of Chapter XVI of the same Act). He can make an order requiring security for good behaviour (ss. 212 to 214 of the same Chapter). He can make an order putting a person in possession of immoveable property (s. 233 of the same Act). He can make an order for maintenance (ss. 234, 235†, Chapter XVIII of the same Act). He can make an order giving compensation for a groundless charge or complaint (s. 242 of the same Act). All these orders are in their nature definitive, that is, unless brought before a superior tribunal for revision and thereupon revised, they are and remain final. It appears to us that in using words "or other [401] proceeding" in s. 147 of the High Court Criminal Procedure Act, the Legislature contemplated proceedings and orders such as those which I have just mentioned.

* [Sec. 205 :—When any such offence as is described in sections 175, 178, 179, 180, or 228 of the Indian Penal Code, is committed in the view or presence of a Procedure in certain cases of contempt.

Presidency Magistrate, he may cause the offender to be detained in custody; and, at any time before the Magistrate leaves his Court on the same day, he may take cognizance of the offence, and sentence the offender to punishment by fine not exceeding two hundred rupees, and, in default of payment, by imprisonment in the Civil Jail for a period not exceeding one month, unless such fine be sooner paid.

In every such case, the Magistrate shall record the acts constituting the offence, with the statement (if any) made by the offender as well as the finding and sentence.

If the offence is under section 228 of the Indian Penal Code, the record must show the nature and stage of the judicial proceeding in which the Magistrate interrupted or insulted was sitting, and the nature of the insult or interruption.]

† [Sec. 235 :—On the application of any person receiving, or ordered to pay, a monthly allowance under the provisions of section 234, and on proof of

Alteration in allowance. a change in the circumstances of such person, his wife or child, the Magistrate may make such alteration in the allowance ordered as he thinks fit, provided the monthly rate of fifty rupees be not exceeded.]

But there are other considerations which have influenced us in arriving at a conclusion in this matter. When a proceeding is transferred to the High Court under s. 147, the High Court has power to "determine the case so transferred and to quash or affirm any conviction or other proceeding which may have been had therein but so that the same be not quashed for want of form but on the merits only."

In other words the High Court, in order to the exercise of the jurisdiction hereby conferred, must proceed to consider all the evidence in the case, must come to a finding upon questions of fact, for otherwise it could not quash or affirm on the merits. In so dealing with a case, which in the ordinary course would be tried by a jury, with whom rests the decision upon questions of fact, the High Court would be superseding the jury, by whom in the usual course the case would be tried. We think it extremely improbable that the Legislature contemplated any such result as this.

Then, again, if a commitment may be quashed upon the merits under s. 147, and an application to this effect may be made by or on behalf of any accused person who has been committed, it will, in practice, be made only in those doubtful cases in which there is reason to hope that the application to have the commitment quashed will prove successful. If that hope should be found to be a mistaken one, the result would be that a prisoner, committed upon evidence sufficiently weak to make the result of a trial doubtful, would come to his trial prejudiced by the opinion of a Division Bench of two Judges pronounced against him to the effect that the commitment ought not to be quashed. It may be said that the accused person could avoid this result by abstaining from making an application under s. 147, to have his commitment quashed; and that, as he can foresee this effect of an unsuccessful application, he cannot justly complain of a result brought about by his own action. Giving to this argument all the consideration which it deserves, we cannot think that the Legislature [402] intended that a Bench of two Judges should pronounce their opinion publicly upon the merits of a case, which must afterwards come before a jury.

Then again when a Magistrate has committed a case, he becomes functus officio, and it may be said with some show of reason that there is no case before him which can be transferred to the High Court.

For all these reasons it appears to us that the words "or other proceeding" in s. 147 of the High Court's Criminal Procedure Act X of 1875, do not include a commitment; and that no application to have a commitment quashed can be entertained under the provisions of that section.

But there is another section in the Act under which it may be possible that the petitioners may obtain that which they seek. I say "may be possible" because upon this point speaking for myself, I desire to express no opinion, and this for the reasons which I shall presently state. The section to which I refer is s. 14, which provides that "when any charge or portion of a charge, recorded as aforesaid, appears to a Judge of the High Court at any time before the commencement of the trial of the person charged to be clearly unsustainable, such Judge may make on the charge an entry to that effect. Such entry shall have the effect of staying proceedings upon the charge or portion of the charge," etc. Now the jurisdiction conferred by this section is a jurisdiction which may be exercised by a Judge, that is one Judge of the High Court.

Having regard to that which has been determined by the learned Chief Justice under s. 14 of the High Court Act, 24 and 25 Vic., cap. 104, we are agreed, and speaking for myself I am very strongly of opinion that, if this matter is to be heard by a single Judge, it should be heard by my brother NORRIS and that I ought not to sit to hear it.

The Chief Justice has determined, under the section just quoted, that Mr. Justice NORRIS and myself "may form a Division Bench, and hear and determine any appeal, motion or other matter, in any civil or criminal case which may be brought before the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction, or which they shall order to be brought before them." Now, clearly a matter under s. 14 [403] of the High Courts' Criminal Procedure Act is not a matter brought before the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction. I take it that the words, "or which they shall order to be brought before them" have reference only to the same Appellate Jurisdiction.

Then the Chief Justice has further determined that on and after the 18th September 1882, and until further order, the ordinary Original Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction of the High Court, shall be exercised by the Honourable Mr. Justice CUNNINGHAM, the Honourable Mr. Justice NORRIS, and the Honourable Mr. Justice PIGOT sitting separately.

And the Officiating Chief Justice has determined on the 10th August 1882 that until further order the ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction of the Court shall be exercised by the Honourable Mr. Justice NORRIS. It is quite clear from this that I am not, and that my brother NORRIS is, a Judge, as to whom it has been determined by the Chief Justice under the provisions of s. 14 of 24 and 25 Victoria, cap. 104, that he shall sit alone for the exercise of the ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction of the Court; and this being so, it appears to me proper, that as this matter is one falling within that jurisdiction, it should be disposed of by Mr. Justice NORRIS.

I have further thought it right to consider whether this matter shall be heard by myself and my brother NORRIS sitting together; in other words whether I shall continue to sit with my learned brother for the hearing and determination of the matter, as a matter to be disposed of under s. 14 of the High Courts' Criminal Procedure Act, and I have decided not to do so. So long as we had not determined whether or not the matter could be dealt with under s. 147, I have continued to sit, because it has been the recent practice of this Court that matters under this section should be dealt with by the Division Bench for the time being exercising the Appellate Criminal Jurisdiction of the Court. During my experience several cases have been so disposed of. I may refer by way of example to the case of The Empress v. Thompson (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 523); Wood v. The Corporation of the Town of Calcutta (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 322); and In re Poorna Churn Pal (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 447). The [404] former practice was to bring applications under the section before a single Judge sitting on the Original Side of the Court. See for example the cases of The Empress v. Gasper (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 278), and the Corporation of the Town of Calcutta v. Bheecunram Napit (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 290). Whatever doubt there may be as to whether applications under s. 147 of Act X of 1875 should be heard by the Division Bench exercising the Appellate Criminal Jurisdiction of the Court, I think there can be no doubt that applications under s. 14 of the same Act must be disposed of in the exercise of the Court's Original Criminal Jurisdiction.

Section 36 of the Letters Patent of 1865 provides that any function which by these Letters Patent is directed to be performed by the High Court in the exercise of its Original or Appellate Jurisdiction, may be performed by any Judge or by any Division Court thereof appointed or constituted for such purpose under the provisions of the thirteenth section of the 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104. This section is as follows: Subject to any laws or regulations which "may be made by the Governor-General in Council, the High Court may, by its own rules, provide for the exercise by one or more Judges, or by Division Courts constituted by two or more Judges of the said High Court of the Original and Appellate Jurisdiction, vested in such Court in such manner as may appear to such Court to be convenient for the due administration of justice."

So far as I am aware no rule has been made under this section since the date of the Letters Patent of 1865; but there was a rule made previously, and while the Letters Patent of 1862 were in force, viz., "A Court for the exercise of the ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction of this Court may be held before one Judge, and two or more Courts may sit at one time, in each of which there shall be one Judge,"—(see Rule 58, Belchambers, p. 87). As there is here an express provision, Rule 51 does not apply, which provides that all powers and functions vested in the Court by the Letters Patent, which are not otherwise expressly provided for by the Rules of Court, may be exercised by a single Judge, or by a Division Court consisting of two or more Judges.

[403]. The operation of the rule above first quoted (No. 58) is saved by the second section of the Letters Patent of 1865, which provides that all rules and orders in force immediately before the publication of these Letters Patent, shall continue in force, except so far as the same are hereby altered until the same are altered by competent authority.

It would appear to follow that, while there is a single Judge there is no Division Court appointed or constituted under s. 13 of the 24 and 25 Vic., cap. 104, to exercise the Original Criminal Jurisdiction of the Court, and that, therefore, this jurisdiction should not be exercised in this or any case by a Division Court consisting of two Judges.

It may be that this result would be altered by reading the words "subject to any laws or regulations which may be made by the Governor-General in Council" in s. 13, 24 and 25 Vic., cap. 104, with sub-section 2, section 2 of the General Clauses Act I of 1868: "Words in the singular shall include the plural," and that "a Judge" in s. 14 of Act X of 1875 may thus be held to include two or more Judges. But as this may be arguable, and as my brother NORRIS is undoubtedly competent to act alone, I think it will be better that he alone should proceed to deal with the case, more especially as, if there should be a difference of opinion, my opinion as that of the Senior Judge would prevail, and there would be this result that a Judge, whose competency to exercise jurisdiction may be arguable, would overrule a Judge as to whose competency there can be no doubt.

Direction in will for payment of debts—Decree against heirs for debt due by ancestor—Charge on property—Apportionment of mortgage debt amongst several properties mortgaged.

A testator by his will directed payment of all his debts, and subject thereto devised his property to his heirs. After one of the testator's creditors had obtained a decree against the heirs in their representative capacity, which by its terms was to be satisfied out of the assets left by the testator, one of the heirs mortgaged his share in twelve properties left by the testator. Subsequent to the mortgage one of the mortgaged properties was sold in execution of the creditor's decree.

The mortgagee afterwards brought a suit against the mortgagor and obtained a decree on his mortgage.

Held, that as neither the direction in the will for payment of debts nor the decree in the creditor's suit created a charge on the property of the testator, the property sold in execution of the creditor's decree had been sold subject to the mortgage, and the mortgagee was entitled to execute his decree against that property.

Bazayet Hossein v. Dooli Chund (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 402) distinguished.

It appearing that the mortgagee deliberately abstained from executing his decree against eleven properties which still remained in the possession of the mortgagor, but proceeded against the one property which had passed out of the mortgagor's possession, the mortgage debt was directed to be apportioned between the twelve properties, and the mortgagee was not to be allowed to take out execution against the property which had passed out of the mortgagor's possession, except for the amount which should be apportioned to such property, without satisfying the Court that he had made every possible effort to execute the remainder of his decree against the other eleven properties.

BRINDABUN by his will directed the payment of his debts, and subject thereto devised his property to his heirs; he mentioned [407] certain debts specifically including one to Ram Jibun and went on to say that payment should be made of all his debts present and future.

The heirs of Brindabun were his four sons, one by name Pitamber.

On the 28th February 1876 Ram Jibun obtained a decree against Pitamber and his brothers in their representative capacity as heirs of Brindabun, which by its terms was to be satisfied out of the assets left by Brindabun. On the 29th June 1876 Pitamber mortgaged to the plaintiff his four-anna share in twelve properties left by his father. On the 15th August 1877 one of the proerties included in the mortgage was sold in execution of the decree which had been obtained by Ram Jibun, and Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry became the purchaser at the sale. On the 16th November 1877 the plaintiff obtained a decree against Pitamber for the amount due on the mortgage.

Several creditors, both of Brindabun and of Pitamber, who had obtained decrees, applied for a rateable distribution of the surplus proceeds of sale, and the plaintiff claimed a right to the whole of Pitamber's share of the surplus, but his application was on the 28th February 1878 rejected on the ground of his not having applied in time, and the surplus proceeds were distributed amongst the creditors who had applied.

On the 14th July 1878 the plaintiff attached the twelve-mortgaged properties in execution of his decree, but on a claim by Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry the property which he had purchased was on the 24th February 1879 released from attachment.

The plaintiff took no proceedings to bring the remaining properties to sale, but on the 20th June 1879 instituted this suit against (1) Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry ; (2) the creditors amongst whom the surplus sale proceeds had been distributed ; and (3) Pitamber ; claiming to have the order of the 24th February 1879 set aside, and for a declaration that the property which had been sold was liable to satisfy a decree, and in the alternative for a declaration that he was entitled to Pitamber's four-anna share in the surplus proceeds of sale as against the creditors who had shared in the distribution of them.

Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry and the creditors contended amongst [408] other things, that the mortgage was fraudulent, and that the plaintiff was acting in collusion with Pitamber in order to defeat creditors. The creditor defendants further set up limitation as a bar to the claim against them.

Pitamber did not defend the suit. The first Court found the plaintiff's claim against the creditors to be barred by limitation under Art. 13* Schedule II of Act XV of 1877, the suit not having been instituted within one year of the order of the 28th February 1878 rejecting the plaintiff's application to share in the surplus sale-proceeds.

The first Court further found the mortgage to be fraudulent, and accordingly dismissed the suit.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge agreed with the Munsif's finding on the claim against the creditors, but held that fraud as regards the mortgage had not been satisfactorily established. He held, however, that the direction in Brindabun's will had the effect of making his debts a charge on the properties left by him, and that the devisees taking the properties subject to the charge could not alienate them so as to defeat the rights of creditors whose debts constituted the charge. He also held that the creditor's decree was virtually a decree against the testator's properties, and that the mortgage being subsequent to the decree, the mortgagee took subject to a charge created by the decree. He accordingly dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Sreenath Dass add Baboo Aukhil Chundar Sen for the Appellant.

Baboo Sreenath Banerjee and Baboo Bama Churn Banerjee for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—We think that the order of the lower Appellate Court must be varied in this case. The suit is for two distinct things. In the first place, it is a suit in which the second defendants are principally interested, with the view of giving the plaintiff a share of the sale-proceeds of certain property. With regard to this [409] claim it is enough to say that we see no ground whatever for differing from the view taken by the Court below ; but then there is a matter of greater difficulty, namely, the suit as against the first defendant. The object of that is to enforce the mortgage-decree which the plaintiff has obtained against the former owner of the property, viz., Pilamber, against the property which has now passed into the hands of the first defendant, who has purchased it at an auction sale in execution of a money decree. Prima facie the plaintiff is entitled to that, because the sale in execution of the money decree was the sale of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor, and there was nothing to show that the sale was not what the law ordinarily contemplates in such a case, that is to say, a sale subject to the mortgage lien. But two reasons have been given for holding that the mortgage lien was superseded by the rights of the person at whose suit the execution sale took place. The first is that the decree which was against the representatives of the original owner of the property in question declares that the property of the original owner is liable. But the decree is in the ordinary form of a decree made in a suit against the representative of a deceased person. It is a decree which is known to English lawyers as De bonis testatoris, a decree which by its terms is to be satisfied out of the assets left by the deceased person. It appears to us that it has no other effect than as a mere money decree, and has not the effect of creating a charge upon the property. This case differs from the case of Bazayet Hossein v. Dooli Chund (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 402), where the decree in question was a decree which distinctly bound the property.

The second ground urged for holding that the judgment-creditor's debt had priority over the mortgage, was by reason of the will of the testator. In that he undoubtedly directs payment of his debts, and he directs that subject to the payment of those debts, the property should be taken by his heirs, and he mentions certain debts specifically including the debt of the judgment-creditor. But he goes on to say that payment is to be made of all his debts, present and future. That, therefore, is simply a general direction to pay all his debts out of his estate, and that, upon the authorities, clearly creates no charge. It directs nothing more [410] than what the law requires every executor, or heir, or other representatives to do, that is, to pay the debts of the testator out of his assets. It appears to us, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to execute his decree against the property in question. Of course it would have been otherwise if the finding of the Munsif had stood to the effect that the transaction was fraudulent ; but we feel ourselves bound, in spite of the suspicious circumstances of the case, by the finding of the lower Appellate Court on this question which is one of fact. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to execute his decree against the property. On the other hand we find that, although the mortgage includes twelve pieces of property, and the plaintiff's decree covers those twelve pieces of property, he deliberately abstains from executing his decree against eleven properties, which still remain in the possession of the mortgagor, and comes into Court with this suit, in which he tries first to proceed against the execution-creditor, and failing that, against the purchaser from his debtor, the object being apparently to make everybody but his debtor pay the debt due to him. It appears to us that he cannot be allowed to do that. All the parties interested are before the Court. Pitamber is a party, plaintiff is a party, and the first defendant is a party. On the inquiry that we propose to direct all these persons should be heard. There will be an inquiry in the first instance how the mortgage debt should be apportioned between the twelve properties, and what portion of it should be charged upon the property which the plaintiff now seeks to charge. The plaintiff will not be allowed to take out execution against this property, except for the amount which upon such inquiry should be properly charged upon it, without satisfying the Court that he has made every possible effort to execute the remainder of his decree against the other eleven properties.

In this way the decree of the lower Appellate Court will be varied, and the case will be remitted to the Court of First Instance for the purposes of the inquiry above directed.

Under the circumstances of the case we think it undesirable to make any order for the costs of this appeal. The appellant has succeeded in part and he has failed in material parts of his case, [411] and his conduct in the case is not such as to entitle him to any indulgence.

The second defendants are entitled to their costs of this appeal, which as regards them is dismissed.

Decree varied.

NOTES.

[MORTGAGEE'S RIGHT TO PROCEED AGAINST ANY PART OF THE MORTGAGED PROPERTY—

With reference to this and similar cases, Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh in his Mortgages Vol. I (1911) p. 364 observes, "These cases can be supported only on the ground that the purchasers bought without notice of the mortgage and paid not for the equity of redemption, but for an absolute interest in the property; as there can be no question that ordinarily where the purchaser under an execution acquires merely the equity of redemption in a part of the mortgaged property, he cannot compel the mortgagee to proceed first against the portion of the property which has not been sold; for a purchaser who buys under an execution cannot set up the defence of a bona fide purchase for value without notice of the incumbrance. But a purchaser claiming under a conveyance executed by the mortgagor occupies a very different position, as the vendor prima facie conveys to the purchaser not simply the equity of redemption, but 'the property itself free from any liability to contribute to the mortgage-debt.'"

The cases of 29 Mad. 217 and 6 O.C. 197 advert to this distinction. See also 2 C.L.J. 139-10 C.W.N. 38; 13 Bom. 45; 8 I. C. 1208.]

Ghatwal—Adverse possession—Limitation in suit by landlord against tenant of a permanent tenure—Limitation Act XV of 1877, Sch, 2, Art. 139.

Where a permanent tenure has been granted by a ghatwal, if the successor of such ghatwal, being one of the ghatwals, to whom Regulation XXIX of 1814 applies, wishes to resume that tenure, he must bring his suit within twelve years after succeeding to the ghatwali estate.

The possession of the tenant is adverse to him from the time of the decease of his immediate predecessor.

Article 139, Sch. 2 of Act XV of 1877, regarding suits by landlords to recover possession from tenants giving twelve years' time from the determination of the tenancy, does not apply to cases in which the plaintiff seeks to recover a tenure permanent in its nature and not determinable by notice.

THIS was a suit to recover direct possession in ghatwali right of turuf Lalgurh as part of the Pathrole ghatwali, held by Ram Chunder Singh. The following genealogical table shows the state of the family : —

[412] Digbijoy Singh was the plaintiff's great grand-father, and was ghatwal of Pathrole, one of the ghatwali mehals of Sarut Deoghur, known as a ghatwali of Birbhum, falling under the provisions of Regulation XXIX of 1814. The three defendants in the suit were the widows of Bunwari Lall Singh, who was a grandson of Digbijoy through Kanhya Singh, his second-son.

On Digbijoy's death he was succeeded by his eldest son Gridhari Singh as ghatwal of Pathrole, and he in his turn was succeeded by Bharut Singh and Kharagdhari Singh, who each in their turn hold the estate until their death. Kharagdhari Singh died in Joyt 1272 (May 1864), and the plaintiff being at that time nine years of age, his estate was placed under the Court of Wards, and remained under its management until Bhadro 1280 (August-September 1873). Bunwari Singh died in Assar 1280 (June-July 1873) and the Lalgurh Estate on his death also passed into the custody of the Court of Wards who defended this suit on behalf of the three widows.

The plaintiff contended that the possession of turuf Lalgurh and its villages by the Court of Wards was illegal, as it was a portion of his estate. The defendants alleged that Dighijoy Singh granted the turuf to his son Kanhya Lall Singh in mokurruri for khorposh or maintenance at a fixed yearly rent of Rs. 103-7-6, and doshi salami Rs. 2 more; and the plaintiff, while admitting that during his minority the Court of Wards received rent at that rate, alleged that even if such a mokurruri lease had been granted by Dighijoy, it was not a valid grant, and could not be maintained in law, as no ghatwal had power to alienate any part of his estate.

On the 19th November 1875 the plaintiff sent an application or notice to the Deputy Commissioner for the Court of Wards, asking for the release of the Lalgurh Estate. This was acknowledged, and after certain steps had been taken, the plaintiff was, on the 7th September 1876, referred to the Civil Court. The plaintiff accordingly, after having memorialised the Bengal Government, and being directed on the 8th June 1878 to bring a regular suit if so advised, filed this suit on the 25th June 1879.

Part of Mouzah Modhupore, belonging to turuf Lalgurh, having been taken up for the construction of the East Indian Railway, [413] the Court of Wards, on behalf of the plaintiff, who was then a minor, brought a suit in the Civil Court of Zillah Birbhum, to obtain compensation for the said land. In this case Bunwari Lall Singh, the husband of the present defendants, pleaded that Dighijoy Sing had granted the mokurruri to his son Kanhya Lall Singh. Bunwari Lall died while the suit was pending, but the Subordinate Judge, on the 23rd October 1873, awarded a portion of the compensation to the plaintiff and a portion to Bunwari Lall's widow. On attaining his majority the plaintiff filed an appeal in the High Court against that decree, and it was decided on the 15th March 1875. In that appeal the High Court held that the three widows had no right to hold possession of turuf Lalgurh, and that Dighijoy Singh had no power to grant the mokurruri alleged, and that it was not binding on the plaintiff. The whole of the compensation awarded was accordingly made over to the plaintiff.

In the present suit the plaintiff alleged that his cause of action arose on the 19th November 1875, the date on which the notice was given, and prayed for possession of turuf Lalgurh and for mesne profits from 1282 (1875-76) to the date of the delivery of possession.

The Deputy Commissioner, on behalf of the three defendants under the Court of Wards, set up the mokurruri khorposh lease, and pleaded that it had been created before the permanent settlement, and had ever since been enjoyed as a permanent hereditary tenure by the defendants and their predecessor in uninterrupted descent at a rent which had never been changed; that as the tenure was created before Regulation XXIX of 1814 was enacted, that Regulation did not apply to it; that the plaint showed that the cause of action had arisen more than twelve years ago; and that the plaintiff having attained his majority more than three years previously the suit was barred by limitation; and, further, that the plaintiff had received rent from them and acknowledged the tenure, and consequently ratified the grant of the land made by his ancestor. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff, holding that he was not barred by limitation; that the grant by Digbijoy Singh, whatever it might have been, was not binding on the plaintiff; and that it had not been proved that the plaintiff had [414] ratified this grant. He, however, held that the defendants could not be considered as trespassers, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the mesne profits he claimed. The decree was dated the 26th November 1880, and directed that it should take effect as from the 1st Bysack 1288 (12th April 1881). Against this decree the defendants now appealed to the High Court, and the plaintiff also filed a cross appeal against that portion of the decree which disallowed the mesne profits, and postponed the date from which it should take effect, and also against the ruling that the question of the defendants' title was not res judicata.

The Assistant Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby) and the Senior Government Pleader (Baboo Annoda Pershad Banerjee) for the Appellants.

Baboo Sreenath Dass, Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy and Baboo Koroona Sindhoo Mukerjee for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (TOTTENHAM and BOSE, JJ.) was delivered by Tottenham, J.—The subject of this suit is a property called turuf Lalgurh, etc., which forms a portion of the ghatwali of Pathrole, and this is one of the Birbhum ghatwalis, though it is situated within the Sonthal Pergunnahs.

The plaintiff Ram Chunder Singh is the ghatwal; and the defendants, appellants in this appeal, are the three widows of Bunwari Lall Singh. The object of the suit is to recover from the defendants possession of the property in suit, with a declaration by the Court that the mokurruri khorposh lease alleged to have been granted by Digbijoy Singh to Kanhya Lall Singh, the father of Bunwari Lall, is not binding upon the plaintiff, and that it is invalid in law. The plaintiff further prays for mesne profits from 1282 to 1285 (1875-76 to 1879).

Digbijoy Singh was, in his day, ghatwal of Pathrole, and was the great-grandfather of the plaintiff. The estate of the defendants is under the management of the Court of Wards, and their defence has been conducted by it. It is alleged that the property was granted to Kanhya Lall (who was second son of Digbijoy) as a shikmi mokurruri khorposh tenure, at a rental fixed in perpetuity; that it was created before the permanent [415] settlement; and that it has ever since its creation been possessed as a permanent hereditary tenure by the defendants and their predecessors in uninterrupted descent at a rent which never has been changed.

The plaintiff is fifth in descent from the grantor, but the first defendant's husband was the son of the original grantee. The uninterrupted possession is not disputed, nor is it contended that any of the plaintiff's predecessors ever sought to resume the grant. Plaintiff, when his father died in 1865, was a child of nine years, and his estate was managed by the Court of Wards. During his minority, which terminated in 1873, the Court of Wards recognized Bunwari Lall as holding a valid title; and this suit was not instituted until 1879, nearly six years after the plaintiff's majority.

The suit was tried before the Subordinate Judge of Deogurh, who held that the grant was in its nature one for maintenance and not saddled with any condition as to Police duties; that, whatever, its nature, it was not binding upon the plaintiff; that the plaintiff had not ratified it by any act of his; and that the suit was not barred by limitation. He accordingly gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff for possession, to take effect from the 1st day of the Bengali year 1288 (12th April 1881). He disallowed the claim for mesne profits.

The defendants, having appealed against this decree, the plaintiff has filed a cross appeal as to the mesne profits, and against the lower Court's ruling that the question of the defendants' title is not res judicata in favour of the plaintiff by reason of the decree of this Court, dated the 15th of March 1875, in a suit regarding certain compensation money paid on account of land taken up for the East Indian Railway, where it was determined that Bunwari Lall had no valid right in the lands pertaining to their ghatwali.

The main contention which we have to consider in the appeal of the defendants' is that the suit is barred by limitation, and on the merits it has been urged that the grant to Kanhya Lall was, on various considerations, a valid one, binding upon the successor of the grantor. Obviously we must first deal with the question of limitation. The learned Counsel for the appellants submitted [416] that, inasmuch as the grant had been in force for more than 60 years before the suit was brought, it was protected by s. 3 of Regulation II of 1805; but we think that that Regulation having been repealed, its provisions cannot avail the defendants unless it be shown that, while it was still in force, the defendants had already acquired an indefeasible title by 60 years enjoyment of the property under the grant made by Dighijoy Singh. But the Regulation had already become obsolete when it was repealed by Act VIII of 1868; and, although it was alleged that the grant was made before the permanent settlement, we have no evidence in its favour earlier than a receipt for rent of the year 1211 B.S. (1804—5 A. D.). It has not been shown to us that a good title, by 60 years' possession, had become perfected while the Regulation was still operative; and it apparently ceased to be operative when Act XIV of 1859 came into force in 1862.

But the limitation is pleaded on another ground, viz., that conceding that the plaintiff, as ghatwal, was not bound by the act of his remote ancestor and predecessor, or by the ratification of that act by his more immediate predecessors, still he would be bound to sue to enforce his right to set it aside within twelve years of the accrual of that right, or within twelve years from the date when the possession of the defendants became adverse to him; and for this contention we find authority in Babaji v. Nana (I. L. R., 1 Bom., 535) and in Petamber Baboo v. Nilmony Singh Deo (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 793). The plaintiff's father and immediate predecessor as ghatwal died in 1865, so that the possession of the defendants then became adverse to the plaintiff, and, notwithstanding his minority, which terminated in 1873, limitation then commenced to run, but the suit was not brought until fourteen years afterwards. When the plaintiff reached his majority there were still four years remaining within which he might have brought the suit; but he allowed a further period of two years to elapse, and it lies upon him to show that his suit is not barred by limitation. For the plaintiff it was contended that the suit is not barred because it is one by a landlord to recover possession from a tenant, for which the law allows a period of twelve years running from the date when the tenancy is determined. And it is alleged that the tenancy [417] was determined only in 1875, when the plaintiff refused to accept the rent tendered by the Court of Wards on behalf of the defendants. Plaintiff claims a period of twelve years from 1875; and his suit was brought within four. The lower Court has held that, if the defendants be considered merely as tenants, no question of limitation arises; but that if the title set up by the defendants as mokurruridars gives them a right to plead limitation against the plaintiff, the limitation will run only from the date when plaintiff had notice of the claim to such title, and upon the evidence the Court held that the first notice of it to the plaintiff was in 1875, when the suit for the compensation money above mentioned was brought. Thus it was held that the suit was not barred by limitation.

We think it is clear that the article in the Schedule No. 2 of the Act, which provides for a suit by a landlord to recover possession from a tenant, and gives twelve years from the determination of the tenancy, refers to suits in respect of tenancies in which the leases have expired, and so have terminated, or in respect of tenancies at will terminable by due notice. It does not refer to a suit by which the plaintiff seeks to recover from the holder of a title permanent in its nature.

It is certain that the defendants are in possession of the property in suit by virtue of a title which, if valid, is of a permanent character, not determinable by notice from the plaintiff. If it is not valid, the defendants can only be got rid of by a suit in which they are entitled to plead, and to show that they are protected by the rules of limitation. Then if the plaintiff be considered to be a reversioner, the period of limitation runs from the date when his estate fell into possession, viz., the date of his father's death in 1865, and in this view we should be compelled to say that his suit is too late. It was argued that, as he was formally appointed to be ghatwal only in 1873, after he came of age, the twelve years should be counted from that date; but we are of opinion that this contention is untenable, for he was practically invested with the ghatwali when his father died, and the estate was taken on his behalf under the management of the Court of Wards. The pervana of appointment of ghatwal in 1873 was a mere formal imposition upon him of the duties and responsibilities of [418] the office which during his minority he was incompetent to undertake.

And if the suit be treated as one to which no article of the Schedule specially applies, then it is one which must be brought within twelve years from the time when the possession of the defendants became adverse to the plaintiff; and in such case, too, it is clear that the possession has been adverse from the moment of the plaintiff's succession in the room of his father.

As regards notice to the plaintiff of an adverse claim on the part of the defendants, we think that it is not a case in which any special notice was required. It is not a case as between a zamindar and a ryot who, having been dealt with as an ordinary ryot, sets up a mokurruri claim. Here the plaintiff is a ghatwal, and, ipso facto, claims the right of khas possession of the whole of the ghatwali property. It is not pretended that the defendants or their predecessors were ever considered to be ordinary ryots, or to hold under any title less than that of a mokurruri khorposh grant. We hold, therefore, that there is no valid ground for the contention that limitation did not begin to run against the plaintiff in 1865, when his father, the last ghatwal, died; and we must hold that the suit is barred by limitation, and should have been dismissed on that ground by the lower Court.

This finding makes it unnecessary to inquire further into the validity of the grant made by Digbijoy Lall. We may observe, however, that it could not be affected by Regulation XXIX of 1814, as it was made before that Regulation was passed. Our decision on the question of limitation renders it unnecessary also to dispose of the plaintiff's plea of res judicata.

We reverse the decree of the lower Court, and dismiss the suit with costs of both Court.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[On the point of limitation, this case was reversed by the Privy Council in (1885) 12 Cal. 484, who held that there was no point of time when the possession became adverse. Cf. 27 Cal. 156 (grantee holding for his life). See also 13 Mad. 277; 19 Mad. 243; 22 Bom 893.]

Partition between owners of separate shares in permanently settled estate—Effect of, as against Government.

In the year 1226 F. (1819) a fourteen-anna eight-gunda share of a certain mouzah was permanently settled. The remaining one-anna twelve-gunda share was permanently settled in 1861. This share was sold for arrears of Government revenue in 1873, and purchased by the plaintiff, who subsequently applied to the Collector for partition under the Butwara Act. The Collector refused to partition, upon the ground that the Act was not applicable to the partition of a mouzah held jointly by the proprietors of two separate estates. The plaintiff then brought the present suit, to which he made the Collector a party, to obtain a declaration that he was entitled to have his share separated from the fourteen-anna eight-gunda share by metes and bounds, and also for a decree directing a partition of the whole mouzah into two parts.

Held, that so far as the plaintiff on the one hand, and the owners of the fourteen-anna eight-gunda share on the other, were concerned, the mouzah could be partitioned, but that such partition would not be binding upon the Government unless by consent.

Baboo Saligram Singh for the Appellant.

Baboo Annoda Churn Banerjee for the Respondent.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (MITTER, Offg. C.J., and NORRIS, J.), which was delivered by Mitter, Offg. C.J.—It appears that a fourteen-anna eight-gunda share of a mouzah named Mohamedpur was settled permanently in the year 1226 Fasli (1819). The number of this share of the mouzah in the Collector's Towji is 223. The defendants, second and third parties, are now the owners of this estate. The remaining one-anna twelve-gunda share of the mouzah in question was permanently settled in the year 1861 with Fakir Misser and [420] others. The number of this latter estate in the Collector's Towji is 4,945. In the year 1873, the estate No. 4945 was sold by auction for arrears of Government revenue, and was purchased by the plaintiff.

On the 28th of July 1879 the plaintiff brought this suit for obtaining a declaration that he is entitled to have the one-anna twelve-gunda share of this mouzah separated from the fourteen-anna eight-gunda share by metes and bounds, and also for a decree directing a partition of the whole mouzah into two parts, so that the lands of his estate may be defined as separate and distinct from the estate No. 223, belonging to the second and third party defendants. It appears that before this suit was brought, the plaintiff had made an application to the Collector for the partition of the lands of Mouzah Mohamedpur under the Butwara Act; but the Collector refused the application on the ground that the said Act was not applicable to the partition of a mouzah which is held jointly by the proprietors of two separate estates.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1269 of 1881, against the decree of H. W. Garden, Esq., District Judge of Tirhoot, dated the 2nd of May 1881, reversing a decree of Baboo Koylash Chunder Mookerjee, Second Sub-Judge of Mozufferpore, dated the 30th of March 1880.

The Collector of Durbhungah has also been made a party in this case.

The suit was defended by the Collector on behalf of Government, and by the second party defendant.

The defendant, second party, stated in his written statement that the lands of the plaintiff's estate were separate from the lands of the estate No. 223.

The Collector rested his defence simply upon the ground that the lands of the two estates could not be partitioned under the provisions of the Butwara Law, viz., Beng. Act VIII of 1876.

The Court of First Instance made a decree in favour of the plaintiff, directing that the one-anna twelve-gunda share, belonging to the plaintiff, should be separated from the lands of the estate No. 223. The decree also contained a provision to the effect that the Collector of Durbhungah should be requested to carry out the partition, and that if he refused to do so, the partition should be effected by the Civil Court Ameen in execution of that decree.

Against that decree the Collector of Durbhungah, on behalf of the Government of Bengal, appealed, and the District Judge has dismissed the suit, both against the Government as well as the [421] owners of the estate No. 223, upon the ground that the lands of Mouzah Mohamedpur cannot be partitioned under the provisions of Beng. Act VIII of 1876.

Against the decision of the District Judge, this appeal has been preferred by the plaintiff, and the Collector of Durbhungah, representing the Government of Bengal, is the only respondent who has appeared to oppose the appeal.

We are of opinion that, so far as the plaintiff, the owner of the estate No. 4945, on the one hand, and the defendants, second and third parties, on the other hand, are concerned, there should be a decree for the partition of Mouzah Mohamedpur. It has been found that this mouzah is held by the owners of these two estates in the proportion of one-anna twelve-gundas, and fourteen-annas eight-gundas respectively. It is an ordinary incident of a property held jointly by two or more persons, that there should be a partition by metes and bounds, whenever one or more of the owners desire it. When all the joint owners of a property do not agree in holding it jointly, constant strifes and quarrels are likely to arise. It would be against good morals to compel joint owners to hold property jointly against their will. Therefore, so far as the plaintiff, on the one hand, and the defendants, second and third parties, on the other, are concerned, the District Judge was not right in dismissing the suit for a partition.

The only question upon which we entertain some doubt is, whether the partition should be so effected as to be binding upon the Government. Whatever may be the rights of joint owners inter se, as to the right of partition, we fail to see any tangible ground for laying down that such a right also exists in favour of one of two grantees of a joint estate as against the grantor.

Under the terms of the grant, the grantees have a right to enjoy the property in the estate in which it is granted. They cannot, against the will of the grantor, enforce a partition as against him. It seems to us, therefore, that unless the Government of Bengal, represented by the Collector of Durbhunga in this case, be willing to have a partition of this mouzah effected, the only decree that can be passed in the case is a decree for [422] partition to be binding between the plaintiff and the second and third party defendants.

Having regard to the facts stated in the plaint and established most clearly by the evidence, it seems to us that it will be for the interest of the Government to consent to a partition being made of the mouzah. The estate No. 4945 was, as already stated, permanently settled in the year 1861, and it was within twelve years of that time brought to sale for arrears of Government revenue. It is alleged in the plaint, and proved by the plaintiff, that owing to the lands of this estate being joint with the lands of the estate No. 223, he has not been able to collect even such an amount of rent as would be sufficient to discharge the Government dues. In this state of things it seems to us desirable that a partition should be effected of this mouzah. A partition which may be binding not only upon the present owners of the two estates, but also upon the Government and future auction-purchasers for arrears of Government revenue.

But in our opinion we cannot decree this suit, and direct a partition of the mouzah to be made, so that it may bind the Government, unless the Government withdraw their opposition to the suit and consent to the partition. It is true that we can award a decree in favour of the plaintiff for a partition of the mouzah which will be binding upon the defendants, second and third parties. But it is desirable, if there is any chance of the plaintiff obtaining the sanction of the Government, that the decree for partition should be made with the consent of the Government, so that it may be binding, in future, upon all the parties to this suit.

The plaintiff, as already stated, made an application to the Collector under the Butwara Act, and the Collector refused to effect the partition, because the Act, in his opinion, was not applicable to the facts of this case. We entirely agree in that view of the law; and probably, therefore, the Collector would not be competent, without the sanction of the higher executive authorities, to give his consent, on behalf of Government, to a partition of this mouzah, so as to bind this Government. We, therefore, allow the plaintiff six months' time from this date to take proper [423] steps for obtaining the consent of Government to a partition of this mouzah. On the expiration of that time, the case will be brought up again for final disposal. We reserve the question of costs.

Decree modified.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 27th July, 1882.

MR. JUSTICE WILSON AND MR. JUSTICE MACPHERSON.

Joyunti Dasi.....Plaintiff

versus

Mahomed Ally Khan and others.....Defendants.*

Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 27—Limitation—Suit for possession—Title.

The limitation provisions of s. 27, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, have no application to a case in which the plaintiff relies upon his title and seeks to recover possession upon the strength of that title, and in which the defendant denies that title.

Gooroo Doss Roy v. Ramnarain Mitter (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 628 ; 7 W. R., 186); Nistarinee v. Kali Pershad Doss Chowdhry (21 W. R., 53); and Nilmadhuh Shaha v. Srinibash Kurmoker (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 442) referred to.

THE plaintiff in her plaint in this case stated as follows: "There was a jote in the name of my husband Joy Singh Dey Mondal, comprising puras 17-14-15 cottas of land, minus 1 pura granted as inam (reward), that is to say, puras 16-14-15 cottas of land bearing an annual jumma of Company's Rs. 27-14," within the lakhiraj talook of six of the defendants. "My husband and, after his death, I owned and held possession by payment of the rent of the said 1 pura of land obtained as inam or reward, and puras 16-14-15 cottas by jote right, that is to say, of puras 17-14-15 in all, for upwards of 20 years." The plaint then stated that between the 2nd and 15th December 1875, the defendants, "fraudulently and in collusion with one another," had taken away paddy and mustard seed, also cut and carried away grass and bamboos from the lands claimed, and had thrown down and carried away the materials of some tiled huts which stood on the [424] said land, "and thus dispossessed me from the said puras 17-14-15 cottas of land, and the defendants are now wrongfully and unlawfully enjoying possession of the said land without any right whatsoever." The plaintiff prayed "that my jote right and inam rights to the lands, from which I have been dispossessed, may be declared, and that possession of the same be awarded to me;" and also for damages for the crops carried away.

The Court of First Instance fixed twelve issues:—the first, whether the suit was governed by the provisions of the rent law; the seventh, limitation; and the ninth, "does the land in suit constitute the inam and jote of the plaintiff as alleged by her, and is her allegation of possession and dispossession true." On these issues it was decreed "that the plaintiff's jote right to the land in suit be declared, and that the plaintiff do get possession of the same." The claim for damages was dismissed on the ground of limitation, the plaint not having been filed till the 18th of June 1878. On appeal the Judge said:—

"Plaintiff in this suit, as her pleader now admits, claims nothing more than an occupancy right. Six of the persons she is suing are, she says, her landlords, and she is suing them for recovery of possession as a ryot, who has been illegally ejected by them; and the other six defendants are the agents of her landlords who took part in ousting her. This is a suit then for which s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 lays down one year as the period within which it must be brought. It does not avail to say that the suit also claimed some of the land as inam, and that a claim to moveables was included. Such additional claims would not take the bulk of the claim, if as above, out of the one year rule; and, moreover, all such additional claims have been rejected by the lower Court as untenable; nor can the fact that the appellants have repudiated her claim to be their ryot in any way alter the limitation law applicable to the plaintiff on her own plaint. In the case of Brindabun Chunder Sirkar v. Dhununjoy Nushkur (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 246) (JACKSON and McDONELL, JJ.) it is laid down: 'The right, if any, which the plaintiff had in the present case is created entirely by his continued occupancy of the land. It does not rest upon any grant; it is not in general transferable, and it appears to me that if the tenant desires to maintain that right and have himself replaced in the position which he occupied before ouster, he is bound to bring a suit under s. 27 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, within one year from the date of dispossession. I think, therefore, that the plaintiff's suit in this case ought to fail.' That ruling, it appears to me, is quite conclusive on the subject."

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1915 of 1880, against the decree of T. M. Kirkwood, Esq., Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 4th August 1880, reversing the decree of Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghose, First Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 8th May 1879.

[425] The Judge then referred to Dhurjobutty Chowdhrair v. Chamroo Mundul (25 W. R., 217); Gooroo Dass Roy v. Ram Narain Mitter (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 628; 7 W. R., 186); Nistarinee v. Kali Pershad Dass Chowdhry (21 W. R., 53); and Gunga Gobind Roy v. Kala Chand Surma (20 W. R., 455), distinguishing them from the case first cited, and decreed the appeal. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy and Baboo Rash Behary Ghose for the Appellant.

Baboo Gopaul Lall Mitter and Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and MACPHERSON, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—In this case the District Judge has reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and dismissed the suit, on the ground that it is barred by s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, as not having been brought within a year after the plaintiff was dispossessed.

We are unable to agree with the view taken by the District Judge. It has been repeatedly decided both under s. 23 of Act X of 1859, and under the corresponding s. 27 of Act VIII of 1869, that the one section or the other has no application to a case in which the plaintiff relies upon his title and seeks to recover possession upon the strength of that title, and in which the defendant denies that title.

Such a suit might have been tried in a Civil Court while Act X of 1859 was in force; and such suit is not subject to the limitation laid down by s. 27 of Act VIII of 1869. Gooroo Dass Roy v. Ram Narain Mitter (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 628; 7 W. R., 186); Nistarinee v. Kali Pershad Dass Chowdhry (21 W. R., 53); Nilmadhub Shaha v. Srinibash Kurmocar (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 442).

The decree of the District Judge will be set aside, and the case will go back to be heard in the lower Appellate Court on the merits.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

[426] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 5th December, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Gobind Chunder Addya.....Plaintiff

Afzul Rabbani and another.....Defendants.*

Res judicata—Suit for rent dismissed for default—Subsequent suit for possession—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) ss. 13, 43, 102, 103.

In 1870 two plots of land, numbered 155 and 147, belonging to the same owner, were sold in execution of a decree. The purchaser of plot 155 sold it to A, who in 1873 sued the tenant of a portion of the land for rent. In this suit A prayed that it might be declared that he was the owner. The tenant alleged that B, the purchaser of plot 147, was the owner of the land in respect of which rent was sought to be recovered, and B was made a party to the suit. At the hearing A did not appear, and the suit was dismissed for default. Subsequently A sold plot 155 to the present plaintiff, who now sued for possession.

Held, that the suit was not barred as Res judicata.

Per GARTH, C. J.—The operation of s. 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure is confined to those cases only when a second suit is brought for the same object and cause of action as the suit which is dismissed.

THIS was a suit for possession of certain land together with mesne profits. It appeared that the land in question had originally belonged to one Abdool Hye. On the 5th of February 1870 this land, which was numbered 155, was sold in execution of a decree against one Abdool Hye, and was purchased by one J. S. Leslie. At the same sale another plot of land, also belonging to Abdool Hye, and numbered 147, was sold to one Syed Afzul Rabbani. On the 18th May 1870 Leslie sold the plot No. 155 to one W. W. Linton. In 1873 Linton instituted a suit against one F. W. Harper for the rent of plot 155; the plaintiff in that suit contained the following prayer: "The defendant refuses to admit that the plaintiff is entitled to the said premises or any part thereof. The plaintiff therefore prays that it be declared that the plaintiff is the owner of the said premises." As the defendant Harper repudiated Linton's title to receive rent, and [427] said that the rent of the land was payable to Afzul Rabbani, the Court made the latter a defendant. On the day fixed for the hearing of the suit the plaintiff did not appear, and the suit was dismissed under s. 114 of Act VIII of 1859 for default. On the 7th January 1879 lot No. 155 was purchased at a sale in execution of a decree against Linton by the present plaintiff Gobind Chunder Addya. The plaintiff now sued Afzul Rabbani and Harper for possession of the land, praying for possession of the land and for mesne profits against the first defendant, and for a decree directing the second defendant to pay rent to him.

The first defendant objected that the property in suit did not belong to lot No. 155 but to lot No. 147, and that the claim was barred under ss. 13 and 43 of Act X of 1877, and ss. 6 and 7 of Act XII of 1879.

*Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 596 of 1881 against the decree of J. F. Browne, Esq., Officiating Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 20th January 1881, affirming the decree of Baboo Krishna Mohun Mukerjee, Second Sub-Judge of that district, dated the 11th March, 1880.

Both the lower Courts held that the suit was barred. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The Advocate-General (Offg. Mr. Phillips) and Mr. Iell for the Appellant. Mr. Braunfield and Moonshi Serajul Islam for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (GARTH, C.J. and FIELD, J.)

Garth, C.J.—The plaintiff sues in this case to recover a small piece of ground with the building upon it ; and the suit has been dismissed in the Court below, upon the ground that the plaintiff is precluded by s. 103 of the Civil Procedure Code from bringing it.

It appears that the piece of land, which is the subject of the suit, belonged formerly, together with other land, to one Abdool Hye, and that two several portions of this land were sold under an execution against Abdool Hye on the same day ; one portion, No. 155, was sold to a Mr. Linton ; and another portion, No. 147, to Afzul Rabbani, the present defendant.

The plaintiff in this suit bought Mr. Linton's share at a sale in execution of a decree ; and he claims the piece of land now in suit, as belonging to the portion numbered 155, which Mr. Linton purchased.

On the other hand, the defendant Afzul Rabbani claims it as [428] part of the piece numbered 147, which he purchased ; and he has set up as a defence to the plaintiff's claim a judgment in a former suit which was brought by Mr. Linton for the rent of No. 155 against a person named Harper. That suit was dismissed under s. 114 of Act VIII of 1859, (which corresponds to s. 103 of Act X of 1877) because Mr. Linton did not appear at the trial.

Now s. 103 says, that " when a suit is wholly or partially dismissed under s. 102, " (that is, where the defendant appears, and the plaintiff does not appear) " the suit shall be dismissed ; and the plaintiff shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. "

The defendant here says that the former suit was brought for the same cause of action as this suit, and that therefore the plaintiff is precluded from bringing it.

Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit upon that ground ; and the plaintiff consequently appeals to us.

Now in order to determine whether those Courts were right, we must see what the nature of the former suit was.

It was a suit brought by Mr. Linton, the plaintiff's predecessor in title, against Mr. Harper, for the rent of the piece of land which is the subject of this suit. The defendant pleaded that the present defendant, Afzul Rabbani, was his landlord ; and that the piece of ground belonged to Afzul Rabbani as being part of lot No. 147.

Upon this defence being set up, the Court considered Afzul Rabbani as the person really interested in the dispute, and directed him to be made an intervening defendant. Accordingly Afzul Rabbani, intervened, for the purpose of supporting Mr. Harper's case, that the piece of land formed part of No. 147, and therefore was not Mr. Linton's property.

That suit was dismissed, because Mr. Linton did not appear at the trial ; and in this case the Courts below have held, that as Afzul Rabbani was made an intervening defendant in the former suit for the purpose of having his title to this piece of ground decided as against Mr. Linton, the present plaintiff, who claims under Mr. Linton, is precluded by the result of that suit from trying this [429] suit against Afzul Rabbani ; and it has been argued here that the former suit was not solely for rent, but it was also for a declaration of the plaintiff's title to the land in respect of which the rent was claimed.

We have ascertained what the real nature of the former suit was ; and we find that it was not brought for possession of the land now in question, but merely to recover rent from Mr. Harper, though the plaintiff certainly asked for a declaration by the Court that he was entitled, as against the defendant, to the land of which the rent was claimed.

That being so, I am of opinion that the Courts below were wrong in deciding that Mr. Linton, (or rather the plaintiff in this suit who claims under Mr. Linton) is precluded from bringing this suit to try the title to the land as against the present defendant.

No doubt an issue was raised in the former suit as between Mr. Linton and the present defendant as to the title to the land ; but the suit was not brought against Afzul Rabbani, nor was it brought to try the title to the land, or to obtain possession of it as against him. It was simply brought to recover rent, and to have Mr. Linton's title as landlord declared as against Mr. Harper as his tenant. The question of title to the land as between Mr. Linton and Afzul Rabbani was merely raised incidentally to the main question. The matter is clearly not res judicata ; and I consider the operation of s. 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure is confined to those cases only, where a second suit is brought for the same object and cause of action as the suit which is dismissed.

Applying that principle to the present case, Mr. Linton, or those claiming under him, would no doubt be precluded from bringing a suit for the same rent which was sued for in the former suit ; but he is not precluded from bringing a suit to try the title to the land as against the present defendant.

The judgments, therefore, of both the lower Courts must be set aside, and the case must go back to the first Court to be tried on its merits. The respondent must pay the costs of this appeal, and the costs in the lower Courts will abide the result of the cause.

Field, J.—I also think that this case should be remanded to be tried on the merits.

[430] The facts are very simple : Two lots, numbered respectively 155 and 147, originally belonged to Abdool Hye. These lots were sold in execution on the same day. Lot 155 was purchased by one Mr. Leslie, who sold to Mr. Linton, whose interest was again sold in execution and purchased by the plaintiff in the present case. Lot No. 147 was purchased by Afzul Rabbani, the defendant in the case now before us.

Mr. Harper is a tenant of a portion of the land, as to which there is now a dispute whether it constitutes part of lot No. 155 or lot No. 147. Mr. Linton, believing that it formed part of lot No. 155, sued Harper for rent, relying upon a covenant in the lease, under which Harper held, to pay rent to Abdool Hye and his assigns.

In answer to that suit, it was pleaded that the particular piece of land occupied by Mr. Harper was not part of lot No. 155, but was part of lot No. 147, and that the rent was therefore payable to Afzul Rabbani. It would appear that Abdool Hye, the former owner, had instructed Mr. Harper to pay his rent to Afzul Rabbani.

This being so, it became necessary, in order to decide the suit for rent, to try the question of title ; in other words to try which plot of land contained the one bigha held by Mr. Harper.

The Court in which the rent suit was pending thought fit to make Afzul Rabbani a party to that case. Now this is a course the impropriety of which has been repeatedly pointed out by this Court. However, it was done, and an issue of title was raised, but when the case came on for hearing, Mr. Linton, the plaintiff, did not appear, and the case was dismissed under s. 114 of the old Code, Act VIII of 1859. It is now contended that the present suit, which is a suit brought to establish the plaintiff's title as against Mr. Harper and Afzul Rabbani is barred by the dismissal of the previous suit. This I think it clearly is not. It certainly is not barred by s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the question of title was not heard and decided in that suit; and then as regards the express provision of s. 114 of Act VIII of 1859, which provides that a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed for default shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action, it appears to me that the cause of action in the previous suit was the non-payment of rent, and this is a [431] different cause of action from the cause of action in the present suit.

It is to be observed that the former suit was brought upon a Court-fee stamp assessed according to the value of the rent, and that there was no prayer for possession. It is clear, therefore, that no cause of action arising out of non-delivery of possession was alleged or put forward in the plaint; nevertheless, if the Court had tried the issue of title, the finding upon that issue must have had the effect of res judicata as between the parties, but inasmuch as that issue was not tried, the question raised thereby was not heard and decided, and therefore the matter is not res judicata, having regard to the express language of s. 13 of the Code. The cause of action in the present case is, to my mind, with reference to s. 114 of Act VIII of 1859, clearly distinguishable from the cause of action in the previous case; and the present suit is not therefore barred by the express provision contained in this section, which has moreover since been repealed.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[The dismissal of a suit under s. 102 of the Code of 1882 is not intended to operate in favour of the defendant as res judicata. But when read with sec. 103 of that Code, it precludes a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action, referring, irrespectively of the defence or the relief prayed, entirely to the grounds or alleged media on which the plaintiff asked the Court to decide in his favour:—(1909) 14 C. W. N. 298 (303). See also the Notes to 9 Cal 163.

With reference to GARTH C. J.'s remarks as to sec. 103, Hukm Chand in his C. P. O. (1900) Vol I, p. 713 observes, "The observation was however not necessary for the decision of the case, which turned on the ground that the cause of action in the suit was the non-delivery of possession of the land sued for; while that in the previous suit was the non-payment of rent, and there being no prayer for possession in that suit, no cause of action arising out of non-delivery of possession was alleged or put forward in the plaint. In that suit, the defendant had pleaded the proprietary title of the defendant in the subsequent suit, who thereon intervened, leading to an issue as to title being raised between the parties, but this was only incidental to the claim for rent, and did not affect the cause of action." According to FIELD J. the result would have been different if there had been a finding. The explanation of SANKARAN NAIR J. in (1911) 10 I. C. 75 : 21 M. L. J. 344 should also be noted. He there draws a distinction between cases where there is a finding on the issue and those where there is not; and the bar of res judicata applies to the former class, when the matter raised by that issue was alleged by one party and denied by the other, or should have been so alleged or so denied.

According to him, the bar of res judicata does not arise unless there is an express finding, or such a finding is necessarily implied and involved in the decree in the previous suit.

But the Full Bench in (1913) 23 M. L. J. 543 : (1913) M. W. N. 1 : 12 M. L. T. 500 did not accept Justice Sir SANKARAN NAIR's view.

The judgment of SUNDARA AYYAR, J. in this case criticising SANKARAN NAIR's judgment is the most masterly exposition of the subject of Res judicata by implication, to be found anywhere.]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 27th November, 1882

PRESENT:

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Saraswati Dasi and others.....Defendants

Dhanpat Singh.....Plaintiff.*

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Land Registration Act (Beng. Act VII of 1876), s. 55—Entry in Register, Effect of.

Entries made under Beng. Act VII of 1876 by the Collector recording the names of proprietors of revenue-paying estates are not evidence under s. 35 of the Evidence Act of the fact of proprietorship. That section relates to the class of cases where a public officer has to enter in a register or other book, some actual fact which is known to him, e.g., the fact of a death or a marriage. The entry by the Collector in the register under Beng. Act VII of 1876 is not, properly speaking, the entry of a fact. It is a statement that the person is entitled to the property; it is the record of a right, not of a fact.

Per GARTH, C.J.—Semble, that s. 55 of Beng. Act VII of 1876 constitutes [432] the Collector a competent Court under particular circumstances for determining as between two disputants the question of possession, and his recorded decision upon that question in the register might be evidence of the fact of possession as between those two parties.

Ram Bushan Mahto v. Jebli Mahto (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 853) explained.

THIS was a suit for the possession of two mahals, numbered respectively 412 and 1333. The plaintiff alleged that the mahals in question originally belonged to one Asrafunnissa Begum; that she in the year 1861 mortgaged them to one Hulash Chand, who in 1864 foreclosed, and in 1877 sold them to him. It appeared that the mahal No. 412 was registered in the name of one Rudro Narain, and the mahal No. 1333 in the name of Hulash Chand.

The defendants alleged that Asrafunnissa Begum in 1851 sold her rights in the mahal No. 412 to one Nilmadhub Chowdhry; that Nilmadhub Chowdhry subsequently sold to Rudro Narain, who in 1852 registered himself as the proprietor; that in 1865 the mahal was sold to one Kristo Lall Pari, and in 1872 to one Lokenath Ghose, through whom the defendants derived title. They also alleged that the mahal No. 1333 was sold in 1858 by Asrafunnissa Begum to Rudro Narain, and in 1872 to Lokenath Ghose.

It appeared that the mahals were farmed from 1251 (1844) to 1260 (1853) to one Khudiram Pari. In 1262 (1855) they were let in patni to his representatives, of whom Rudro Narain was one. It also appeared that Hulash Chand, after he had foreclosed, had obtained decrees for the rent of the mahals, and that decrees in 1281 (1874) and 1283, (1876) were satisfied by the defendant Saraswati Dasi, the mother of the infant defendants, or her attorney.

The plaintiff proved his case. The defendants were unable to prove the conveyances by Asrafunnissa to Nilmadhub, or by Nilmadhub to Rudro Narain, but they contended that the fact that Rudro Narain's name was registered, was sufficient evidence to rebut the prima facie case of the plaintiff.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1954 of 1880, against the decree of A.J.R. Bainbridge, Esq., Judge of Moorshedabad, dated the 21st June 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Menu Lall Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 30th December 1879.

Both the lower Courts decided in favour of the plaintiff.

The Defendants appealed to the High Court.

[433] Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Appellants.

Baboo Srinath Dass for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and FIELD, J.) was delivered by Garth, C.J. -- I think there is no ground for this appeal.

The suit was brought by the plaintiff to have his name registered as the owner of two mahals, and he made out his title in this way :

Asrafunnissa was the original owner of the property, and the plaintiff's case was that Asrafunnissa mortgaged it to one Hulash Chand in 1861 ; that Hulash Chand foreclosed the mortgage in 1864 ; and that Hulash Chand then sold it to the plaintiff in 1877 ; and he has proved these facts to the satisfaction of the lower Court.

Then it is also admitted by both sides that one Khudiram farmed the property from 1251 to 1260 ; and that from the year 1262 it has been let in patni to the representatives of Khudiram, and it has been proved that Hulash Chand, under whom the plaintiff claims, sued the representatives of Khudiram for the patni rent and obtained a decree for the years 1281 and 1283, and, moreover, that the amount of that decree was paid by the present defendant or her attorney.

Now this of course is a strong prima facie case made out by the plaintiff. But then it is contended by the learned pleader for the appellant, that the lower Appellate Court has not attached due weight to the case set up by the defendant.

The defendant's case was that one Nilmadhub Chowdhry purchased Asrafunnissa's rights in one of these mahals No. 412 in the year 1851 ; that he sold it to one Rudro Narain on the 30th of January 1852 ; and that Rudro Narain has since been registered as the proprietor.

It is undoubtedly admitted by both sides that for many years the registered proprietor of this mahal has been Rudro Narain ; and the appellant's pleader contended that, although neither the sale certificate of 1251 to Nilmadhub Chowdhry, nor the sale from him to Rudro Narain was proved, the mere fact of Rudro Narain's name being registered as the owner of the property was sufficient [434] evidence of title or possession, or both, to rebut the prima facie case of the plaintiff. And whatever may have been the law previous to the Bengal Act of 1876, it is said that under that Act at any rate enquiries had to be made by the Collector before the registry was made, and that the registration, being the act of a public officer recording the result of those enquiries, would be some evidence of the fact recorded.

I think that the entries in the register can never be evidence of title nor even of possession, except under the circumstances which I shall presently mention.

Let us see how the registry is made under the Act of 1876.

Section 20 provides that until the new registers are prepared under that Act, the old existing registers are to be in force, and by s. 22 "the Board may order new registers to be prepared, whenever it thinks fit ; and such registers are to be prepared from the registers existing at the time of the order, and from entries of subsequent changes in the intermediate registers, and from any other authentic information available to the Collector."

The new registers being prepared in this way, the learned pleader contends that the entries thus made by the Collector, recording the names of the proprietors of revenue-paying estates, are, under s. 35 of the Evidence Act, evidence of the fact of proprietorship. But it seems to me that s. 35 does not say or mean anything of the kind, and I think that it would be a very alarming thing, in the interests of justice, if it did.

That section says, that "any entry in a public or other official book, register or record, stating a fact in issue or relevant fact, and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, or by any other person in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country in which such book, register, or record is kept, is itself a relevant fact."

Now I understand this section to relate to that class of cases where a public officer has to enter in a register or other book some actual fact, which is known to him; as, for instance, the fact of a death or a marriage.

But the entry by the Collector in the register under the Act of 1876, that any particular person is the proprietor of certain land, [436] is not properly speaking the entry of a fact. It is a statement that the person is entitled to the property; it is the record of a right not of a fact; and although for the purpose of making that entry the Collector is sometimes bound to enquire who is the party in possession, it often happens that he makes it without any such enquiry.

If the production of the Register were per se evidence of what it records, that is to say, that such and such a person is the proprietor of certain property, there would never be any necessity, as it seems to me, to resort to other evidence of title. It would be quite unnecessary to prove or produce title deeds. The party who has to make out his case might keep back his title deeds if he has any, and content himself simply with producing an office copy of the register.

No authority has been cited in favour of that position, and speaking for myself I consider that to make such a use of s. 35 would be quite beside the proper object of the section.

I have said, however, that under certain circumstances I think that the register kept under the Act of 1876 might be evidence of possession. We made some observations to that effect in the case of Ram Bushan Mahto v. Jebli Mahto (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 853), which has been referred to by the pleader for the appellants, and I will now proceed to explain what we meant.

Section 55 of Act VII of 1876 provides for cases where there is a dispute between two persons, as to which is entitled to be registered, and the Collector has to ascertain which of those persons is in possession. The section runs thus: "If the applicant's possession of, succession to, or acquisition by transfer of the extent of interest in respect of which he has applied to be registered, is disputed by or on behalf of any person making a conflicting claim in respect thereof, and if the possession of the applicant in accordance with the application is not proved to the satisfaction of the Collector, the Collector shall determine, summarily, the right to possession in respect of the interest in dispute, and shall deliver possession accordingly, and shall make the necessary entry in the registers."

[436] Now that section, as it seems to me, constitutes the Collector a competent Court, under particular circumstances, for determining as between the two disputants, the question of possession; and his recorded decision upon that question in the register might (I do not say it would) be evidence of the fact of possession as between those two parties; but this question does not arise here, and we are not called upon to determine it in the present case.

It is sufficient for our present purpose to say that, as the plaintiff here has made out a prima facie case, the District Judge was right in holding that the defendant had not brought forward any available evidence to rebut it.

The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Field, J.—I also think that this appeal must be dismissed. Both parties admit that the two properties which form the subject of this litigation originally belonged to Asrafunnissa Begum. The plaintiff makes title in this way: He says that those two properties were mortgaged by Asrafunnissa Begum to one Hulash Chand under a mortgage-deed, dated August 1861; that Hulash Chand foreclosed on 29th November 1861, and obtained possession of the properties; and that afterwards Hulash Chand, being in possession, and having a good title, sold them to him, the plaintiff.

This is a good title, and has been satisfactorily proved, and the question is, whether the defendants have proved a better title.

It seems to me that they have not. They also claim under Asrafunnissa. With respect to one property, numbered formerly 412, and recently, 2855, they say that Asrafunnissa Begum's right, title and interest was sold in execution in the year 1851, and was then purchased by Nil Madhub Chowdhry. The sale-certificate, under which Nil Madhub Chowdhry is said to have purchased, has not been produced, and the first link in the chain of title set up by the defendant is therefore wanting.

Then it is said that Nil Madhub Chowdhry sold to one Rudra Narain on the 30th of January 1852. This conveyance also has not been produced, and its non-production has not been accounted for. But the learned pleader for the appellant has [437] contended that this want of direct proof of title is compensated by the fact of Rudra Narain having been registered in the old Collectorate register as the proprietor of the property. Assuming that an entry in the quinquennial register may be relevant to prove any fact which the law required to be stated in that register, I do not see how this will help the defendant, because, as a matter of fact, neither the original register, nor a copy of the entry, has been produced in the present case. The learned pleader for the appellant relies, however, upon the admission that Rudra Narain was registered; but I think that we cannot substitute this admission for the register, or a copy of the register, which if produced would show what fact or facts was or were stated therein. I am not aware that the old quinquennial register required the fact of possession to be inserted therein; and we cannot assume that the entry in the register contained any statement as to Rudra Narain's possession.

Then as to the value of any entry in the register kept antecedent to Beng. Act VII of 1876, I think that its value is not under any circumstances very great, and its value would be particularly small in the present case in which it is sought to substitute this piece of evidence for those documents of title which ought to be, but are not, forthcoming.

It is well known that one of the reasons which led to the enactment of Beng. Act VII of 1876 was that the quinquennial registers kept under the old Regulation contained no legal sanction, and contained no provision which compelled persons succeeding to property by inheritance or transfer to have their names registered. It constantly has happened in the course of my experience that the person registered as proprietor was a person, who died half a century ago ; and the very fact of these registers not being kept up to date, must very much diminish the value of any entry in them as evidence of the possession of any particular person at any particular time.

Under the provisions of the Beng. Act VII of 1876, there are several penalties attaching to non-registration, and there is, therefore, a much stronger presumption that the person whose name appears in the register kept under this Act is the person in [438] possession of the property. The value of an entry in this register certainly of any new entry may, therefore, be different from that of an entry in the register kept under the old Regulation. But even with respect to the Act of 1876, the only question which the Collector is entitled to enquire into is that of possession. He has no jurisdiction to deal with the question of title, which is specially reserved for the decision of the ordinary Civil Courts.

I think that in a case like the present, in which the plaintiff has made out a good title by the production of those documents which he might have been expected to produce, and has also given evidence of possession, the mere fact of registration, which at best is only evidence of possession cannot be taken to constitute a better title—a title, that is, which should overcome and prevail against the title proved by the plaintiff. Therefore, as regards the property numbered 412, there can be no doubt as to the correctness of the decision of the Court below.

Then as to the other property numbered 1333. I find that the Subordinate Judge says that it was conceded that the plaintiff's vendor was the recorded proprietor of the mahal bearing this number in the Collector's register, and this being so, he has, so far as regards registration, all the advantage that this can confer upon the defendants, while he has also proved a good title. He is, therefore, entitled to succeed as to this property also. Under these circumstances the appeal must fail, and be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[This case was dissented from in (1893) 20 Cal. 940 (942); but in 9 C.L.J. 91 it was held that registration of name under the Land Registration Act is evidence of possession but not of title as a proprietor so registered. See also 35 Cal. 120: 8 C.L.J. 245.]

[439] PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 29th June and 15th July, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR R. P. COLLIER, SIR R. COUCH, AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE.

Misir Raghobardial.....Plaintiff

versus

Sheo Baksh Singh.....Defendant.

Res judicata—Civil Procedure Code, Act X of 1877, s. 13—

Competent Court.

The decision of a Court, in order to be conclusive in another Court, must have been that of a Court which would have had jurisdiction to decide the question raised in the subsequent suit in which the decision is given in evidence as conclusive.

The words "Court of competent jurisdiction," used in s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, include the meaning that the first Court must not have been precluded by the pecuniary limit of its jurisdiction from deciding the question raised in the other. The two Courts must exercise such concurrent jurisdiction in regard to the pecuniary limit of their powers that the subject-matter of the second suit would not have been beyond the powers of the Court which disposed of the prior one.

The defence made to a suit on a bond for Rs. 12,000 and interest thereon, in a Court having no pecuniary limit of jurisdiction, was that in a prior suit for Rs. 1,665, balance of interest, brought in a Court with power to try suits not exceeding Rs. 5,000 in value, the principal sum due on that bond had been decided to be Rs. 4,790.

Held, that the issue as to the amount of principal due on the bond had not been heard, and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of s. 13.

APPEAL from a decree of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh (22nd November 1879,) dismissing an appeal from a decree of the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapore (25th February 1879).

This was a question of the application of s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Act X of 1877; it being alleged that the matter directly and substantially in issue in the suit had been similarly in issue in a former suit between the same parties, and had therein been heard and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction.

The Courts, to the decisions whereof this case related, were constituted under the Oudh Civil Courts' Act (XXXII of 1871); [440] establishing, as Courts of First Instance, the following, viz.: The Court of the tahsildar, (with power to try suits up to Rs. 100 in value, extendible to Rs. 500); the Court of the Assistant Commissioner, or Extra Assistant Commissioner, (with powers up to Rs. 1,000, extendible to Rs. 5,000); and the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of the District, or in Lucknow, the Civil Judge, (without pecuniary limit of jurisdiction).

The two suits to which this appeal referred related to a bond for Rs. 12,000 for money lent, with interest at 1-8 per cent., alleged to have been executed by the defendant on the 21st November 1875. The first was brought by the present appellant on the 7th December 1877, in the Court of an Assistant Commissioner for interest due on the balance of an interest account, Rs. 1,665, giving credit for interest paid Rs. 2,475.

For the defence it was alleged that the payment of this latter sum not having been made for interest only, but in part for principal, should have been so credited; and that the principal due or sum originally lent, having been only Rs. 4,192, the credits more than balanced the account.

The Assistant Commissioner, erroneously considering that the pecuniary limit of his jurisdiction, viz., Rs. 5,000, prevented his taking cognizance of the suit (as a question of the actual amount of debt secured by a bond for Rs. 12,000 was raised), on remand from the Commissioner, on this preliminary point, the suit was heard and decided by Extra Assistant Commissioner. An issue as to the amount of the principal due having been fixed, the suit was dismissed, on its appearing that the amount admitted to have been paid, viz., Rs. 2,475, the original debt having been only Rs. 4,192, more than covered the claim.

Pending an appeal to the Commissioner, who afterwards heard and dismissed an appeal from the abovementioned decree, the period of the three years fixed in the bond for the re-payment of the principal expired; and the present appellant, on the 7th December 1878, brought the suit out of which this appeal arose, for principal Rs. 12,000 and interest Rs. 2,435, due on the bond of 1875. The Deputy Commissioner of Sitapore, before whom this suit was brought, gave judgment for the balance of Rs. 4,790, and interest thereon, holding the claim for Rs. 12,000, [441] principal, to be barred under s. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure with reference to the abovementioned suit for interest. He was of opinion that the matter of the consideration given for the bond of 1875 had been directly and substantially in issue in the first suit, and that it had, accordingly, been heard and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction.

An appeal, lying to the Commissioner (the same officer who at that time had heard the appeal in the other suit), was transferred to the Judicial Commissioner by whom it was dismissed on the ground that s. 13 had been rightly applied.

On this appeal,

Mr. J. F. Leith, Q. C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon, appeared for the Appellant.

The Respondent did not appear.

For the appellant it was argued that the determination by the Extra Assistant Commissioner of a question incidental to the decision of the suit in his Court, in other words, the decision by him as to the original debt really due between the parties to the bond, with a view to determining the question of the amount of interest due, did not render s. 13 applicable to the suit before the Deputy Commissioner. The decisions on the former enactment, s. 2 of Act VIII of 1859, were referred to; and the requirement of s. 13 that the decision, in order to be conclusive, must be that of a Court of competent jurisdiction, was insisted upon. The Extra Assistant Commissioner, exercising powers only up to Rs. 5,000, was not a Court competent to finally decide upon a claim of Rs. 14,435. Reference was made to Sukernoonce Debia v. Hureemohun Mookerjee (6 W. R., Civ. Ref., 6); Mussamut Edun v. Mussamut Bechun (8 W. R., 175); Anantha Narayan Appaiyan v. Ganapati Aiyar (2 Mad. H. C. Rep., 469); Aradhun Dey v. Golam Hossein (8 W. R., 487); Mahima Chandra Chuckerbutty v. Rajkumar Chuckerbutty (1 B. L. R. A. C. 1; s.c., 10 W. R., 22); Duchess of Kingston's case and notes thereto (2 Smith's L. C., 778); [442] Barres v. Jackson (1 Phillips' Ch., 582); Chander Coomar Mundal v. Nunnee Khamun (11 B. L. R., 434); Khugowlee Singh v. Hossein Bur Khan (7 B. L. R., 673).

On a subsequent day, their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir R. Couch.—The suit, which is the subject of this appeal, was brought upon a bond, dated the 21st of November 1875 given by the respondent for Rs. 12,000, stated therein to have been borrowed from the appellant, the principal to be repaid within three years, and interest to be paid monthly at the rate of Rs. 1-8 per cent. per month. The three years having expired, the plaint was filed on the 7th of December 1878 in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur. The defendant (the now respondent) pleaded "want of full consideration, and that in a previous suit for Rs. 1,665, interest on this bond, the issue regarding consideration was decided in favour of defendant, the Court deciding that defendant had received only Rs. 4,790 and not Rs. 12,000," which decision was upheld on appeal. Upon this a preliminary issue was framed by the Court as follows : "Is the issue regarding consideration a res judicata (s. 13, Act X of 1877) between the parties?" The decision of the Deputy Commissioner upon this issue was in favour of the defendant, and judgment was given for the balance found to be due of the principal sum of Rs. 4,790 and the interest thereon. From this decree there was an appeal by the plaintiff to the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, who dismissed it, and the plaintiff has appealed to Her Majesty in Council from that dismissal.

The suit for interest was brought in December 1877, in the Court of the Assistant Commissioner of Sitapur, it being alleged that Rs. 4,140 was due for interest on a bond for Rs. 12,000, and it being admitted that the defendant had paid Rs. 2,475, the balance of Rs. 1,665 was claimed. The jurisdiction of the Assistant Commissioner was limited to suits where the amount or value of the subject-matter did not exceed Rs. 5,000, and the defendant objected that, if the plaintiff insisted on the validity of the bond, the case could not be tried before him. The Assistant Commissioner held that the case was beyond his jurisdiction, but [443] upon an appeal to the Commissioner, his order dismissing the suit was cancelled, and it was remanded for trial on the merits. The case was then tried by the Extra Assistant Commissioner, and evidence having been given on both sides, he found that the principal sum due on the bond was Rs. 4,790, and that the plaintiff was entitled to interest thereon, and the plaintiff having admitted the receipt of Rs. 2,475 on account of interest, which exceeded the sum he found to be due for interest by Rs. 822-7-9, he dismissed the suit. An appeal from this decision to the Commissioner was dismissed, and an application made to the Judicial Commissioner to allow an appeal from that order was rejected by him.

The question now before their Lordships depends upon the construction of s. 13 of Act X of 1877. Before considering that question, it will be well to refer to the state of the law in India when that Act was passed. Section 2 of Act VIII of 1859, the Code of Civil Procedure for which Act X of 1877 was substituted, provided that the Civil Courts should not take cognizance of any suit brought on a cause of action which should have been heard and determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction in a former suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they claim. It is clear that this section would not have applied to the present case, the cause of action in the two suits—the non-payment of interest in one and the non-payment of principal in the other—being different. In fact, when the first suit was brought, the cause of action in the second had not arisen. But independently of this provision in the Code of Procedure, the Courts in India have adopted the rule laid down in the Duchess of Kingston's case, and have applied it in a great number of cases. It was recognized as the law in India by this Board in Krugowlee Sing v. Hossein Bux Khan (7 B L. R., 673), where, after quoting the passage in the Duchess of Kingston's case, in which the rule is stated, their Lordships say : "There is nothing technical or peculiar to the law of England in the rule as so stated. It was recognised by the civil law, and it is perfectly consistent with the second section of the Code of Procedure, under which this case was tried."

[444] Mussamat Edun v. Mussamat Bechun (8 W. R., 175) may be referred to as the leading case on this subject. In that case the Chief Justice, Sir BARNES PEACOCK, held that the two Courts must be Courts of concurrent jurisdiction, and "in order to make the decision of one Court final and conclusive in another Court, it must be a decision of a Court which would have had jurisdiction over the matter in the subsequent suit in which the first decision is given in evidence as conclusive." As to what is a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, it is material to notice that there is in India a great number of Courts; that one main feature in the Acts constituting them is that they are of various grades with different pecuniary limits of jurisdiction; and that by the Code of Procedure a suit must be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it. For instance, in Bengal, by the Bengal Civil Courts Act, No. VI of 1871, the jurisdiction of a Munsif extends only to original suits in which the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute does not exceed Rs. 1,000. The qualifications of a Munsif and the authority of his judgment would not be the same as those of a District or of a Subordinate Judge, who have jurisdiction in civil suits without any limit of amount. In their Lordships' opinion it would not be proper that the decision of a Munsif upon (for instance) the validity of a will, or of an adoption, in a suit for a small portion of the property affected by it, should be conclusive in a suit before a District Judge or in the High Court, for property of a large amount, the title to which might depend upon the will or the adoption. Other similar cases are mentioned in the judgment of the Chief Justice. It is true that there is an appeal from the Munsif's decision, but that upon the facts would be to the District Court and not to the High Court. And that the decision should be conclusive would be still more improper as regards many other of the various Courts in India, the qualifications of whose Judges differ greatly. By taking concurrent jurisdiction to mean concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit as well as the subject-matter, this evil or inconvenience is avoided; and although it may be desirable to put an end to litigation, the inefficiency of many of the Indian Courts makes it advisable not to be too stringent in preventing a litigant from proving the truth of his [443] case. It appears to their Lordships that if this case had arisen before the passing of Act X of 1877, the High Courts in India would have rightly held that the decision of the Extra Assistant Commissioner in the first suit was not conclusive as to the amount of the principal sum due on the bond.

Section 13 of Act X of 1877 is as follows:— "No Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been heard and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction, in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title."

The intention seems to have been to embody in the Code of Procedure, by ss. 12 and 13, the law then in force in India, instead of the imperfect provision in s. 2 of Act VIII of 1859. And as the words of the section do not clearly show an intention to alter the law, their Lordships do not think it right to put a construction upon them which would cause an alteration.

The first suit was for Rs. 1,665, for interest only, the principal not being then due, and the matter in issue was whether that sum was due. The plaintiff alleged that it was for interest on a bond for Rs. 12,000, which the defendant denied, and thus an issue was raised as to the consideration for the bond, but this was a collateral rather than a direct issue in the suit. The plaintiff might have succeeded without having a finding upon it if he had proved an admission by the defendant that the sum claimed was due for interest, or had shown that the Rs. 2,475 had been expressly paid on account of the larger sum which he said the defendant owed for interest. If the decision of the Assistant Commissioner is conclusive, he will, although he could not have tried the question in a suit on the bond, have bound the plaintiff as effectually as if he had jurisdiction to try that suit. Their Lordships think this was not intended, and that by Court of competent jurisdiction Act X of 1877 means a Court which has jurisdiction over the matter in the subsequent suit in which the decision is used as conclusive, or in other words, a Court of concurrent jurisdiction. In the judgment delivered by this Board in Khugowlee Sing v.

Hossein Bur Khan (7 B. L. R., 673, at p. 680), it is said that the eadem [446] causa petendi and judgment of a Court of competent or concurrent jurisdiction were both wanting in that case. This seems to show what was considered to be a competent Court. Their Lordships think that s. 13 of Act X of 1877 should be so construed, and consequently they will humbly advise Her Majesty that the orders of both the lower Courts should be reversed, and the suit be remanded for trial on the merits. The respondent will pay the costs of this appeal. Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for Appellant: Mr. T. L. Wilson.

NOTES.

[I. 'RES JUDICATA'—THE CONDITION OF COMPETENCY OF COURTS—THE TEST OF CONCURRENCY OF JURISDICTION—

This case lays down the test to be concurrency of jurisdiction to try the subsequent suit or suit in which the issue arises. This was re-affirmed by the Privy Council in 11 Cal. 301, where, after quoting from this case, their Lordships observed, "If this construction of the law were not adopted, the lowest Court in India might determine finally and without appeal to the High Court the title to the greatest estate in the Indian Empire."

The concurrency of jurisdiction must be as regards the pecuniary limits, (1905) 29 Mad. 65; (1894) 16 All. 183; (1900) 24 Bom. 456; as well as the subject matter:—34 Bom. 589.

The former Court should have been competent not only to try the particular matter in issue in the subsequent suit, but also the subsequent suit itself in which the issue is subsequently raised:—(1908) 35 Cal. 353; 12 C.W.N. 359; 7 C.L.J. 470, distinguishing 28 Cal. 78; 24 Bom. 456.

Execution proceedings are not suits, (1889) 11 Bom. 206. Formerly, it was held by some Courts that appealability and the mode thereof were also decisive tests of concurrency:—29 Mad. 195, overruling 17 Mad. 273; 24 Mad. 444; 27 Mad. 63; following 17 Mad. 168; 15 Bom. 104; 9 Bom. 75; (1891) P. (2) Joinder of unnecessary party.—15 Mad. 494.

II. NATURE OF COURTS

Courts of exclusive jurisdiction, or special Courts invested by the Legislature with powers of final adjudication their judgment will be res judicata:—Wakefield Corporation v. Cooke (1904) A. C. 31 (35); 9 Bom. L. R. 417; 19 All. 101.

Judgments of Courts without jurisdiction do not give rise to res judicata—(1900) P. L. R. 431.

Foreign Court's judgments are within the rule:—(1888) 13 Bom. 224. As regards revenue Courts see (1895) 18 All. 59; (1894) 16 All. 464; (1911) 33 All. 453; (1907) 29 All. 601; 20 Mad. 392; 30 Cal. 339; 24 Bom., 251; 9 Bom. L. R. 1028;

III. RES JUDICATA BY IMPLICATION—

Justice Sir Sankaran Nair in (1911) 21 M.L.J. 344; 10 I.C. 75, laid down that there must be an express finding or necessary implication from the decree to make an issue in the prior suit res judicata. In the course of his reasoning he laid stress on the passage in this judgment where with reference to the issue of consideration their Lordships said, "This was a collateral rather than a direct issue in the suit;" (9 Cal. 415). This judgment was upset on appeal in (1913) 23 M.L.J. 543 (1913) M.W.N. 1; 12 M.L.T. 500 F.B. and the judgment of Sundara Iyer J., is an exhaustive judgment on the whole subject. With reference to this particular argument, he was of opinion that the expression 'direct issue' as opposed to a 'collateral' one was used as in the Duchess of Kingston's case in 'the sense of an issue directly determining the subject-matter of the previous proceedings and not in the sense in which it is obviously used in the Indian Statute'.]

Execution of decree—Limitation applicable to execution of a decree passed previous to the 1st October 1877—Limitation Acts (IX of 1871, Art. 167, and XV of 1877, Art. 179)—General Clauses Consolidation Act (1 of 1868), s. 6, Effect of.

In execution of a decree, dated the 17th January 1877, the judgment-creditor applied on the 13th May 1878 to have the property of his judgment-debtor sold on the 16th September 1878. Subsequently, on the 2nd June 1881, he made a further application to have the decree executed.

Held, that the case was governed by the provisions of Art. 167† of Act IX of 1871, and not by those of Art. 179 of Act XV of 1877, and that as the application had not been made within any one of the periods given in the third column of Art. 167, it was barred by limitation.

Held, also, following Mungul Pershad Ditchit v. Grijā Kant Lahuri (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 51), that although there is no corresponding provision in Act XV of 1877 to that contained in s. 1 of Act IX of 1871 all applications for execution of a decree are applications in the suit which resulted in that decree.

*Appeal from Original Order, No. 60 of 1882, against the decree of Baboo Mohendro Nath Bose, Subordinate Judge of Mozufferpore, dated the 17th of December 1881.

†[Art. 167 :

Held, further, that under s. 6 of Act I of 1868 the repeal of Act IX of 1871 by Act XV of 1877 does not affect any proceedings commenced before the repealing Act came into force.

Ite Ratansi Khatianji (I. L. R., 2 Bom., 148) followed.

[447] THIS was an application made on the 2nd June 1881 for execution of a decree, bearing date the 17th January 1877. On the 13th May 1878 the decree-holder had made an application to the Court for the purpose of bringing the property of the judgment-debtors to sale under the decree on the 16th September 1878, and on the hearing of the present application it was urged on his behalf that the provisions of Art. 179 of Act XV of 1877 applied; and that as the present application had been made within three years from the latter date, he was entitled to have the decree executed.

The lower Court adopted this view, and, after disallowing the objection of the judgment-debtors granted the order prayed for.

The judgment-debtors, accordingly preferred this appeal against that order.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy appeared on behalf of the Appellants.

Baboo Obinash Chunder Banerjee for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—The question in this case is whether the decree obtained by the respondent against the appellants on the 17th January 1877 is barred by limitation. The lower Court has held that it is not barred, because an application had been made by the decree-holder within three years from the present application in order to bring certain property of the judgment-debtors to sale in execution. In its opinion the present case is governed by Article 179 of the present Limitation Act, viz., Act XV of 1877. The words of Article 179, which, in the opinion of the lower Court, save the decree from being barred, are as follows: "The date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court to take some step in aid of execution of the decree or order." The lower Court was of opinion that an application for the sale of a judgment-debtor's property is one that comes within these words.

In the corresponding article of the Limitation Act of 1871, viz., Article 167, these words are not to be found. The appellants [448] contend that the lower Court is in error in deciding the question of limitation according to the provisions of the new Limitation Act. It should have decided it with reference to Article 167 of the Limitation Act of 1871, inasmuch as the decree, which is sought to be executed, was passed when that Act was in force.

The present application for execution was made to the lower Court for the 2nd June 1881, and the present Limitation Act came into force on the first day of October 1877. The question we have to decide is, whether this application is governed by the Limitation Act of 1877 or of 1871. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that this application must be considered to have been made in the suit which resulted in the decree of the 17th January 1877; and that the aforesaid decree not being yet satisfied, the application was made in a proceeding which was pending on the date when the new Act came into operation; and that, therefore, under s. 6, Act I of 1868, the new Act cannot affect the application in question which was made in a pending proceeding. In support of this contention the learned pleader for the appellants has cited before us the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Mungul Pershad Dchit v. Gurja Kant Lahiri (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 51). In that case the decree was passed when Act XIV of 1859 was in force, but the application for execution was made after the Limitation Act of 1871 had come into operation. The question for decision was, whether the application for execution was governed by the Act of 1859 or that of 1871. Their Lordships held that it was not governed by the Act of 1871. "The Act," their Lordships said, "was to come into force on the 1st of July 1871, but it was enacted by s. 1 that nothing contained in s. 2 or in Part II should apply to suits instituted before the 1st of April 1873. It appears to their Lordships that a thing which applies to an application in a suit applies to the suit, and that an application for the execution of a decree is an application in the suit in which the decree was obtained, and that as regards suits instituted before the 1st of April 1873 all applications in it are excluded from the operation of the Act.

There is no provision in the Act of 1877 corresponding to that of s. 1 of the Act of 1871, referred to above by their Lordships [449] of the Judicial Committee. But they hold that all applications for execution of a decree are applications in the suit which resulted in that decree: therefore the application for execution in this case must be considered to have been made in a proceeding which commenced before Act XV of 1877 came into operation. It is true that the Limitation Act of 1871 was repealed by the Act of 1877, but this repeal under s. 6 of Act I of 1868 cannot affect any proceedings commenced before the repealing Act came into operation, there being nothing in the subject or context of the repealing Act repugnant to this provision.

It may be said that the subject of the Act in question is such that it precludes the operation of s. 6 of Act I of 1868; that a Limitation Act is an Act of procedure relating to suits; and that Acts relating to procedure, from the nature of their subject, apply to all pending proceedings from the date when they came into operation.

This question has been fully discussed by WESTROPP, C.J., in Ratanji Kalianji (I. L. R., 2 Bom., 148). After an elaborate discussion of the cases bearing upon the point he came to the conclusion that the rule in question is confined only to the procedure in Courts of Justice, no way prejudicing any of the parties to the suit.

The present application is, therefore, governed by Art. 167 of the Limitation Act of 1871, and as it was not made within any one of the periods given in the third column of that article, it is barred by limitation. We, therefore, reverse the judgment of the lower Court, and decree this appeal with costs.

Appeal allowed.

[430] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 14th December, 1882.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE MITTER.

Koonjo Behary Roy.....Plaintiff

Poorno Chunder Chatterjee.....Defendant.*

*Parties-Principal and Agent—Plaintiff—Gomashta—
Beng. Act VIII of 1869, s. 32.*

Under s. 32 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 a gomashta has no right to bring a suit in his own name. He can only sue in the name of his employer, and conduct the suit for him like any other agent.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of Field, J.—There are two points taken in this appeal, and I think the appellant must succeed upon both. The first point is that Koonjo Behary Roy as gomashta had no right to sue making himself plaintiff, even although it is stated in the plaint that he was suing on behalf of his employer Raj Kisto Mookerjee. In other words it is contended that the name of Baboo Raj Kisto Mookerjee must appear in the plaint as plaintiff, although the gomashta Koonjo Behary Roy may do everything in the suit that a recognized agent may do, regard being had to the provisions of s. 32 of Act VIII of 1869. Now all that s. 32 provides is that "every naib or gomashta thereto specially authorized by any writing under the hand of his employer shall, for the purposes of all suits, etc., be deemed to be the recognized agent of such employer within the meaning of s. 17 of Act VIII of 1859." Section 37 of the present Code corresponds with s. 17 of Act VIII of 1859. Now, it is quite clear that although, under the provisions of s. 36 of the Civil Procedure Code, any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party to a suit, may be made or done by his recognized agent, still it is clear that a recognized agent has no authority to constitute himself the plaintiff and bring the suit in his own name as plaintiff. Section 51 requires that the plaint shall be signed by the [451] plaintiff and his pleader. In the present case the plaint is not signed by Raj Kisto Mookerjee, but it is signed by Koonjo Behary Roy only. It is clear, therefore, that Koonjo Behary Roy, although he sets out in the plaint that he acts for his employer, was the real plaintiff. It is to be observed that the provisions of s. 69 of Act X of 1859 were different from the provisions of s. 32 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869, the former provisions appearing to contemplate the institution or defending of suits by naibs, gomashtas, etc., in the name and on behalf of their employers. In Beng. Act VIII of 1869 there is one section which allows agents of a certain class to bring suits in their own name, that is s. 24, which provides for all suits which under the provisions of this section may be brought by or against zamindars, or other persons in the receipt of the rent of land, being brought by or against surbarakars or tehsildars of estates held under khas management. It is clear from the distinction in language between this section and s. 32 that the latter section does not contemplate that a naib or gomashtha should bring a suit in his own name. All that the section permits him to do is to do anything that a recognized agent may do under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it has already been pointed out that a recognized agent is not competent to bring a suit in his own name.

* Appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent against the decree of Mr. Justice Field, dated the 28th June 1882, in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 792 of 1881.

The plaintiff appealed under s. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Bahoo Taruck Nauth Sen for the Appellant.

Bahoo Bipro Doss Mookerjee and Bahoo Grija Sunker Mozoomdar for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MITTER, J.), was delivered by Garth, C.J.—We think that the learned Judge is quite right.

Under s. 32 of the Rent Law a gomashtha has no right to bring a suit in his own name. He can only sue in the name of his employer, and conduct the suit for him like any other agent.

It has been contended, indeed, that he did bring this suit as [452] agent, and that the plaint should be read in that sense; but it is difficult so to construe the language, and when we look at the verification of the plaint, it is clear that the gomashtha describes himself, and not his employer, as the real plaintiff.

This appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 23rd November, 1882.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Ramdut Sing.....Defendant

Mahender Prasad and others.....Plaintiffs.*

Hindu Law—Joint family—Mitakshara—Decree against the father of a joint family for lawful debts—Sale of the whole joint estate in execution of decree against one co-sharer.

A, a judgment-creditor, having obtained a decree against B, the father of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, in a suit to which the sons of B were not parties, but in which it was proved that the debt had been incurred for lawful purposes, proceeded to execute his decree by attaching and selling the joint family property. Thereupon the sons came in and objected to their interest in the property being sold in execution of a decree in a suit to which they were not parties, and, on their objection being disallowed, filed a suit against A and B to have it declared that their interest in the property was not liable to be sold to satisfy the decree.

Held, that the debt in respect of which the decree had been passed having been contracted for lawful purposes, the judgment-creditor was entitled to execute his decree against the whole of the joint family property.

Held, also, that the ruling in the case of Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (1. L. R., 3 Cal., 198) had no application to the facts of this case.

THIS was a suit brought by the sons against the father of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law, and a person named Ramdut Sing, who had obtained a decree against the father in a suit upon a bond.

[453] Ramdut Sing had, on the 30th June 1867, advanced to Ram Narain Lal (the father) certain moneys upon the security of a bond to enable him to pay off a decree then outstanding in the hands of one Thakur Ram Sing. Subsequently Ramdut Sing brought a suit upon the bond against Ram Narain Lal and obtained a decree, and in execution thereof he proceeded to attach and sell the joint family property belonging to Ram Narain Lal and his sons, the present plaintiffs. In these execution proceedings the plaintiffs came in and objected to the sale of the entire family property, but their objection was disallowed by the Court executing the decree. Thereupon they instituted the present suit against Ramdut Sing and Ram Narain Lal, and sought to have it declared that they were entitled to joint possession of the lands in question after excluding their father's share, which they alleged was alone liable to be sold in execution of the decree against him, and they also prayed for the cancellation of the order in the execution proceedings by which their share also in the property was ordered to be sold.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1624 of 1881, against the decree of J. F. Stevens, Esq., Officiating Judge of Sarun, dated the 27th June 1881, modifying the decree of Baboo Ramyad Lal, Munsif of Sewan, dated the 31st March 1881.

The first Court found as a fact that the money advanced by Ramdutt Sing upon the bond was advanced for and spent on lawful objects, as it had been obtained by Ram Narain Lal for the purpose of paying off a decree then outstanding against him in respect of a debt incurred by him to defray the marriage expenses of his sons. The Court accordingly dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiffs were liable for their father's lawful debt, and held that the suit had been brought by the plaintiffs in collusion with their father in order to deprive the creditor of the means of satisfying his decree.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the case was governed by the decision in Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Sing (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198), and that the sons, not having been joined as party defendants in the suit against their father, all that the judgment-creditor could attach, or was entitled to sell under his decree, was the right, title and interest of the father in the joint family property. It accordingly modified the decree of the lower Court by setting aside the order in the execution proceedings, disallowing the plaintiff's objection, and declared that nothing but [454] the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor Ram Narain Lal was liable to sale in execution of the decree against him. The claim for confirmation of possession over a specified portion of the joint family property after excluding the share of Ram Narain Lal was disallowed. Against this decree the defendant Ramdutt Sing preferred a special appeal to the High Court.

Baboo Hury Mohun Chuckerbutty appeared for the Appellant.

Baboo Nil Madhub Bose for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ.) was delivered by

Mitter, J.—In this case the District Judge has reversed the decree of the Court of First Instance, wholly relying upon the Privy Council ruling in the case of Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198). It appears to us that this ruling has no application to the facts of this case. Here the creditor, the appellant before us, sued the father of a joint Mitakshara family upon a bond executed by him, obtained a decree, and in execution of that decree attached the family property. Thereupon the sons intervened and objected to the sale of the entire family property; their objection was disallowed by the execution Court. Thereupon, before the sale was brought about, the present suit was brought by the plaintiffs, the sons, to obtain a declaration that their interest in the family property is not liable to be taken in execution of the decree against the father. The Court of First Instance held that it was not proved that the bond debt was contracted for immoral purposes; on the other hand the finding is that it was contracted for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the marriage ceremonies of some of the plaintiffs. Upon that finding of fact the lower Court dismissed the suit, and so far as that finding is concerned, it has not been set aside by the lower Appellate Court, but the lower Appellate Court thinks that upon the facts found the ruling in the case of Deendyal Lal applies. It is quite clear that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is erroneous; the ruling in Deendyal Lal's case only applies where the father's interest alone is sold in execution of decree. In this case the plaintiffs, the sons, are seeking to establish the [455] non-liability of their interest in the family property to sale in execution of a decree against the father, and they must make out that the debt which was the basis of the decree was contracted for immoral purposes. As upon that point the finding of the Court of First Instance is against them, and that finding has not been set aside by the lower Appellate Court, it appears to us that the suit was rightly dismissed by the first Court. We accordingly reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the Court of First Instance with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 22nd September, 1882

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Roghuni Singh and others

versus

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), ss. 119, 323—Evidence—Statements of witnesses to a Police Officer during an investigation—Refreshing memory—Medical witnesses, evidence of—Opinion of experts how elicited—Examining at Sessions trial Medical witness who has been examined before the Magistrate Post-mortem examination reports.

In giving evidence a Police officer may refresh his memory by referring to documents in which he has under s. 119 of Act X of 1872 reduced into writing statements of persons examined by him during an investigation, but the documents themselves cannot be used as evidence, and a Judge should not read such documents to a jury in order to point out discrepancies between the evidence and previous statements of the witnesses.

The evidence of a medical man who has seen, and has made a post-mortem examination of the corpse of the person touching whose death the inquiry is, is admissible. firstly, to prove the nature of injuries which he observed ; and, secondly, as evidence of the opinion of an expert as to the manner in which the injuries were inflicted, and as to the cause of death.

A medical man who has not seen the corpse is only in a position to give evidence of his opinion as an expert. The proper mode of eliciting such evidence is to put to the witness hypothetically the facts which the evidence of the other witnesses attempts to prove, and to ask the witness's [456] opinion on those facts. Section 323 of Act X of 1872 does not in any way preclude the Judge at a Sessions trial from calling and examining the medical witness who has been examined before the Magistrate, and in every case in which the deposition taken by the Magistrate is essentially deficient or requires further elucidation, such witness should be called and examined by the Sessions Judge.

* Criminal Appeal, No. 508 of 1882 against the sentence of H. Beveridge, Esq., Sessions Judge of Patna, dated the 25th August 1882.

A medical man in giving evidence may refresh his memory by referring to a report which he has made of his post-mortem examination, but the report itself cannot be treated as evidence, and no facts can be taken therefrom.

THE facts of the case are stated in the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. Branson, Mr. M. M. Ghose, and Baboo Unakali Mookerjee for the Prisoners.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Kilby) for the Crown.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Field, J.— This is an appeal from a sentence passed by the Sessions Judge of Patna upon three persons, Roghuni Sing, Ram Charan Singh, and Kanya Singh, who have been convicted, the first mentioned of murder, and the other two of abetment of murder, and have all three been sentenced to transportation for life. Two other persons, namely, Ram Lal and Bhoran, were tried, together with the appellants before us, and were acquitted by the unanimous verdict of the jury.

The prisoners, appellants, have been convicted by a majority of three out of five jurors.

It appears that the jury retired for eight minutes only, and in this case I desire to observe that this time was insufficient to enable the jury to consider the evidence, and deliberate thereupon amongst themselves.

The facts of the case for the prosecution are briefly these: Two persons, Radha Singh and Mewa Singh, were said to have taken a lease of some 10 bighas 13 cottahs of land from one Lakhon Mahton, ijaradar. On the morning of Monday, the 24th July 1882, these two persons, Radha Singh and Mewa Singh, went to a portion of the land consisting of some 10 cottahs, taking [457] with them three labourers, namely, Sukun, Gania and Badhan Mahton for the purpose of transplanting paddy plants. There can be no doubt that between Radha and Mewa on the one side, and Ram Lal on the other side, there had been previous litigation and dissension. The story of the prosecution is that about mid-day Ram Lal and Bhoran came and ordered Radha Singh and Mewa Singh and their workmen to desist and then went off, giving orders to the prisoners Roghuni Singh, Ram Charan Singh, Kanya Singh and others to beat Radha Singh and Mewa Singh, and their people, if they did not desist. There is no suggestion that Ram Lal and Bhoran were on the spot when the subsequent occurrence took place. It is then said that Gania and Sukun desisted from work, but that Badhan Mahton still went on working, whereupon Roghuni Singh, Ram Charan Singh and Kanya Singh came over, and Roghuni Singh struck Badhan on the head with a lati. Ram Charan Singh then struck him on the side of the temple, and Kanya Singh struck him on the side. There can be no doubt that Badhan Mahton died from congestion of the brain in consequence of having been struck on the head with some hard substance.

Now the case for the prosecution is that this hard substance was a lati, and that this lati was in the hands of the prisoner Roghuni Singh. The case for the defence on the other hand is, that the injuries to Badhan's head were not, and could not have been, inflicted by a lati, but that they were inflicted by a wooden instrument called an Arhan, and that Radha Singh himself had struck Badhan Mahton with this wooden instrument while aiming a blow at one of the opposite party, which missed him, and came down on the head of Badhan Mahton who was sitting down working transplanting the paddy plants. No witnesses were called in the Court of Session to prove the case set up by the defence, and we have to consider only the evidence for the prosecution, and the manner in which that evidence has been dealt with by the Sessions Judge.

It is to be observed, however, that the prisoners, in their statements before the Court of Session, alleged that they seized Radha Singh, and took him to the Cutchery close by, where the jemadar of police was staying, and charged him, then and there, [458] with having caused the death of Badhan. Now, although the jemadar examined most of the other persons who were present on the scene, he did not examine Radha, and this does seem to show that at that particular time Radha did not occupy the position of a witness.

A number of objections have been taken before us to the evidence produced at the Sessions trial, and the manner in which that evidence was dealt with by the learned Judge in his summing up to the jury. I propose to deal only with two of these objections. The first is concerned with the observations which the Judge made to the jury as to the discrepancies between the account given by the witnesses in the Court of Session, and the previous account of the transaction given by them to the police jemadar.

I observe that the Sessions Judge read out to the jury the depositions or statements of the witnesses which were recorded by the police jemadar. I think that this was not a proper course. Section 119^a of the Code of Criminal Procedure provides that these statements shall not be signed by the person making them, nor shall they be treated as part of the record or used as evidence. It is, therefore, perfectly clear that these statements are not depositions, do not prove themselves, and cannot be treated as evidence. They might have been used by the police officer to refresh his memory. But even if this were done, the evidence given by the police officer after so refreshing his memory from these statements, and not the contents of the statements themselves, would have been the relevant evidentiary matter. There can be no doubt that the account given by the witnesses to the jemadar, and the account given by them at the trial, very materially vary. The Sessions Judge with reference to this said to the jury : —

“ Undoubtedly the discrepancies between the statements to the jemadar and those now made were a matter for serious consideration. The statements to the jemadar were recorded by him on the day of the occurrence, and if he had correctly taken them down they were more likely to be truthful than those made in Court a month afterwards. Now there were two suppositions which might be made as to the discrepancies. The first was that the jemadar had not accurately taken down the statements. The other was that the witnesses had really not mentioned Ram Lall and [459] Bhoran as giving the orders, and that the present statement to that effect and other alterations from the former statements were subsequent inventions of the witnesses. As regards the first supposition it was no doubt the case that the police did not always record statements correctly. This might arise from dishonesty and collusion, and it was evident in this case that the wealth was on the side of the prisoners. Some of them were zamindars and mukarardars, while Mewa Singh and Radha Singh were poor men who had been sold out of their lands and almost out of their houses : or there might be mere neglect or stupidity without dishonesty.”

* [Sec. 119 —An officer in charge of a Police-Station, or other Police officer making an investigation, may examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case, and may reduce into writing any statement made by the person so examined. Such person shall be bound to answer all questions relating to such case put him by such officer other than questions criminating himself.

Proviso.

No statement so reduced into writing shall be signed by the person making it, nor shall it be treated as part of the record or used as evidence.]

I think that it was improper to suggest to the jury that the fact of wealth being on the side of the prisoners might have influenced the police jemadar in recording the statements made to him by the witnesses, there being no evidence on the record that the prisoners or any persons on their behalf attempted to tamper with the police jemadar.

The second objection is that the Sessions Judge was wrong in calling Dr. Shaw, the Civil Surgeon, to contradict the deposition of the Assistant Surgeon Moulvi Asder Ali Khan. It is further said that, even if Dr. Shaw's evidence could have been admissible, it ought not to have been admitted without calling the Assistant Surgeon, and giving him an opportunity of explaining more fully the reasons for the opinions expressed in his deposition. The essential part of the deposition of the Assistant Surgeon is as follows :—

“The skull was fractured from the left temporal bone across the parietal bone, and the fracture was terminated at the end of the sagittal suture. The fracture was about four inches long. There was also a superficial wound a little above the left temporal region about two inches above the ear. Underneath this wound there was no fracture. This was a slight superficial wound. There was also an abrasion below the right ear; this was very slight and superficial. Neither of the ears were hurt. On removal of the scalp I found a patch of extravasated blood about 4 inches long and $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 inches broad just above the fracture.” And further on : “In my opinion one blow caused the fracture. Any flat substance would have caused that fracture. Under no circumstances would a lati cause such a fracture, because a lati would have cut open the scalp and would not have caused such a wide-spread extravasation of blood. Neither of these two *lati*s in Court could have caused the fracture. I examined the body thoroughly, but found no other hurt. The hurt above the left temporal region and the abrasion below the right ear could not have been caused by these *lati*s in Court, or any ordinary lati. The abrasion below the right ear may have been due to a fall, no lati whatever would have caused it.

[460] Dr. Shaw was called as a witness, and the following question was put to him by the Sessions Judge :—

Question.—“The Assistant Surgeon of Barh has stated in his evidence that the skull was fractured from the left temporal bone across the parietal bone, and the fracture was terminated at the end of the sagittal suture. The fracture was about four inches long. He has also said that no *lati*s could produce the said fracture, because a lati would have cut open the scalp, and would not have caused such a wide-spread extravasation of blood. Can you state if in your judgment this opinion of the Assistant Surgeon is correct?”

Answer.—“In my opinion, the opinion of the Assistant Surgeon is not correct. A blow from a lati might be given with sufficient force not to wound the scalp at all. Besides, the superficial wound described by the Assistant Surgeon in his report as half an inch long and a little above the left temporal region corresponds with the fracture, for he goes on to say that on removing the scalp the skull was found cracked running from about two inches above the left meatus across the temporal bone, the parietal, backwards and upwards, terminating at the sagittal suture. Judging from this the superficial wound corresponded to the upper third of the fracture. A fracture may extend further than the external wound. The Assistant Surgeon is also not correct in stating that there could not be an extravasation of blood, 4 inches long and $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches broad, caused by a round lati. Unless the wound has a particular appearance you cannot tell from a fracture whether it was caused by a flat board or a round lati. The *lati*s in Court could have produced a wound like that described by the Assistant Surgeon.”

There can be no doubt that Dr. Shaw in this deposition based his opinion in many important respects not upon the facts which the Assistant Surgeon stated, but upon facts somewhat, and in one respect essentially, different.

The Assistant Surgeon stated in his evidence that underneath the wound, that is the superficial wound above the left temporal region, there was no fracture. Dr. Shaw by a course of reasoning arrived at a different fact, namely, that "the superficial wound corresponds to the upper third of the fracture"; and upon this different fact in part bases his opinion. Then Dr. Shaw refers to the "report," that is the report of the post-mortem, written in the form usually filled up by Civil Surgeons at the time of making the post-mortem examination. Now this report was not evidence, and, therefore no facts, [461] could have been taken therefrom. The Assistant Surgeon might have used this report to refresh his memory when giving evidence; but the report itself was not admissible in evidence.

But there is a still further and a more important consideration. The Assistant Surgeon had actually seen the dead body, and had performed the post-mortem examination; and his evidence, as that of a medical expert was, therefore, admissible, first, to prove the nature of the injuries which he observed on the dead body; and, secondly, as opinion-evidence with respect to the manner in which those injuries were inflicted, and the cause of death. Now Dr. Shaw had not seen the dead body, and had not made the post-mortem examination, and the difficulty in which he felt himself placed appears from what he says in a subsequent part of his deposition, namely:

"It is difficult for me, without having seen the fracture, to form any definite conclusion about it. Reading a description would not help me so much as actually seeing the thing."

Dr. Shaw was in the position of an expert witness who could give nothing but opinion-evidence. The general rule as to evidence of this kind is that the questions must be put to the witness hypothetically, put in this way:

"Assuming such and such facts to be true, what is your opinion on the matter?"

"Assuming such and such an injury, an injury of such and such a kind to have been inflicted, what is your opinion as to the nature of the weapon by which it was possibly or probably inflicted?"

The facts thus hypothetically stated to the witness would of course be the facts which the evidence of the other witnesses in the case attempted to prove, and as to which it was for the jury to find whether they had been proved or not. If in this particular case the Sessions Judge of Patna had put the question to Dr. Shaw, assuming the injuries deposed to by the Assistant Surgeon, and had asked Dr. Shaw his opinion as to the weapon by which these injuries might or could have been inflicted, there might perhaps have been no valid objection to the evidence. But even if this course had been pursued, I think that having regard to the importance of the question at issue, it would have been only fair to the prisoners to put the Assistant Surgeon into the witness box, and give him an opportunity of stating his reasons for the positive assertions contained in his deposition. I may [462] observe that although s. 323 of the Code of Criminal Procedure allows the examination of a Civil Surgeon, taken and duly attested by a Magistrate, to be given in evidence in the Court of Session, it does not in any way preclude the Sessions Judge from calling the Civil Surgeon and examining him. And this course ought to be pursued in every case in which the deposition taken by the Magistrate is essentially deficient or requires further explanation or elucidation. Unfortunately, however, Dr. Shaw was not questioned in the manner just indicated; and he was asked to sit in judgment upon the Assistant Surgeon; asked substantially to exercise the functions of the jury in forming an opinion upon the credibility of the Assistant Surgeon's evidence. I think that this course was essentially an erroneous one. If the Assistant Surgeon had been placed in the witness box, and allowed to give his reasons for the views contained in his deposition, he might have stated further facts, observed upon the post-mortem, which would strongly support the correctness of his views, or under further examination he might himself have seen reason to modify the positive opinion expressed by him before the Magistrate, and if Dr. Shaw had been questioned, assuming the facts to be as stated by the Assistant Surgeon, this gentleman also might have stated the reasons for his views. If as the result there was any substantial difference of opinion between the Civil Surgeon and the Assistant Surgeon, the jury would have been in a position to judge for themselves which view appeared to them most likely to be correct. I think that having regard to the great materiality of the question as to the weapon used, it is impossible to say otherwise than that the prisoners have been prejudiced by the manner in which the medical evidence was dealt with by the Judge and placed before the jury. Under those circumstances I think that this conviction must be set aside.

I have carefully considered the further order which ought to be passed in this matter, and I think that there ought to be a new trial. The prisoners called no witnesses to support the case set up by them; and, this being so, I cannot feel satisfied that their defence is so extremely probable as to make it undesirable in the interests of justice that they should a second time undergo a trial upon the serious charges preferred against them. I think [463]. I ought to point out that while two of the prisoners Ram Charan and Kanya have been convicted of abetting murder, there is nothing to be found in the Judge's charge explanatory of the law of abetment, and it does not appear what particular conduct on their part was considered to amount to abetment within the definition under s. 107 of the Indian Penal Code.

Re-trial ordered.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 30th November, 1882.

PRESENT.

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Ram Chunder Poddar and others.....Defendants

versus

Haridas Sen.....Plaintiff.

Hindu Law—Widow's estate—Conveyance by presumptive heir—Ratification by widow—Effect of witnessing deed on rights of witness—Res judicata.

During the lifetime of a Hindu widow, her son, the then presumptive heir to the property of which she was in possession, conveyed it to purchasers by deeds to which she was not a party. Subsequently she by separate deed ratified the conveyances. This deed was witnessed by a more remote reversioner. The son died during the lifetime of his mother, and the witness to the deed of ratification became the next reversionary heir.

Held, in a suit by him after the widow's death for possession, that at the time of the conveyances the son had a mere contingent reversionary interest in expectancy, and that the subsequent ratification by his mother could not operate as a surrender of her estate so as to change the conveyances, and make them enure as absolute conveyances, but could only amount to a conveyance of her interest.

Held, also, that the fact that the reversionary heir witnessed the deed of ratification, did not in itself amount to evidence of consent to it on his part.

A Hindu widow and her son, she then presumptive heir to property claimed by the widow, obtained a decree against a more remote reversionary heir. The son predeceased his mother, and the person against whom the decree had been obtained became the next reversionary heir.

Held, in a suit for possession by him, that the decree in the previous suit did not operate as a res judicata.

[464] THIS was a suit to recover possession of a share in certain talooks.

One Durpo Narain Roy died leaving three sons, Shib Das, Kali Das, and Kasi Das Roy. Shib Das died leaving a son Durga Das, who died leaving two sons, Hari Das, the plaintiff, and Rutneswar. Kali Das died leaving a daughter Monikornika, and a grandson Kashi Kishore, who predeceased his mother. Kashi Das died leaving a son Dabi Das, who died without issue.

On the 25th Magh 1256 (8th February 1850) Kashi Kishore sold the property in dispute to certain persons, the predecessors of the defendants. Monikornika was not a party to the deeds by which the property was conveyed but on the 8th Assin 1263 (22nd September 1856) she ratified the conveyance by a separate deed. This deed was witnessed by the plaintiff.

It appeared that previously to the time when the conveyances were made by Kashi Kishore, Monikornika and he had sued, among other persons, the plaintiff, to recover possession of the property sought to be recovered, and had obtained a decree. Monikornika died in 1879, leaving the plaintiff and Rutneswar her surviving, and without leaving any issue. Kashi Kishore having died during her lifetime the plaintiff now sued as reversionary heir of Monikornika's father Kali Das, to succeed to a moiety of the property held by Monikornika. The defendants contended that the sale by Kashi Kishore was for necessary purposes, and that the plaintiff and Monikornika consented to it. They also contended that the plaintiff had ratified the sale by witnessing the deed of the 8th Assin 1263 (22nd September 1856); and further that the plaintiff was barred by the decree in the suit against him by Monikornika.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that Kali Kishore had a good title to convey, and that the plaintiff had ratified the conveyance by Kashi Kishore. On appeal the District Judge reversed this decision, holding that Kashi Kishore had no right to the property, and that he could execute no valid conveyance of it. He also held that the fact that the plaintiff witnessed the deed of the 8th Assin 1263 (22nd September 1856) did not amount to a ratification. The defendants appealed to the High Court.

[465] Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy and Baboo Lall Mohun Doss for the Appellants.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered:—

Garth, C.J.—These suits were brought by two different plaintiffs to recover two several portions of the same property. They were dealt with by the Courts below in one judgment, the plaintiff's claim being dismissed in each case by the Subordinate Judge, and decreed by the District Judge.

I propose to deal with one of the suits only, No. 529, and the same judgment will dispose of them both.

The plaintiff in that suit is Hari Das Sen. He claimed as the reversionary heir of one Kali Das Roy, and he says that his title accrued upon the death of one Monikornika, who was the daughter of Kali Das Roy. She died in 1879.

There is no doubt that the plaintiff was the reversionary heir of Kali Das Roy.

The defendants claim the property under two kobalas, dated the 25th Magh 1256 by which the property was conveyed to the predecessors of the defendants by a person named Kali Kishore Das, who was the son of Monikornika; and who, at the time when the conveyance was made, was the presumptive heir to the property; that is, if Monikornika had died at that time, he would have been the reversionary heir of Kali Das Roy.

The District Judge has decided that the defendant's predecessors in title took nothing under these kobalas, because Kali Kishore had at that time merely a contingent reversionary interest in the property, and he afterwards died or disappeared; so that at the time of Monikornika's death Kali Kishore was not forthcoming as the reversionary heir.

The learned pleader for the appellant has attempted to meet this difficulty in two ways.

In the first place he says that at the time when Kali Kishore executed these kobalas, he and Monikornika had brought a suit to recover possession of the property against several defendants, and amongst them, against the present plaintiffs; and as a decree was obtained by Kali Kishore and Monikornika in that suit [466] against all the defendants, it must be taken as against the present plaintiffs that they had a joint interest in the property, or at any rate that Kali Kishore had some substantial interest in it at that time; and that the decree operated as a res judicata between the parties to establish such an interest.

But upon looking into the proceedings in that suit, we find it clearly shewn that Monikornika was the person then entitled to the property as the daughter of the former owner, Kali Das Roy, and that Kali Kishore was her son; and there is nothing in the judgment to lead us to suppose that the Court intended to find a different state of things.

It is probable that Kali Kishore was made a party to that suit, because he had been put into possession of the property by Monikornika as her agent and manager, and it was thought advisable to make him a party in that character; or possibly he may have been made a plaintiff, because he was presumably at that time the reversionary heir; but in either case the mere fact of his being made a plaintiff, and recovering a decree against the present plaintiffs in conjunction with Monikornika, does not debar us from ascertaining in this suit what his and Monikornika's respective interests really were.

Now it is clear that Kali Kishore had no interest in the property at that time, except a possessory interest as manager, and a contingent reversionary interest after Monikornika's death. The decree, therefore, does not assist the defendants' case.

The appellant's pleader then relies upon another piece of evidence, a deed, which is called a deed of ratification, made to the defendant's ancestors by Monikornika herself on the 8th of Assin 1263. By that deed Monikornika professed to ratify the kobala that had been made by Kali Kishore in 1256; and it is said that the ratification, coupled with the deed of 1256, had the effect of transferring the whole property absolutely to the defendants; and in support of this view we were referred to some authorities, and amongst others, to a case of Trilochun Chuckerbutty v. Umesh Chunder Lahiri (7 C. L. R., 571) decided by MORRIS and PRINSEP, JJ.

In that case a Hindu widow, who had inherited her husband's estate, conveyed away that estate by deed with the concurrence [467] of the presumptive reversionary heir; and it was held, following a previous decision of BAYLEY and MARKBY, JJ., to which I shall presently refer, that the alienation made by the Hindu widow, with the concurrence of the reversioner, had the effect of passing the whole estate.

It would appear from the report that the learned Judges were at first disposed to think that the consent of the reversioner was not enough to pass the estate; but they seem to have considered themselves bound by the judgment in the case to which I have referred.

That case was Mohunt Kishen Geer v. Busgeet Roy (14 W. R., 379), and it is necessary in determining how far that case is binding upon us as an authority, to ascertain what the facts of it really were, and what was the ground of the Court's decision.

In that case a Hindu widow, who had inherited certain property from her husband, had, in conjunction with the next reversionary heirs to that property, executed a conveyance to a purchaser; and BAYLEY and MARKBY, JJ., seem to have considered that such a deed operated to convey any estate which those persons by any arrangement amongst themselves had the power of conveying.

MARKBY, J., in his judgment, after saying that the whole estate passed, observes: "To hold otherwise would only necessitate the adding of two or three words to the conveyance, because the widow may at any time surrender the property to the apparent next taker, who will then become absolute owner."

It seems then that this judgment proceeded upon the ground that, in the view of the learned Judges who were parties to it, the conveyance operated, first as a surrender of the widow's estate to the reversionary heirs, and then as an absolute conveyance by them to the purchaser of their interest in the property.

I confess that if the facts of the present case were substantially the same as those of the two cases I have mentioned, I should like to consider whether they were rightly decided; but it seems to me, that the facts here are very distinguishable.

There never was in this case, as it seems to me, any conveyance by the widow and Kali Kishore Das, which could operate in law [468] as a surrender by the widow, and a conveyance of the reversionary interest, which Kali Kishore would have taken upon that surrender. And for this reason; because his kobala was executed in 1256, seven years before the deed of ratification by the widow.

At the time when he executed this conveyance it is clear that he had a mere contingent reversionary interest in expectancy; that being so, the ratification of that conveyance by the widow seven years afterwards could not have operated as a surrender of her estate, so as to change the effect of Kali Kishore's previous deed, and make it enure as an absolute conveyance of the property. It seems to me that her deed could only amount to a conveyance of her interest.

Then the appellant's pleader further argues that the subscribing witnesses to this deed of ratification were the plaintiffs themselves, and that as they signed the deed as subscribing witnesses, they must be taken to have consented to and to have known the effect of it.

I think that as a proposition of law that doctrine cannot be maintained. No doubt if parties subscribe a deed as witnesses, and there is evidence, or the circumstances of the case induce the Judge to believe that they knew what the contents of the deed were, the Judge is at liberty to infer that they were consenting parties to it.

But the inference so drawn by the Court would be an inference of fact; and we have no right to make such inferences on second appeal. We were referred to the case of Rajlakhi Debia v. Gokul Chandra Choudhry (3 B. L. R. P. C., 57), in which the Privy Council, as I understand the report, distinctly say that the mere fact of a person attesting a deed is no evidence in itself that he consented to it, or knew its contents, and a passage has been also cited from Sugden on Vendors and Purchasers to the same effect.

I should have thought that no authority was necessary for such a proposition. It constantly happens that persons subscribe deeds as witnesses without having the least notion what they contain; and if people were to be held bound by any instrument which they so subscribe, it might be a dangerous thing to witness any other man's signature.

[469] No doubt in such a case as that of Matadeen Roy v. Mussoodun Singh (10 W. R., 293) to which we were referred, decided by PEACOCK, C.J., and MITTER, J., there would be strong ground for presuming knowledge of the contents of the deed, and consent to the deed being made.

That was the case of two brothers, who were co-sharers in a property; one of them conveyed the whole of that property, absolutely to a purchaser, and the other brother stood by, and was a subscribing witness to the deed. It does not appear what the other evidence in the case was; but both Courts below had inferred, as a matter of fact, that the brother who subscribed his name as a witness knew the contents of the deed, and was a consenting party to it; and all that PEACOCK, C.J., and MITTER, J., decided was, that they had no right to say, as a matter of law, that the inference which the lower Courts had drawn was wrong. It was an inference of fact which they, sitting in Special Appeal, had no ground for questioning.

But here we are asked to say that the District Judge was wrong in not drawing such an inference. We clearly should not be justified in saying anything of the kind.

It appears to me, therefore, that there is no sufficient ground for disturbing the judgment of the Court below. It may be that the justice of the case is with the defendants. It has been pressed upon us that the defendants have been in possession for a good many years; that they have given good consideration for the property; and that it is very hard that they should be ousted from it.

This may be all very true; but unhappily in the present state of the law we have no power to do full justice between parties in second appeal. We have only to decide whether, so far as we can see, the lower Appellate Court has been guilty of any error of law.

It seems to me that there is no ground for disturbing the lower Court's judgment; and I think that this appeal, and also the appeal No. 531, should be dismissed with costs.

Field, J.—The property which forms the subject of these two appeals admittedly belonged to one Kali Das. The plaintiffs are the grandsons of Shiva Churn, the uterine brother of Kali Das. [470] After the death of Kali Das and Kali Das's widow, a suit was brought in 1252 by Monikornika, the daughter of Kali Das, and her son Kali Kishore, as joint plaintiffs, to recover certain property which included the properties forming the subject of the present litigation. Monikornika and Kali Kishore obtained a decree, and in 1253 took possession in execution of that decree. Subsequently, that is on the 25th of Magh 1256, Kali Kishore sold the property to defendants in the present case, and on the 8th of Assin 1263 Monikornika, who had not joined in the conveyance of 1256, gave to the defendant a letter of ratification.

Now the first question which we have to consider is, what did Monikornika and Kali Kishore obtain by the decree of 1253.

It has been contended that they obtained an absolute and complete title to the property, and that we cannot go behind their decree in order to determine what their interest under the decree really is.

I think that it is not necessary to go behind the decree. Upon the language of the decree itself, it appears to me clear that Monikornika and Kali Kishore obtained nothing more than the interest to which they were entitled under the ordinary Hindu law.

The decree recapitulates the contents of the plaint, sets out the fact of Kali Das's death and the death of Kali Das's widow, and proceeds to allege that Monikornika and Kali Kishore are in consequence the rightful owners (Nagdar malik) according to the Shastras.

Now, according to the Shastras, the right of property which they possessed was a life interest, so far as Monikornika was concerned, and reversionary right, so far as Kali Kishore was concerned. It, therefore, appears to me that they acquired, by the decree, not an absolute interest, which entitled them to dispose of the property at their will and pleasure, but such an interest as Hindu law confers upon persons in their position.

In the conveyance of 1256 reference is made to the decree; and in the subsequent letter of ratification, the decree is again referred to; and it appears to me (no question of purchase for valuable consideration without notice being raised) that what the purchaser under the conveyance of 1256 and the letter of ratification of 1263 took was the interest which Monikornika and Kali Kishore acquired under the decree of 1253, that is, their interests under ordinary Hindu law.

It has been contended that this case ought to be decided upon the principle laid down in the cases of Mohunt Kishen Geer v. Busgeet Roy (14 W. R., 379); Raj Bullubh Sen v. Oomesh Chunder Roy (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 44); and Trilochun Chuckerbutty v. Umesh Chunder Lahiri (7 C. L. R., 571); the principle that is that a conveyance by the widow and the immediate reversioner is a good conveyance of the absolute title, even as against any reversioner who, not being the next reversioner at the time of the conveyance, subsequently, by the death of a nearer reversioner, became entitled to the property upon the death of the widow.

It appears to me that this case can be properly distinguished from the principle upon which the cases just cited were decided. Were it otherwise, with the greatest respect for the learned Judges who decided these cases, I am, as at present advised, by no means satisfied of the soundness of that principle. It may well be contended that although the presumptive reversioner may make a good conveyance of his own reversionary right, he cannot grant away the reversionary right of another and more remote reversioner who may possibly derive title through another and different line of descent. It is not necessary, however, on the present occasion to pursue this question further, because, in the cases now before us, there has been no conveyance executed by Monikornika, the widow, and Kali Kishore, the presumptive reversioner, jointly.

But then it is contended that the effect of the conveyance of 1256, taken with the subsequent letter of ratification, is really the same as if the widow and the presumptive reversioner joined in conveying the property.

It appears to me that this is not so. It would have been possible for the widow to retire in favour of the next reversioner, and if that had occurred Kali Kishore would have become the owner of the property, and might have conveyed an absolute interest therein. But there is no suggestion that this ever took [472] place, and all that Kali Kishore could convey in 1256 was his own reversionary interest, and when Monikornika granted the letter of ratification in Assin 1263, it appears to me that the only effect this could have was to ratify the conveyance; so far as regarded her own life interest, which she had obtained under the decree to which the letter of ratification expressly refers.

There was, then, a valid transfer of Kali Kishore's reversionary interest, which subsequently by his civil death became valueless; and there was a valid conveyance of the widow's life interest; but that act which upon the authority of the cases already noticed could have made these two coalesce so as to create an absolute ownership in the property never took place. Neither did Monikornika retire in favour of Kali Kishore, nor did Monikornika and Kali Kishore at the same time execute a joint conveyance.

It has then been contended that inasmuch as the letter of ratification of 1263 was witnessed by Hari Das and Rutneswar, the plaintiffs in the present cases, they are estopped from saying that the letter taken with the previous conveyance had not the effect of transferring an absolute interest.

Now, in the first place, it has been pointed out by my Lord that the Judge in the Court below has found against this contention on the question of fact. He has found that Hari Das and Rutneswar are not estopped by the contents of that letter. In the next place, supposing that they were well aware of the contents of that letter, in the view that I have already taken, that letter merely amounted to a ratification of the transfer of the life interest, and the fact of Hari Das and Rutneswar ratifying by their attestation the transfer of the widow's life interest, cannot estop them from claiming the property upon the widow's death, when they become the immediate reversionary heirs entitled to possession.

For these reasons it appears to me that the view taken by the Judge below is correct, and that these appeals must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

[473] SMALL CAUSE COURT REFERENCE.

The 2nd February, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR R. GARTH, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Contract—Sale of goods —Delivery by instalments —Tender—Abandonment of excess—Extension of jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

A contract made between the plaintiffs and the defendant stipulated for the delivery to the defendant of 7,500 bags of Madras Coast castor seed, which were to be shipped "per steamers," and then stated that shipment of 2,500 bags was to be made in December. On the 12th December 1,690 bags arrived by Steamer 'Shahjehan,' and notice in writing was given to the defendant, who requested that the delivery might be postponed owing to his not having godown room. On the 14th December the defendant refused to take the 1,690 bags, on the ground that he was not bound to take a portion of the 2,500 bags, but only the whole at one time. On the 16th December the defendant tendered the value of 2,500 bags which was refused, and on the same day the plaintiffs resold the 1,690 bags. On the 17th December the plaintiffs informed the defendant that 810 bags, the balance of the 2,500 the December shipment, were due on the 18th, and they did arrive on the 19th, but were refused by the defendant on the same ground as before, and they were accordingly resold by the plaintiffs.

Held, that according to the terms of the contract there was a legal and proper tender of the December shipment by the plaintiffs, and that the defendant having committed a breach of the contract in not accepting the bags, the plaintiffs were justified in reselling them at once and suing for damages.

Whilst the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court was limited to Rs. 1,000, the plaintiffs brought a suit for that amount for damages for breach of a certain contract after abandoning the excess, and in that suit they elected a non-suit under s. 53, Act IX of 1850.

Held, in a suit brought in respect of the same damages for the full amount due to them, that the plaintiffs were not precluded by their having abandoned the excess in the former suit, from recovering the full amount sued for.

THE following case was stated for the opinion of the High Court by H. Millett, Esq., Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes of Calcutta, under s. 69 of Act XV of 1882, and s. 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure :—

"In this suit a special case has been signed and filed by the pleaders of both parties, leaving it for this Court to come to a [474] conclusion on the facts so stated, on the understanding that the matter is to be referred to the High Court. Though practically a special case, two matters are left for the Court to adjudicate upon rather as questions of fact than of law. They are these: Firstly, whether the two shipments alleged to have been made in December have been proved to have been so made by the evidence of two witnesses examined de bene esse in this case; secondly, as to what was the ground on which the previous suit between the same parties on the same cause of action was non-suited. I propose, though somewhat out of order, to deal with these two points at once.

"First: After hearing the evidence of William Edge, Master of the Steamer 'Shahjehan,' and of Peter Sutton Budd, Master of the Steamer 'Shahzada,' I am satisfied the two shipments of 1,690 bags, and 810 bags respectively, were made in the month of December, and are therefore so far in compliance with the terms of the contract. Second: The first suit was instituted between the parties on the 15th April 1882, heard on the 9th and 12th June, and judgment given on the 23rd June 1882; all the proceedings therefore in that suit were governed by Act IX of 1850, and not by Act XV of 1882, the Act which at present governs the procedure of this Court. In that suit no evidence was produced to prove that the two shipments above referred to were made in the month of December. Taking the case of Bowes v. Shand (L. R., 2 App. Cas., 455), as a guide, it appeared to me that it was necessary for the plaintiffs to prove this fact before they could succeed, and in delivering judgment I suggested to Mr. Gaspar, the pleader of the plaintiffs, the advisability of this course. He accordingly elected a non-suit under s. 53 of Act IX of 1850, and brought the present suit on the 6th July 1882.

"Though the facts are fully set out in the special case, it may be well shortly to summarize those material to this dispute.

"The contract was dated the 22nd November 1881, and was for the delivery of 2,500 bags of Madras Coast castor seed, shipment in December 1881. On the 12th December 1881, 1,690 bags arrived by the Steamer 'Shahjehan,' and notice in writing was given to the defendant, who requested the delivery to be [475] postponed owing to his not having godown room. On the 14th December 1881 the defendant, then acting under the advice of his attorneys, refused to take the 1,690 bags, on the ground that he was not bound to take a portion of the 2,500 bags, but only 2,500 at one time. On the 16th December the defendant tendered the value of 2,500 bags which was refused, and on the same day the plaintiffs resold the 1,690 bags, being the shipment by the 'Shahjehan.' On the 17th December the plaintiffs informed the defendant that 810 bags, the balance of the 2,500 bags December shipment, were due on the 18th of the same month, and they did arrive on the 19th. This lot of 810 bags the defendant refused to take on the same grounds as those stated with respect to the previous lot of 1,690 bags, and they were accordingly resold by the plaintiffs.

"The first question is whether the tender of 1,690 bags and 810 bags in two separate lots was a proper tender in accordance with the terms of the contract. I may state at the outset that no difficulty could arise on the meaning of the word 'shipment,' for both the steamers in which the two lots arrived were at Coconada, the port of shipment, for about 48 hours each, and that in the month of December. It is necessary also to remark that the first tender of 1,690 bags was a tender of that number as 'part of 2,500 bags.' At the hearing of the previous suit the question now raised was fully argued by Counsel, and the pleaders of both parties have now without argument left me to decide it. Several cases were then cited, but in my opinion only one, viz., Brandt v. Lawrence (L. R. 1 Q. B. D., 344), really touches the point now in dispute. It must be remarked that the alleged breach is not a failure to ship any monthly shipment, for the monthly shipment was made, but the failure to tender the whole of one monthly shipment at one and the same point of time. In Hoare v. Rennie (5 H. and N., 19) the contract was to make certain shipments of iron in June, July and August. The pith of the dispute is stated in the judgment of WATSON, B., thus: 'The contract is for the shipment of a quantity of iron in certain proportions to be paid for on delivery. On performance of the contract the defendants agree to [476] pay for the iron. The breach charged is that the defendants shipped a small quantity in June, and declared they would not ship any more. There is evidently a mistake in this report, as the word defendants should be 'plaintiffs,' for it was the plaintiffs who had to ship. The distinction between that case and this is apparent, for here the plaintiffs have all along alleged that the tender of the 1,690 bags was only a part performance of the contract. The same remarks will apply to Reuter v. Sala (L. R., 4 C. P. D., 239). The contract there was for 25 tons of Penang pepper. The plaintiffs, the shippers, alleged that they had tendered 25 tons, making a declaration of 25 tons as a tender of the whole. The defendants, the buyers, said there were only 20 tons, which was found to be the case, and they were accordingly found to be entitled to refuse such number as being an incomplete tender. In Houck v. Muller (L. R., 7 Q. B. D., 92,) the contract was to deliver certain iron equally in November, December and January. The plaintiff, the buyer failed to take delivery of the November instalment, but insisted upon his right to take the other two; and it was found he was not so entitled. The learned Judges in that case approved of Hoare v. Rennie, no reference having been made either in the course of the argument or in the judgment to Grandt v. Lawrence, decided four years previously. Grandt v. Lawrence (L. R., 1 Q. B. D., 344) was a case in which the plaintiffs agreed to ship 4,500 quarters of Russian oats during February. In that month he shipped 1,139 quarters, and tendered them to the defendant in part fulfilment of the contract; the defendant refused to accept them. The plaintiffs afterwards shipped, but not in February, the balance of the 4,500 quarters, which the defendant also refused to accept, and the question was whether the defendant was bound to accept the 1,139 quarters which arrived within time, and it was held he was. This is, if anything, a stronger case than the present one; for all the goods have in this case arrived within time, and if Brandt v. Lawrence is good law, the defendant was bound to accept the 1,690 bags tendered as a portion of the whole 2,500. There is no material difference in the wording 'by steamer or steamers' as used in the contract in Brandt v. [477] Lawrence and the wording 'per steamers' as used in this contract. This point, therefore, I find in favour of the plaintiffs.

"The second question to some extent depends upon the first. On it, it is contended that the plaintiffs had no right to resell the first lot until the whole quantity had arrived; but if the tender of the first lot was a good one, and the defendant refused to accept it, the plaintiffs had a right to resell on such refusal. I am far from saying that any such action would be taken if the plaintiffs had only tendered a small lot, but under the circumstances stated I am of opinion that there was a substantial performance of the contract, and that they are, therefore, entitled to succeed.

"The third question raised affects the right of the plaintiffs to recover in this suit more than Rs. 1,000. The first suit brought was for Rs. 1,000, after abandoning an excess of Rs. 132-6-7 and all other excess. At that time this Court had no jurisdiction to hear a suit of a higher value, so that the plaintiffs, if they wished to bring their first suit in the Small Cause Court, could not recover more than that amount.

"At the time the second suit was instituted the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court had been increased to Rs. 2,000, and they then claimed the full amount of damages alleged by them. The effect of the non-suit was to put the plaintiffs, except as regards limitation, in exactly the same position they were in formerly, and I can see no objection to their bringing the suit for the amount claimed. If the jurisdiction of this Court had not been extended, there would,

I presume, have been nothing to prevent the plaintiffs bringing the first suit in the High Court had they been so disposed. This question will also be decided in favour of the plaintiffs.

"These are the only three points in the statement given to me by the 1 leaders, and as there is no dispute as to the amount of damages, there will be a decree for the plaintiffs for the full amount sued for.

"The questions for the opinion of the High Court will be—

"1. Whether there was a legal and proper tender on the part of the plaintiffs, and whether there was a breach on the part of the defendant.

[478] "2. Whether the tender of a portion of the goods contracted for was a sufficient tender to entitle the plaintiffs to resell and sue for damages; and whether the plaintiffs were justified before the expiration of December in reselling a portion of the goods after the defendant had made a tender of the full price.

"3. Whether the plaintiffs are now entitled to recover any amount in excess of Rs. 1,000, they having abandoned an excess above that amount in the previous suit.

"Contingent on the opinion of the High Court there will be a decree for the plaintiffs for the full amount claimed."

Mr. Phillips and Mr. Lewis for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Pugh for the Defendant.

The following were the Opinions of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and WILSON, J.)

Garth, C.J.—I think that this case is abundantly clear. It seems to me that the learned Judge is right on both points, and that we should answer the questions referred to us in accordance with that view. I think that the defendant should pay the costs of this reference.

Wilson, J.—I am of the same opinion. I would only add a few words. It appears to me that what we have first to do is to ascertain the terms of the contract. The contract is for the delivery of 7,500 bags of castor seeds which were to be shipped "per steamers," and then the contract goes on to state, "shipment 2,500 bags per s.s. 'Moharaja,' now expected on Madras Coast, 2,500 bags in December 1881 and 2,500 bags in January 1882." "Terms cash on delivery, which is to be taken from steamer's side, Calcutta, or from jetty on arrival of steamer."

This is the whole of the contract so far as it is material, and taken altogether it seems to me abundantly clear from it that so far as the two latter portions are concerned, the 2,500 bags are to be delivered in December and 2,500 bags in January, having been shipped by "steamers," which, I think, clearly means shipped by any number of steamers, provided that the instalment sent by each steamer is a reasonable one, and then delivery is to be taken [479] from the ship's side or from the jetty on arrival of each ship, and cash paid on delivery.

This seems to me to be a perfectly clear contract, and it agrees as closely as possible with the contract in the case of Brandt v. Lawrence (L. R. 1 Q. B. D., 344), in which case also the option of shipping in several instalments was given, and yet each instalment was to be received on arrival and paid for on delivery. On that construction of the contract, it follows of necessity that the plaintiffs were entitled to tender the goods as they did tender them, and that the defendant was bound to receive and pay for them.

With regard to the case of Reuter v. Sala (L. R. 4 C. P. D.. 239). It has no very close bearing on this case. The question in that case, so far as it concerns the present, was whether the contract there made was severable, whether it might be split up and the person who entered into it might refuse to perform or disable himself from performing a portion and yet insist on performing the rest. The Court there held that a contract cannot be split up in that sense. The question in this case is not whether the contract may be split up, but whether the performance of it may be divided, and that depends on the terms of the contract. I concur, therefore, in the mode in which it is proposed to answer the questions referred to us.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 29th January, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, K.T., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE FIELD.

Hury Doyal Guho.....Decree-holder

Din Doyal Guho.....Judgment-debtor.*

Set-off—Cross decrees—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877) s. 246.

A Judgment-debtor may set-off against the amount of the decree against him, the amount of a decree which he has obtained against the decree-holder and other persons.

[430] IN this case one Hury Doyal Guho sought to execute a decree which he had obtained against one Din Doyal Guho. The Subordinate Judge allowed Din Doyal Guho to set-off a sum of Rs. 51-13, the amount of a decree which he had obtained against Hury Doyal Guho and another person. Hury Doyal appealed to the District Judge, who held that the set-off was allowable and dismissed the appeal. Hury Doyal appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Boykunt Nauth Dass and Baboo Koluda Kinkur Roy for the Appellant.

Baboo Guru Dass Banerjee for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered :—

Field, J.—Three points were raised in the grounds of appeal in this case. The first point (as to costs), and the third point raised in the first and third grounds of appeal respectively were given up at the hearing; and we have only to dispose of the question raised in the second ground of appeal.

The decree-holder (Appellant) Hury Doyal Guho Mujumdar contends that the Court below was wrong in allowing the judgment-debtor Din Doyal Guho to set-off against the amount of the decree-holder's decree the sum of Rs. 51-13, being the amount of a decree which Din Doyal, the judgment-debtor, had obtained against the decree-holder appellant and another person. I have considered this matter, and think that the decision of the learned District Judge is correct upon this point. Illustration (b) of s. 246 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows: "A and B co-plaintiffs obtain a decree for Rs. 1,000 against C, and C obtains a decree for Rs. 1,000 against B. C cannot treat his decree as a cross-decree under this section." The reason of this is plain. The liability of C under the decree obtained by A and B is a liability not to B only, who is C's debtor under the second decree, but to B and another person A.

* Appeal from Appellate Order, No. 211 of 1882, against the order of R. F. Rampini, Esq., Judge of Dacca, dated the 6th April 1882, affirming the order of Baboo Nobin Chunder Gangooly, First Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 23rd January 1882.

In the case now before us, A, the decree-holder, has obtained a decree against C, namely the decree which is now being executed, but C also obtained a decree against A and B, namely the decree for Rs. 51-13. Now it is clear that C could, if he chose, [481] execute this second decree for the whole amount as against A. He is, therefore, in my opinion equally entitled to execute in another way, that is, by setting off the amount thereof as against A's decree. This was the very point decided in the case of Mitchell v. Oldfield (4 T. R., 123).

I think, therefore, that the order of the District Judge is correct, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Garth, C.J.—I have had some doubt about this case, but as my learned brother is disposed to approve of the judgment of the Courts below, and as his view is in accordance with the English authorities, I do not think it right to differ from him.

My doubt has arisen from the language of s. 246. That section is a re-enactment of s. 209 of the old Code; and both are founded upon the equitable principle, which has long prevailed in England, of setting-off cross judgments in execution (see Archbold's Chitty's Practice, 11th edition, 711). My learned brother is quite right in saying that according to the English rule the judgment-debt due from Din Doyal in this case would have been set-off against the debt due to Din Doyal from Hury Doyal and another; the principle being, that if the decree-holder in the one case has a right to take out execution against the decree-holder in the other case, the judgment may be set-off.

But s. 246 provides that this shall be done only when the cross decrees are "between the same parties;" and a strict adherence to this language would no doubt tend to simplify the rule, although it would contract its operation.

I am not disposed, however, to dissent from the view of my learned brother. It is undoubtedly consonant with justice, as well as with the English rule, although it may sometimes render the application of the section more difficult to the subordinate judiciary.

Appeal dismissed.

[482] PRIVY COUNCIL.

PRESENT:

LORD FITZGERALD, SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR R. P. COLLIER, SIR R. COUCH AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE.

Hurrih Chunder Chowdhry.....Judgment-debtor

versus

Kalisunderi Debi.....Judgment-creditor.

[On Appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Transmission for execution of order of Her Majesty in Council—Civil Procedure Code, Act X of 1877, ss. 231, 588, 593 and 610—Evidence of such order—Appeal against an order of a Judge of the High Court refusing transmission—Letters Patent, 1865, s. 15—Execution on the application of one of several decree-holders.

The provisions of Act X of 1877, s. 610, are not to be construed as restricting the only admissible evidence of an order of Her Majesty in Council to a certified copy, on an application for execution made under that section. They must be read as directory, having the object that proper information regarding the order shall be supplied to the Courts in India.

Where the original order (given, according to the practice in England, to the successful party, or to one of such parties) had not been filed in the High Court, so as to enable the proper officer to supply a certified copy: Held that a copy, though not certified by him, might accompany a petition for execution under s. 610.

A decision by the Judge appointed to dispose of matters relating to appeals to Her Majesty in Council, refusing to transmit for execution her order restoring a decree, is a judgment within the meaning of s. 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865, and is appealable to the High Court.

Held, also, that a refusal to transmit such an order for execution was not a misapprehension on the part of the Judge of the extent of his jurisdiction, although, if it had been, this itself would have been a ground of appeal.

Section 588, Act X of 1877, restricting appeals against orders, does not apply to prevent an appeal to the High Court from the order of a Judge of that Court.

The effect of a Privy Council judgment being that each of two co-plaintiffs was entitled to a moiety of a taluk in the possession of the defendant, who then purchased the interest of one of them: Held that the other co-plaintiff could obtain execution according to the extent of her interest in the estate.

APPEAL from an order of the High Court (13th January 1881) reversing an order (27th February 1880) made by the Judge appointed to dispose of matters relating to appeals to Her Majesty in Council. The order of the High Court directed [483] transmission (Act X of 1877, s. 610) which the Judge had refused, of an order of Her Majesty in Council (18th April 1878) for execution by the Subordinate Judge of the Mymensingh district. That order in Council had been issued upon a judgment to the effect that a decree of the High Court (5th August 1875) should be reversed, and that a decree (10th March 1874) of the Subordinate Judge of the Mymensingh district should be restored.

This appeal arose out of orders made on proceedings taken in execution after the judgment of the Judicial Committee, and issue of the order of Her Majesty in Council thereon, in Bhoobun Mohini Debia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 23; s.c., L. R., 5 I.A., 138). That suit was decided in 1874 by the Court of Original Jurisdiction, the Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh, in favour of two co-plaintiffs, Chandermuni Debi and Kalisunderi Debi. In 1876 the High Court, on the appeal of the defendant, Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry, reversing that decision, dismissed the suit (24 W. R., 268). In 1878 the original decree made by the Mymensingh Court was restored by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The decree, as originally made and as restored, declared the title of Chandermuni Debi and Kalisunderi Debi, co-plaintiffs in the suit to a certain taluk in the Mymensingh District under the will of Kassiswari Debi, deceased, the validity of whose devise, under a right derived by her from a sanad executed in her favour by her brother, had been disputed by the son of the latter. The son, Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry, defendant in the suit brought by Chandermuni and Kalisunderi, had taken possession; and after the decision of the Subordinate Judge he obtained its reversal by appealing to the High Court. But on an appeal to the Privy Council preferred by Chandermuni's daughters, she being then dead, and Kalisunderi refusing to join in further proceedings, the decree of the Mymensingh Court, in favour of Chandermuni and Kalisunderi, was restored. On this final decision against him, Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry purchased the interest in the taluk which had belonged to Chandermuni from the two appellants, and when the order in Council, following upon the judgment of the Judicial Committee, arrived in India, it came into his hands.

[484] Kalisunderi Debi, with a view to enforce the order in Council restoring the original decree which she jointly with Chandermuni had obtained, applied to the Judge in charge of the Privy Council appeals' department of the High Court for an order under s. 610 of Act X of 1877, transmitting for execution or enforcement the order in Council to the Court of Mymensingh.

Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry objected to Kalisunderi's petition for execution: 1st, that it was not accompanied by a certified copy of the order in Council; 2nd, that the decree affirmed by the order in Council could not be executed in part, by one only of the two original co-plaintiffs: whose rights, as between themselves, had not been determined, and were, in fact, in conflict.

This application having been rejected by PONTIFEX, J., the Judge appointed to dispose of matters relating to appeals to Her Majesty in Council * his order was reversed on appeal by a Bench of the High Court (GARTH, C.J., WHITE, J., and MITTER, J.). Both the Puisne Judges held that an appeal would lie from the order in question, and also that the order was wrong. But the Chief Justice, without differing from them as to the latter opinion, i.e., in regard to the merits of the order, held that the duties of the Judge in the Privy Council Department being, in respect of transmitting the order in Council under s. 610, only ministerial, his order, refusing to transmit, could not be made the subject of an appeal to the High Court, as it could not fall under s. 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865.

The case on appeal and the judgments are fully reported in I. L. R., 6 Cal., 594.

On this appeal,

* The High Court Rules of 4th June 1867 provide for the appointment of one Judge to dispose of matters relating to appeals to Her Majesty in Council. The Rules of 1st September 1877 refer to him as "the Judge in the Privy Council Department."

Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., and Mr. J. T. Woodroffe appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. R. V. Doyme for the Respondent.

For the appellant it was argued that the respondent not having any title to execute this decree, the objection that she had failed [486] to comply with the requirements of s. 610 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as a certified copy of the order in Council did not accompany her petition, must prevail. It was no answer to this that the original order had come into the possession of the appellant, who withheld it. The latter was entitled to insist that the respondent was not in a position to obtain execution of the decree of the Court of First Instance, as restored by the order of Her Majesty in Council. To that restoration the respondent, not having appealed, might be a party, but the appellant could rely, on the other hand, on her inability to file the required certified copy; there being also a substantial objection to her obtaining execution of the decree.

[The Registrar here stated the practice in reference to orders of Her Majesty in Council, sent to the Indian Courts after appeals had been disposed of. The original order, when issued, was made over to the agent of the successful party, or parties, who filed it in the Court from which the appeal had been preferred, and a certified copy was kept in England.]

It was also contended that the application for transmission of the order for execution had been rightly refused in reference to the provisions of s. 231 of Act X of 1877, inasmuch as the decree, not having dealt with the rights of the two co-plaintiffs as between themselves, could not be thus executed, i.e., in part, and by the respondent alone. That the respective rights of Chandermuni and Kalisunderi had not been determined was shown by the concluding words of the judgment in Bhoobun Mohini Debia v. Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 23). These were to the effect that it was "unnecessary to decide what the rights of the co-plaintiffs might be, inter se." And that their rights might conflict appeared from the nature of their interest in the disputed property. To grant execution to Kalisunderi alone would be to enable her to take a certain share in property in which her interest had not been determined, as against Chandermuni and the representatives of the latter; so that, in effect, it would be to make a material addition to the judgment of the Privy Council. Accordingly the order of PONTIFEX, J., was right, and this [486] application, on the merits, ought not to be allowed. Reference was made to Abedoonissa Begum v. Ameeroonissa Khatoon (L. R., 4 I. A., 66; S.C. I. L. R., 2 Cal., 327).

Also, it was argued, with reference to the difference of opinion among the Judges in the Court below, that whether the order refusing to transmit was right or wrong, and whatever might be the remedy in the latter case, no appeal would lie, from the order made by the Judge, to the High Court. The Judge appointed to dispose of matters relating to appeals to the Privy Council derived his authority through the Statute 24 and 25 Vic., Cap. 104, s. 11, from the Statute 3 and 4 William IV, Cap. 4, s. 21, and the rules made under the latter. The Judge, so acting, did not derive his powers from ss. 9 and 13 of the Statute of Victoria; and, therefore, no appeal from his order would lie under s. 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865. On this point reference was made to Ananda Mayi Dasi v. Purnachandra Roy (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 506; 6 W. R., Mis., 70), and In the matter of Feda Hossein (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 431). Even if, however, the Judge in charge of the Privy Council Department of the High Court could be considered as exercising the powers belonging to the High Court and could be held to be acting in the discharge of duties within the contemplation of the Statute 24 and 25 Vic., Cap. 104, s. 13, and also of the Letters Patent of 1865, s. 15, the latter did not apply so as to authorize an appeal in this kind of proceeding. In this instance the proceeding was ministerial, under s. 610 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Act X of 1877, and was not an order made in the exercise of judicial discretion. Against this order, therefore, no appeal under the 15th section of the Letters Patent of 1865 could lie. On this point were cited Mowla Buksh v. Kishen Pertab Sahi (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 102); Mussamut Amirannissa v. Behary Lal (25 W. R., 529). Moreover, even supposing that the right of appeal might have been asserted before the cases in which appeals lay against orders had been exhaustively declared in s. 588 of Act X of 1877, that right no longer remained after the coming into operation of that section, as amended by [487] Act XII of 1879. On the subject of the powers of the Indian Legislature to effect the provisions of the Letters Patent of 1865, reference was made to in the matter of Feda Hossein (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 431); Queen v. Meares (14 B.L.R., 106). Again, s. 591 of Act X of 1877 showed that s. 588 regulated the entire matter of orders appealable under the Code, and no such order as the one in question was appealable to the High Court without express authority, which had not been given.

[At the end of the opening of the appellant's case Sir R. P. COLLIER intimated that their Lordships considered it necessary to hear Counsel for the respondent only on the question whether the order of the 27th of February 1880 was correct or not, in regard to the rights, under the decree affirmed by the order in Council of the 18th April 1878, belonging to the parties entitled to the benefit of that decree; in other words, on the question whether the order of the Judge in the Privy Council Department of the High Court was correct on its merits.]

It was then argued for the respondent that whatever might have been the rights of the co-plaintiffs in the suit as between themselves, it was clear that Kalisunderi was entitled to possession of that moiety of the taluk which fell to her share, as declared; and that whatever rights the appellant as purchaser of the right, title, and interest of the other co-plaintiff might have acquired in the share which had been Chandermoni's, still the respondent had a life-interest. There was no ground for holding that the rules governing the execution of decrees were inapplicable; and nothing stood in the way of the enforcement of Her Majesty's order in Council, so far as it was in favour of the respondent, on her application under s. 610.

Mr. J. Graham, Q. C., was heard in reply.

At the conclusion of the arguments, their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by Sir R. P. Collier.—In order to make the subject of this appeal intelligible a short statement is necessary. In the year 1819 Sumbuchandra by a sanad, conveyed to his sister Kassiwari a certain [488] taluk. Upon the construction of this sanad, various questions have since arisen. Kassiwari, treating the sanad as having conveyed to her an absolute estate, disposed of it by her will, the material part of which is this: "Of the whole of the rest of the rent-paying and rent-free immovable properties in benami and in my own name, in my possession and not in my possession, in which I have a right and interest, a moiety shall after my death be received by my daughter Chandermoni, and if she adopt a son, by that adopted son, otherwise by her daughters, i.e., by my granddaughters,"—naming them—"in equal shares; and the children born of their wombs, or adopted by them, shall from generation to generation get their (the granddaughters') respective shares in the order of succession, and the other moiety shall be received by my daughter-in-law, Srimati Kalisunderi Debi, and if she adopt a son, by that adopted son, and by his children from generation to generation in the order of succession. But the same shall remain in the possession of my daughter-in-law Kalisunderi Debi, till the said adopted son shall have attained his majority ; and in case there shall be a misunderstanding between him and my daughter-in-law after he shall have attained his majority, the said adopted son and my daughter-in-law, Srimati Kalisunderi Debi, shall receive equal shares" (of the property.) "But, after the death of Kalisunderi Debi, her adopted son, or any surviving lineal heir of her adopted son, shall obtain the same" (her share of the property.)

Upon the death of Kassiswari, the now appellant, Hurrish Chunder, who was the son of Sambhuchandra, took possession of this property ; whereupon an action was brought to obtain possession of it by Chandermuni and by Kalisunderi, who were then widows, Kalisunderi having adopted a son, Chandermuni not having made an adoption. The plaint in that action claims possession. It recites the sanad from Sumbuchandra the will and the death of the testatrix ; and proceeds : "In virtue of this will, I, plaintiff No. 1,"—i.e., Chandermuni,— "and I, plaintiff No. 2,"—Kalisunderi—"on behalf of the minor, have since her death, become entitled to hold and enjoy all the aforesaid moveable and immoveable properties." The plaint goes on to state that the defendant had unjustly intruded himself into this [489] land. The defendant denied most of the allegations in the plaint, among them the adoption of a son by Kalisunderi.

The plaintiffs obtained a judgment and a decree from the Court of First Instance ; and it is necessary now to determine, as far as possible, what was the precise effect of that judgment. The issues raised were—"(1st) Can Kalisunderi prefer this suit jointly with Chandermuni ; (2nd) Had Kassiswari Debi authority to make a will, and did she make one ; (3rd) If so, is the will valid, and can the plaintiffs, jointly or individually, prefer the present action for the recovery of the taluk with wasilat ; (4th) Is it necessary to consider the question of adoption of a son or otherwise in the present action ?"

The Judge, after disposing of the first two issues in favour of the plaintiffs, proceeds thus : "Touching the third issue, it is true the original will is not forthcoming, but an attested copy has been filed. I would accept the copy as evidence, as it was attested by the registration authorities, who have the original in their safe custody. The opposite party, I may remark, does not distinctly and emphatically deny the existence of the original will, the execution of which has been substantiated by witnesses." He finds in favour of the will. He proceeds : "But even supposing there was no will executed, yet Chandermuni Debi as the successor and child of Kassiswari Debi, can sue for the entire taluk ; and she herself has no objection to have Kalisunderi as a co-plaintiff ; therefore, the plaintiffs can sue in the manner they have." It may be observed that there is no allegation of, or issue upon, Chandermuni's heirship to Kassiswari, and the learned Judge's dictum on the subject is merely obiter. "For the aforesaid reasons it is not necessary to consider the question of adoption of Sharat Chandra Lahiri, the minor. To my mind the plaintiffs can sue upon the will of Kassiswari, the existence and genuineness of which I do not doubt." Their Lordships regard this as, in effect, a suit for the purpose of establishing the will ; and the only question to which the issues relate, and which really seems to have been tried, was whether it was valid, comprising the questions whether it was executed, and whether the testatrix had the right to make it. The decree is in pursuance of the judgment, and goes on to affirm : "The plaintiffs [490] institute this against the defendant, on the basis of the said will, for the recovery of possession after establishment of their shikmi right," and so on. And it concludes : "That this case be decreed with costs in favour of the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs do recover from the defendants possession of the disputed mouzahs and the costs of Court and wasilat from this day until realisation, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum." It is true that, if the plaint be read with technical strictness, the second plaintiff sues only in right of her adopted son ; but it does not seem to have been so understood by the Judge, who meant to give each of the ladies possession of half the property, and declined to try the question of adoption, because, whether the adoption were proved or disproved, Kalisunderi's right to immediate possession remained. Their Lordships are not prepared to say that the Judge was wrong in taking this broader view of the question before him.

An appeal was preferred to the High Court against this judgment, and it was reversed by the High Court on the ground that the testatrix only took an estate for life, and, therefore, was incompetent to dispose of the property by will ; but the High Court also treat the action as one brought for the purpose of establishing the validity of the will. The daughters of Chandermuni (she having died before the last-mentioned judgment) appealed to the Queen in Council, and by Order in Council the judgment of the High Court was reversed, and the judgment of the Subordinate Court was affirmed. With respect to the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, their Lordships observe : " No dispute was raised as to the genuineness of the will of Kassiswari, or its validity to pass whatever interest she was capable of devising. The Subordinate Judge gave judgment in favour of the plaintiffs. The grounds of his judgment, which are not very clearly stated, would appear to be that, in his opinion, Chandermuni took an absolute estate under the sanad on the death of her mother ; but that, having elected to take under her mother's will and to admit the co-plaintiff to a half share of the estate, both the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the action against the defendant." Their Lordships also observe that their decision was not intended to conclude any question between the co-plaintiffs.

[491] The judgment of the Queen in Council was sent to India to be executed, but in the meantime the defendant had acquired the interest of the plaintiffs in Chandermuni's moiety, whereupon an application was made to Mr. Justice PONTIFEX, on behalf of Kalisunderi, who claimed the other moiety, for an execution of the judgment of the Court of First Instance as far as that moiety was concerned.

Mr. Justice PONTIFEX was the Judge appointed under the power, which had been previously conferred by Statute upon the High Court, to execute a portion of their jurisdiction, viz., that which related to enforcing the orders of the Privy Council, and other questions having to do with the relations of the Privy Council to the Courts in India. That learned Judge refused to direct execution under s. 610 of Act X of 1877, which regulates the procedure for enforcing the execution of any order of Her Majesty in Council. That section is to this effect : " Whoever desires to enforce or to obtain execution of any order of Her Majesty in Council shall apply by petition, accompanied by a certified copy of the decree or order made in appeal, and sought to be enforced or executed, to the Court from which the appeal to Her Majesty was preferred. Such Court shall transmit the order of Her Majesty to the Court which made the first decree appealed from, or to such other Court as Her Majesty, by her said order, may direct, and shall (upon the application of either party) give such directions as may be required for the enforcement or execution of the same : and the Court to which the said order is so transmitted shall enforce or execute it accordingly in the manner and according to the rules applicable to the execution of its original decrees." Mr. Justice PONTIFEX in a short judgment observes : " This is an application for the execution of a Privy Council decree, in part, by one of two plaintiffs. The original Court passed a decree in favour of both the plaintiffs. On appeal to this Court that decree was overruled. One of the plaintiffs only appealed to the Privy Council, and on appeal to the Privy Council the decree of the original Court was restored, and that of this Court reversed. The Privy Council, in their judgment, expressly said they would not decide the rights of the plaintiffs, inter se. Subsequently the defendant who is in possession [492] of the property, bought the interest of the appealing plaintiff. The party who did not appeal, having applied to execute the decree, has been met with two objections, the first under s. 610 of Act X of 1877, that that application could not be granted because it was not accompanied by a certified copy of the decree of Her Majesty in Council; but the defendant himself has got that certified copy, and, therefore, I think the objection under s. 610 cannot be sustained."

Their Lordships think it well, before proceeding further, to say that they entirely agree with the learned Judge in this view, which was adopted by the Appellate Court. The practice with respect to the decrees of Her Majesty in Council seems to be this: The original decree is given to the successful party, or to one of the successful parties, to the appeal. That is taken to India, and it is the duty of the person to whom it is given, as he is informed by a written circular, a copy of which has been read, to file that original decree in the High Court of Calcutta. That being done, the proper officer of the Court in Calcutta would be able to give a certified copy, or indeed the Registrar of this Board would be able to do the same. It seems that in this case the defendant got, through Chandermuni, whose interest, as before stated, he had taken, the original order. He neglected to file it, as he ought to have done, in the Court, and it was under those circumstances that Mr. Justice PONTIFEX held that a copy of that order, though perhaps not a certified copy, might be properly admitted; and their Lordships think he was right. The provisions of s. 610 cannot be construed as restricting the only possible evidence to the certified copy, but as directory words with the object of ensuring that proper information upon the subject of any Order in Council should be supplied to the Courts in India. Mr. Justice PONTIFEX proceeds: "The other objection to the execution of the decree of the Privy Council was that the decree of the original Court, upheld by the Privy Council, could only be executed as a whole, and not partly by one of the two plaintiffs. Mr. Phillips relies on s. 231 of Act X of 1877. Now the two plaintiffs claim under a will which is not free from difficulty. The Privy Council declined to construe the will as between the two plaintiffs claiming under it. I think, therefore, [493] I must refuse this application for execution, and the applicant must be left to a regular suit to enforce her claim to any share of the property." From this order or judgment of Mr. Justice PONTIFEX an appeal was preferred to the High Court. All three of the learned Judges of the High Court, the Chief Justice and the two Puisne Judges, were of opinion that Mr. Justice PONTIFEX had exercised a wrong discretion, and that he ought to have sent the case for execution; but the Chief Justice was of opinion that no appeal would lie from the proceeding before him, and that his error could not be set right. The two Puisne Judges were of opinion that an appeal would lie under s. 15 of the Royal Charter of 1865, which is in those terms: "We further ordain that an appeal shall lie to the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, from the judgment (not being a sentence or order passed or made in any criminal trial) of one Judge of the said High Court, or of one Judge of any Division Court, pursuant to s. 13 of the said recited Act," the said recited Act, with regard to this matter, having enabled the Court to confer upon a Judge, or a division of the Court, the power of the Court itself. These learned Judges held (and their Lordships think rightly) that whether the transmission of an order under s. 610 would or would not be a merely ministerial proceeding, Mr. Justice PONTIFEX had in fact exercised a judicial discretion, and had come to a decision of great importance, which, if it remained, would entirely conclude any rights of Kalisunderi to an execution in this suit. They held, therefore, that it was a judgment within the meaning of s. 15.

The Chief Justice was of opinion that it was not a judgment, and he seems to have based his opinion in a great measure upon the ground that, in his view, Mr. Justice PONTIFEX had no jurisdiction to inquire at all whether or not Kalisunderi had a right to execution; that his function was merely ministerial; that all he could do, or ought to have done, was to transmit the decree of Her Majesty in Council to the lower Court for execution; that he usurped a jurisdiction which did not belong to him; and that under those circumstances no appeal would lie. Their Lordships do not think that Mr. Justice PONTIFEX can be properly treated as having usurped jurisdiction; but, if he had, this would [494] have been a valid ground of appeal, and they are unable to agree with the Chief Justice, that if a Judge of the High Court makes an order under a misapprehension of the extent of his jurisdiction, the High Court have no power by appeal, or otherwise, in setting right such a miscarriage of justice.

It only remains to observe that their Lordships do not think that s. 588 of Act X of 1877, which has the effect of restricting certain appeals, applies to such a case as this, where the appeal is from one of the Judges of the Court to the full Court.

The remaining question is whether Mr. Justice PONTIFEX was right in refusing to make the order in question; and their Lordships are of opinion that learned Judge was wrong. They are unable to subscribe to the doctrine that a decree can only be executed as a whole and not partly by one of the plaintiffs—a doctrine, which, as pointed out by the High Court, would lead to the consequence that a defendant could prevent the execution of a decree by buying the interest of one of the plaintiffs. The effect of the judgment which had to be enforced was, in their Lordships' view, as has been already expressed, that the second plaintiff, Kalisunderi, was entitled to possession of half of the estate in question. The defendant had obtained the share of Chandermuni's representatives. As far, therefore, as that share was concerned, he was in no better position to dispute any right the plaintiff might have to execution than Chandermuni herself would have had; and it appears to their Lordships that Chandermuni would have had no right in this suit to dispute the title of the plaintiff to present possession of a moiety of the land. As a defendant he had no better rights. As against the plaintiff he was a wrong-doer; and as against him she had an immediate right to possession. But it has been asserted that he had a right to have the question of the adoption by Kalisunderi determined and that this question could not be determined in an execution proceeding, to which latter proposition their Lordships assent. But if the adoption were set aside, still Kalisunderi would have a life interest in the property, and could maintain the action in respect of that interest. With this view, as already pointed out, the Judge of first instance found in her favour, declining to try the question of adoption, and it is his judgment which has [495] now to be executed. Any possible hardship which the defendant might complain of in the present judgment operating as an estoppel against him, or otherwise unfavourably to this trial of his question, should it ever arise, will be obviated by a declaration that the decree is to be executed in respect only of the share to the possession of which Kalisunderi is entitled under and by virtue of the will, and that nothing in this judgment shall affect any right which the defendant may at any time have to question the validity of the adoption.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the judgment of the High Court, coupled with this declaration, and to dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 6th December, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Baso Koorer and others.....Plaintiffs

versus

Hurry Dass and others.....Defendants.*

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Joint family trade—Alienation of ancestral property by some of the members of the family --Interest of adult son affected by sale in execution of a decree against his father—Parties to suit.

A family, governed by Mitakshara law, carrying on a trade in the names of some of its members, having become indebted to the defendants in a large amount in respect of advances made for the purposes of the trade, some of the head members of the family executed a bond in favour of the defendants for the amount due, and hypothecated certain family properties which stood in their names as collateral security therefor. The amount not having been paid on the due date, the defendants brought a suit on the bond against the persons who had executed it, and obtained a decree which, however, did not direct that the properties hypothecated should be sold. In execution of that decree the interest of the judgment-debtors in the hypothecated properties, and in other family properties, were sold, and [496] were purchased by the defendants, who, subsequently, under their purchase, obtained possession of the shares of the judgment-debtors and of those of their sons. The decree not having been satisfied by those sales, the defendants brought a suit against the remaining head members of the family to have it declared that their interests in the family properties were liable to satisfy the decree, and that suit also was decreed. Under the last decree the interests in the family properties of the judgment-debtors under that decree were sold, and were purchased by the defendants who subsequently obtained possession of the shares of those judgment-debtors and of the shares of their sons. Some of the sons of the judgment-debtors in both decrees were adult at the time when the suits were instituted. In suits brought, many years after the sales, by members of the family who had not been parties to the previous suits, to recover their shares in the family properties, held, that the interest of all the members of the family had passed on the sales.

Per MITTER, J.—There is no distinction in principle between the case of an adult son and that of a minor son as regards a son's interest in ancestral property being liable to pass on a sale of such property in execution of a decree against his father only; but if an adult son proves that he would have been able to save the property by paying off the debt out of his private funds, if he had been a party to the suit, quere, whether he should not be allowed to have the sale set aside on payment of the debt due under the decree.

A son's interest may pass on a sale of ancestral property in execution of a money decree against his father, but whether it does or does not pass will have to be determined by the circumstances of each case.

Delay in bringing proceedings to impeach sales is a matter for consideration in determining what interests pass on the sale.

THE suits out of which these two appeals arose were two of many brought by members of a joint Hindu family governed by Mitakshara law, to recover their shares in the joint family properties which were in the possession of the defendants under purchases at sales in execution of decrees against some of the members of the family.

The facts, and the questions arising in the suits, fully appear in the judgment of the Court.

Mr. Branson and Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose for the Appellants.

Mr. R. E. Twidale, Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdhry, and Baboo Darkanath Mookerjee for the Respondents.

[497] The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and NORRIS, JJ.), was delivered by Mitter, J.—The plaintiffs in these two suits are members of a joint family of which Chumun Lal was the common ancestor. Chumun Lal left six sons him surviving, viz., Behari Lal, Kanhya Lal, Sheo Lal, Domun Lal, Shoukhi Lal and Amrit Lal; but Amrit Lal may be left out of consideration, as he died without issue leaving a widow Radha Koor. There was a question raised in the lower Court as to the date of the death of Chuman Lal, but the lower Court has found that it took place in 1262 (1855). We concur in this finding. Of the descendants of the surviving five sons of Chuman Lal, it is sufficient for our purpose to state that Behari Lal had three sons, viz., Bhowani Pershad, Peary Lal and Gopal Lal, and that Sheo Lal had a son named Durga Pershad. In the suit out of which appeal No. 60 arises, the plaintiffs are the widow and sons of Kanhya Lal, and the sons and wives of Bhowani Pershad, of Gopal Lal and of Domun Lal. In the other suit the plaintiffs are sons of Shoukhi Lal, sons and wife of Durga Pershad, and wives of Nuthoo Lal and Gopi Lal who are the sons of Peary Lal. In both these suits one Mohabir Pershad, not belonging to the family, has joined as plaintiff. He is the benamidar of one Bunwari Lal, a rich banker in the district of Mozufferpore, who has purchased a share of the disputed property from the other plaintiffs.

It appears that this family carried on a trade of saltpetre in the names of some of its members. The principal defendants in this case, who acted as the bankers of this family for a long time, used to advance money from time to time with which this trade was carried on. On the 26th November 1864 there was an adjustment of accounts between the parties, and the sum of Rs. 24,283-15-6 was found due to the defendants. On that date a cash loan of Rs. 9,716 odd annas 6 pie having been taken by the joint family, a bond for the consolidated amount for Rs. 34,000 was given by the head members of the family to the defendants. This bond was executed by Kunhay Lal, Domun Lal, Bhowani Pershad, and Gopal Lal. The reason for these four persons only executing the bond was that the properties, [498] which were hypothecated as collateral security in it, stood in their names. All these properties are situated within the district of Tirhoot.

The money covered by this bond not having been paid on the due date, a suit was brought against these four persons. It was decreed on the 10th February 1866. The Court in its judgment found that the money was taken for the purpose of carrying on the family trade mentioned above. This decree was obtained in the District Court of Patna. There was no direction in it for the sale of the hypothecated properties.

In execution of this decree the properties in dispute in this case, consisting of the hypothecated properties as well as certain properties which had not been hypothecated, were brought to sale in the District Court of Mozufferpore, in the years 1866-67-68. Two of these sales, however, took place so late as in the year 1871. The defendants who became the auction-purchasers in these sales took possession under colour of their purchase of the shares of their judgment-debtors as well as of their sons.

The money covered by the decree not having been satisfied, the defendants brought another suit against the head members of the remaining branches of the family, viz., Shoukhi Lal, Durga Pershad, Nuthoo Lal, Gopal Lal, and Gobardhun for a declaration that they were entitled to have the balance of the decree realized by the sale of their property. This suit was decreed in their favour on the 30th June 1868, the Court finding that the original debt, contracted under the bond of 26th November 1864, was binding upon the joint-family. Under this decree the remaining shares of the family properties mentioned above were brought to sale in the years 1868 and 1869. The defendant in these instances also became the auction-purchasers, and, under colour of their purchase, took possession of the shares of their judgment-debtors as well as of their sons.

Some of the sons of the judgment-debtors in both these decrees were adults. The present suits were brought in February and March 1879, on the allegation that by these sales only the interests of the persons, who were defendants in these two suits passed, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover back their shares from the auction-purchasers. It will have appeared from the dates given [499] above that the suits were brought in some instances more than 11 years after the auction sales; and in no instance are the dates of the suits less than eight years from the date of the auction-purchase. The lower Court being of opinion that the original debt was binding upon the whole family, and finding that there was long delay in bringing these suits, dismissed them with costs. The lower Court has also found that the majority of the properties in dispute in this case were acquired after the death of Chumun Lal.

In these two appeals nothing has been urged before as regards the properties acquired after the death of Chumun Lal. With reference to the remaining properties two objections have been taken to the decree of the lower Court: First, that as regards the plaintiffs who had attained their majority before the suits against their fathers were brought (and which suits resulted in the decrees of the 10th February 1866 and 30th June 1866), their shares did not pass by the auction sales; secondly, that as regards properties not hypothecated in the bond of the 26th November 1864, nothing but the interests of the judgment-debtors passed under the auction sales.

With reference to these two grounds, the learned Counsel for the appellants has placed before us all the decided cases bearing upon them, and has contended that the balance of authorities is in favour of the contention raised by him.

The only cases cited in support of the first objection are Laljee Sahoy v. Fakeer Chand (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 135), and Upooroop Tewary v. Lalla Bandhjee Sahoy (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 749).

The last-mentioned case does not, in our opinion, support this contention. It has rather a contrary tendency. The facts of that case are that a Mitakshara father executed a bond hypothecating a certain ancestral property. He had at that time an adult son. Upon the mortgage bond, a decree was obtained against the father alone, and in execution of that decree the mortgaged property was sold and purchased by the defendant, who, under colour of his purchase, took possession thereof. The son then brought a suit to recover possession of his share, and it was held that the mortgage [500] by the father would not be binding upon the son, unless it was shown that the son had either expressly or impliedly consented to it, and the case was remanded to try that question. It is, therefore, an authority for the proposition that although an adult son may not have been made a defendant, yet if a particular property were property liable to be sold in execution of the decree which may have been passed against the father, the whole property would pass. This case, therefore, instead of supporting the appellant's contention, goes to show that where a property is liable for the debt contracted by the father, it may be brought to sale in execution of a decree based upon that debt; and that that sale would pass the interest of the son (whether minor or adult), notwithstanding that he was not made a party to the suit in which the decree was passed.

The case of Laljee Sahoy v. Fakker Chand (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 135) does to a certain extent support the appellant's contention. There also a certain ancestral property had been mortgaged by a father, and it was proved that the mortgage had been made with the consent of the son, who was adult at the time of the mortgage. The suit upon the mortgage bond was brought only against the father, and, a decree having been obtained, the ancestral property was brought to sale. The purchaser obtained possession of it, and after nearly the lapse of twelve years the son brought a suit to recover possession of his share.

Mr. Justice PONTIFEX, in delivering judgment in that case, made the following observations:—

"The result, in fact, seems to be that, qua ancestral property, the son is as equally liable for his father's debts if not incurred for immoral purposes, as for his own debts; but if the interests of an adult son were affected by a decree against the father alone, which, in our opinion, is not the law, the unreasonable consequence might be that the son's interest would be more liable for the payment of the father's debt than for the debt and perhaps the prior debt of the son, for no creditors of the son could touch his interest without suing him."

No doubt this passage lends some colour to the contention that, in order to affect an adult son, the suit must be brought against [301] him also; but the result of the decision shows that full effect was not given by the learned Judges to the dictum laid down above; for they held that, as the son had stood by and allowed the mortgagee to believe that the mortgage covered the whole sixteen annas of the property, and then allowed him to take possession under his purchase, and to remain in unmolested possession for nearly twelve years, he was estopped from afterwards claiming his share in the property sold.

These observations show that the son was bound by the mortgage because he had, by his conduct, allowed the mortgagee to believe that the mortgage would affect the whole sixteen annas of the property; but according to the dictum extracted above, a decree passed upon a mortgage bond binding upon the son would not affect him unless made a party to the suit. The conduct of the son, therefore, in not bringing a suit for a period of eleven years and upwards, could not make the auction-purchase made by the mortgagee himself extend over the whole sixteen annas of the property if really its legal effect were to convey the father's interest only.

Therefore, although there are certain observations in this judgment which lend some support to the contention of the learned Counsel, the final result of the decision is that the adult son was held bound by the sale which was effected in execution of a decree against the father alone. Therefore, the cases cited by the learned Counsel do not support the objection taken by him.

Then, apart from the decided cases, there does not appear to us to be any difference in principle between the cases of adult and minor sons. It has been now conclusively held that an ancestral property in the possession of a father and a son, whether an adult or not, is liable for the father's personal debts, provided that these debts are not proved to have been contracted for immoral purposes. That being the law, it is difficult to understand upon what ground the distinction between the case of an adult and a minor son can be supported.

In the case of an adult son, it may be urged that he ought to be made a party to the suit, because that may enable him, in some cases, to save the family property by paying the debt out of his own private funds, if he be possessed of any. If a case like this be made out by an adult son in any suit, the question may arise [502] whether he should not be allowed to have the sale set aside on the payment of the debt due under the decree; but that is not the case here. It is not said here that the adult sons, by reason of their not having been made parties, were deprived of the opportunity of saving the property by paying off the debt.

Beyond this, it does not appear to us that there is any other reasonable ground upon which it can be said that the law should, in the case of an adult son, be different from what it is in the case of a minor son. The first ground taken before us, therefore, is untenable.

As regards the second objection, it seems to us that the balance of authorities is against the contention raised by the learned counsel.

When these cases are narrowly examined, it appears that the only decision which supports the contention is that of Ramphul Singh v. Deg Narain Singh. In the other three cases it is not broadly laid down that in execution of a money-decree against the father, his interest in the joint property can only be brought to sale. What has been decided in these cases is that, having regard to the circumstances of each transaction forming the basis of each of those suits, what was sold was the interest of the father alone.

The learned counsel relied very strongly upon the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (L. R., 4. I. A., 247; s. c., I. L. R., 3 Cal., 198). In the case of Umbika Prosad Tewary v. Ram Sahay Lall (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 898), I have gone at some length into this question, and it seemed to me then, as it seems to me now, that what was decided by their Lordships in the Judicial Committee in the case [503] of Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain was simply this,—that the interest of a member of a joint Hindu family in joint property is liable to be sold in execution of a decree against him. On the other hand, there is a current of decisions showing that, in execution of a money-decree against the father alone, the whole family property may be brought to sale, and that, when such property is sold, the son cannot get the sale set aside, unless he proves that the debt, for which the decree was passed, has been contracted by the father for immoral purposes. See Junnuk Kishoree Koonwar v. Rughoonundun Singh (S. D. A., 1861, 213); Balmokund v. Jhoona Lall (S. D. A., N. W. P., 2 Sol. Ca., 469); Beer Pershad v. Doorga Pershad (W. R. 1864, 310); Budree Lall v. Kantoo Lall (23 W. R., 260); Anooragee Koorer v. Bhugobutty Koorer (25 W. R., 148); Luchmi Dai Koori v. Asman Singh (I. L. R. 2 Cal., 213; 25 W. R., 421); and Ponappa Pillai v. Poppuwayangar (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 1).

Many of these cases are based upon the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Muddun Thakoor v. Kantoo Lall (L. R. 1 I. A., 321; s. c. 14 B. L. R., 187).

It is said that this last-mentioned case is only an authority for the proposition that, where a father mortgages ancestral property, the son cannot recover his share of it unless it be shown that the mortgage debt was contracted for illegal purposes.

The observations of the Judicial Committee do not warrant us in taking this narrow view of their decision. All that they say is that it was shown in that case that a Court of Justice had given a decree against him (the father) in favour of the creditor, and that the Court had given an order for the particular property to be put up for sale under the execution. A reference to the Paper Book before the Privy Council will show that the decree was a simple money-decree; that there was no reference in it to [504] any mortgage; and that the sale was made in the ordinary way, there being no special directions given for the sale of the whole ancestral property. Then, again, the Judicial Committee expressly confirm the ruling in the case of Junnuk Kishoree Kooncar v. Rughoonundan Singh (S. D. A., 1861, 213). In that case there was no sale in execution of a mortgage decree. The sales which were upheld in that case were all sales in execution of simple money-decrees. There is no ground, therefore, for supposing that their Lordships of the Judicial Committee intended that the operation of the principle laid down in the case of Muddun Thakoor v. Kantoo Lall (L. R., 1 I. A., 321, s.c., 14 B. L. R., 187) should be restricted in its application only to sales in execution of decrees based upon bonds, under which ancestral properties are hypothecated.

It being clear, therefore, that in each case it will have to be determined whether the whole ancestral property has been sold, and whether the sale can be impeached by the son or not, there cannot be the least doubt, having regard to the facts of the case before us, that the decrees made by the lower Courts are correct upon the sale proceedings; there is not the slightest doubt that the whole family property was sold. It is also clear that the debts, which were the foundation of the decrees in execution of which the properties were brought to sale, were debts contracted by the heads of the several branches of the joint family for family purposes. Under these circumstances, and especially having regard to the length of time which elapsed between the dates of sale and the dates of the institution of these suits, we are of opinion that the decision of the lower Court is correct. We, therefore, dismiss both these appeals with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Enhancement of rent—Land let for purpose of clearing at certain rent.

When land is let for the purpose of clearing jungle, or other reclamation, and on this ground, or any other ground mentioned in the lease, a reduced rent is provided for the first few years, and it is said that the rent is to be at a certain rate as the full rent, such rent is not liable to enhancement.

Baboo Rashbehary Ghose and Baboo Bhobany Churn Dutt for the Appellant.

Baboo Sreenath Dass and Baboo Gyanendro Nath Doss for the Respondent.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (WILSON and MACLEAN, JJ.) which was delivered by Wilson, J.—We think that in this case there is no ground for interfering with the decision of the Court below.

The suit was for enhancement of rent of a holding. It appears that the holding of the defendant was a tenure created under a certain amulnama. We must take it, the document itself not being before us, that the terms of the document are correctly stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. It is there stated: "It appears from the rubokaris and amulnama, dated 8th February 1849, that the land of this tenure was originally taken for the express purpose of clearing jungles. It was a khalari land. After the abolition of salt-manufacture, it became covered with jungle. The authorities thought it proper to let it out to the best advantage. As labour and capital must be laid out before this land could be brought into cultivation, it was thought fit to make a jungleburi tenure in favour of the defendants, the maximum rent whereof was fixed at 8 annas per bigha. Under the rulings in Watson v. Joggeshar Attah (Marsh., 330); [506] Golam Ali v. Gopal Lal Thakoore (15 B. L. R., 125; s.c. 19 W. R., 141); and Soorasoodery Dabee v. Golam Ali (9 W. R., 65); I agree with the Court below in holding that this tenure is not liable to enhancement under the Rent Law."

Now, the question is shortly this: When land is let for the purpose of clearing jungle or other reclamation, and on this ground, or any other ground mentioned in the lease, a reduced rent is provided for the first few years, and it is said that the rent is to be at such and such rate, a sum as the full rent—does that mean, as the words seem to import, that the full rent is to be the full rent as long as the tenure subsists, or is such a rent liable to enhancement under the provisions of the Rent Law? We agree with the lower Appellate Court in holding that the decision of the Privy Council in Soorasoodery

Dabee v. Golam Ali (9 W. R., 65) is an authority for holding that the former view is the true one, and that in the present case that rent cannot be enhanced.

This appeal is dismissed with costs.

Sale in execution of decree — Setting aside sale "Saleable interest"—

Civil—Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) s. 313.

The fact that property sold in execution of a decree is subject to a mortgage upon which a decree has been obtained, which fact is not disclosed prior to the proclamation of sale, is not sufficient to enable an auction-purchaser to set aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had "no saleable interest" in the property, within the meaning of s. 313 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Naharmul Marwari v. Sadut Ali (8 C. L. R., 468), distinguished.

THIS was an application by an auction-purchaser to set aside the sale of a property sold in the execution suit on the ground that the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in the property had been mortgaged by him to one Iswar Chunder [507] Shaha, who had obtained a decree on the mortgage, and that the fact of the mortgage was not revealed in the affidavit which was filed on behalf of the decree-holder prior to the proclamation of the sale. The Munsiff held that this was not a sufficient ground for an auction-purchaser to set aside a sale, considering that some rights remained in the judgment-debtor, and that therefore it could not be said that he had "no saleable interest" within the meaning of s. 313 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The auction-purchaser appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose for the Appellant.

Baboo Huro Mohun Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by WILSON, J.—We think there is no ground for interfering with the order made in this case. The question is whether the Court below ought to have set aside the sale in execution under the terms of s. 313 of the Procedure Code. That section says: "The purchaser at any such sale may apply to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground that the person whose property purported to be sold had no saleable interest therein." It is said in this case that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property, on the ground that the property had been mortgaged, and that before the sale to the present appellant a decree in a suit on the mortgage had been obtained. We are not prepared to lay down broadly the proposition that wherever there is a mortgage on the property and a mortgage decree has been obtained, there is no saleable interest in the judgment-debtor. We are asked so to hold on the authority of the case of Naharmul Murwari v. Sadut Ali (8 C. L. R., 468). We do not understand that the Court there intended to lay down any such proposition. That case was a peculiar one in its circumstances, and the order made was a very special one. The Court did not set aside the sale as between the purchaser and the decree-holder. It set aside the sale so far as to protect the purchaser, who, by reason of the mortgage, had perhaps obtained no profitable interest in the property from having to pay the balance of his [508] purchase-money, after satisfying the decree-holder's claim, into the pocket of the judgment-debtor himself. That is a very different case from the present one, which is a case between the decree-holder and purchaser, and not a case between the judgment-debtor and the purchaser. That case, therefore, appears to us not to govern this case.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Costs—Liability of shares of members of joint family for.

Pending an appeal, the plaintiff, who was the appellant, died, leaving one adult and four minor sons. The adult son prosecuted the appeal, which was dismissed, as was the suit in the Court below, with costs. The decrees for costs were sold by the defendant to a third person, who caused certain property which belonged to the estate of the plaintiff to be sold in execution. Held, in a suit by the minor sons to recover possession of the shares in the property sold, that as all the sons were interested in the litigation all their shares were liable for the costs, and the suit was dismissed.

THIS was a suit to recover possession of certain lands. It appeared that one Jubhoo Lal Sahoo brought a suit against one Dukhit Sahoo for possession of a house and for rent. This suit was dismissed with costs. Jubhoo Lal Sahoo appealed, but died before the appeal was heard. His eldest and only adult son, Mohabeer Persad, prosecuted the appeal, which was dismissed with costs. Dukhit Sahoo sold the decree for costs to one Jutadhari Lal. The property, the subject of the present suit, was sold in execution of the decree, and was purchased by Jutadhari Lal. The present suit was brought by the four minor sons of Jubhoo Lal Sahoo against Jutadhari Lal, Dukhit Sahoo and Mohabeer Persad to recover four-fifths of the property sold, on the ground that, as they had not been represented upon the appeal or in the execution proceedings, their shares in the property did not pass to the purchaser, but only the share of Mohabeer Persad. The plaint contained the usual charges of fraud and collusion between the defendants. The Munsiff found that these charges were not proved, and held that the whole of Jubhoo Lal Sahoo's share passed under the sale, and dismissed the suit. The Subordinate Judge reversed the Munsiff's decision, holding that the share of Mohabeer Persad alone could be affected by the execution proceedings. The defendant Jutadhari Lal appealed to the High Court.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2320 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Kali Prosunno Mukerji, Second Sub-Judge of Sarun, dated the 11th November 1881, reversing the decree of Baboo Tara Prosunno Banerjee, Sudder Munsif of that district, dated the 28th June 1880.

Baboo Mohesh Chunder Chowdry for the Appellant.

Baboo Saligram Singh for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—The plaintiffs are the minor sons of one Jubhoo Sahoo. It appears that Jubhoo Lal Sahoo had brought a suit against the defendant No. 2, in this case, viz., Dukhit Sahoo, for recovery of possession of a house and for recovery of the rent due on account of that house. This suit was dismissed on the 9th of October 1874, and Jubhoo Lal was made liable for costs. Against that decree Jubhoo Lal preferred an appeal, and while that appeal was pending Jubhoo Lal died. The appeal was then prosecuted by Mohabeer Persad, who was the sole adult son of Jubhoo Lal, the other two sons, the plaintiffs in this case, being minors. The appeal was dismissed, and the appellant was made liable for costs. The decrees for costs passed by the Court of First Instance as well as by the Court of Appeal, having been sold by the defendant No. 2 to the defendant No. 1, Jutadhari Lal, the appellant before us, they were executed, and the property now in suit was sold in execution, and purchased by Jutadhari Lal himself. The present suit was brought to recover the share of the plaintiffs in the property sold, on the ground that they not having been represented either in the Appellate Court or in the execution proceedings, their shares were not affected by the sale; what passed under it was the share of Mohabeer Persad alone, who prosecuted the appeal, and against whom alone the execution proceedings were taken. There is no doubt in this case that one of the decrees was against Jubhoo Lal himself. It is also the fact that Jubhoo Lal had himself preferred the appeal which was subsequently dismissed, [510] it having been prosecuted after his death by his adult son, Mohabeer Persad. The original suit related to a certain property appertaining to the estate of Jubhoo Lal, and if the appeal had succeeded the plaintiffs would have shared in the benefit arising from that success. Under these circumstances, it is but just to hold that Mohabeer Persad prosecuted the appeal as the representative of the joint family, consisting of himself and his minor brother, who were all interested in the result of that litigation. This is precisely the view which was taken under similar circumstances by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the well-known case of Bissessur Lal Sahoo v. Luchmessur Sing (L. R., 6. I. A., 233). That being so, it seems to us clear that the view of the rights of the parties taken by the Court of First Instance is correct; what was sold was the property of Jubhoo Lal, who was the real debtor. That he was the real debtor so far as the decree of the first Court is concerned admits of no doubt; and, having regard to the circumstances of the case, it seems to us that, as to the costs of the Appellate Court, the real debtor was also Jubhoo Lal, that is to say, that his estate was liable for these costs. The lower Appellate Court, in deciding in favour of the plaintiffs, relied upon the Full Bench decision in Assamathem Nessa Bibee v. Roy Lutchmeeput Singh (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 142). That case seems to us to be distinguishable from the present in many ways, but the principal and most striking distinction that appears to us is this: There the original debtor was a Mahomedan, and the persons who were sued in that case after the death of the original debtor could not, as in a Hindu family, be said to have represented the particular heir whose name was left out. It is sufficient to refer to this distinction in order to show that the principle laid down in that case cannot apply to the present case.

On the whole, we are of opinion that in this case what was sold was the property of Jubhoo Lal.

We therefore set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Munsiff with costs.

Appeal allowed.

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Srinath Dutt.....Judgment-debtor
versus

Gopal Chundra Mittra and others.....Decree-holders.*

Sale in execution of decree —Debt secured by mortgage of immovable property—Civil Procedure Code (X of 1877), s. 266.

A debt secured by mortgage of immovable property cannot be sold in execution of a decree under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to moveable property.

IN this case in execution of a decree obtained by Gopal Chundra Mittra, the interest of Srinath Dutt, one of the judgment-debtors in certain property which had been mortgaged to him by one Ugendro Nath Dutt, was sold as moveable property. Srinath Dutt applied to have the sale set aside on the ground that his interest, involving as it did an interest in immovable property, was not a debt such as could be sold under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to moveable property.

The District Judge refused the application. He said: "The argument by which this debt is sought to be converted into immovable property is, so far as I understand it, this: that according to the Transfer of Property Act a mortgage is a transfer of an interest in immovable property; that under the Limitation Act "immovable property" includes any interest arising out of land, and also in Article 144 puts any interest in immovable property on exactly the same footing as immovable property itself in respect of limitation. The fallacy in this argument I think consists in looking upon a debt which is secured by the pledging of land as a benefit arising out of that land. Properly viewed it is an incumbrance on the land. For special purposes of limitation it may be advisable to put such an interest on the same footing as immoveable property, but this does not make them both the same thing. A debt remains a debt, however much it may be hedged round with safeguards and conditions, some of them involving land. The language of s. 66 of the Civil Procedure Code on this point is clear; it speaks of bonds ["312"] or other securities for money, thus clearly contemplating a mortgage bond."

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 319 of 1882, against the order of J. P. Grant, Esq., Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 7th July 1882.

The District Judge accordingly dismissed the application.

Srinath Dutt appealed from that decision to the High Court.

Baboo Bhabany Churn Dutt for the Appellant.

Baboo Bhubun Mohun Doss for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Cunningham, J. The question to be decided in this appeal is whether a debt secured by mortgage of immoveable property has been rightly sold in execution of decree, under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to moveable property.

The learned Judge below has regarded it merely as a debt, and has held that it was rightly sold as moveable property. We feel some difficulty in adopting this view. A mortgage is not merely a debt; it represents a substantial interest in the mortgaged property, viz., the right of selling it, under certain conditions, in realization of the debt. It is obvious that if the debt alone, apart from the security, is sold in execution, the full value of the mortgage will not be realized. The case does not appear to be expressly provided for by the Code. We think that in such cases there should be an attachment under s. 274 as well as under s. 268. In the present case, as the debt alone was sold, a material irregularity producing substantial injury to the judgment-debtor appears to have occurred, and the sale must be set aside under s. 311, and the purchase money refunded under s. 315.

The appeal must be decreed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Practice—Repeal of Act —Appeal to High Court—Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1872, s. 36—Act X of 1882, s. 408—High Court, Revisional Jurisdiction.

On the 9th of December 1882, a person was convicted under ss. 457 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment by a Deputy Magistrate of Assam, exercising special powers under s. 36 of the old Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1872. The new Code of Criminal Procedure came into force on the 1st of January 1883. The prisoner presented an appeal to the High Court from the conviction and sentence above mentioned on the 23rd of January 1883.

Held, by FIELD, J. (MITTER, J., expressing no decided opinion) that the case was governed by s. 408 of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, and that no appeal lay to the High Court.

Held, by the Court, that the case was a fit one for the exercise of the High Court's Revisional Jurisdiction, and should be dealt with under the powers conferred on the High Court by virtue of that jurisdiction.

IN this case the prisoners were charged by the Deputy Commissioner of Assam with having committed offences under s. 457, ss. 457 and 109, and s. 411 of the Indian Penal Code. The charges were proved to the satisfaction of the Deputy Commissioner, who sentenced the prisoners to three years' rigorous imprisonment on the 9th of December 1882. The Deputy Commissioner was invested with powers under the provisions of s. 36, Act X of 1872. The prisoners appealed to the High Court on the 23rd of January 1883.

Baboo Hurry Mohan Chuckerbutty for the Appellants.

The following Judgments were delivered :—

Mitter, J.—In this case three persons—Rongai, Gouri Khan and Beerai—were convicted under s. 457, coupled with s. 109, by an officer exercising the special powers vested in him under s. 36, Act X of 1872. They were each of them sentenced to three [514] years' rigorous imprisonment on the 9th of December last. An appeal was presented to this Court on the 23rd of January last, and on the appeal coming on for hearing before a Division Bench of this Court on the same day, the following order was passed :—“ The appeal is admitted, send for the record and issue the usual notices.” The case being now called on before us to be heard finally a question has arisen,—whether this Court is competent to hear this case as an appeal against the conviction and sentence of the lower Court. It appears, with reference to the provisions of the old Code, that the provisions of the old Code and those of the new Code are not precisely the same. Under the old Code the test which determined the venue of appeal in cases like the present was whether the officer in the lower Court exercised the special powers mentioned in s. 36. In this case it is clear that the Deputy Commissioner against whose judgment this appeal has been preferred, was exercising the special powers vested in him under s. 36 of the Code of 1872. As Magistrate he could not pass the sentence which was passed in this case, and it is also apparent on the proceedings that he was exercising the special powers under that section. That being so, it is quite clear that under the old Code the appeal lay to this Court, but under the new Code the right of appeal to this Court is restricted only to those cases in which the sentence passed by officers of this description, viz., officers vested with special powers under the provisions of s. 36, requires confirmation by a superior Court. Then, whether under the old Code or under the new Code, it is quite clear that the sentence which was passed in this case did not require confirmation by a superior Court. That being so, it is also quite clear that if the new Code applies, the appeal in this case would not lie to this Court. The last section of the new Code provides that all pending proceedings would be governed by it, and if the present case could be considered as a case pending on the 1st of January 1883, no doubt the new Code would have applied; but, as already stated, the case was disposed of in the lower Court on the 9th December 1882. On the other hand, by s. 2 of the new Code, Act X of 1872 having been repealed, and this appeal having been preferred on the 23rd of January, the appellants could not claim any right of appeal which they had under the old Code, [515] as that Code was not in force on that day. The section which deals with the right of appeal under the new Code is s. 408, and that section is to the following effect: “Any person convicted on a trial held by an Assistant Sessions Judge, a District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class, or any person sentenced under s. 349 by a Magistrate of the first class, may appeal to the Court of Session. Provided that “(a), when in any case an Assistant Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate passes any sentence which is subject to the confirmation of the Court of Session, every appeal in such case shall lie to the High Court.” The section says generally that any person convicted on trial by the officers abovementioned may appeal to the Sessions Judge, and in certain cases to the High Court. Therefore, I am inclined to think that the right of appeal in this case would be governed by the provisions of the new Code. That being so, the appellants, as a matter of right, would not be entitled to appeal to this Court; but it seems to me that it is not essentially necessary in this case to decide this question, because whether the appeal lies to the Sessions Judge or to this Court, this seems to be a fit case for the exercise of the revisional powers given to us by the new Code. It is, therefore, not necessary for me to express a decided opinion on this point, but treating the case whether as an appeal or under the revisional powers vested in this Court, it seems to me that the conviction of the lower Court cannot stand.

[His Lordship having gone through the evidence said] :—

On the whole, I do not think that the evidence is sufficient to support the conviction of the prisoners. We accordingly set it aside and direct their immediate release.

Field, J.—In this case the appellants were convicted on the 9th of December last by a Deputy Commissioner in Assam exercising the special powers which could be conferred under s. 36* of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1872. That the Deputy Commissioner as District Magistrate was exercising these powers appears on the face of these proceedings, and with reference to the provisions of s. 270, Act X of 1872, it is also clear that the District Magistrate was exercising these powers because it appears from the sentence awarded, viz., three years' rigorous imprisonment, that such officer was exercising such [516] special powers. As District Magistrate the Deputy Commissioner could only have passed a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment. This being so, it is clear that under the provisions of s. 270, just referred to, the appeal lay to the High Court, and not to the Court of Session. But it is to my mind clear that the present Code, Act X of 1882, has altered the law. Section 408 of the present Code enacts thus generally: "Any person convicted on a trial held by an Assistant Sessions Judge, a District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class, or any person sentenced under s. 349 by a Magistrate of the first class, may appeal to the Court of Session, provided that when in any case an Assistant Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate passes any sentence which is subject to the confirmation of the Court of Session, every appeal in such a case shall lie to the High Court." Now it is clear to my mind that the words "District Magistrate" here include a District Magistrate vested with special powers under s. 30 of the present Code. It is, therefore, clear that all cases tried by a District Magistrate so vested are, as a general rule, appealable to the Court of Session, unless in any particular case the sentence, being subject to the confirmation of the Court of Session, is appealable to the High Court. Now the sentence passed in the present case is a sentence of three years only; that sentence, according to the old law, and to the new law, did not and does not require confirmation, and therefore it is clear to my mind that under the words of the present Code the appeal in this case lay to the Court of Session, because the sentence passed was not subject to the confirmation of the Court of Session. The appeal was presented to the High Court after the 1st of January, and the question arises whether the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal so presented. It appears to me that the High Court, as a Court of Appellate Jurisdiction, cannot entertain this case as an appeal. Section 558 of the present Code relates to pending cases. Now this was not a pending case, and, therefore, it does not come within the purview of that section. Then it is contended that s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1 of 1868, will apply. It appears to me that this appeal cannot, within the meaning of that section, be termed a proceeding commenced before the repeal of Act X of 1872. The [517] proceedings on the original trial terminated on the 9th of December. The proceeding before us is an appeal, and no such proceeding was commenced

* [Sec. 36:—In the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, and in the territories administered by the Chief Commissioners of Oudh, the Central Provinces, and British Burmah, in Coorg, and in those parts of the other provinces, in which there are Deputy Commissioners or Assistant Commissioners, the Local Government may invest the Deputy Commissioner, or other Chief Officer charged with the executive administration of the district in criminal matters, with power to try as a Magistrate all offences not punishable with death, and to pass sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, including such solitary confinement as is authorized by law, or of fine, or of whipping, or any combination of these punishments authorized by law; but any sentence of upwards of three years imprisonment passed by any such officer shall be subject to the confirmation of the Sessions Judge, to whom such Deputy Commissioner is subordinate. Such Sessions Judge may either confirm, modify, or annul any sentence referred for confirmation.]

before us on the 1st of January. That being so, it appears to me that the case must come under the general language of s. 408, viz., that any person convicted on a trial held by a District Magistrate may appeal to the Court of Session. That language is general; it is in no way restricted to persons convicted after the Code came into operation, and it is sufficiently wide to include the cases of persons convicted before the new Code came into force. This being so, I am of opinion that the appeal in the present case ought to have been made not to the High Court but to the Court of Session. I am, however, quite of opinion with my learned colleague that having regard to the distance of Assam from Calcutta, having regard to the mistakes that may probably be committed upon a change in the law, and moreover having regard to the facts of this particular prosecution, it is a proper case in which to exercise the revisional jurisdiction of this Court. This being so I have concurred in hearing this case as a case taken up for revision. As to the remarks on examination of the evidence, and generally on the merits of the case which have just been made by my learned colleague, I entirely agree, and I think that these appellants must be acquitted and discharged.

Convictions set aside.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd December, 1883

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KNIGHT, CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE MITTER.

Ramkristo DassPlaintiff

Sheikh Harain.....Defendant.*

Suit for rent—Landlord and tenant—Registered owner, suit by, where the relationship of landlord and tenant is not shown to exist—

Beng. Act VII 1876, s. 78.

The mere fact of a person being registered under the provisions of Beng. Act VII of 1876 as proprietor of the land in respect of which he seeks to recover rent is not sufficient to entitle him to sue for it.

[518] Where a landlord who was registered as owner of the land in respect of which he claimed rent, sued the occupier for such rent, but was only able to prove the fact that he was the registered owner, and was unable to show that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed, or that he had a good title to the estate of which he was the registered owner :

Held that the suit was rightly dismissed.

THIS was an appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent against the decree of Mr. Justice O'KINEALY. The plaintiff in this and some analogous suit sued for arrears of rent in respect of the years 1283 to 1285 (1876—1878) for lands situate in a certain talook No. 170, of which he was registered as owner. The defendant denied that the relation of landlord and tenant existed, and alleged that for the particular lands for which the rent was claimed he paid rent to a third party named Omakant.

* Appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent against the decree of Mr. Justice O'Kinealy, dated the 13th September 1882, in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1549 of 1881.

The Court of First Instance decreed the suit, but the Subordinate Judge on appeal, holding on the evidence on the record that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist, reversed that decree and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff then preferred a special appeal to the High Court, and on the hearing of the appeal before Mr. Justice O'KINEALY it was contended that inasmuch as the plaintiff had got his name registered in respect of the land, the defendant holding the land was bound to pay him rent without any contract, express or implied, and that he could sue him for rent. Mr. Justice O'KINEALY, however, held that if the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist, the suit could not be maintained merely from the fact that he was the registered owner. It was further contended in special appeal that the Courts below should have decided whether the land in question lay within plaintiff's lands or within the boundaries of the chak belonging to Omakant; but the Court held that it was quite unnecessary to enter into the question of the plaintiff's title as against a party not on the record, when the other finding was sufficient to dispose of the suit.

Several other questions were raised on behalf of the plaintiffs on Special Appeal, which are immaterial for the purposes of this report, and the Court after disposing of them held that on the facts, as proved, there was nothing to show that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed, and accordingly dismissed the appeal.

[519] The plaintiff accordingly preferred the present appeal.

Baboo Omakuli Mukerjee appeared for the Appellant.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Rai for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C. J., and MITTER, J.) was delivered by Garth, C. J.—The plaintiff is the registered owner of a revenue-paying estate under Beng. Act VII of 1876, and in this and other analogous cases he sues certain tenants of that estate to recover rent for the lands which they hold; and for the purposes of the question, which we have to determine, we must assume that he has proved no title to the rent which he claims, beyond the mere fact that he is the registered proprietor. The question is, whether that fact alone entitles him to recover rent from the defendants.

The Court of First Instance considered that it did; but the Subordinate Judge and the learned Judge of this Court have both decided against the plaintiff. He now appeals to us relying on the language of s. 78 of Beng. Act VII of 1876.

That section says that "no person shall be bound to pay rent to any person claiming such rent as proprietor or manager of an estate or revenue-free property in respect of which he is required by this Act to cause his name to be registered, or as mortgagee, unless the name of such claimant shall have been registered under this Act."

It is contended that under the provisions of that section the registered owner of a revenue-paying estate has a right to sue the tenants for rent, although he has not entered into any contract with them, and although he cannot prove a good title to the estate of which he is the registered owner.

We think that the section does not say or mean anything of the kind. It is true that the owner of the estate cannot sue for rent, unless he is registered; but it by no means follows, that one who is not the true owner, can sue because he is registered.

This point is very clear, and has been decided by this Court on several previous occasions.

Speaking for myself I heartily wish it were the law, that the registered owner, and the registered owner only, was entitled to sue [520] the tenants for rent; and that, not only as regards revenue-paying, but all other estates.

Unfortunately, however, that is not the law at present; and we must therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

It is admitted that the appeals, numbered 1550 to 1553 inclusive, will be governed by this decision. Those appeals, therefore, are also dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 49—Unregistered bond—Evidence—Mortgage.

An unregistered bond containing a personal undertaking to repay money borrowed, and also a hypothecation of land above Rs. 100 in value as security, may be used in evidence to enforce the personal obligation.

THIS was a suit for money lent and interest. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had borrowed from the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 2,500 on the 3rd of February 1878, and that on the same date she executed a bond, whereby she promised to pay the money within a year. The bond had been lost by the plaintiff before the institution of the suit, but on the trial secondary evidence of its contents was given by one of the plaintiff's witnesses, who is thus referred to by the lower Appellate Court: "He drew up a draft of the plaint to be filed with the bond before it was lost, and was plaintiff's advisor at the time. He is therefore in the best position of all the witnesses to speak as to its contents. He says the bond contained these words: "I promise to pay the amount of the bond peaceably (apoya)—if not, you will sell the property which is mortgaged, and you may then proceed [521] against my other property." The defendant contended that the bond should have been registered, and, that not having been done, submitted that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed. The Court of first Instance gave the plaintiff a decree, which was affirmed on appeal, the Judge citing Mattongeney Dassee v. Ramnarain Sadkhan (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 83), and Krishto Lall Ghose v. Bonomalee Roy (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 611). The defendant appealed to the High Court on the ground (inter alia) that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in holding that the bond was legally admissible as evidence in the case. The case came on for hearing before a Division Bench of the High Court (WILSON and FIELD, JJ.) who referred the point for the decision of a Full Bench, with the following remarks :

Wilson, J.—The main question raised in this appeal is one upon the construction of s. 49 of the Registration Act (III of 1877).

The instrument sued on was not produced ; but the loss having been proved, secondary evidence was given of its contents. The exact terms of the document do not appear ; but the witnesses all agree that the document, which they call a bond, contained an acknowledgment of a loan of Rs. 2,500, a promise to repay the amount, and a mortgage of immoveable property to secure it.

The suit is a personal suit to recover the money. And the question is, whether the document can be given in evidence in support of such a personal claim, it not having been registered.

Section 49 says : "No document required by s. 17 to be registered shall affect any immoveable property, or confer any power to adopt, or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property or conferring such power."

The whole question appears to turn upon the meaning of the word transaction. Where under one contract and for one consideration two obligations are undertaken, one affecting land and the other not, is the whole one transaction within the meaning of the section ? Or may it be said that there are two distinct transactions, provided the obligation which does not affect land [522] be both intelligible and capable of performance without reference to the other which does ?

Apart from authority, I see great difficulty in saying that the transaction means anything but the whole bargain. It is a familiar rule of construction that words not of a technical nature are to be understood in their ordinary and natural sense unless a reason to the contrary appear ; and I rather think that any one, not a lawyer, who had borrowed money on mortgage, and executed a mortgage bond, would be surprised if he were told that he had been engaged in two separate transactions. And the difficulty is increased by the words that precede,—which say that "no document required by s. 17 to be registered shall affect any immoveable property." If the later words be read in such a sense as to make the word 'transaction' mean such part of the bargain as relates to land, it is not clear to my mind how they are to have any operation at all, or how they can apply to any case not already covered by the previous words.

The authorities bearing upon the question appear to stand thus : In Act XX of 1866, s. 49,* the words of the enactment were : "No instrument required by s. 17 to be registered shall be received in evidence in any Civil Proceeding in any Court, or shall affect any property comprised therein" unless registered. Upon these words a Full Bench of this Court held that all that was forbidden was the reception of the document "in evidence as a document affecting an interest in land"—Luchmiput Singh Dugar v. Mirza Khairat Ali (4 B. L. R., (F. B.), 18). The same view was taken by the Madras High Court in Valaya Padayachy v. Moorthy Padayachy (4 Mad. II. C., 174). The Bombay High Court followed these rulings, though in the first instance without wholly approving them, in Tukaram Vithoji v. Khandoji Malharji (6 Bom. H. C. O. C.

*[Sec. 49 :—No instrument required by section 17 to be registered shall be received in evidence in any Civil proceeding in any Court, or shall be acted on by any public servant as defined in the Indian Penal Code, or shall affect any property comprised therein, unless it shall have been registered in accordance with the provisions of this Act.]

Effect of non-registration of documents required to be registered.

134); and Sangappa Bin Ningappa v. Basappa Bin Parappa (7 Bom. H. C. A. C. 1). The section under which these cases were decided deals only with the effect and admissibility of the instrument, and says nothing about the transaction.

The language of s. 49 in the Act of 1871 was the same as that of the present Act. Under these Acts four cases, so [523] far as I am aware, have been decided. The case of Raja Balu v. Krishnarav Ramchandra (I. L. R., 2 Bom., 273) came before GREEN, J. That was a suit for damages for breach of a covenant contained in a document which also conveyed land. The learned Judge held that, even assuming the covenant not itself to affect land, yet, inasmuch as it could not be construed without referring to the conveyance, effect could not be given to it. The question whether a term not affecting land, if intelligible and capable of performance separately, could be enforced, did not arise. The case of Mattongeney Dossee v. Ramnarain Sadkhan (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 33), came before GARTH, C. J., and MARKBY, J. The bond was somewhat singularly worded, and some doubt was expressed whether it contained a personal promise to pay. But assuming that it did, the Court said: "In this case the document is not divisible. It discloses one transaction only, and that the transaction which the plaintiff must necessarily prove for the purpose of making out his case." And again it is said: "The transaction was one and indivisible." In that case I understand the Court as meaning by "the transaction" the whole bargain.

The case of Krishto Lall Ghose v. Bonomalee Roy (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 611), came before MITTER and TOTTENHAM, JJ. In that case again there was a bond containing a covenant to repay a sum of money borrowed and a mortgage to secure it. It was held that the two things were separable, and that the money might be recovered. That decision seems to me to involve the view, that transaction means not the bargain, but that term of the bargain which affects land.

It is true that the learned Judges who decided that case distinguish it from that before GARTH, C.J., and MARKBY, J.; but I feel great difficulty in seeing the distinction with sufficient clearness to enable me to say with confidence under which authority the present case falls.

In the case of Sheo Dial v. Prag Dat Misser (I. L. R., 3 All. 229), a similar question came before a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court. The defendant had executed a bond by which he [324] bound himself to pay a sum of money borrowed, and hypothecated land as security. The Court held that the plaintiff could sue for the money, though the bond was not registered. OLD-FIELD, J., in that case says expressly, and the other learned Judges seem to me to say by necessary implication, that the promise to pay and the hypothecation were distinct transactions.

In this state of the authorities, the question being one of very general importance, I think the matter should be referred to a Full Bench.

The question which I propose to refer is, whether the absence of registration is a bar to this suit.

Field, J.—I concur in making this reference to a Full Bench.

Baboo Srinath Dass and Baboo Grija Sunker Mozumdar for the Appellant.

Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy and Baboo Makund Nath Roy for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Full Bench was as follows:—

The question we have to decide is, whether an unregistered bond, containing a personal undertaking to repay money borrowed and also a hypothecation of land above Rs. 100 in value as security, may be used in evidence to enforce the personal obligation.

The section on which the case turns is s. 49 of the Registration Act, III of 1877, which says: "No document required by s. 17 to be registered shall affect any immoveable property comprised therein.....or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property....., unless it has been registered."

In the previous Registration Act, XX of 1866, the corresponding section was s. 49, which provided that: "No instrument required by s. 17 to be registered shall be received in evidence in any civil proceeding in any Court, or shall affect any property comprised therein," if unregistered.

Under that Act it was held by a Full Bench of this Court in Luchmiput Singh Dugar v. Mirza Khairat Ali (4 B. L. R. (F. B.), 18), that a [525] bond, such as that in question, was admissible to prove the debt. And the same view was taken by the High Courts of Madras, Bombay and N.-W. Provinces—Vallaya Padyachy v. Moorthy Padyachy (4 Mad. H. C., 174); Tukaram Vithoji v. Khandoji Maltharji (6 Bom., H. C. O. C., 174); Sangappa Bin Ningappa v. Bassappa Bin Parrappa (7 Bom. H. C. A. C., 1); Seeta Kulwar v. Jugurnath Pershad (4 Agra, H. C. 170). Under the Act, therefore, it was settled law for the whole of India that an unregistered document like the present was effectual and might be used in evidence to charge the person, though not the land. On a matter of such general importance, we think we ought not to hold the law to be changed, unless we see very clearly that the Legislature intended to change it. But when the language of the two Acts is compared it is seen that the words of the later are not more stringent, but less stringent, than those of the earlier.

We think also that in dealing with one of several Acts forming a consecutive series relating to the same subject, like the Registration Acts, we ought, as far as possible, to apply to the sections of the later Act the same method of construction which has been applied to the corresponding sections of the earlier. In the Full Bench case already referred to, the words "shall be received in evidence or shall affect" and were held to mean "should be received in evidence as a document affecting" land. We are applying exactly the same method of interpretation in holding that the words "shall be received as evidence of any transaction affecting land," mean, shall be received as evidence of any transaction so far as it affects land. And this we think is the true construction.

The view which we thus take of the section renders it unnecessary to consider the question discussed in some of the cases, and in the referring order, whether a document of this kind embodies only a single transaction or may properly be said to contain two.

We answer the question referred to us in the negative, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

[526] The 18th December, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE PICOT.

Dassorathy Huri Chunder Mahapattra.....Plaintiff

versus

Rama Krishna Jana and others.....Defendants.*

Landlord and Tenant - Cuttack - Surborakari tenures—Alienation without consent of landlord - Forfeiture - Alienation by one of several co-sharers - Changing case made in plaint - Second appeal.

The alienation of a surborakari tenure in Cuttack, and a fortiori the alienation of any portion of such tenure, is invalid without the consent of the landlord.

Assuming that the sale of such a tenure would entitle the landlord to re-enter as upon a forfeiture, the sale of a portion thereof by one of several co-sharers would not work a forfeiture of the whole tenure.

A plaintiff was not allowed to alter his case in second appeal.

THIS was a suit for the recovery of possession of land. The plaintiff was the zamindar. The first seven defendants—called the Jana defendants—were holders under him of a surborakari tenure; the eighth defendant, Gopinath Misser, was the heir of a purchaser from some of the Jana defendants. The plaintiff stated that the Jana defendants had partitioned the surborakari tenure between them; that afterwards the owners of some of the several shares purported to sell them to the father of the eighth defendant; and he charged that by such partition and sale and by each of them, the defendants had in law lost all their rights and interests in the holding, and were liable to be ejected.

The Jana defendants, who severed in their defences, pleaded that they had a right to partition the lands between themselves as they thought fit, and to sell any of such portions when partitioned. They also pleaded limitation.

The Court of First Instance gave the plaintiff a decree which was modified on appeal to the lower Appellate Court. The Judge said :

“Of late years, at least, the Courts of Orissa have always held the sur- [527] borakari tenure to be indivisible and inalienable without the zamindar's consent. Respondent quoted two rulings quite in point—Puddolochun Mundle v. Lakhun Burrooah (2 S. D. A., 1860, p. 109), and Doorjodhun Doss v. Chooya Daje (1 W. R., 322). The ruling quoted on the other side—Suddanundo Maiti v. Norrattam Maiti (8 B. L. R., 280) -is not a weighty one. The question whether surborakarais were capable of being alienated or not was not raised in the lower Court in that case, and no evidence was given. A surborakari is not a mokuddami, and no one in Orissa confounds the two. Mr. Ricketts clearly distinguishes between the two. Merely because the allowance made to the surborakar is called malikana, I cannot conclude that he is malik; the word malikana has a secondary meaning much more often used than its primary one. It is very clear the plaintiff never sanctioned either the division or the alienation; had he done so, separately obtained receipts would have been forthcoming. I hold his suit is within time, even though I do not agree with the lower Court that the Janas should be ejected. He was not bound to recognize the division or the alienation in any way till his rights were affected. This suit has come out of the rent case of 1874.

"The order of the lower Court as to khas possession I cannot confirm. The Jana defendants may have acted vexatiously, but it has not been shown that they acted contrary to law, or did really anything more than persist in fighting the zamindar on the points at issue here now. They had perhaps some reason to think they could alienate. I certainly cannot say that they have plainly and certainly acted vexatiously. Appellant quoted Kashenath Punee v. Lakhmonee Pershad (19 W. R., 99), and Suddye Purira v. Boistub Purira (12 B. L. R., 84 : 15 W. R., 261). Both are in point. I modify the lower Court's order, and, while allowing the Janas to remain in possession, set aside the alienation, and declare that the division of the tenure is not legal without the landlord's consent."

THE plaintiff appealed to the High Court on the grounds that he was entitled, on the facts found by the District Judge, to a decree for possession; that on the question of forfeiture, the Judge had mistaken the nature of a surhorakari tenure; and that had he taken a correct view of the nature of the tenure he would have held that the defendants had forfeited their rights therein.

Gopinath Misser also appealed against that portion of the decree setting aside the sale to his father.

Baboo Nil Madhub Sen for the Appellant.

[528] Mr. Tridale and Baboo Obhoy Churn Bose for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and PIGOT, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—We think that the conclusion arrived at by the lower Appellate Court is correct.

Any acts of one or more of several joint tenants which possibly might operate as a forfeiture of tenancy, would not entitle the landlord to exact that penalty as against all the tenants; moreover the plaintiff zamindar's case has throughout been that the tenure cannot be split up by any arrangement among the tenants as between themselves, and that he is not bound to, and will not acknowledge the validity of, any such arrangement by which separate specific rights are created.

We cannot now allow him in second appeal to alter his case and to claim a forfeiture on any specific shares of the joint tenancy so as to entitle him to recover khas possession of those shares. The landlord's appeal must therefore be dismissed.

The appeal of the assignee of the rights of some of the sharers must also be dismissed, as it has been found on the authority of reported cases that the alienation of a tenure of this description (a surhorakari tenure) in Cuttack, and a fortiori any portion of it, is invalid without the consent of the landlord.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 27th February, 1883.

PRESENT :

SIR RICHARD GARTH, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE MITTER.

Hem Chunder Soor.....Plaintiff

Kally Churn Das.....Defendant.*

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92 Mortgage—Sale—Conduct of parties Oral evidence when admissible to prove that an apparent sale is a mortgage—Admissibility of parol evidence to vary a written contract.

The defendant, in answer to a suit by the plaintiff for possession of certain land alleged that the kobala, which purported to be an out-and-out sale in favour of the plaintiff, and on which the plaintiff based his title to the property, was intended by the parties to operate only as a mortgage; and to prove such allegations tendered evidence of the circumstances under [529] which the kobala was executed, and of the conduct of the parties to show that the document had all along been treated as a mortgage and intended to operate as such.

Held, that such evidence was admissible.

Held also that s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act made no alteration in the law as laid down in Kashi Nath Chatterjee v. Chandi Charan Banerjee (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 383; S.C., 5 W. R., 62), but is in accordance with what was decided in that case. Baksu Lakshman v.

*Appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent against the decree of Mr. Justice FIELD, dated the 21st July 1882, in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1953 of 1881.

[Sec. 92.—When the terms of any such contract, grant or other disposition of property, or any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, have been proved according to the last section, no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives in interest, for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from, its terms:

Proviso (1). Any fact may be proved which would invalidate any document, or which would entitle any person to any decree or order relating thereto; such as fraud, intimidation, illegality, want of due execution, want of capacity in any contracting party, want or failure of consideration, or mistake in fact or law.

Proviso (2). The existence of any separate oral agreement as to any matter on which a document is silent and which is not inconsistent with its terms, may be proved. In considering whether or not this proviso applies, the Court shall have regard to the degree of formality of the document.

Proviso (3).—The existence of any separate oral agreement constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under any such contract, grant or disposition of property, may be proved.

Proviso (4).—The existence of any distinct subsequent oral agreement to rescind or modify any such contract, grant or disposition of property, may be proved, except in cases in which such contract grant or disposition of property is by law required to be in writing, or has been registered according to the law in force for the time being as to the registration of documents.

Proviso (5).—Any usage or custom by which incidents, not expressly mentioned in any contract, are usually annexed to contracts of that description, may be proved: Provided that the annexing of such incident would not be repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the express terms of the contract.

Proviso (6).—Any fact may be proved which shows in what manner the language of a document is related to existing facts.]

THIS was an appeal under the provisions of s. 15 of the Letters Patent against the decree of Mr. Justice FIELD.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of 2½ bigas of land under a kobala dated the 18th Aughran 1285 (3rd December 1878) executed in his favour by the defendant. The defendant, while admitting the execution of the kobala, pleaded that it was only a mortgage transaction, and that the mortgage debt had been paid. The only question for trial was whether the transaction was an out-and-out sale, or only a mortgage.

The document on the face of it purported to be an out-and-out sale, but at the hearing of the case before the Court of First Instance the defendant offered to adduce evidence to prove that there was a contemporaneous verbal agreement that the property would be reconveyed on repayment of the consideration money. This was objected to under s. 92 of the Evidence Act.

The Munsif held that, though evidence was not admissible to vary the terms of the kobala, still it was open to the plaintiff to show by the surrounding circumstances that the transaction, though called an absolute sale, had all along been treated by the parties as a conditional one; and he held that this view was supported by the Full Bench decision in Kashi Nath Chatterjee v. Chandi Charan Banerjee (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 383; s.c., 5 W. R., 62), and that the law had not been altered by s. 92 of the Evidence Act—Ram Doyal Sen v. Radha [530] Nath Sen (25 W. R., 167). He, therefore, allowed the defendant to adduce evidence with regard to such circumstances, and found as a fact that the defendant had all along remained in possession of the land; that the value of the land was far in excess of the sum mentioned in the kobala which was only Rs. 18; that that amount had been tendered by the defendant to the plaintiff but had been refused, and that the defendant had accordingly deposited it in the Judge's Court within a few months of the date of the transaction; that the defendant's homestead lands were comprised in the kobala, and that there was no provision in the deed for his remaining in possession, and that shortly after the date of the transaction the defendant had erected a house, value Rs. 25, on the land. He further found that the custom of executing a kobala for a conditional sale was still in existence in the districts. On these grounds he decided the issue in favour of the defendant, and dismissed the suit with costs.

The plaintiff then appealed against the decree on the ground that the Court below had erred in admitting the evidence objected to, and on appeal relied on the cases of Ram Doyal Bajpie v. Hera Lal Paray (3 C. L. R., 386) and Daimoddee Paik v. Kaim Taridar (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 300; s.c., 4 C. L. R., 419) as showing that the Court below had erred in admitting the evidence alluded to. The Subordinate Judge, however, considered that s. 92 of the Evidence Act had made no difference in the law, and following the decision in Baksu Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 594) held that the decision of the lower Court was correct, and accordingly dismissed the appeal with costs. The plaintiff then specially appealed to the High Court, and the appeal was heard by Mr. Justice FIELD who delivered the following judgment:—

The only ground of appeal urged in this case is that the Courts below have erred in law in admitting evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement varying the terms of the Kobala. I think it quite clear that the Courts below did not admit evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement varying the terms of the kobala.

[531] What they did admit was evidence of conduct subsequent to the kobala, showing that the parties had waived the arrangement incorporated in the kobala, and had, by mutual agreement evidenced by conduct, treated the transaction as a mortgage. The very fact that the plaintiff did not get possession upon the execution of the kobala was pregnant evidence to show that the parties never treated the transaction as an out-and-out sale. The Munsif says in his judgment: "Though evidence was not receivable to vary the terms of the kobala, I was of opinion that it was open to the defendant to show by surrounding circumstances that the transaction, though called an absolute sale, had all along been treated as a conditional one only." The Subordinate Judge, though not using equally precise language, has confirmed this judgment of the Munsif. I see no reason to interfere, and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

The Plaintiff then preferred this appeal under s. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Baboo Saroda Churn Mitter appeared on behalf of the Appellant.

Baboo Troilukhyo Nath Mitter for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (GARTH, C.J., and MITTER, J.) was as follows: --

Garth, C. J. In this case the plaintiff (appellant) sued for possession of 2½ bigas of land, which he claimed to have purchased absolutely from the respondent under a kobala, dated the 18th Aghran 1285 (3rd December 1878).

The respondent admitted the kobala, but contended that the transaction between the plaintiff and himself was a mortgage only.

In support of this view, the defendant relied partly upon oral evidence of the transaction, and partly upon the conduct of the parties, more especially the fact that the plaintiff had never taken possession, although the kobala was dated the 3rd December 1878, and this suit was not brought until the year 1880.

He also relied upon the further fact, that the sum of Rs. 18, [532] which was admitted to be the consideration for the kobala, was scarcely one-fourth the value of the property.

The plaintiff all along objected to the reception of these facts in evidence upon the ground that the defendant was precluded by s. 92 of the Evidence Act from bringing forward any evidence to vary or contradict the terms of the kobala.

The lower Courts, however, have admitted the evidence, and have gone into all the circumstances of the case; both holding that, although parol evidence, as a rule is not admissible to contradict or vary the terms of a written agreement, yet that, in a case of this kind, the Court is bound to look to the surrounding circumstances, and to the acts and conduct of the parties, for the purpose of ascertaining whether that which appears upon the face of the deed to be an absolute sale, had been treated by the parties and intended by them as a conditional sale only. In support of this position, both Courts relied upon the Full Bench case of Kashi Nath Chatterjee v. Chandi Charan Bannerjee (B. L. R. Sup. Vol. 383; s.c., 5 W. R. 68).

The learned Judge in this Court, although putting the case upon a somewhat different ground, has confirmed the judgment of the lower Courts.

It has now been argued before us that, although the Full Bench case above referred to established the law in the year 1866, s. 92 of the Evidence Act, which was passed in 1872, must be considered as having overruled the Full Bench decision; and that the cases of Ram Doyal Bajpie v. Hera Lal Paray

(3 C. L. R., 386), and Daimoddee Paik v. Kaim Taridar (I. L. R. 5 Cal., 300; s.c., 4 C. L. R., 419) have decided that s. 92 of the Evidence Act has so altered the law.

If I could see any ground for supposing that the Full Bench case is not law at the present day, or that s. 92 of the Evidence Act either made, or intended to make, any alteration in the rule of evidence which prevailed here before the Act was passed, and which was recognized as law in the Full Bench case, I should consider that our proper course was to refer the question to another Full Bench; but when I look to the language used by Sir BARNES [533] PEACOCK in that case, it seems to me that s. 92 of the Evidence Act lays down in terms the same rule as Sir BARNES PEACOCK then stated to be the law.

And the principle upon which the judgment in the Full Bench case proceeded is one which, in my opinion, is perfectly consistent with that rule.

It is a principle which has constantly been acted upon by Courts of Equity in England, as well as by the Courts of this country; and notably by the Bombay High Court in the cases of Hasha Khand v. Jesha Premaje (unreported), and of Baksu Lakshman v. Govinda Kanji (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 594).

In the latter case there will be found an excellent judgment of Mr. Justice MELVILL, in which he very clearly explains this principle of equity, and the mode and the circumstances under which it may be applied.

I quite agree with that learned Judge, that the true ground upon which the equitable jurisdiction of the Court proceeds generally in cases of this kind, is that of fraud, and this (as Mr. Justice MELVILL observes) is very clearly stated by L. J. TURNER in Lincoln v. Wright (4 De G. and Jones, 16).

That was a case in its circumstances very similar to the present. Wright had brought an action of ejectment against Lincoln to recover certain land, which the latter had conveyed to him by a deed, which appeared on the face of it to be an absolute conveyance. Lincoln then brought a suit in equity to restrain the ejectment, on the ground that the transaction was in reality a mortgage; and he relied in support of that contention, partly upon a parol agreement, and partly upon the acts and conduct of the parties. L. J. TURNER says: "The principle of the Court is, that the Statute of Frauds was not made to cover fraud. If the real agreement in this case was that, as between the plaintiff and Wright, the transaction should be a mortgage transaction, it is in the eyes of this Court a fraud to insist on the conveyance as being absolute; and parol evidence must be admissible to prove the fraud."

The main difference between that case and the present is, that there the question arose upon a bill filed in equity to restrain the [534] ejectment, whereas here it arises in the form of an equitable defence to the ejectment suit.

Another very ordinary form in which the same principle is recognized and acted upon, is in suits to alter or reform deeds of conveyance, upon the ground that they were not drawn up in accordance with the true intention of the parties. Suppose, for example, that the present defendant on hearing that the plaintiff was about to treat the kobala as an absolute sale, had brought a suit to have the deed reformed in accordance with what he contends to have been the true arrangement between the parties, the only way in which he could establish his claim in such a suit would be by showing what the real transaction was, and how the circumstances of the case and the conduct of the parties were in accordance with his view of the matter. The ground of such a suit would be fraud or mistake; and that fraud or mistake might be set up as well by way of defence to a suit like the present, as in a substantive suit to alter or reform the conveyance.

It is remarkable that in the Full Bench case of Kashi Nath Chatterjee v. Chandi Charan Banerjee (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 383; s.c. 5 W. R., 68), already referred to, the two facts which were mainly relied upon as showing that the transaction was a mortgage instead of a sale, are the same which are relied upon in this case, namely: (1st) that possession was not given to the purchaser at the time of sale, and that he never sought to obtain possession until long afterwards; and (2nd) that the consideration mentioned in the deed was a very small sum, as compared with the selling value of the property.

I think, therefore, that we are bound by the authority of the Full Bench case to confirm the judgment of the Court below; and it seems to me that we are not constrained, by any of the authorities to which our attention has been called, to refer the question to a Full Bench.

As my learned brother agrees with me in this view, the Appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[536] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 23rd February, 1883.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE McDONELL AND MR. JUSTICE TOTTENHAM.

Beer Chunder Manikkya and others.....Defendants

versus

Raj Coomar Nobodeep Chunder Deb Burmono.....Plaintiff.*

Jurisdiction—Rajah of Tipperah—Sovereign Prince—Suit against Sovereign Prince with respect to land owned by him, and situate in British India—

Maintenance Charge on immoveable property—Benefits to arise out of land General Clauses Consolidation Act (1 of 1868),

s. 2 cl. 5 Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), Chap. XXVIII, s. 433.

The Raja of Hill Tipperah is a Sovereign Prince within the meaning of Chapter XXVIII of Act X of 1877, and cannot be sued personally in the Courts of British India except under the conditions specified in s. 433 of that Act.

* Appeals from Original Decrees, Nos. 104 and 137 of 1881, against the decree of R. Towers, Esq., Judge of Tipperah, dated the 24th January 1881.

The fact of a defendant not subject to the jurisdiction of a Court having waived his privilege in previous suits brought against him does not give the Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit against him in which he pleads that he is not subject to such jurisdiction.

A suit for maintenance which seeks to have the maintenance made a charge on immoveable property is not a suit for immoveable property within the meaning of clause c, s. 433, Act X of 1877, nor is it a suit for "benefits to arise out of land" within the meaning of the definition of the words "immoveable property" contained in Act I of 1868, s. 2, cl. 5.

A claim for maintenance is not a charge upon immoveable property.

A member of the royal family of Hill Tipperah brought a suit against the Rajah to have it declared that with respect to certain land situate within British India, and forming portion of the possessions of the Rajah, he was entitled to the post of juboraj, and to succeed to such land on the death of the Rajah, and also claimed maintenance, and sought to have it declared that such maintenance should be a charge on the revenues of the land situate in British India.†

Held, that the British Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, it not being one for immoveable property.

By a kulachar or family custom prevalent in Independent or Hill Tipperah the reigning Rajah for the time being provides for the succession to the throne after his death by nominating a juboraj (or young rajah), and barra thakoor. According to such custom, on the death of the Rajah the juboraj succeeds as [536] of right to the throne, and barra thakoor becomes juboraj. In default of such appointment the next heir of the deceased Rajah succeeds.

On the 1st August 1862 Ishan Chunder Manikkya Bahadoor, the then reigning Rajah of Tipperah, died leaving three sons, Brojendro Chunder, Nobodeep Chunder (the plaintiff in the present suit) and Rohini Chunder. The throne was then taken possession of by the defendant Beer Chunder Manikkya, one of the defendants, a brother of Ishan Chunder Manikkya who alleged that by a roobokari, dated the 31st of July 1862, the late Rajah had appointed him juboraj, and had also appointed Brojendro Chunder barra thakoor, and the plaintiff kurta. In September 1862 the British Government recognised Beer Chunder as the de facto Rajah of Tipperah. In 1863 Brojendro Chunder died. In 1869, after the final decision of a suit with reference to the succession to the guddee, Beer Chunder was recognised by the British Government as the de jure Rajah, and was formally installed as Rajah in the spring of 1870. In 1870 Beer Chunder appointed his son Radha Kishore to the office of juboraj, and in 1878 he also appointed Samerendra Chunder to the office of barra thakoor. In 1874 the plaintiff came of age, and brought a suit against Beer Chunder in the District Court of British Tipperah, alleging that the above roobokari was a forgery, claiming possession of a zamindari named Chuckla Rowshanabad in British territory, and to set aside the appointment of Radha Kishore as juboraj. This zamindari had for many years been owned by the reigning Rajah of Tipperah, and the question of the succession to the Rajah had been frequently considered, and decided, in suits brought in British Courts with reference to this zamindari.

Claims for maintenance from the proceeds of his zamindari had also been made by members of the royal family of Tipperah and, as a matter of fact, the maintenance of the members of the royal family was usually, if not invariably, provided for from the revenues of this zamindari. This suit was ultimately dismissed on appeal by the High Court (25 W. R., 404), that Court deciding that Beer [537] Chunder had been validly appointed juboraj. The plaintiff having applied for permission under s. 433 of the Civil Procedure Code to sue the Maharajah in the Civil Court of Tipperah for maintenance, and for a declaration of his right to the possession, on the death of the Maharajah, of his zamindari situated in British India, obtained the sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal by a Resolution, dated the 25th February 1878, to institute a suit for that purpose, so far as related to those zamindari. He accordingly instituted the present suit to obtain a declaration that he was entitled to take possession of the zamindari on the death of Beer Chunder, and to have his maintenance fixed at Rs. 5,000 a month, and declared a charge on the zamindari, as well as to obtain arrears of maintenance. Subsequently to the institution of the suit, the Secretary to the Bengal Government, in reply to questions put by the District Judge of Tipperah on the 28th December 1878, wrote that for the portion of his estates which lies within British territory the Maharajah holds the position of a zamindar; that the succession to Hill Tipperah followed the succession to the zamindari; that the Maharajah was not an independent ruling chief within the meaning of s. 433, and that no leave was necessary for suits to be brought against him in the Civil Courts of Tipperah with respect to property held by him in British India.

The suit was in the first instance brought against Beer Chunder alone, but subsequently Radha Kishore and Samerendra Chunder were added as defendants.

The defendants pleaded, amongst other things, that inasmuch as the Rajah of Tipperah was an independent Sovereign Prince the British Courts had no jurisdiction; that the claim was barred by limitation; that the matter was res judicata; that the appointment of the plaintiff as kurta did not give him any right to succeed to the other posts; and that the maintenance of the plaintiff was not a charge upon the zamindari Chuckla Rowshanabad.

The lower Court gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 13,360, as arrears of maintenance from the 1st May 1878, at the rate of Rs. 600 a month, up to the date of the institution of the suit; and held that he was entitled to maintenance at the same rate for the future, and that it should be a [538] charge on the zamindari Chuckla Rowshanabad, but dismissed the remaining portion of the plaintiff's claim.

From this decision both parties appealed, and at the hearing of the appeal it was arranged that the question of jurisdiction should be first argued and decided.

The Advocate-General (The Hon. G. C. Paul), Mr. Branson, Mr. Pugh, Mr. Evans, Mr. Bell, Baboos Kally Mohun Dass, Doorga Mohun Dass, Bhoobun Mohun Dass, Kuloda Kunker Roy, Bussunt Coomar Bose, Sree Nath Banerjee, Joyosh Chunder Roy, Amar Nath Bose Sita Nath Roy, and Moonshree Serajul Islam appeared for the Appellants.

The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips) Mr. Trevelyan, Baboos Mohiny Mohun Roy, Gria Sunker Mojoomdar, Grish Chunder Chowdhry and Horendro Nath Mookerjee for the Respondent.

The Advocate-General.—Feudatories are as independent as Sovereign Princes (Act X of 1877, s. 433). This is not a suit for land, and whether maintenance be a charge on the land or not it cannot be enforced in British India. The case is the same as if the Rajah had contracted to give maintenance and been sued for breach of such contract. In the suit brought by Neelkisto against Beer Chunder for possession of the zamindari the then Advocate-General contended that the Tipperah royal family was joint, and that the oldest male member was manager; but it was held that the Raj descended entire to one member of the family, and in that suit the decision of the High Court was affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council:—Neelkisto

Deb Burmono v. Beer Chunder Thakoor (12 Moore's I. A., 523; s.c., 3, B. L. R., P. C., 13). Their Lordships in that decision say (p. 534) that the suit was brought to recover "a very valuable zamindari, being that part of the royal possession of the Rajah of Tipperah which lies within the jurisdiction of the British Crown. The Rajah of Tipperah, though in respect of these lands subject to the laws and Courts of British India, is, in fact, an independent prince with a considerable territory known as the Tipperah Hills, and as the title to the zamindari and to the Raj is the same, the dispute respecting the former involves a question of the right of the succession to the musnad or throne of the independent principality." Beer Chunder could [539] not have raised the question of jurisdiction in that suit, as that would have been a breach of faith. Independent Tipperah had recognized the paramount power of the Nawab of Moorshedabad and afterwards of the British Empire. In litigation from the year 1809 the British Government had refused to recognize any one as Rajah until the title was tried in British India, and consequently the Rajah was obliged to sue or to be sued in order to establish his title. He could not therefore plead he was a sovereign, because the Government would not recognize him, and the suit was for possession of British land; but he could have pleaded he was a Rajah, and that he could not be sued and he took that objection, but MACPHERSON and MORRIS, JJ., held in Raj Kumar Nobodeep Chunder Deb Burmono v. Rajah Beer Chunder Manikkya Bahadoor (25 W. R. 404) that the title to the throne followed the zamindari, and consequently that the Rajah would cease to be such by their decision against him as to the zamindari. But there was another decision to the contrary in the case of Maharajah Beer Chunder Manikkya Bahadoor v. Ishan Chunder Thakoor (3 C. L. R., 417).

The Hutwa case, Beer Pertab Sahee v. Maharajah Rajender Pertab Sahee (12 Moore's I. A. 1) is in point.

In this case the zamindari is part of the royal possessions of the Rajah of Tipperah and follows the Raj. The Privy Council seem to think that being de facto Rajah is enough—Neelkisto Deb Burmono v. Beer Chunder Thakoor (25 W. R., 404). If the King of France were to hold lands in England the Courts there could not try his right to be King of France—Lachmi Narain v. Rajah Partab Sing (I. L. R., 2 All., 1)—(see Mr. Evans' argument at p. 4.)

First, then, Beer Chunder could take objections to jurisdiction, for he is an independent sovereign, and this suit does not concern land (Vattell's Law of Nations, edn. 1797, Bk. 1, ch. 1; Wheaton's International Law, pp. 58 and 69). Moreover, the Government has deputed a Political Agent to Tipperah, a course which shews that the Rajah is independent, and that he is so is also admitted by the plaintiff by the mere fact that he has applied to the Government for leave to institute this suit. The Court [540] cannot decide as to who is entitled to the Raj after a Rajah's death, and if it had jurisdiction it should not make such a declaration.

The case of Urjun Manick Thakoor v. Ramgunga Deo (2 Sel. Rep. (n. ed.) 177) shews that the barra thakoor is not entitled to be juboraj. The appointment of juboraj is a sovereign act. If Chuckla Rowshanabad was sold for arrears of Government revenue the purchaser could not appoint a juboraj. The subject-matter of a suit is that which you seek to recover. Here it is not land, but (1) a declaration, and (2) maintenance, and that does not make the suit one for immoveable property and does not bring it within the provisions of s. 433 of Act X of 1877 which section does not comprise interests in immoveable property. By International Law if a king sues he subjects himself to a cross suit. Clause 3of s. 433 applies to cases when the proceeding is in rem where it would be immaterial whether the real owner was a party or not as in an ejectment suit in England. Where the property itself is proceeded against the dignity of the Rajah is not affected, as a suit for land could always be brought against an agent.

With respect to the claim for maintenance it is said to be a charge, but it is no more a charge than debts or the expenses of investing a boy with the Brahminical thread are. He must establish his right before he can get a charge—Tareeny Churn Bonnerjee v. Maitland (11 Moore's I. A., 317). Debts are a first charge on an inheritance—Greender Chunder Ghosh v. Mackintosh (I. L. R. 4 Cal., 897). It makes no difference to a charge for debts whether the debtor is dead or alive. A Hindu widow cannot claim a charge for maintenance against her brother-in-law—Massammul Bheeloo v. Phool Chund [3 Sel. Rep. (n. ed.) 298] ; Lakshman Ram Chandra v. Sarasvatibai (12 Bom. H. C., 69) ; Bhyrub Chandra Ghosh v. Nabo Chunder Guho (5 W. R., 111). The decision of WHITE and MORRIS, JJ., in Beer Chunder Manikkya v. Chandressur Mohadebva (judgment delivered 9th July 1879) does not touch the question. The Courts here are Courts of limited jurisdiction. In the Hutwa case—Beer Pertab Sahoe v. Moharajah Rajendra Persad Sahoe (12 Moore's I. A. 1) the property was joint. In Ramgunga [541] Deo v. Doorgamonee Juboraj [1 Sel. Rep. (n. ed.) 361] nothing was said as to a charge. See also Neelkisto Deb Burmono v. Beer Chunder Thakoor (12 Moore's I. A., 523 ; s.c., 3, B. L. R. P. C. 13).

As to the position of Tipperah, (see Aitchison's Treaties, Vol. I. Ed. 1876) Aitchison uses "appointed" in the sense of "recognized." See also Hunter, pp. 469 and 515.

A Political Agent is appointed only for Independent States. Rowshanabad was part of the royal possession of Tipperah. A portion of the old Raj was lost to the Rajahs of Tipperah, and when it came under the British Government and the settlement of the zamindari was effected with the Rajah or the land became subject to the Courts of this country, but it cannot be separated from the Raj. The only title decided by the Civil Courts is that of Rajah. The zamindari is part of the Raj, although the Rajah cannot exercise civil jurisdiction over it. The Rajah is not concerned to dispute the existence of a paramount power which has the right to decide questions of disputed succession. When the title is once confirmed no further decision can be given as to the title. The Governor-General in Council would not be bound to follow the decision of the Courts—Duke of Brunswick v. The King of Hanover (6 Beav. 1 ; s.c., 2 H. L. C. 1) ; Westlake's International Law, pp. 56, 62, 67, 69, 78 and 119 : the Succession Regulation of 1800.

How is the defendant subject to the jurisdiction of this Court as to his being declared juboraj ? If he was a resident within the jurisdiction he could not on that ground be sued as to the appointment of juboraj—The East India Company v. Syed Ally (7 Moore's I. A., 555). The plaintiff cannot get relief because he must first get the appointment of juboraj set aside, which appointment was a sovereign act. The fact that there is land in the jurisdiction makes no difference—The Charkieh (L. R., 4 Ad. & E., 59 cf., p. 97 ; s.c., 42 L. J. P. and M. 17) ; The Parlement Belge (L. R. 5 P. D., 197) ; Smith v. Weyuelin (L. R. 8 Eq. 198 cf., p. 206). If the land is public land of the estate you cannot reach it at all—Doss v. Secretary of State for India in Council (L. R., 19 Eq., 509) ; The City of Berne v. Bank of England (9 Ves., 347) ; Lachmi [542] Narain v. Rajah Partap Singh (I. L. R., 2 All., 1) ; Ladkucarbai v. Ghoelshri Sarsungji Pratabsangi (7. Bom. H. C. O. C. 150).

As to maintenance any declaration in Ramgunga Deo v. Doorgamonee Juboraj [1 Sel. Rep. (n. ed.) 361], as to the rights of the other members of the family would be an obiter dictum, for the first Court had ordered that the property should be divided amongst the heirs. We do not deny that the Rajah in possession is liable to maintain the other members of the family, but the amount of maintenance is a matter entirely within his discretion. Regulation X of 1800 has nothing to do with the zamindari, and Regulation XI of 1793 does not apply—Gunesb Dutt Singh v. Moharajah Moheshkur Sing (6 Moore's I. A., 164); Beer Pertab Sahee v. Maharajah Rajendra Pertab Sahee (12 Moore's I. A., 1). The Raj comes to the sole heir, so the plaintiff cannot have a charge on the property not having any interest in it. There is no case to shew that maintenance is a charge (cf. Mayne's Hindu Law, ss. 374 and 388), and if it were a charge it would bind everybody. A widow's maintenance is not a charge—Srimati Bhagabati Dassi v. Kanai Lal Mitra (8 B.L.R., 225); Lakshman Ramchundra v. Sarasvatibai (12 Bom. H.C., 69); Adhiramnee Narain Coomary v. Shona Malee Pat Mahadai (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 365); Bhyrub Chunder Ghose v. Nubo Chunder Guho (5 W. R., 111); Mayne's Hindu Law, ss. 384 and 386; Strange's Hindu Law, Vol. I, p. 166. As to the definition of the word "charge" see Tareeny Churn Bonnerjee v. Matland (11 Moore's I. A., 317). The Advocate-General during the course of his argument cited the case of Lakshman Ramchundra Joshi v. Satya Bhamabai (I. L. R., 2 Bom., 494) with reference to the question of maintenance, and also referred to Seton on Decrees, pp. 642, 825 and 1128; Greender Chunder Ghose v. Mackintosh (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 897); The Secretary of State v. Kamachee Boye Sahabu (7 Moore's I. A., 476).

Mr. Branson on the same side.—In no case before MACPHERSON, J.'s decision in Raj Coomar Nobodeep Chunder Deb Burmoo v. Rajah [543] Beer Chunder Manikkya Bahadoor (25 W. R., 401) had the Rajah been recognized before suit. The Privy Council not only abstained from saying that they had jurisdiction, but expressly stated that they treated the case as one between subject and subject. MACPHERSON, J., says that there has been a submission to the jurisdiction, and that the decision of the Courts carried with it the succession to the Raj, but in all the instances given the Rajah had not been recognised as de jure Rajah, and that decision established the fact that the zamindari belonged to the Rajah of Tipperah.

The plaintiff himself admits that the Rajah is a foreign prince, by the fact that he has applied for permission to sue under s. 433. As to maintenance see Khettramoni Dasi v. Kashinath Das (2 B.L.R., A.C. 15, see p. 42). A widow has a right to have her maintenance ascertained, but it cannot be charged until it has been so ascertained, and then it is only chargeable, in case there is danger to the plaintiff of losing the maintenance by the alienation of the property—Bhagabati Dasi v. Kanailal Mitra (8 B. L. R., 225). Can this Court ascertain maintenance paid to the other members of the royal family? Before any decree can be made and the amount fixed, an account must be taken of the property of the Rajah, and this Court cannot call on a foreign prince to submit to an account.

Mr. Pugh for Radha Kishore was proceeding to address the Court, when objection was taken that only two counsel could be heard for the appellants. The Court held that two counsel were entitled to be heard on behalf of each appellant.

Mr. Pugh.—A suit to declare a trust upon land is not a suit for land—Bagram v. Moses (1 Hyde, 284); Kellie v. Fraser (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 445); Delhi and London Bank v. Wordi (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 249).

Debts are not a charge on the property, but they are prior to maintenance.

Mr. Phillips (for the respondent)—The Courts of a country have jurisdiction in respect of all the territory of the country to whomsoever it may belong by private title, or in other words, the private right cannot oust the jurisdiction of the Court. The [544] zamindari, Chuckla Rowshanabad, is in British Tipperah, and within the jurisdiction of the Court of that district, and it cannot be withdrawn from that jurisdiction, on the ground that it belongs to a foreign sovereign. No part of British territory can be the public property of a foreign sovereign, and exempt from British laws. To hold otherwise would be to hold that there may be portions of the territory in which the laws of the country, to which it belongs, do not prevail, and that there might be an imperium in imperio—Wheaton, Int. Law, p. 160, ch. II; paras. 1, 2, 3, (164), s. 4; Westlake Int. Law, pp. 56, 62, 67 to 69, 78; Woolsey, Int. Law, p. 119. We do not dispute that the title to the zamindari goes with the Raj. It is said that the Hutwa case—Beer Pertap Sahee v. Maharajah Rajendra Pertab Sahee (12 Moore's I. A., 1) is analogous to this case, and that it was held there that the property be restored as belonging to the Raj.

That is true as to the course of succession, but the question there was, whether there had been a confiscation, and, if so, on what terms the property had been re-granted (see pp. 24, 33 and 35 of the report in Moore). The immunity of sovereigns to suits does not extend to immoveable property—The Charkieh (L. R., 4 Ad. & E., 59; s.c., 42, L. J. P. & M., 17); and a foreign sovereign cannot withdraw immoveable property from the jurisdiction of the Court, because no process need issue against the sovereign; and a sovereign acquiring lands acquires no immunity with regard to such lands. In that case it was held that the Khedive was not an independent power, and the Maharajah is certainly not inferior to the Khedive. The case is important as shewing that with regard to immoveable property there never was any question as to jurisdiction. The case of the Parlement Belge (L. R. 5 P. D. 197) lays down no rule as to immoveable property; it only refers to moveable property. [The Advocate-General.—Is it contended that if a sovereign held land he could be sued and called upon to answer interrogatories?] We contend that he could be sued in the same way as any private person; the cases quoted only refer to moveable property. In Wheaton, Int. Law, p. 160, the general principle is laid down that the State is supreme over all and within [545] its jurisdiction. The question here is whether the Rajah is not obliged to maintain the members of his family out of his revenues, and this must be decided according to the laws of British India. [McDONELL, J.—If the suit is one for immoveable property it can be reached under s. 433.] That is so. In the case of the Duke of Brunswick v. The King of Hanover (2 H. L. C., 1 cf., p. 24, 26) it was held by Lord Brougham that if the foreign sovereign entered into a contract with respect to land, specific performance might be enforced by the Court, and that would be a personal suit against the sovereign. Here the process could be served on the agent in possession of the zamindari, so the personal dignity of the Rajah would not be affected. In that case also the instrument upon which the suit was brought was an instrument executed by virtue of a sovereign power.

In Taylor v. Best (14 C. B., 521; cf. p. 522) it is laid down that jurisdiction may be founded on the sovereign submitting himself to the jurisdiction, and JERVIS, J., says that where the Civil Law prevails land may be made the foundation of jurisdiction, so may goods unconnected with the office. In the Magdalen's Steam Navigation Co. v. Martin (2 E. & E., 94), there was no jurisdiction, as the defendant had no real property in England. If he had had real property, the Court seems to imply that he could have been sued. In Lachmi Narain v. Rajah Partap Singh (I. L. R., 2 All., 1) the land was outside British India, and the question was whether the land was within the jurisdiction, not whether the Nawab of Rampur was subject to the jurisdiction. It is assumed that if the land were within British India, a suit would lie, and so that case is in our favour. In Ladkwarbai v. Ghoel Shri Sursangji Pratabsangji (7 Bom. H. C. O. C. 150), the British Government exercised no controlling or paramount power. They merely stopped execution of the decree, but they did not set it aside. In Smith v. Wequelin (L. R., 8 Eq., 198), there was no question of sovereign right; the Court merely decided that it had no jurisdiction. All the cases are in my favour to this extent that land within the jurisdiction gives jurisdiction.

The present case is governed by Act X of 1877, ss. 431, 432, 433.* [546] The Executive Government have to determine who are sovereign princes, and Government have declared that this prince is not a sovereign prince. The consent of Government has been signified to this suit being brought by the letter from the Secretary to the Bengal Government, and under Act X of 1877, s. 2, the word Government includes a local Government. The High Court cannot recognize a sovereign prince until he has been recognised by the Government.

The Rajahs of Tipperah have repeatedly sued and been sued in the British Courts, and with respect to the matters of the Raj itself. They have executed bonds and been sued upon contracts. They have had pecuniary transactions with British subjects by holding themselves out as subject to British Courts, and they have also been sued upon contracts for maintenance, and so with regard to a Rajah who uses the Courts as a subject, it was only natural that the Government should refuse him the immunities of a sovereign.

There have been suits from the year 1880 down to the present time for the Raj, and it is now too late to raise the question of jurisdiction. The Rajah has previous to this suit been sued for maintenance and no objection to jurisdiction was taken until in the suit before MACPHERSON, J.

In Maharajah Beer Chunder Manikkya Bahadoor v. Ishan Chunder Thakoor (3 C. L. R., 417), the point of jurisdiction was not decided. The Court decided that the grant was invalid, as it was governed by the law of Tipperah, and, therefore, resumable. The grant was made out of the revenues of Tipperah, and the contract was made in Tipperah. The Court could have no jurisdiction unless part of the cause of action arose in British India. [McDONELL, J. Mr. Cockerell's letter does not seem to have been accurately worded, as there is no dispute as to his being a sovereign chief of Hill Tipperah.] It is not a case of independence; it is a question of immunity from suit. [The Advocate-General.—The letter was written in the Judicial Department, and was clearly a judicial and not a political opinion.] It was a declaration of the Rajah's status, and showed that he was not entitled to any immunities. He is spoken of as an absolute prince, and has power of life and [547] death, but that does not shew that he is entitled to immunities from suits. The fact of his being a zamindar in British Territory and a subject, so far as the zamindari goes, distinguishes the case from that of European princes.

The British Courts are the Courts of the paramount power, and there is no instance in which it has been held that a feudatory could not be sued in the Courts of the paramount power.

Supposing, however, the Rajah has immunity, the suit will lie because it is one for land, the subject-matter being to obtain a charge on the immoveable property. It is only auxiliary to the claim for maintenance that a declaration as to the jukorajship is asked for, the reason being that by his exclusion from that office the plaintiff is entitled to a greater amount of maintenance; but if the Court thinks it can't make such declaration, the decree can exclude it.

We contend that the custom of the family is that the Rajah shall maintain the family of the deceased Rajah from the income of the zamindari. Plaintiff seeks to charge the zamindari with maintenance, therefore it is a suit for immoveable property. By s. 2, cl. 5, Act I of 1868, immoveable property includes benefit to arise out of immoveable property. We do not contend that the plaintiff has an actual charge, as it will be sufficient if he prays for a charge to be declared on the property, as the suit is then for a benefit to arise out of the property. We claim a charge and that gives jurisdiction to enquire. If there is no charge there is an end of the case. The other side relies on the case of the Hindu widow, but the Hindu widow is not in the same footing as the son, and even against the heir a widow's maintenance is a charge on the estate. Here there is a charge.

In Ram Gunga Deo v. Doorgamoonee Jukoraj [1 Sel. Rep. (n. ed.) 270], maintenance was a charge on the assets. In Bhyrob Chunder Ghose v. Nub Chunder Guho (5 W. R., 111), all that is decided is that the right of maintenance can't be attached. Under certain circumstances the claim to maintenance might ripen into a charge.—Nilkant Chatterjee v. Peari Mohun Dass (3 B. L. R., O. C., 7).

[548] A charge for maintenance until declared is only an equitable right and creates no interest in the land. In those Courts it is sufficient to have an equitable interest, although this would be of no avail against a bond fide purchaser—Srimati Bhagabati Dasi v. Kanailal Mitter (8 B. L. R., 225); Mangali Debi v. Dinonath Bose (4 B. L. R., O. C., 72). These cases shew that the widow has something more than an equitable interest. [McDONELL J.—Does not Adhiranee Narain Coomary v. Shona Malee Pat Mahadai (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 365), shew that the claim for maintenance is a liability and not a charge?] It would only be a liability, if it was not charged by the decree on the property ; claims which have not ripened into charges cannot be binding on the property — Lakhsman Ram Chandra Joshi v. Satyabhamabai (I. L. R., 2 Bom., 494), merely decides that a purchaser for payment of a debt has a superior title to the widow's claim for maintenance. A widow if entitled to no share is entitled to a charge on the property if the heirs neglect to pay her maintenance (Mayne, p. 386), Mussumut Khukroo Misra v. Jhoomuck Lall Dass (15 W. R., 263) : and a charge for maintenance binds a person into whose hands the property comes — Goluck Chauder Bose v. Rance Ohilla Dayee (25 W. R., 100).

Mr. Philips during the course of his argument also cited the following cases on the subject of maintenance : Mussumut Gola Koonwar v. The Collector of Benares (4 Moore's I. A., 246) ; Himmatsing Becharsing v. Ganpatsing (12 Bom. H. C. 94) ; Chhoturya Run Mardun Syn v. Sahub Parhulad Syn (9 Moore's I. A. 82) ; Mattasawmy Jagavera Yettappanacker v. Venkataswara Yettaya (12 Moore's I. A., 203) ; Rahi Gorind Valad Teja (I. L. R., 1 Bom. 97) ; Viramuthi Udayan v. Singaravelu (I. L. R., 1 Mad. 306) ; Anund Lal Sing Deo v. Maharajah Dheraj Gurrood Narain Deo (5 Moore's I. A., 82) ; Nilmoney Singh Deo v. Hingoo Lal Singh Deo (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 256) ; Beer Pertab Sahoe Maharajah Rajendra Pertab Sahoe (12 Moore's I. A., pp. 18, 40) ; and concluded by laying down his propositions as follows :—

(1) According to International Law immovable property [549] draws with it no immunity from jurisdiction, but founds a jurisdiction against a sovereign prince.

(2) Under certain circumstances moveable property similarly founds jurisdiction.

(3) According to principles of International Law, the Rajah of Tipperah can be in no better position than the Khedive, and cannot be exempt from suits in the Courts of the paramount power.

(4) That it is unnecessary to refer to International Law, as the subject has been dealt with by the Legislature, and the defendant must prove he is a sovereign prince within the meaning of s. 433, Civil Procedure Code, and that the immunity from jurisdiction has been expressly or impliedly conceded to him by the Government. That Mr. Cockerell's letter precludes discussion on that point, but that if the question is still open for discussing the treatment of the defendant by Government, in insisting upon his trying his title to the Raj in British Courts, clearly shews that there was no intention on the part of the Government to grant him any immunity or treat him differently from an ordinary zamindar within British territory.

(5) That the conduct of the Rajah in suing and allowing himself to be sued in British Courts and never objecting, till 1878, to the jurisdiction, and in holding himself out as being subject to the jurisdiction, renders it improbable that Government would grant him any immunity.

(6) That the present suit is a suit for immoveable property within the meaning of s. 433 of the Code, and cl. 5, s. 2, of Act 1 of 1868, the object of the suit being to secure the maintenance as a charge on the zemindary.

(7) The plaintiff is entitled to maintenance, as he is excluded from inheritance for State convenience, and there can be no reason why he should be excluded from maintenance.

(8) There is evidence to show that the maintenance has always been paid out of the estate situated in British India, and we claim only as a member of the family of the late zamindar of Rowshanabad.

The Advocate-General, in reply, cited the case of Elphin-[550]stone v. Bedree Chund (1 Knapp., 329, see note); and was dealing with Mr. Phillips' arguments when he was stopped by the Court.

The Judgment of the Court (McDONELL and TOTTENHAM, JJ.), was delivered by McDonell, J.—This is an appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Tipperah, by which the plaintiff, respondent, was declared to be entitled to maintenance from the Maharajah of Hill Tipperah at the rate of Rs. 600 per mensem and to arrears of the same from the 1st of May 1878 to the date of institution of the suit; and the decree further provided that the amount should be realized from the defendant's zamindari in British Tipperah.

The plaintiff, respondent, is Raj Coomar Nobodeep Chunder, a son of the late Maharajah of Hill Tipperah, and appointed by him to the office of kurta in the year 1862. Upon the death of this Maharajah, Ishan Chunder, he was succeeded by the present Maharajah Beer Chunder, who had been duly appointed "juboraj" by his predecessor and elder brother. In July 1874, the plaintiff made an attempt to oust him altogether. He brought a suit to recover possession of various properties held by the Maharajah in British India, upon the ground that he was the rightful heir to his father's rank and estates, and that the appointment of Beer Chunder as juboraj had been accomplished by fraud and collusion. His suit was dismissed both in the District Court and in this Court on appeal, upon the finding that Beer Chunder had been duly appointed to be juboraj, and as such had lawfully succeeded to the zamindari in British India as well as to the throne of Hill Tipperah.

Having been thus defeated in this Court on the 14th of August 1876, the plaintiff instituted this suit in March 1880. His prayer was twofold: (1), that the Court would, determining his rank, declare him entitled to take possession of the zamindari of Rowshanabad and other properties upon the death of the present Maharajah; and (2), that his maintenance be fixed at Rs. 5,000 per mensem, and be created a charge upon the said zamindari, arrears at that rate with interest being awarded to him from Assar 1278 to Maugh 1286 B. S. (June 1871 to January 1880).

[551] The rank claimed by him is specified in para. 4 of the plaint. It is that of juboraj, to which he claims to have ascended from the office of kurta through the succession of Beer Chunder to the throne, and by the death of his own brother, Brojendro Chunder, who, having been appointed barra thakoor by his father, became, the plaintiff alleges, juboraj upon the elevation of Beer Chunder; plaintiff claims thus to have become from kurta, barra thakoor and from barra thakoor, juboraj. And in para. 7 of the plaint it is alleged that the claim of the members of the Rajah's family to maintenance is a charge upon the zamindari of Chuckla, Rowshanabad and others.

With reference to the plaintiff's first prayer, to be declared juboraj, it should be mentioned that the defendant, Maharajah Beer Chunder, after being in the latter part of 1276 (1869) formally recognized and installed by the British Government, appointed in 1277 (August 1870), two of his sons to be juboraj and barra thakoor respectively, these appointments being, as he contended, vacant by the recent death of Brojendro Chunder.

The first prayer, therefore, of the present plaint practically asks to avoid the appointment of the present Maharajah's son as juboraj.

The suit was instituted only against the Maharajah, but by direction of the Court his two sons, whom he had appointed juboraj and barra thakoor, were added as defendants, and they join in this appeal.

The lower Court dismissed the first portion of the claim on the ground that it was barred by ss. 13 and 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it found that the plaintiff's position as kurta gave him no right of succession to the higher positions of barra thakoor and juboraj. It, however, gave plaintiff the decree for maintenance against which, as we have above stated, the present appeal is directed.

In making this decree the Court overruled an objection taken from the first that the suit cannot be tried at all in the Courts of British India, and this question of jurisdiction is the main one with which we have to deal in this appeal.

This aspect of the case has been at great length and most completely put before us by the learned Counsel on either side, to [552] whom the Court owes acknowledgments for the able manner in which they have assisted it in arriving at a conclusion. That conclusion is that our Courts have no jurisdiction to deal with either branch of the suit, and that consequently the lower Court ought to have dismissed it altogether.

It is hardly necessary to determine, for it does not seem to be questioned in this suit, that Hill Tipperah is a Sovereign State, Vide Vattel's Law of Nations, Book I, Chapter I. in that it governs itself without dependence on any foreign power. It makes and administers its own laws, and the Maharajah admittedly exercises the power of life and death within his own territory.

Aitchison, in his collection of Treaties, Vol. I, p. 78, says: Independent Tipperah is not held by gift from the British Government or its predecessors, or under any title derived from it or them, never having been subjected by the Mogul.

Its acknowledgment of the British Government as the paramount power, and the nuzzar paid on the recognition by that Government of succeeding Maharajahs do not take from it the status which by the law of Nations it is entitled to hold—see Wheaton's International Law, pp. 58 and 69.

It is not contended by Mr. Phillips for the plaintiff, respondent, that our Courts would have any jurisdiction in a suit affecting the Raj itself, or the Maharajah in his character as such. He contends that because the zamindari Rowshanabad is within British Tipperah, and because the plaint is so framed as to rest upon this zamindari, the Court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit, and over the Maharajah, defendant, in his character as zamindar.

The Advocate-General, on the other hand, has contended that the Maharajah being a Sovereign Prince is not personally subject to the jurisdiction of our Courts in any suit whatever.

We are of opinion that whatever may be the merits of this contention, it is certain that the suit now before us is not of which our Courts can take cognizance.

As regards the first portion of the prayer of the suit, viz., that the Court, determining the plaintiff's rank, declare him entitled to take possession of the zamindari on the death of the present Maharajah, we observe that this asks the Court to pronounce the plaintiff to be juboraj or heir apparent to the Raj; for it is only [553] as such that he could be entitled to succeed to the zamindari, and that is the rank which he specifically claims in the plaint. It is clear, however, that our Courts have no jurisdiction to decide who is juboraj of the foreign State of Hill Tipperah. It has been sometimes said that the title to the Raj follows the title to the zamindari or vice versa; but this we consider is a mistake, for there are not two titles to the two estates, but the title to both is one and the same. The origin of the mistake is probably this, that the British Government has, in cases of disputed succession, abstained from recognising a new Maharajah, until the Courts have determined who is entitled to the zamindari. But it is equally the fact that the Courts have determined the right to the zamindari by ascertaining who was really the jutoraj or heir to the Raj.

We further observe that for our Courts to entertain the plaintiff's suit and declare him jutoraj, would, if operative at all, have the effect of annulling the Maharajah's appointment of his own son as jutoraj ; but this appointment was an act of sovereignty performed by the Maharajah in his own territory, and as such it clearly cannot be questioned or set aside by the Courts of British India. Under no circumstances do we think that this claim could be entertained by our Courts.

The lower Court has dismissed this part of the claim on other grounds, as assuming that it had jurisdiction to entertain it. The plaintiff has also appealed against the decree in this respect, but our conclusion that there is no jurisdiction at all makes it unnecessary to consider the plaintiff's appeal.

Next, as regards the claim for maintenance, we might perhaps dispose of that too by holding that the grant of maintenance, or the withholding of it is an act of sovereignty exercised by the Maharajah with which our Courts have nothing to do ; but Mr. Phillips for the plaintiff, respondent, while contending that he is entitled to maintenance both against the defendant as Maharajah, and as against him as zamindar of Rowshanabad, admits that we have jurisdiction only in respect of his claim as a son of the late zamindar of Rowshanabad. We have, therefore, to consider whether we have even so much jurisdiction.

The learned Advocate-General's proposition is that, the defendant Maharajah being a foreign Sovereign Prince recognised by [554] the Government of British India, he cannot be sued personally in our Courts, except under the provisions of Chap. XXVIII of the Code of Civil Procedure. He cited numerous authorities to shew that the principles of International Law protected sovereigns recognised by any State from the jurisdiction of the Courts of such State. We understood Mr. Phillips to contend on the contrary that such immunity does not attach to a Sovereign Prince unless it be expressly conferred upon him.

In the present case, however, we think that we need not look further than to the Code of Civil Procedure. Sections 431, 432, 433 contain the provisions enacted in regard to suits by or against foreign princes. If the Maharajah defendant is such a prince or Chief as to come within the purview of these sections, then a suit can be entertained against him in our Courts only on the conditions contained in s. 433. Mr. Phillips contended that the onus lay upon the Maharajah of proving that he is such a prince as is contemplated by s. 433, and he submitted that any such claim had been expressly negatived by the Government in the letter of the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated 25th December 1878, and printed at page 18 of the paper book. In this letter it is stated that the Maharajah is not an independent ruling chief within the meaning of s. 433 of the Civil Procedure Code.

It seems to us, however, that it is for the Courts, and not for the Government, to say whether or not any particular chief or prince comes within the purview of that section. We look upon this passage as nothing more than an expression of opinion conveyed to the Judge of Tipperah, and we must add that we think it the expression of an erroneous opinion. For it has been shewn to us that Hill Tipperah is a Sovereign State, and that the Maharajah, defendant, has been formally recognised by the British Government in India. We are, therefore, bound to hold that he is a ruling chief, and that he cannot be tried in the Courts of British India, excepting under the conditions specified in s. 433.

We may add that the same opinion was judicially expressed by a Division Bench of this Court (MITTER and MACLEAN, JJ.) on [555] the 19th of June 1878, or six months before the date of the letter in question in Regular Appeal No. 22 of 1877—Maharajah Beer Chunder Manickya Bahadoor v. Isham Chunder Thakoor (3 C. L. R., 417).

The plaintiff himself recognized this status of the defendant, for he applied for, and obtained permission from, the Government of Bengal to bring this suit—see copy of Resolution printed at p. 17 of the paper book.

Plaintiff must then shew that his suit falls within one of the clauses a, b, c, of the section. It is admitted that clauses a and b are not applicable to this case. Unless therefore clause c applies, that is, unless the subject-matter of the suit is immoveable property, the suit cannot be maintained at all. At first sight we should certainly not be inclined to say that a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's status and for maintenance had for its subject-matter "immoveable property," and this would be another reason for rejecting the first portion of the suit.

As regards maintenance, however, Mr. Phillips referred us to the definition given of "immoveable" property in the General Clauses Act (I of 1868), which includes "benefits to arise out of land," and he ingeniously suggested that the maintenance claimed by plaintiff since he asks that it be made a charge upon the zamindari, is, in fact, immoveable property.

But we think it is impossible to contend that the plaintiff's claim to maintenance, assuming it to be a valid one, constitutes of itself a charge upon any particular property of the Maharajah. It is not pretended that were the zamindari of Rowshanabad to be sold for arrears of revenue the plaintiff would have a lien upon it, as against the purchaser, for the maintenance which he considers that he has a right to claim from the Maharajah. Of course, if the Court could give him a decree, it might order the amount decreed to be a specific charge upon the zamindari, and thus the claim might be said to be one which might ripen into a charge. But in the abstract a claim for maintenance is no more a charge on property than the expenses of marriage, or other religious ceremonies. Debts due by a deceased person stand higher than other claims upon his estate, and yet debts are no charge upon specific property unless expressly made so by bond or by a decree. [556] It is not necessary to refer particularly to the long list of cases and authorities cited with reference to this part of the case. Mr. Mayne gives the effect of them in his chapter on maintenance. The result of the whole is that we are satisfied that the present suit cannot be said to be one for immoveable property, and that consequently there is nothing in s. 433 which gives us jurisdiction to entertain it.

Before concluding, we should perhaps notice an argument that it is too late for the Maharajah to contend against the jurisdiction of our Courts, inasmuch as he has frequently sued and been sued in them attorning to their jurisdiction. One case is relied upon by the plaintiff in which a Division Bench of this Court (WHITE and MORRIS, JJ.) refused to allow the Maharajah to take the plea of no jurisdiction. But this was because he had not taken it in the lower Court, and only for that reason; and some of the suits in which he attorned were brought before the Maharajah had been recognized de jure by our Government, and when therefore no such plea on his part could have been entertained in regard to claims in British Tipperah.

Further, it is a mistake to suppose that because the Maharajah chooses to waive his privilege in one suit he is thereby precluded from pleading it in any other. We hold, therefore, that the argument based upon previous conduct has no weight in respect of the question raised in this suit.

This being so, we must decree this appeal, and reverse the decree of the lower Court, so far as it is adverse to the defendant.

The suit is, therefore, dismissed with costs of both Courts. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are strictly entitled to separate costs, but under the circumstances we give but one set of costs.

This decision renders it necessary that the plaintiff's appeal No. 137 be dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 104 allowed, and Appeal No. 137 dismissed.

NOTES.

[FOREIGN SOVEREIGN AND BRITISH COURTS—

The leading case is that of Mighell v. Sultan of Johore (1891) 1 Q. B. C. A. 149. The rule has been stated by Dicey in his Conflict of Laws (1908), second edition, pp. 195 et seq.

"The Court has (subject to the exceptions hereinafter mentioned) no jurisdiction to entertain an action or other proceeding against (1) any foreign sovereign; (2) any ambassador or other diplomatic agent representing a foreign sovereign and accredited to the Crown; (3) any person belonging to the suite of such ambassador or diplomatic agent. An action or proceeding against the property of any of the persons enumerated in this Rule is for the purpose of this rule, an action or proceeding against such person." The exceptions are (1) those arising by waiver and voluntary submission to jurisdiction, and (2) in the case of the members of the suit, persons engaged in trade. The C. P. C., 1908, sec. 86, contains rules on the subject the terms whereof should be fulfilled for the suit being entertained:—2 C. L. J. 163; 29 All. 379.

In 35 Cal. 777; 12 C. W. N. 777; 8 C. L. J. 1, the question arose with reference to the succession (prospectively only, it arose) of some one in Tipperah family to a piece of property in British territory. The case was thrown out on the same ground as in this case and the case of 12 M. L. A. 523 was distinguished on the ground of jurisdiction arising by voluntary submission. Mr. Justice DOSS held the suit was maintainable, but the case of The Charkieh (1873) L. R. 4 A. & E. 59 (120) on which he relied cannot be taken as an authority in the light of The Parlement Belge (1880) 5 P. D. (C. A.) 187; The Constitution (1879) P. D. 39. There is no distinction between 'The State' or 'the Durbar' and the Ruling Chief:—(1912) 123 M. L. J. 605; see also (1870) P. R. 51 (wife of the Rajah); (1875) P. R. 93; 10 P. L. R. 130; (1886) P. Arbitration—Award—Application to have an award filed in Court—Private arbitration—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 525, 526.

Where an application is made under s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have an award filed in Court, and it appears to the Court, on cause shown why the award should not be filed, that there is a reasonable dispute between the parties on any of the grounds mentioned in ss. 520 or 521, the application should be dismissed.

Under s. 525† of the Code of Civil Procedure, sufficient cause may be shown by affidavit or verified petition.

Sree Ram Chowdhry v. Denobundhoo Chowdhry (1. L. R., 7 Cal., 490), and Sashti Charan Chatterjee v. Tarak Chandra Chatterjee (8 B. L. R., 315) referred to.

THIS was a rule to show cause why a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Pubna, in the matter of the filing of a private award under s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and dated the 30th of January 1882, should not be set aside by the High Court. The material portions of the Subordinate Judge's judgment are as follows :—

This is a suit or application under s. 525 of Act X of 1877 brought by the plaintiffs to enforce a private award made by the arbitrators Probat Chundra Sen and others, appointed under an agreement dated 25th September 1877, said to have been entered into between Ananda Nath Chowdhoree, the husband of the plaintiff No. 1 and the father of the plaintiff No. 2, and Sham Soonder Chowdhoree, the husband of the defendant Ichamoyee Chowdhranee. It was alleged that after the death of the said Sham Soonder Chowdhoree the present defendant gave her consent to the arbitration proceedings, and after the award was made by the arbitrators she acted upon it by receiving money due to her under the terms of the said award. Hence this suit. The written statement of the defendant is to the effect—(1), that the present suit is barred by limitation, inasmuch as the legal representatives of the deceased Ananda Nath Chowdhoree have not been joined as plaintiffs within the specified time; (2), that the present suit cannot proceed on an award stamped insufficiently; (3), [558] that the ekrar deed executed by Sham Soonder Chowdhoree is not binding upon his heirs, and also that the arbitrators had no authority to proceed upon the said ekrar after the death of Sham Soonder Chowdhoree; (4), that Ichamoyee Chowdhranee did not give her consent to the arbitration, and she had no power under the will of her husband to do so, and if she has given any consent that consent is not legally admissible in evidence; (5), that the award in question cannot be filed inasmuch as it had been made a long time after the ekhar deed, which does not mention any specified time; (6), that deceased Ananda Nath Chowdhoree acted in contravention of the ekhar deed before the arbitration began, therefore the award cannot be enforced against the defendant; (7) that the private award cannot be filed in this Court under the following grounds: [These grounds were twelve in number, and were to the effect that the arbitrators had partitioned lands which they ought not to have partitioned, and had not partitioned lands which they ought to have partitioned; that they had not carried out the provisions of the agreement in some respects, and had exceeded their powers in others; that they had examined witnesses in the absence of the defendant without giving notice; that they had been partial to the plaintiff and had given a decision against the weight of the evidence taken before them; and that the conduct of the other party in the arbitration, had been fraudulent.] The Subordinate Judge then went on to say:

The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

The points to be determined in this case are: (1st), whether the plaintiffs are entitled to bring this suit without joining all the persons named in the will and without coming in as executor or executrix; (2nd), whether the present suit is barred by the provisions of s. 366* of Act X of 1877; (3rd), whether the ekhar deed executed by the deceased Sham Soonder will be binding against his heirs; 4th, whether the private award was made according to the provisions of s. 520 and 521 † and in equity; if so, are the plaintiffs entitled to file it in the Court? [The Subordinate Judge then discussed the evidence and came to a finding on all the issues in favour of the plaintiff.] He then went on to say:—

Under these circumstances I come to the clear conclusion that the award in question is valid in law as well as in equity, and it was acted upon by receiving the property mentioned in it by both the parties, and it can be filed in the Court of Justice.

Mr. Evans, Baboo Mohini Mohun Roy and Baboo Issen Chunder Chucker-butty for the Petitioners.

Mr. Bell and Baboo Grija Sunker Mozoomdar opposed the application.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (WILSON and MACPHERSON, JJ.)

[559] Wilson, J.—This was a rule granted under s. 622 of the Procedure Code, to show cause why an order of the Subordinate Judge of Pubna, directing an award to be filed, should not be set aside. The rule was granted upon two grounds, the first and most important of which is, in my opinion, sufficient to dispose of the case, viz., “that considering the cause shown against the award the order ought not to have been made.”

Or the Court may, if it think proper, on the application of the defendant, and upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, pass such other order as it thinks fit for bringing in the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff, or for proceeding with the suit in order to a final determination of the matter in dispute, or for both those purposes.

† [Sec. 521. —An award remitted under section 520 becomes void on the refusal of the arbitrators or umpire to reconsider it. But no award shall be set aside except on one of the following grounds (namely) —

(a) corruption or misconduct of the arbitrator or umpire;

(b) either party having been guilty of fraudulent concealment of any matter which he ought to have disclosed, or of wilfully misleading or deceiving the arbitrator or umpire;

(c) the award having been made after the issue of an order by the Court superseding the arbitration and restoring the suit;

and no award shall be valid unless made within the period allowed by the Court.]

The question turns upon the construction of ss. 525 and 526 of the Procedure Code, Section 525 says: "When any matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of a Court of Justice, and an award has been made thereon, any person interested in the award may apply to the Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction over the matter to which the award relates, that the award be filed in Court. The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants. The Court shall direct notice to be given to the parties to the arbitration, other than the applicant, requiring them to show cause within a time specified, why the award should not be filed."

Section 529 says: "If no ground, such as is mentioned or referred to in s. 520 or 521, be shewn against the award, the Court shall order it to be filed, and such award shall then take effect as an award made under the provisions of this chapter."

In the present case differences having arisen between two brothers Ananda Nath Chowdhree and Sham Soonder Chowdhree, they entered into an agreement of reference by which they submitted thirteen specified matters to arbitration. This was on the 25th September 1877.

On the 3rd of October 1878, Sham Soonder died, leaving the present applicant his widow and executrix, and five infant sons, and she obtained probate of the will.

After Sham Soonder's death the arbitrators proceeded with the reference; and on the 30th of May 1880 they made their award. Ananda Nath applied to the Subordinate Judge to file the award under s. 525 and then died. His widow, as next friend of his minor sons, and his major son were substituted for him in the proceedings.

The present applicant presented a written statement in which [560] she contended that the award was bad on the ground that the agreement of submission did not bind the representatives of Sham Soonder; and also on grounds that, if true, showed that the award had left undecided certain of the matters referred, and had dealt with matters not referred, and was bad on the face of it, objections within the scope of s. 520. The Subordinate Judge overruled all the objections, and ordered the award to be filed. We have to say whether that order should be set aside or not.

If the words in s. 526, "no ground, such as is mentioned or referred to in s. 520 or 521, be shewn against the award," mean, 'be established to the satisfaction of the Court,' then so far as such objections are concerned, we cannot say that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in filing the award; but I think the terms of the section are complied with, and grounds are shewn, when it is shown by written statement or affidavit or other verified statement, that the award is impugned as invalid for any of the reasons contained in ss. 520 and 521, and that the Court is then bound to hold its hand, and leave the parties to their remedy by suit. This appears to me the more natural construction of the section, and it is certainly the one most in accordance with justice and convenience. I am not at all inclined to strain the language of the Statute when the effect would be to deprive the parties of their ordinary right to have their controversies (other than those which they have agreed to refer) tried by suit with a right of appeal, and compel them to submit to a summary decision without appeal.

This question has not, so far as I am aware, been actually decided; but it has on several occasions been considered by Division Benches of this Court, and the opinions expressed have been in accordance with the views I have

[561] It was pointed out in argument before us that this conclusion might introduce a different rule in the case of awards made wholly out of Court from that which must apply in the case of arbitration arising out of suits or in which the submission has been filed. It may be so; but the language used in dealing with the two cases is entirely different.

There is an additional objection to the present order, because the applicant, when before the Subordinate Judge, denied altogether that the submission was binding upon her, and s. 525 seems to me to have no application to a case in which the submission or its binding effect is in dispute.

The order of the Subordinate Judge will therefore be set aside.

Macpherson, J. -I concur in holding that the order of the Subordinate Judge should be set aside. One of the material contentions before the Subordinate Judge was that the award was not binding on Ichamoyee, the applicant before us, as she was no party to the agreement of submission to arbitration executed by her husband as one of the contracting parties, and there was nothing in the agreement to bind his representatives. Further, it was contended that she had never given any such consent to the arbitration, which commenced after her husband's death, as to make the award binding on her. The Subordinate Judge, after taking evidence, held that she had consented, and that the award was binding on her, and then after disposing of many other objections to the proceedings of the arbitrators he passed an order that the award should be filed under the provisions of s. 526. The agreement related to many matters which were to be the subject of arbitration, and included the taking of accounts and determination thereon whether any balance remained due from one party to the other. Though the agreement was executed nearly a year prior to the death of her husband, no action appears to have been taken by the arbitrators till about nine months after his death. Whether there were or were not sufficient grounds to justify the Subordinate Judge in holding that the agreement was binding on her by consent or otherwise, is a matter which we need not consider, as I think he had no power to determine the question, and in doing so exceeded the jurisdiction which he could exercise under [562] ss. 525 and 526. The power of a Court acting under these sections seems to be very limited.

They neither contemplate nor authorize a decision on disputed matters outside the award itself and the action of the arbitration as bearing on it. The construction put by this Court on the corresponding section of Act VIII of 1859, was in effect that if the Court decided disputed questions bearing on the authority of arbitrators to make an award, the decision was one from which an appeal would lie. In other words, the Court had decided a question which it was not intended it should decide finally. Act X of 1877 took away the right of appeal, and s. 526 indicated more clearly than the corresponding section of Act VIII of 1859, the grounds which might possibly be the subject of inquiry, and narrowed rather than extended the power of the Court. On this ground I would set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge. I also concur in holding that when a Court, in dealing with an application under s. 525, finds there is a bona fide and a reasonable dispute on any of the grounds mentioned in ss. 520, 521, it ought to hold its hand, and would be justified by the words of the section in doing so; but I hesitate to say that when such grounds of objections are set forth in a verified petition or affidavit, the Court is to make no inquiry, or that if it does decide on evidence that no grounds exist, the decision is one with which we could interfere under s. 622.

Order set aside.

NOTES.

[FILING AWARD—OBJECTIONS—COURT'S POWER TO GO INTO THEM—

The C. P. C., 1908, Sch. II, r. 21 sets at rest the previous conflict of decisions in cases like this one and 9 Cal. 575. Sub-clause 1 thereof enacts that, "Where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon and where no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15 is proved, the Court shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award."

Doubts were entertained under the former Code, as to whether the Courts can determine on the validity of the objections. The Legislature has explicitly overruled the interpretation of WILSON, J. at p. 560. the High Courts also took a similar view, dissenting from this case:—9 Cal. 575; 11 Cal. 166; 21 Cal. 213 F. B.; 16 Cal. 482; 6 Bom. 663; 7 Bom. 316; 20 Bom. 208; 8 All. 340; 16 All. 231; 4 Mad. 319. The contrary opinion was also held in 9 Cal. 557; 7 Cal. 490; 17 Bom. 674; 9 Bom. 254; 20 Bom. 596.

As regards the power of the High Court to determine whether there had been a valid submission, while in this case (9 Cal. at 561) and 21 Cal. 213, it was held that the Court had no such power, in the following cases it was held that the Court had such power:—25 Cal. 757 F.B.; 10 C. W. N. 601 2 C.L.J. 153; 20 Mad. 89; 17 All. 21; 28 All. 621; (1901) P. R. 84; 29 Bom. 621.]

Hindu Law—Inheritance—Bengal School of Hindu law—Sapinda—Brother's daughter's son.

According to the Bengal school of Hindu law a brother's daughter's son is a sapinda, and is, therefore, a preferable heir to the great-great-great-grandfather's great-great-great-grandson.

THIS case was referred to a Full Bench by Mr. Justice McDONELL and Mr. Justice FIELD, two of the Judges of the Court, on the 7th June 1882, with the following opinion:—

Field, J.—The question raised in this appeal is whether a brother's daughter's son is a preferable heir to the great-great-great-grandfather's great-great-great-grandson. That the brother's daughter's son is an heir depends upon the principle which was laid down and defined in the Full Bench case of Gura Gobind Shah Mandal v. Anund Lal Ghose Mazumdar (5 B. I. R., 15; s. c.,

* Full Bench Reference made by Mr. Justice MC DONELL and Mr. Justice FIELD, dated the 7th June 1882, in Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2445 of 1880.

13 W. R., F. B., 49). In that particular case it was the father's brother's daughter's son who was declared an heir, but the principle is the same in the case of a brother's daughter's son. That case merely decided that such a son is an heir. It left undetermined the further question—what precise position is such an heir to occupy in the category of heirs. In the judgment of Mr. Justice DWARKA NATH MITTER at pages 45 and 46, this question was expressly stated to be left undetermined. On the present occasion it becomes necessary to decide this question. The doctrine of spiritual welfare must, as the law is now settled, determine the order in which any person entitled to succeed is to rank in the category of heirs. Now, in the present case referring to the genealogical tree to be found at page 10 of the paper-book, [564] Byddo Nath is the late owner. The plaintiff Moti Lal Banerjee offers a pinda or undivided oblation to Anund Chunder, Ram Sunker and Basdeb Roy. The deceased Byddo Nath participates in two of these pindas, that is, those offered to Ram Sunker and Basdeb. The defendants offer pindas to three persons, Ram Prosad (or Ram Kumar), Ram Sunker and Nund Kishore. They offer a lepa or divided offering to Bissessur Roy, Ram Bullubh Roy and Ram Bullubh Roy's father. The deceased Byddo Nath participates in two lepas, viz., those offered to Ram Bullubh Roy and Ram Bullubh Roy's father. The question then is reduced to this: "Is the efficacy of two pindas offered by a cognate superior to that of two lepas offered by an agnate?" It appears to us that this question ought to be answered in the affirmative; and in support of this view we may refer to paragraphs 425, 426, and 432 of Mr. Mayne's work on Hindu Law. In the last paragraph Mr. Mayne says: "The result of these rules in Bengal is, that not only do all the bandhus come in before any of the sakulyas or samanodakas, but that the bandhus themselves are sifted in and out among the agnates, heirs in the female line frequently taking before very near sapindas in the direct male line, on the principle of superior religious efficacy. In fact, if the test of religious efficacy is once admitted, no other arrangement would be logically possible." To the same purport are para. 5, s. 1, chap. XI of the Dayabhaga; and the passages to be found at pages 763, 771, 772 and 830 of the Principles of the Hindu Law of Inheritance by Baboo Raj Cumar Sarvadhicari, and the page 276 of the second edition of Baboo Shyama Churn Sircar's work on Hindu law. We think that these passages establish, first, that the plaintiff in this case is a sapinda of the deceased Byddo Nath; and, secondly, that no sapinda even a sapinda whose sapindaship depends upon cognate relationship, is an inferior heir to any sakulya. We do not overlook the fact that a pinda offered by a cognate is of secondary importance as compared with a pinda offered by an agnate; but we think it clear that a pinda offered by a cognate is of superior efficacy to any lepa or divided offering by an agnate. The case of Kashee Mohun Roy v. Raj Gobind [565] Chuckerbutty (24 W. R., 229) is opposed to the view which we take. In that case the plaintiff Raj Gobind Chuckerbutty offered one pinda or undivided offering in which the deceased Bharut participated, viz., that which was offered to the common ancestor Ram Sunker. The defendant Kripa Nath Bagchi offered one lepa or divided offering to the same Ram Sunker Bagchi. In that case, therefore, the question really was whether a pinda offered by a cognate was of superior efficacy to a lepa or divided offering offered by an agnate. That case differs from the present case merely in this, that in the case which we have to decide the parties stand in different degrees of propinquity; and the number of both divided and undivided offerings is double. The decision in the case of Kashee Mohun Roy v. Raj Gobind Chuckerbutty (24 W. R., 229) was not based altogether upon the principle of spiritual efficacy; and it would no doubt be possible to draw a distinction between that case and the present case on the ground that in that case the relationship of the contending parties to the deceased was different from the similar relationship of the parties in the present case : and that, therefore, much of the reasoning upon which the decision in that case was based would not be applicable to the case which we have to decide. We think, however, that the true test is that of spiritual efficacy ; and, tried by this test, the cases are exactly analogous. As the question is one of some doubt and is of considerable importance to the Hindu community, we think that it will be better to refer it to a Full Bench. We therefore refer the following question to a Full Bench : "Is a cognate sapinda a preferable heir to an agnate sakulya."

The Judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by Mitter, J.—We are of opinion that according to the Hindu law current in the Lower Provinces of Bengal a brother's daughter's son is a preferable heir to the great-great-grandfather's great-great-grandson.

In the Full Bench decision in Guru Gobind Shaha Mandal v. Anund Lal Ghose Mazumdar (5 B. L. R., 15 ; s.c., 13 W. R., F. B., 49), Mr. Justice DWARKANATH MITTER was of opinion that a cognate of this description is a sapinda, as defined in the Dayabhaga. A brother's daughter's son offers two pindas or undivided oblations to the father and the grand father of the deceased in which he participates. Whereas the great-great-grandfather's great-great-grandson is not connected with the deceased through the medium of undivided oblations. He is a sakulya or an agnate, connected with the deceased through the medium of divided oblations. Therefore, the competition in this case is between a cognate who is a sapinda and an agnate who is a sakulya. According to the Dayabhaga, it does not admit of any doubt, that a sapinda, though a cognate, is a preferable heir to a sakulya agnate. The following passages of the Dayabhaga are clear upon this point :—

"The order of succession then must be understood in this manner : On failure of the father's daughter's son or other person who is a giver of three oblations (presented to the father, etc.), which the deceased shares or which he was bound to offer, [567] the succession devolves in the next place on the maternal uncle and others, (namely, his son and grandson)"—Chap. XV, s. 6, para. 20.

But on failure of kin in this degree, the distant kinsman (sakulya) is successor. For Manu says : "Then, on failure of such kindred the distant kinsman shall be the heir, or the spiritual preceptor or the pupil." The distant kinsman (sakulya) is one who shares a divided oblation (s. I, § 37) as the grandson's grandson or other descendant within three degrees reckoned from him, or as the offspring of the grandfather's grandfather or other remote ancestor," paragraph 21.

But it has been contended that the question referred to the Full Bench in the case cited above being whether a father's brother's daughter's son is entitled to be recognized as an heir according to the Hindu law current in the Bengal school, it is binding upon us upon that question only ; that we are not concluded by the grounds upon which it was based ; and that we are competent to reconsider them. But this contention is not sound. The Full Bench decided that a father's brother's daughter's son is an heir because he is a sapinda. If we are to follow this decision, we must hold that a father's brother's daughter's son or any other cognate conferring similar spiritual benefits upon the deceased is a sapinda. It is to be further borne in mind that the heritable rights of such cognates either must be based upon their sapinda relationship, or they would not be in the line of heirs at all.

"If the right of the father's son, and of the maternal uncle and the rest," says the author of the Dayabhaga in para. 28, s. 6, Chap. XI, "be not considered as intended by the text, 'To three must libations of water be made, etc.,' they would have no right of succession since they have not a place among distant kinsmen and others whose order of succession is specified."

Therefore, unless we decline to follow the Full Bench decision in Guru Gobind Shaha Mandal v. Anund Lal Ghose Mazumdar (5 B. L. R., 15 ; s.c., 13 W. R., F. B., 49) we must hold that a brother's daughter's son is a sapinda, and therefore a preferable heir to the great-great-great-grandfather's great-great-great-grandson.

[568] The learned Judges who have referred this question to a Full Bench are also of this opinion. The reference was made in consequence of a contrary ruling in Kashee Mohun Roy v. Raj Gobind Chuckerbutty (24 W. R., 229). It appears to us that in that case the learned Judges held that a sakulya relative was a preferable heir to a cognate sapinda. That decision is therefore clearly opposed to the rule of law laid down by the author of the Dayabhaga in the passages cited above.

The result is that this appeal fails. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation—Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 179—Execution of decree—Partition—Joint decree—Decree for partition.

A consent decree for partition made between three parties contained a provision that if the plaintiffs should not have the property partitioned within two months from the date thereof, any one of the other parties to the suit might obtain partition by executing the decree. One of the parties sued out execution and obtained partition and possession of his own share. More than three years after the date of the decree, but less than three years from the date of the application just mentioned, another of the parties applied for partition under the decree.

Held, that the application was not barred by limitation under the provisions of the Limitation Act, Act XV of 1877, Sch. II, Art. 179, cl. 3, exp. 1.

THE facts of this case are stated as follows in the judgment appealed from: "The parties in this case were originally [569] plaintiffs and defendants in a partition suit, which was decided in accordance with the terms of a compromise on the 30th of January 1877. The decree showed that each of three sets into which the owners of the whole property were divided, was entitled to one-third of the property in suit, and it was decreed that if the plaintiffs did not have the partition of the lands carried out within the two months, any one of the parties, whether plaintiff or defendant, might 'execute the decree and take possession after partition.' The owners of one-third accordingly executing the decree obtained their share: then some four years after the date of the decree, another set, the respondents 1 and 2, applied for separation of their share: thereupon certain of the defendants pleaded that this second application was barred by limitation, the execution by one set of the owners not being a proceeding which kept alive the decree of all. The Munsif found that the application for execution of the first set of proprietors prevented the decree being barred. The reason given by him is that the decree was one which should be executed with reference to all the shares on the application of one of the parties, but, inasmuch as one set of proprietors had already succeeded in obtaining a separation of their one-third share, the Munsif seems to have understood that his interpretation of the decree could not be acted on so long as the previous execution proceedings were not impugned, and he thereupon passed an order which was clearly ultra vires, namely, that the entire property should now be partitioned amongst all the shareholders. The present applicants for execution advanced no such claim as that the lands already separated should again be united with the lands of the other two shares and a fresh partition carried out; but manifestly the first execution proceedings were an obstacle which would have to be surmounted somehow before the present application could be granted. As the matter stood the successful execution of a fraction of the decree was for all practical purposes equivalent to three decrees, and, if so, the execution of a separate portion of the decree by those entitled to that portion could not keep alive the decree with reference to the other portion in which the first applicants for execution had no interest." The Subordinate Judge then cited and distinguished the case of [570] Sheikh Khoodshed Hossein v. Nubee Fatima (I. L. R., 3 Cal. 551), and allowed the appeal with costs.

Thereupon an appeal was preferred to the High Court, on the ground that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the decree was barred by limitation.

Baboo Troglukha Nath Mittra for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Cunningham, J.—In this case there was a decree on compromise on the 30th January 1877, by which the parties were declared to be entitled to a partition, and it was ordered that, if the plaintiffs did not have the partition of the lands carried out within two months, any one of the parties, plaintiffs or defendants, might execute the decree and take possession after partition. The partition was not carried out forthwith, and an application was made by some of the plaintiffs to have the partition effected, and on that application, without dividing the entire property, one-third portion was separated. On the 15th March 1882 the present applicants applied for partition of the rest of the properties, that is, of the remaining two-thirds which were not partitioned. The question we have now to decide is, whether that application being made more than three years after the decree of the 30th January 1877 is kept alive by the application of some of the plaintiffs in January 1880. The lower Appellate Court has considered that it is not, inasmuch as the decree must be regarded as practically a separate decree in the interest of each of the parties. We are unable to concur in that view; we think on the whole that the proper view to be taken of the decree is that it was a joint decree, within the meaning of the second part of the explanation to Article 179 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act. We consider, therefore, that the application is not barred by limitation.

The Munsif in passing orders on the application directed that the whole of the property should be partitioned, thus re-opening the [571] proceedings of January 1880. We concur with the lower Court in thinking that in doing this he was going beyond what the applicants had asked for. We think that the proper order to pass in the case is that the execution should now issue as prayed by the applicants. The present appeal must be admitted with costs.

Appeal allowed.

MR. JUSTICE FIELD AND MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

Uma Sunkur Sirkar.....Defendant

Kabuliat, Construction of—Abatement of rent for land acquired by Government for public purposes.

In a suit for rent by a zamindar against a patnidar, the latter claimed abatement of the rent on the ground that part of the land included in the patni tenure had been acquired by the Government for public purposes.

The kabuliat executed by the patnidar contained a provision to the effect that, if any of the land settled should be taken up by Government for public purposes, the zamindar and the patnidar should divide and take in equal shares the compensation money, and a further provision to the effect that the patnidar should "make no objection on the score of diluvion or any other cause to pay the rent fixed or reserved by this kabuliat."

Held, that the patnidar was entitled to abatement of the rent.

IN this suit the plaintiff (zamindar) sued the defendant (patnidar) for rent calculated at the full rate fixed by the patni settlement. The defendant's claim for abatement having been rejected by both the lower Courts, the defendant appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Kashi Kant Sen for the Appellant.

Baboo Bhowany Churn Dutt for the Respondent.

The following Judgments were delivered :—

Field, J.—The question in this case is concerned with the construction of a patni kabuliat.

Some land included in the patni was taken up by Government [572] for public purposes, and the patnidar now claims abatement of rent from the zamindar in respect of the land so taken. The contention of the zamindar is that the patnidar is, by an express covenant contained in the patni kabuliat, debarred from making any such claim for abatement. The patni kabuliat first contains an agreement to the following effect: that if land be taken up by Government for a railway, a ferry fund or other purposes, the zamindar and the patnidar shall divide the compensation paid by Government in respect of such land, each receiving one moiety. There is then a further clause which may be roughly translated as follows:— "I shall make no objection on the score of diluvion or any other cause to pay the rent fixed or reserved by this kabuliat." I propose to construe this second clause first; and the question which I have to decide is, whether the taking of land for public purposes by Government is a cause of the same kind as diluvion. If this question is to be answered in the affirmative, then this particular clause in the kabuliat precludes the patnidar from claiming abatement of rent. It appears to me that the taking of land by Government for a public purpose is not a cause of the same nature as diluvion; and for this reason. When land is washed away by the action of the river, the thing itself out of which the rent issues is destroyed, certainly for a time, although it is quite possible that by the action of the same river there may be a re-formation. But in the case of a re-formation the custom of this country is, that where abatement has been allowed for diluvion, enhancement is claimable for alluvion. When land is taken up by Government, the thing itself out of which the rent issues is not destroyed; it continues to exist and the Government pays what must be taken to be the market value of the land at the particular time. It, therefore, appears to me that it is impossible to say that the taking of land by Government for public purposes is a cause ejusdem generis (of the same kind) with diluvion. This disposes of the second clause.

Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 478 of 1881 against the decree of Baboo Amrito Lall Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, dated the 29th December 1880, affirming the decree of Baboo Bahari Lal Banerjee, Second Munsif of Kooshtoa, dated the 1st August 1879.

I now proceed to deal with the first clause. As to the meaning of this clause there can be no possible doubt. The parties agreed that the zamindar should receive one moiety of the compensation, and the patnidar the other moiety. There is no express covenant as to whether there shall be an abatement of rent or not. [573] We have then to consider whether it is equitable that the zamindar having received a portion of the compensation money, in other words, having received to a certain extent the value of the annuity which he has reserved out of the land demised by the patni lease, should be entitled to continue to receive the whole of that annuity without diminution. It appears to me that this would not be equitable; and that where the zamindar receives a portion of the compensation money, it is reasonable that he should grant an abatement in the patni rent to the patnidar. I take it that the stipulation in the patni kabuliat was intended morely to be a solution of a question which constantly arises in compensation cases, and which it is extremely difficult to decide without a measurement of the whole area of the patni tenure; in other words, that it was intended to settle, as between the zamindar and the patnidar, the principle upon which the compensation for land taken up by Government for public purposes should be apportioned between the parties. In many cases the patnidar's interest is of more value than the zamindar's interest, and there are probably few cases in which the zamindari interest would exceed the value of the patni interest. I take it therefore that this stipulation, that the parties should divide the compensation money in equal moieties, is an agreement between them merely as to the apportionment of the compensation, and that it was not intended to lay down any rule between these parties as to abatement of rent, which must be taken to be left to the general law of the country; and I think that as the patindar has suffered a diminution of the area of the thing demised to him, he is entitled to an abatement of the patni rent payable by him. The case must therefore go back to the Court of First Instance in order that that Court may decide what is a reasonable abatement under the circumstances. The costs of all Courts will abide the result.

Norris, J.—I am of the same opinion. In construing this document it cannot reasonably be held that the taking of part of the land by the Government for the purposes of a railway is ejusdem generis with land abating or increasing by reason of diluvion and alluvion, or, in other words, by the act of God; and I am strengthened in coming to this conclusion when it is manifest that there [574] was present before the minds of the parties, at the time the patni settlement was granted by the plaintiff, the fact that Government was likely to take a portion of the land included in the settlement for the purposes of a railway; and if the parties intended that there should be no abatement of rent when Government exercised their powers, in addition to making an express provision for the distribution of the compensation money, they would have further stated that there would be no abatement of rent. I am of opinion that the true construction of this document is that the parties intended by an arrangement between themselves, to arrive at a conclusion, as to how the compensation money paid by Government should be divided between the parties. The relation of zamindar and patnidar may be taken as that of lessor and lessee. The lessee in 99 cases out of 100 has a beneficial occupation, and in so far as he has the beneficial occupation, he is entitled, when turned out of a part of his holding, to be compensated for the loss he suffers by reason of such eviction. The zamindar also, who answers to the lessor or free-holder, is entitled to be paid for the land actually taken, and instead of calling into play some abstruse method of calculation, the parties agreed as to the proportions in which the lessee should be compensated for the loss of his leasehold interest in the land, and the zamindar for his freehold interest. After the question of compensation has been determined, there still remains the question of the quantum of abatement in the rent which the lessor should allow the lessee. In England a machinery is provided. In the Lands Clauses Act there exists a machinery for the settlement of the abatement. It is a matter of calculation, and if the parties cannot agree, provision is made for the settlement of the amount by justice. No such machinery exists in this country, and I am therefore of opinion that the case must be remanded as directed by my learned brother.

Appeal allowed and case remanded.

[575] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 17th January, 1883.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MITTER AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

In the matter of the Petition of Dutto Singh and others.*

Dutto Singh and others

Dosad Bahadur Singh.

Arbitration—Award—Time to file an award—Limitation—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sch. II, cl. 176—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, ss. 525—Powers of Court—Cause shown against filing award, validity of—Powers of arbitrators—Review of award.

Where an award was made and signed by the arbitrators on the 5th of August 1881, but was not delivered to the parties till the 13th of September following, semble, that an application to file the award, made on the 25th of February 1882, under the provisions of s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was not barred by limitation. It is clearly the intention of the Legislature that a party to an arbitration should have six months to enforce the award under s. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, from the time when he is in a position to enforce it.

* Rules Nos. 1038 and 1202 of 1882, against the order of Maulvi Mahomed Nooral Hosain, Munsiff of Tajpore, dated the 30th June 1882.

Under ss. 525 and 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Court has full power to enter into the question of the sufficiency of the cause shown against the filing in Court of an award.

Dandekar v. Dandekars (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 663) followed; Ichamoyee Chowdhranee v. Prosunno Nath Chowdhri (ante, p. 557) dissented from.

After an award has been made and handed to the parties the functions of the arbitrators cease. They have no power afterwards to deal with an application for review of their decision.

IN this case it appeared that Dutto Singh and others (hereafter spoken of as Dutto Singh) agreed to refer to arbitration certain disputes which they had with Dosad Bahadur Singh and others (hereafter spoken of as Dosad Bahadur Singh). The arbitrators made their award on the 5th of August 1881 in favour of Dosad Bahadur Singh, in consequence of which the opposite party applied to the arbitrators for a review of their decision on the 16th of August 1881. Pending the consideration of this application by the arbitrators, and on the 28th of November 1881 Dosad Bahadur Singh applied to the Court of the Munsiff of Tajpore in Tirhoot under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code to have the award filed in Court. Dutto Singh having been called upon to show cause, objected that the arbitrators had not yet passed any [576] order on his application for review, and on this ground the application to have the award filed in Court was dismissed on the 9th of January 1882.

On the 17th of January 1882, the arbitrators rejected Dutto Singh's application for review, and on the 25th of February 1882, Dosad Bahadur Singh made another application to have the award filed in Court. Dutto Singh showed cause on the ground, amongst others, that the application for review had been improperly rejected. On the 30th of June 1882, the Munsiff remitted the case to the arbitrators on the ground that the application for review had been improperly rejected.

Rule No. 1033 of 1882.—On the 22nd of August 1882, Dutto Singh applied to the High Court for a rule calling upon Dosad Bahadur Singh to show cause why the Munsiff's order of the 30th of June should not be set aside on the following grounds: (1) that the application to have the award filed in Court was barred by limitation; (2) that the Munsiff had no jurisdiction to make the order objected to; (3) that the arbitrators having been guilty of misconduct in making the award, and in refusing the application made to them to reconsider it, the Munsiff should have refused to interfere in any way and should have simply refused to file the award; (4) that the award should have been set aside under the provisions of s. 526 of the Civil Procedure Code, or the parties left to a civil suit.

Rule 1202 of 1882.—After the previous rule had been issued Dosad Bahadur Singh applied to the High Court for a rule calling upon Dutto Singh to show cause why the Munsiff should not be ordered to file the award.

Both rules were heard together.

Mr. Twidale showed cause against Rule No. 1033, and supported Rule 1202.

Mr. C. Gregory showed cause against Rule 1202, and supported Rule No. 1033.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—These two rules arise out of a proceeding held in the Munsiff's Court of Tajpore under the provisions of [577] ss. 525 and 526 of the Civil Procedure Code. It appears that certain matters in dispute between the parties to these two rules were referred to arbitration without the intervention of a Court of Justice. The arbitrators made their award on the 5th of August 1881; but it was not handed over to the parties till the 13th September following. The petitioners in rule No. 1033 being dissatisfied with the award, in the meantime filed, on the 16th of August, a petition of review before the arbitrators.

While this petition of review was pending, the petitioners in Rule No. 1202 under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code, applied to the Munsiff of Tajpore, who had jurisdiction over the matter, to have the award filed in Court. On notice being given to the petitioners in Rule No. 1033, who were the parties to the arbitration other than the applicants under s. 525, they raised various objections, some of which undoubtedly come within the provisions of ss. 520 and 521 of the Civil Procedure Code; but the Court without determining any of them refused the application on the 9th January 1882 solely on the ground that an application for review was then pending before the arbitrators.

On the 7th January 1882, the application for review was rejected. The petitioners in Rule No. 1202 again applied to the Court on the 5th February 1882 to have the award filed in Court under s. 525. Again the parties other than the applicants, on notice being given, urged various objections, which were disposed of by the Court on the 30th June 1882.

One of the objections urged against the award being filed in Court was that the application dated the 25th February 1882 was out of time, under Art. 176* of the Limitation Act, which lays down that an application under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code should be made within six months from the date of the award. The Court overruled this objection on the ground that the six months should be counted from the date when the award became final, and that the award did not become final till the application for review was disposed of.

Another objection against the award was that the arbitrators were guilty of corruption. The Court overruled it, finding that this charge was not established.

But the Court, being of opinion that the application for [578] review had not been duly considered by all the arbitrators, remitted the award to them to deal with the application for review according to certain directions contained in the judgment. The petitioners in Rule No. 1202 contend that the order remitting the award is erroneous; that the Court, having regard to its finding upon the other objections, should have ordered the award to be filed in Court. The petitioners in the other rule contend that the decision of the lower Court on the question of limitation is erroneous; and that it having come to the conclusion that the proceedings of the arbitrators were not regular should have rejected the application at once.

The first question that we have to decide is, whether the application of the 25th February 1882 was barred under the provisions of Art. 176 of the Limitation Act. The order of the lower Court in this case is not appealable, and the rules were obtained under the provisions of s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. Supposing that the decision of the lower Court on the question of limitation is erroneous in law, it might be doubtful whether it would bring the case within the purview of s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. However, if it were necessary for us to decide this question, we would follow the opinion expressed by COUCH, C.J., in Sreenath Chatterjee v. Koylash Chunder Chatterjee (21 W. R., 248) "that the word 'date' does not mean the day written in the award, as when it was made, but the time when it is given to the parties, when it becomes an award and is handed over to them, so that they may be able to give effect to it." An award may be made and dated the day it is written and signed by the arbitrators. It may then remain in the hands of the arbitrators for more than six months. In a case like this it would be unreasonable to hold that the six months should count from the "date" written in the award.

It is clearly the intention of the Legislature that a party to an arbitration should have six months to enforce the award under s. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code from the time when he is in a position to enforce it.

It has been next urged in support of Rule No. 1033 that when objections were taken to the filing of the award in Court, [579] and when some of these objections, came within ss. 520 and 521 of the Civil Procedure Code, the lower Court should have dismissed the application under s. 526. It has been contended before us that a Court under ss. 525 and 526 cannot enter into the question of the validity of the cause shown against the filing in Court of an award; that whenever any of the grounds mentioned or referred to in s. 520 or s. 521 are alleged, the Court must refuse the application holding that sufficient cause has been shown why the award should not be filed within the meaning of s. 525 and 526. In support of this contention the case of Ichamoyee Chowdhralee v. Prosunno Nath Chowdhri (ante, p. 557), has been relied upon. The learned Judges who decided that case gave different reasons for their decision. No doubt the judgment of WILSON, J., fully supports this contention; but with great deference to his opinion we are unable to agree in that view. In Dandekar v. Dandekars (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 663), a contrary view of the ss. 525 and 526 has been taken. We do not think it necessary to go into the reasons of our decision upon this point, as we do not find that we can add anything to those given in the Bombay decision cited above. This objection must also therefore fail.

In Rule No. 1202 it has been urged that the lower Court is in error in remitting the award to the arbitrators to reconsider the application for review against it. We are of opinion that this contention is valid. After the award was made and handed over to the parties, the functions of the arbitrators ceased. They had no power afterwards to deal with any application for review.

Therefore, the ground upon which the first application was disposed of by the lower Court was erroneous. We, therefore, set aside both the orders of the 9th January and 30th June 1882, and send back the record to the lower Court to deal with the objections taken to the filing of the award according to law. We allow no costs in either of the Rules.

Orders set aside.

Hindu law—Bengal school of Hindu law—Widow's estate—Joint widows—Partition—Alienation—Purchaser from Hindu widow.

Where a Hindu governed by the Bengal school of Hindu law dies intestate leaving two widows his only heirs him surviving, either of those widows may sell her interest in her deceased husband's property, and the purchaser thereof is entitled to enforce a partition as against the other widow.

The partition if decreed should be effected in such a way as would not be detrimental to the future interests of the reversioners.

THE facts of the case are thus stated in the judgment of the Court of First Instance: "The plaintiff alleges that he has purchased the half share of a piece of land and a house standing thereupon, belonging to one Rajnarain Mukerji, an inhabitant of Santipur, who died intestate in August 1872, leaving two widows, Prosunomoyi and Brojo Sunduri, as his only heirs-at-law. Plaintiff's purchase was made from Brojo Sunduri, the younger widow, who sold her interest ostensibly for the purpose of providing her maintenance. The purchase-deed is dated the 10th of August 1878. This suit has been brought by the plaintiff for the enforcement of partition of the disputed premises against the senior widow as well as against four kinsmen of the deceased (his cousin's sons) who have been in possession thereof since the death of Rajnarain. The senior widow has not appeared in this case. The suit is defended only by the defendant No. 4, one of the four kinsmen mentioned above." The Munsiff dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff's vendor had no power to convey her interest to the plaintiff, and that neither she nor the plaintiff as her representative was entitled to enforce partition of the joint estate as against the other widow. This decision was upheld on [581] appeal to the District Judge, and again upheld on second appeal to a single Judge of the High Court.

The arguments on which these decisions were based were to the effect that by Mitakshara law widows take a single estate, and that there can be no alienation by one without the consent of the other—Bhugwandeon Dobey v. Myna Bacc, (11 Moore's I. A., 487) ; Gajapathi Nilamani v. Gajapathi Rashamani, (I. L. R., 1 Mad., 290 ; L. R. 4 I. A., 212), unless on the ground of legal necessity ; and that the same principle was applicable to the Bengal school of Hindu law—Amrito Lal Bose v. Rajonee Kant Mitter (L. R., 2 I. A., 113 ; 15 B. L. R., 10) ; Maniram Kolita v. Keri Kolitani, (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 776). The plaintiff appealed to a Division Bench of the High Court (GARTH, C. J., and MITTER, J.) who referred the question to a Full Bench with the following opinion :—

This is a suit for possession after partition of two plots of land and the building upon them. One of those plots exclusively belonged to one Rajnarain Mukerji, who held a half share in the other, the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 being entitled to the other half. Rajnarain died leaving him surviving two widows, Prosunnomoyi Dabi and Brojo Sunduri Dabi. The plaintiff's case is that he has purchased Brojo Sunduri's interest in the property in dispute under a conveyance executed by her.

The Courts below dismissed the suit upon two grounds :—

First, that the interest of Brojo Sunduri in her husband's property was not alienable ; and, secondly, that neither Brojo Sunduri nor the plaintiff can legally enforce a partition of her husband's estate, so as to separate her share from that of the other widow.

The learned Judge in this Court has confirmed the decision of the lower Courts upon both these grounds. It has been argued before us that the learned Judge in this Court is not right in holding that the questions raised in the case are concluded by decisions of the Privy Council. We think that there is considerable force in this contention, and as those questions are of general importance, we think it desirable to obtain an authoritative ruling [582] of a Full Bench upon them. We, therefore, refer the following questions for the decision of a Full Bench :—

First.—Whether under the Hindu law in force in Bengal, Brojo Sunduri's alienation of her interest in her husband's estate is valid ?

Second.—Whether the plaintiff or Brojo Sunduri is entitled to a partition of the property in suit ?

Baboo Gurudas Banerji for the Appellant.

Baboo Srinath Das for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Full Bench was delivered by Mitter, J.—We are of opinion that both these questions should be answered in the affirmative.

It is now settled law that the interest of a Hindu widow may be alienated by her, and that the alienation would be valid for her life. In cases of necessity, such as are mentioned in paras. 61 and 62, s. 1, chap. XI of the Dayabhaga, she may effect even an absolute alienation to enure after her death. If there were no provisions to the contrary, the right of alienation of the interest of one of two or more widows jointly inheriting their husband's estate would logically flow from these two propositions. So far as the doctrines of the Hindu law prevalent in the Lower Provinces of Bengal are concerned, there does not, in our opinion, exist any such contrary provision.

One of the cardinal points of difference between the Mitakshara and the Dayabhaga is, that according to the latter the right of alienation being a necessary incident of ownership, one of two or more joint owners can alienate his interest in the joint property without the consent of the coparceners.

The author of the Mitakshara relying upon certain texts of Vyasa, in para. 30, chap. 1, s. 1, lays down the rule of law that, "among unseparated kinsmen the consent of all is indispensably requisite, because no one is fully empowered to make an alienation since the estate is in common."

"But the texts of Vyasa," says Jimuta Vahana, "exhibiting a prohibition, Dyabhaga, p. 36. are intended to show a moral offence : since the family is dis [583] tressed by a sale, gift or other transfer, which argues a disposition in the person to make an ill use of his power as owner. They are not to invalidate the sale or other transfer.

"So likewise other texts (as this 'though immoveables or bipeds have been acquired by a man himself, a gift or sale of them should not be made by him, unless convening all the sons') must be interpreted in the same manner. For here the words 'should' 'be made' must necessarily be understood.

"Therefore, since it is denied that a gift or sale should be made, the precept infringed by making one ; but the gift or transfer is not null : for a fact cannot be altered by a hundred texts." (Dyabhaga, chap. II, paras. 27 to 30.)

It is clear, therefore, that according to the Dyabhaga, the right of alienation is in no way affected by the joint inheritance of two or more widows in their husband's estate.

As regards the second question, the right of enforcing partition is also clearly laid down in the shastras. The passage from the Mitakshara which bears upon this point is not fully translated as has been pointed out in page 451, Madras High Court Reports, Vol. III. It is to the following effect : "There (in that order) the first to inherit is the wife patni. Patni is she who is (so) made by marriage, and this from the Smriti or rule of Grammar 'Patyur-no yagna Sumyogai.' (The particle ni is added to pati to signify one who partakes in the holy sacrifice) singular number, because the class is denoted. Hence, if there be several, whether of the same or different castes they divide and take the property according to their shares."

In page 132 of the Viramitrodaya, the same rule of law is thus laid down : "First of all the patni or the lawfully-wedded wife takes the estate. The term patni itself signifies a woman espoused in the prescribed form of marriage, agreeably to the aphorism of Panini. 'The term patni (husband) is changed into patni (meaning the correlative) implying relation through a sacrifice.' The singular number (in the term patni in Yagisvara's text 1) implies the class ; hence if a person leaves more wives than one, then all of them, first those of the same class (with the husband), and after them those of a different class, shall take the husband's property dividing the same amongst themselves."

[584] In the Dyabhaga, there is no special provision of this nature in the chapter on the widow's succession ; but the right of partition is provided for in all cases of joint inheritance by the following passages : "First, the term partition of heritage (Dyabhaga) is expounded, and on that subject Nareda says : "Where a division of the paternal estate is instituted by sons, that becomes a topic of litigation called by the wise partition of heritage. What came from the father is 'paternal', and this signifies property arising from the father's demise. The expressions 'paternal' and 'by sons' both indicate any relation, for the term 'Partition of Heritage' is used for any division of the goods of any relation by any relatives." Chap. I, paras. 2 and 3.

"Since any one parcener is proprietor of his own wealth, partition at the choice even of a single person is thence deducible ; and concurrence of heirs, suggested as one case of partition, is recited explanatorily in the text the brethren being assembled, &c." Chap. I, para. 35.

Upon these passages it is quite clear that in the case of a joint succession of two or more widows to their husband's estate, the partition may be enforced at the instance of any one of them.

So far then as the original treatises go, they clearly recognize the right of alienation by one of two or more widows jointly succeeding to their husband's estate, and of enforcing partition of the joint heritage.

But it has been urged that these questions have been decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in a contrary way.

The first of the cases cited before us is Bhugwandeem Dobey v. Myna Bae (11 Moore's I. A. 487). The facts of that case are these: One Rae Dina Nath died, and his estate was inherited by his two widows, Myna Bae and Dula Bae. The latter died leaving her share of the heritage, which had been separated under an order made by a Judge in a summary suit pursuant to Act XIX of 1841, to her father and brother under a will executed by her before her death. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held (1) that under the Mitakshara law which governed the case, the will was invalid against the surviving widow who [585] was entitled to succeed to the property in suit by right of survivorship; (2) that there was no severance of the joint tenancy of the two widows; and (3) that there could not be a partition between them, so as to affect the right of survivorship of either. Their Lordships closed their judgment with the observation, that the case might have been decided upon the single ground that in a joint estate the alienation of the interest of one coparcener without the consent of the rest is invalid.

It will appear from this analysis of the decision, that it does not bear upon the questions before us. It was not decided there that there could be no partition between the widows binding between them during their lifetime; but what was held was, that any such partition would not affect the right of survivorship of either. This is all that was decided in that case upon the question of partition, and the decision in Gajapathi Nelamani v. Gajapathi Rashamani (I. L. R., 1 Mad. 290: I. R., 4 I. A., 212) following the first-mentioned case only reaffirmed that proposition. As regards the observations upon the question of the right of alienation, they are entirely based upon the Mitakshara law; but it has been already shown that upon this point the law, as laid down in the Mitakshara, is different from that of the Dyabhaga.

The last case cited is Amrito Lal Bose v. Rajonee Kant Mitter (L. R., 2 I. A., 113: 15 B. L. R., 10). This is a Bengal case, and all that it decides is, that between widows jointly succeeding to their husband's estate, as well as between daughters jointly inheriting their father's property, there is right of survivorship.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the contention that those decisions have laid down the law contrary to our opinion expressed above is not correct.

On the other hand, in Srimati Paddamani Dasi v. Srimati Jagadamba Dasi (6 B. L. R., 134) (which was a case of succession of two daughters), it was held that either of them was entitled to enforce partition, although such partition might not be binding on the reversioners.

[586] There remains to notice the case cited before us of Kathaperumal v. Venkabal (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 194); but with deference to the learned Judges who decided it, it seems to us that their decision was based upon a misapprehension of the Privy Council cases referred to above. The learned Judges were of opinion that according to those decisions there could not be any kind of partition between two widows jointly inheriting their husband's property. We have already shown that the judgments of the Privy Council do not go to that length.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the decisions of the lower Courts are erroneous. We accordingly reverse them, and remand the case to the Munsiff to decide the remaining issues. We think it right to observe here that if a partition be ultimately decreed, it should be effected in such a way as would not be detrimental to the future interests of the reversioners.

Parbutty Dassi.....Plaintiff

versus

Purno Chunder Singh and others.....Defendants.*

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35.—Admission—Statement in decree—Practice of Mofussil Courts.

In a suit for possession of a fishery, the plaintiff sought to put in evidence an admission alleged to have been made in the year 1818 by the defendant's predecessor in title in a written statement in a former suit. The only evidence of the admission was that contained in the decree in the former suit, the ordinary part of which was prefaced with a short statement of the pleadings in the suit. Under the old practice of Mofussil Courts, it was the duty of the Court to enter in the decree an abstract of the pleadings in each case.

Held, that the statement in the decree was evidence of the admission under s. 35 of the Evidence Act (Act I of 1872).

Lekraj Kuar v. Mahpal Singh, (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 744) referred to.

[587] IN this case the plaintiff stated that her late husband purchased a patni mehal, lot Mowgram, at an auction sale for arrears of rent held under the provisions of Act VIII of 1819, on the 14th of May 1874 ; that as the heir and representative of her husband she was entitled to a four annas share of a julkur included in the said patni mehal ; and that from this julkur she had been dispossessed by the defendants. She prayed for a declaration of her right to possession, and that possession be awarded to her. The main issue was whether the julkur was in point of fact included within the patni mehal ; and in support of her case the plaintiff tendered in evidence a "decree in suit No. 617 of 1818, instituted in the Civil Court of Birbhum by No. 2 defendant's predecessor, Boidya Nath Ghose, against the plaintiff's predecessors, patnidars, Enatulla and Ajmatulla Chowdhry, and No. 1 defendant's predecessor, Rashmoni Dasi." This document was drawn up in the manner formerly used in the mofussil, i.e., it contained an abstract of the plaint and written statements of the parties, together with the judgment and the decree proper, and in the abstract given of Rashmoni's defence appeared an admission that the julkur claimed in the present suit belonged to plaintiff's mehal. In reference to this document the Court of First Instance said: "This decree is conclusive evidence between the parties; and even if it was not so, it is a very good piece of evidence as declaring the right of the parties at such a distant date." He then decreed the plaintiff's claim and the defendants appealed. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge said:—

The lower Court has given a decree to the plaintiff, solely relying on a decree No. 617 of 1818, but it does not appear to me to be legally admissible as evidence against the present defendants. In that case one Boidya Nath Ghose, former patnidar of lot Sitahati, was plaintiff, and Enatulla Chowdhry, predecessor in title of the present plaintiff, and Rashmoni Dasi, were defendants. It is said that Rashmoni Dasi then held the property which the defendants now own; hence Rashmoni must be considered to be predecessor in title of the defendants; but, assuming this to be true, it does not appear that the plaintiff's predecessor Enatulla and Rashmoni had any question decided between them in that suit. On the other hand, it appears that they were both in the same category of defendants, and made a common defence. Under such circumstances, the decree cannot be conclusive against the defendants, and under the late Full Bench ruling Gujju Lall v. Patteh Lall (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171), it [588] is no evidence at all against them. It has been argued that the substance of Rashmoni's defence embodied in the decree should at least be accepted as an admission and should be binding on the defendants; but if the plaintiff wanted to use the defence as an admission, she ought to have produced the same in original, and any substance of it given in the decree cannot be accepted as legal evidence.

The Subordinate Judge then reversed the decision of the Court of First Instance. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court on the grounds that the decree of 1818 was binding on the parties, and that, even if not binding, the statement of Rashmoni's defence contained therein was evidence against the defendants in the present case.

Baboo Hem Chunder Banerjee and Baboo Umbica Churn Banerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Mohiny Mohun Roy and Baboo Taruck Nath Palit for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (PRINSEP and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Prinsep, J.—In this case the plaintiff, as representative of her late husband, claims to hold a three annas, eighteen and three-fourth gundahs share in a certain julkur called Noa Bawarkati as appertaining to a patni mehal purchased by her husband at a sale held under Regulation VIII of 1819.

The defendants deny that the disputed julkur appertains to the plaintiff's taluk, and assert that it appertains to Jote Gossain appertaining to Mouzah Narainpore.

The Moonshi decreed the suit. He based his judgment partly on a Civil Court Decree, No. 617 of 1818, and, interpreting it with the light of an Ameen's report in a former case, decided that the plaintiff was entitled to the property, and accordingly gave her a decree.

On appeal the Subordinate Judge decided that that decree could not be admitted in evidence between the parties to the present suit. He then went on to say that even if one of the parties to that suit, namely Rashmoni, could be considered as the predecessor in title of the present defendants, her admission [589] entered in the decree was not admissible in evidence and could only be proved by production of the original. Further, he decided that the Ameen's report in the former case could not be treated as evidence in the present suit.

Against that decision the plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and it has been contended that the Subordinate Judge has committed an error in law in rejecting the decree and admission, and in not taking cognizance of certain other decrees on the record.

The present plaintiff is a purchaser of the taluk for arrears of rent. She therefore holds it free from all encumbrances created by previous talukdars and cannot be bound by any act of theirs. The decrees to which she refers could not be used as evidence against herself; and it seems to us clear that if they could not be used as evidence against her, she cannot use them as evidence against the defendants; but in regard to the point whether the plaintiff was bound to prove the admission by production of the original, we differ from the view taken by the Subordinate Judge. There can be no doubt that production of the original was impossible. If there was any original it was destroyed years and years ago. By s. 35 of the Evidence Act an entry in a public record stating a fact in issue, or relevant fact, and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, is admissible in evidence. In this case the admission in the decrees is no doubt a relevant fact; and the only question for decision is whether it falls within the other portion of s. 35. At the time that these decrees were recorded it was the universal practice in Lower Bengal to write all proceedings on one side of a long roll of paper. This practice is referred to in Circular No. 131, dated 3rd May 1851. Previous to the issue of that Circular the Sudder Dewany of the Lower and Western Provinces issued a Circular on the 12th February 1847, from which it appears that it was the duty of the Court, and indeed had been the practice, to enter in the decree an abstract of all the pleadings. So far there seems no reason to doubt that these entries were made by the officers of the Court in discharge of their official duties. The question as to the effect of s. 35 of the Evidence [590] Act was lately before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Lekraj Kuar v. Mohpal Singh (I. L. R., 5 Cal. 744). In that case the question arose whether a statement made in a settlement rubokari, recorded in the province of Oudh, in which place officers were directed to be guided by the spirit of the Settlement Regulations, but were not bound by them, was admissible in evidence under this section. It was there argued that the precise information in the rubokari was not directed by any particular regulation, and that the settlement records were prepared and attested by subordinate officers and could not be accepted as in any way invalidating the records themselves. But their Lordships of the Privy Council in overruling those objections said as follows: "It is necessary to look at the precise terms of this section, and for the present purpose it may be read: 'an entry in any official record stating a fact in issue, or relevant fact, and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties, is itself a relevant fact.' There can be no doubt that the entries in question supposing them to bear the construction already given to them, state a relevant fact, if not the very fact, in issue, viz., the usage of the Bahrulin Chur. If so, then the entry having stated that relevant fact, the entry itself becomes by force of the section a relevant fact, that is to say, it may be given in evidence as a relevant fact, because, being made by a public officer, it contains an entry of a fact which is relevant." In the present case it is not contended, and indeed could not be contended, that the admission in these decrees is not relevant. Following the words of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee we think that the admission made in these decrees could be proved by the production of the decrees; and that it is not necessary that the plaintiff should be placed in the position of doing what everybody knows is impossible for him to do, namely, to produce the original decrees.

In this view of the case we think that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in saying that so much of the decrees was not admissible as legal evidence. Whether the defendants are bound by the statements of Rashmoni depends on the question whether Rashmoni was their predecessor in title; and this point has not [591] been decided by the Subordinate Judge. If he holds that the defendants do not represent Rashmoni, neither the decrees nor the admission can be admissible against them. On the other hand if he holds that the defendants do represent Rashmoni, then, in our opinion, so much of the decrees as purports to give the statement of Rashmoni is admissible in the present case. The amount of weight to be given to such statement is a matter to be decided by the Court below.

The costs of this appeal to follow the result of the case.

Case remanded.

Sale for arrears of revenue—Revenue-paying estate—Sale of share of an estate—Recorded proprietors—Omission of names of proprietors—Irrregularity—Act XI of 1859, ss. 6, 33.

When a notification of sale of a share in a revenue-paying estate is issued under s. 6, Act XI of 1859, the circumstance that such notification does not contain the names of all the recorded proprietors of the share, but only the name of one of them, does not amount to an irregularity within the meaning of s. 33, Act XI of 1859.

THIS was a suit instituted by the plaintiffs to set aside a sale of a share of an estate of which they were part-owners, which was held by the Collector of Burdwan for arrears of Government revenue due on the share. The Secretary of State for India in Council, the purchaser at the auction sale and the remaining co-sharers of the plaintiff were made defendants. The material facts of the case are as follows :—

(1) That Aima Mungulpore, which bore a sudder jama of Rs. 58-14-5, was recorded in the towzi as estate No. 13-12. (2) That defendants Nos. 8 and 9 had a separate account opened for their share, the revenue payable by them being Rs. 20-12. [592] (3) That the remaining portion of the estate belonged to the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 3 to 7, whose names appear in the towzi as the recorded proprietors, and the sudder jumma payable by them was Rs. 38-2-5. It is this share of the estate which has been sold. (4) That the arrears for which the property was sold were only Rs. 5-3. (5) That the plaintiffs and defendant No. 7 had paid the revenue payable by them. The said amount of Rs. 5-3 was payable by defendants Nos. 3 to 6. (6) That the property sold was worth Rs. 4,000, but it fetched Rs. 1,350 only at the sale. It was alleged by the plaintiffs that the sale was made contrary to the provisions of the sale law, and that, therefore, they had sustained substantial injury. Of the irregularities complained of, the only one material for the purposes of this report, is the following, namely : “ That the notification under s. 6, Act XI of 1859 was defective, inasmuch as it did not give the names of the plaintiffs and of defendants Nos. 3 to 7, who were the recorded proprietors, but the name of one Tulebulla, a dead man, was shewn as the person from whom the arrear was due.”

In his judgment in the case the Subordinate Judge said :—

“ It will be observed that s. 6 of the Act does not require that the name of the defaulter should be inserted in the notification of sale. The notification shall specify the estate or share of an estate to be sold. There is valid reason why the law does not require the name of the defaulter to be specified in the notice. The sale conveys the estate or share of estate in arrear, and not the right, title and interest of the defaulter. The pleader for the plaintiffs referred to the form of the sale certificate, which states the name of the late proprietor, and argues that it was the intention of the Legislaturo to insert the name of the defaulter in the notification of sale. I do not subscribe to this argument. Section 6 of the Act, which lays down the procedure before sale, does not require that the name of the defaulter should be specified. Upon these grounds I do not find it was an omission causing an illegality to vitiate the sale.”

The decree-holder appealed to the District Court. The judgment of the learned Judge on this portion of the case is as follows :—

“ Then the question is whether, when the debt is due from A, if it is notified that it is due from B, is that or is that not an irregularity as contemplated by s. 33 of Act XI of 1859. Now s. 6 rules that the notification shall specify the estate. The Commissioner and the Subordinate Judge hold that when the number, the name of the property, [593] and the sudder jumma were correctly given, it does not matter whether the name of the recorded proprietor was correctly given or not. The question is, is that the law? There is no definition of ‘estate’ in Act XI of 1859, but there is one in Beng. Act VII of 1868, and s. 30 of that Act says : ‘ This act shall be read with and taken as part of Act XI,’ so that the word ‘estate’ in s. 6 of Act XI has been used in the sense in which it has been defined in s. 1 of Beng. Act VII of 1868. That definition runs as follows : The word ‘estate’ means any land, or share in land subject to the payment to Government of an annual sum in respect of which the name of a proprietor is entered on the register, known as the general register of all revenue paying-estates, or in respect of which a separate account may, in pursuance of s. 10 or s. 11 of the said Act XI of 1859, have been opened.' That shows that there are the following elements in an estate: (1) land or share in land; (2) annual sum payable to Government; (3) name of the proprietor as entered in the general register of revenue-paying estates. It is not the land which is the estate. It is not the annual jumma. It is not the name of the recorded proprietor. But it is the combination of all three, which go to form the conception of an estate as used in s. 6 of Act XI of 1859. Even when Beng. Act VII of 1868 was not in force, there is ample evidence in Act XI itself to show that that was the meaning of an estate. There can be no doubt that the words 'estate' and 'share of an estate' have been used in s. 6 in the same sense in which they have been used in s. 28 of the said Act; that section refers to schedule A, which gives the form of the certificate. The said schedule, therefore, must be taken to be part of s. 28. That form shows what an estate is. It says 'the mehal specified below,' and what is the specification that it gives: 'Towzi number, name of mehal, name of the former proprietor, sudder jumma.'" All these four elements constitute the estate. That it should be so will also be clear from a consideration of the very nature of the thing. Let us suppose that A and B hold an estate, each having an 8-anna share. B opens a separate account. It has to be recollected that under the provisions of s. 13, Act XI of 1859, notwithstanding the opening of separate accounts, the separate shares continue to constitute one integral estate. It is, therefore, that the Board of Revenue points out by their rule, which appears at page 158 of the Collection of Board's Rules of 1878, Vol. 1, 'that the separation of shares of an estate held in common or consisting of specific portions of land by the opening of a separate account under ss. 10 and 11, Act XI of 1859, causes no alteration of the revenue roll.' Thus when B has caused a separate account to be opened with respect to his 8-anna share both A and B will have the same number, the same name of the property and the same sudder jumma in the 8-anna share of each. Those elements could not indicate whose estate it is. The name A or B is the only distinctive feature. I hold, therefore, that the notification under s. 6 of Act XI [594] would be defective without the name of the recorded proprietor, but in the case now under consideration, if the statement of the plaintiffs is true, the notification was not only defective, but misleading. Here the name of the recorded proprietor was not admitted, but the name of a wrong man, who had no existence, was shown. Now the arrear due was Rs. 5-3 only; the property is worth at least Rs. 1,350. There is no suggestion that the property has been purchased for some one of the several co-sharers. The presumption under the circumstances, is, that Peari Mohun Mookerjee, or any one of the other sharers who had paid their share of the revenue, had not come to know that the sale notification had been issued. When it has not been alleged that the plaintiffs were aware of the issue of the sale notification, it is the more necessary to examine very critically whether everything required by law was duly done. Section 8 of Beng. Act VII of 1868 precludes us from inquiring whether the most effective mode of proclamation, viz., that directed to be made at the Cutcherry of the defaulter was made or not, but it is quite open to us to inquire whether the notification under s. 6 of Act XI was properly made or not. It is contended by the pleader for the purchaser that there is nothing on the record, to show what the notification was. Now the certificate granted is presumptive evidence of the contents of the notification so far as the description of the estate is concerned, nevertheless as the case must go before the first Court, and as the first Court decided the case without entering into the evidence, the point may be definitely settled. I remand the case under s. 566* of the Civil Procedure Code, for a finding on each of the following issues:—First: ‘Did the notification under s. 6, Act XI of 1859, issued with respect to the property in dispute, correctly describe the name of the proprietor as it then stood in the register known as the general register of all revenue-paying estates.’ If that issue is found in favour of the plaintiffs, then, secondly, have the plaintiffs sustained substantial injury in consequence of such irregularity.

On the first of the above issues, it was found that at the time the notification of sale was issued, the recorded proprietors were Talehulla and eight others, and that the name of Talehulla alone appeared in the notification of sale; but the Judge of the Court of First Instance held that it was not proved “that owing to the omission in inserting the names of all the proprietors, the estate was sold for an inadequate price.” On appeal, the District Judge held that there being the defective notification and the substantial injury, he was justified in assuming that the injury was caused by the defective notification, there being no evidence to show it could be caused by anything else—Goppee Nauth Dobey v. Roy [595] Luchmeeput Singh Bahadur (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 542). The learned Judge then reversed the judgment of the Court below, and set aside the sale. The Secretary of State and the purchaser appealed to the High Court on the ground “that the Appellate Court clearly misunderstood the meaning of s. 6, Act XI of 1859, by holding that the sale notification was bad for not containing the names of all the recorded proprietors in it.”

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER, J., Offg. C.J., and MACLEAN, J.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—This is a suit to set aside a revenue sale of the share of an estate called Aima Mungulpore bearing Towzi No. 1312.

The ground upon which the lower Appellate Court has set aside the sale is that the sale notification under s. 6, Act XI of 1859, did not contain the names of all the recorded proprietors of this share, but only of one of them, Talehulla. Section 6 requires that a notification should be issued in the language of the district specifying the estates or shares of estates which are to be sold. The District Judge is of opinion that unless the names of all the recorded proprietors are given, an estate, or share of an estate, cannot be considered to be specified within the meaning of s. 6. We are unable to agree in this view of the law. The section distinctly says that it is the estate or the share of an estate which is to be specified. If it were the intention of the Legislature that the names of the recorded proprietors should be also inserted, the section would have contained a provision to that effect in distinct words.

In this case it is not shown that the share of the estate which was sold was not properly specified. All that has been established in the lower Court

* [Sec. 566:—If the Court against whose decree the appeal is made has omitted to frame or try any issue, or to determine any question of fact, which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits, and the evidence upon the record is not sufficient to enable the Appellate Court to determine such issue or question, the Appellate Court may frame issues for trial and may refer the same for trial to the Court against whose decree the appeal is made, and in such case shall direct such

Court to take the additional evidence required, and such Court shall proceed to try such issue, and shall return to the Appellate Court its finding thereon together with the evidence.]

is that instead of the names of all the recorded proprietors being mentioned in the sale notification, the name of only one of them, namely Talebulla, was inserted. As the [596] section in question does not require the names of the recorded proprietors to be mentioned in the notification, the mistake of not inserting the names of all the recorded proprietors is not an irregularity within the meaning of that section.

We, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs.

In Appeal No. 865, the purchaser is the appellant. We are of opinion that the purchaser might have joined the Government in preferring an appeal. We, therefore, direct that the plaintiffs will pay to the defendants, namely, the Secretary of State for India and the purchaser Purnu Chunder Singh, only one set of costs throughout the litigation.

Appeal allowed.

Bengal Act VIII of 1869, s. 102—Practice—Appeal—Second Appeal.

In a suit for arrears of rent and ejectment the right of appeal is taken away by s. 102, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, only when it is shown that the amount sued for and the value of the property claimed is less than Rs 100. Unless that fact appears, either from the finding of the District Judge or elsewhere upon the proceedings, the High Court has no right to draw any inference to that effect.

THIS was a suit for arrears of rent amounting to Rs. 16-1-3, and for ejectment. The defence was, amongst other things, that the defendant held more lands than the plaintiff admitted in his plaint; that the annual jumma of the defendant's land was Rs. 5-1 of which the plaintiff's share was Rs. 2-8-6; that the defendant had paid to the plaintiff the rent of 1284 F. S.; and that he had deposited in Court the rent for the years 1285 F. S. and 1286 F. S. The Court of First Instance gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal, the defendant urged that the plaintiff, being a co-sharer, was not entitled to eject the defendant. The District Judge overruled the objections and dismissed the appeal. The defendant ap-[597]pealed on the ground "that the plaintiff being only a part-owner of the lands in suit, his prayer for ejectment under section 52 of the Rent Act should have been rejected."

The case came before MITTER, J. (Offg. C. J.), and NORRIS, J., by whom it was referred to a Full Bench with the following remarks :—

Mitter, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was brought for the recovery of arrears of rent, and for ejectment of the defendant, appellant. It is admitted that the plaintiff is the owner of a fractional share of the estate within which the defendant's tenure is situated; it is also admitted that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain a separate suit for the rent of his share. One of the questions raised in the defence was, that the plaintiff being the owner only of a fractional share of the estate in which the defendant's tenure is situated, is not entitled to a decree for ejectment under s. 52 of the Rent Act. The lower Courts are of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for ejectment.

We cannot agree with the lower Courts in this view of the law. The point in question has been set at rest by authority, and we will only refer to the last case on the subject—Reasut Hossein v. Chorwar Singh (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 470). The same view of the law was taken in another decision—Alum Manjee v. Ashad Ali (16 W. R., 138). We are therefore clearly of opinion that the decree for ejectment passed in this case cannot be sustained.

But the learned pleader for the respondent has taken a preliminary objection to the hearing of this appeal. The objection is based on the provisions of s. 102 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869. That section says: "Nothing in this Act contained shall be deemed to confer any power of appeal in any suit tried and decided by a District Judge originally or in appeal, if the amount sued for, or the value of the property claimed, does not exceed one hundred rupees." In this case the rent claimed was Rs. 16-1-3, but it does not appear what was the value of the defendant's interest in the land from which it was sought to eject him.

In our opinion, unless it can be shown that the value of that interest and also the amount of rent sued for do not exceed [598] Rs. 100, the right of second appeal is not taken away under that section; but this view of the law is in conflict with a decision of this Court in Parbutty Churn Sen v. Shaik Monduri (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 594). We, therefore, refer the following question to the decision of a Full Bench, whether, under the circumstances stated above, a second appeal lies to this Court?

Baboo Bussunto Coomar Bose for the Appellant.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Full Bench on the point referred was delivered by Garth, C. J.—It seems to us that the view taken by the learned Judges who referred this case is correct. Prima facie in a suit of this kind the appellant is entitled to a second appeal. The question is, whether that right is taken away by s. 102 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869? That section only applies where the amount sued for, or the value of the property claimed, does not exceed Rs. 100.

In this case there is nothing to show that the value of the property claimed does not exceed Rs. 100; and unless that fact does appear, either from the finding of the lower Court, or elsewhere upon the proceedings, it seems to us that we have no right (more especially as we are only empowered here to deal with points of law) to draw any inference to that effect.

We are, therefore, of opinion, that this Court has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal; and as the Division Bench has already decided that the lower Courts were wrong in decreeing the ejectment, we think that the judgment should be modified accordingly, and that the defendant should be allowed his costs of appeal in all the Courts, so far as they relate to that point.

Appeal allowed.

[599] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 4th January, 1883.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN AND MR. JUSTICE O'KINEALY.

In the matter of the Petition of Imam Buksh.

Imam Buksh

Thacko Bibee.*

Mahomedan Law—Minor—Guardian of property—Certificate of guardianship.

Under the Mahomedan law the brother of the mother of a female minor, whose parents are dead, is entitled, in preference to a mere stranger, to the guardianship of the property of the minor, unless it be shown that he is in some way unfit to take charge of such property.

THE facts of this case are thus stated in the judgment appealed from: "According to the evidence, and to the undisputed statement of the several parties, the minor, her father and mother having predeceased her, became the grantee under a heba, or deed of gift, from Nizamudin, her paternal grandfather, of a certain estate. On the death of that paternal grandfather, the applicant Imam Buksh came to Court under Act XL of 1858 for a certificate to administer the minor's estate. This application is opposed by the widow of Nizamudin, the co-wife of the minor's paternal grandmother. She, Thacko Bibee, repudiates the alleged hibbanamah, and claims to be herself sole heir to the estate of Nizamudin, to the exclusion of the minor, on the ground that the latter is excluded by the fact that her father, who would otherwise have been one of Nizamudin's heirs, predeceased him. The applicant Imam Buksh proposes that the female guardian of the minor's person shall be his wife. The Collector interposes, and objects to the application of Imam Buksh on the ground that he, being in the direct succession to the minor, is not a fit person to administer her estate, or to have charge through his wife, of her person, and the Collector has recommended a third person, a respectable Mahomedan lady, as both administratrix and guardian." The District Judge then appointed the lady recommended by the Collector, and dismissed the application of Imam Buksh. The latter appealed to the High [600] Court, on the ground that the learned

Mr. Twidale and Moonshee Serajul Islam for the Appellant.

Baboo Unnoda Prosad Banerjee and Baboo Amarendro Nath Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (MACLEAN and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by Maclean, J.—The appellant before us applied to the District Court of the 24-Pergunnahs for a certificate of administration, under Act XL of 1858, to the property of an infant, Chota Bari Bibee, granddaughter of one Nizamudin. The petitioner's position is that of a brother of the infant's deceased mother.

There appears to be some opposition on the part of one Thacko Bibee, widow of Nizamudin; but her case does not affect the question before us. She disputes the title of the infant to the property of Nizamudin. That question, of course, has to be decided elsewhere.

The Collector, we are informed, was the first who moved the Civil Court to appoint a guardian for the minor, and he also appears to have suggested to the Judge the appointment of a lady called Kulsoom Bibee, who is in no way connected with the minor by any relationship. The District Judge, adopting certain objections made by the Collector to the appointment of the appellant, has refused him a certificate, and granted one to the Collector's nominee, Kulsoom Bibee. Hence this appeal.

The law in this matter is perfectly clear, that is, if any person establishes a right by virtue of a will or deed to take charge of the property of a minor, that person shall have a certificate of administration. There being no person so entitled, or any person so entitled being unwilling to undertake the trust, it is in the discretion of the Court to entrust any near relative of the minor, who is willing to take up the trust, with the charge of the property. Failing the person who is entitled to a certificate, and failing any near relative who is willing and fit to undertake the trust, the Court may make other [601] provisions. Therefore, the only question we have to consider is, has it been shown that Imam Buksh, who is undoubtedly a near relative, is unfit to take charge of the property of the minor. The only ground of unfitness suggested is that he is in the direct succession to the minor. That is an objection which, of course, might apply in other cases, such as to a father who claims the custody or charge of the property of a son or daughter. That is not, in our opinion, a sufficient ground for refusing a certificate to the charge of the property. In fact, there may be cases in which some one interested in the succession is the very best person to defend the minor's interests. However, in the present case, we think that the alleged disqualification imputed to Imam Buksh is not sufficient to deprive him of the certificate he asks for. We have no doubt that the lady named by the Collector is in every way suitable, but we do not think that her claim should have precedence over that of the minor's mother's brother. We, therefore, direct that the certificates issued to Kulsoom Bibee be re-called, and a fresh certificate of administration issued to Imam Buksh.

With reference to the guardianship of the minor's person and maintenance, it is not necessary for us to make any order here as we are not in a position to state who should be the proper guardian of her person. We direct the District Judge to make the necessary orders.

The appellant is entitled to his costs, which he will recover from the Collector and Kulsoom Bibee.

Appeal allowed.

*Suit to obtain possession of land sold in execution of a decree—Possession,

Subsequent suit for possession of land sold in execution of decree.*

In execution of a decree certain land belonging to the judgment-debtor was sold; subsequently the auction-purchaser, who had not got possession, re-sold the land to a third party and gave him the certificate. The latter then applied to the Court to be put into possession, but having failed in those proceedings, owing to some irregularity in the description of the boundaries of the property, he instituted a regular suit against the judgment-debtor to obtain possession. On a plea that such suit would not lie as the plaintiff could have got possession in the miscellaneous proceedings, Held, that having regard to the provisions of Art. 138,† of Sch. II, of Act XV of 1877 and of s. 11 of Act XIV of 1882 such suit was maintainable.

THIS was a suit brought to obtain possession of one powa of land with some thatched huts on it. The plaintiff stated in his plaint that the land in question had previously belonged to the defendant, but that it had been sold, on the 21st December 1878, in execution of a decree passed against him in the Sudder Munsif's Court, and purchased at such sale by one Etbar Miyah, who subsequently duly obtained a certificate. Etbar Miyah subsequently sold the land and huts to the plaintiff under a Kohala, dated the 5th July 1879, and the plaintiff thereupon filed a petition for the purpose of getting possession of the land from the defendant. In the proceedings held in consequence of that petition the plaintiff failed to get possession, and he now stated that the reason why he had so failed was that the peon could not put him in possession owing to the boundaries given in the purwana not corresponding with the actual boundaries of the land in question; consequently, the defendant having opposed him in taking possession he brought this suit to compel him to give up the land.

[603] The defendant in his written statement pleaded that in the miscellaneous proceedings held upon the plaintiff's petition, Ethar Miyah's purchase had been held to be irregular, and that the plaintiff's petition had been rejected on the ground that he could not obtain possession by virtue of that purchase; that the plaintiff had every means of obtaining possession in those proceedings; and that therefore the present suit would not lie. He also denied that the land now sought to be recovered was identical with that sold at the execution sale.

The first Court found that the land was the same as that referred to in the sale certificate, and that the suit would lie, and consequently gave the plaintiff a decree, and this was confirmed on appeal by the lower Appellate Court.

In that Court the defendant contended that the suit was barred under Art. 13, Sch. II, Act XV of 1877, and that the only remedy open to an auction-purchaser or his representative, which the plaintiff in this case was, was that provided by s. 318 of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendant now preferred a special appeal to the High Court.

The Judgment of the Court (MCDONELL and TOTTENHAM, JJ.) was delivered by McDonell, J.—We fail to see any error of law in the decision of the lower Appellate Court. It has been distinctly found that the land now claimed was without doubt the land referred to in the sale certificate. The only point raised before us in second appeal, which requires consideration, is whether the suit is maintainable; but reading Art. 138 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act with s. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, we hold that there is no reason why the present suit should not be maintained. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MR. JUSTICE NORRIS.

The Oriental Bank Corporation and others
versus
Gobind Lall Seal and others.

Practice - Leave to sue—Suit by one creditor on behalf of others—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), s. 30.

A suit by one or more creditors on behalf of other creditors cannot be entertained without the leave of the Court being obtained for its institution. Such leave cannot be granted at the hearing.

THIS was a suit instituted by the Oriental Bank Corporation and the Delhi and London Bank "on behalf of themselves and all other, the unsatisfied creditors of one Heera Lall Seal, deceased," for the construction of a certain indenture of settlement, dated the 21st February 1848, by which one Mutty Lall Seal, the father of Heera Lall Seal, purported to settle certain property in trust for the members of his family, and for a declaration that Heera Lall Seal, who died intestate on the 17th March 1876, was at the time of his death entitled to a one-fifth share in the property comprised therein, and that his representatives were at the time of the institution of the present suit entitled to such property. On the 15th of May 1876 a suit was instituted for the administration of Heera Lall Seal's estate. A decree for an account was made, and on the account being taken it appeared that there were not assets sufficient to enable all the creditors to be paid in full. The present suit was made supplemental to the administration suit. No leave had been granted by the Court at the institution of the suit to the plaintiff Banks to sue on behalf of the other creditors.

The defendant Gobind Lall Seal in his written statement pleaded that no leave to sue had been granted.

Mr. Pugh, Mr. Hill, Mr. Banerjee, Mr. Allen and Mr. Stokoe for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Palit and Mr. Sale for the Defendant Gobind Lall Seal.

The Advocate-General (Mr. G. C. Paul), Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Branson, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Evans, Mr. T. A. Apcar, Mr. Gasper, [806] Mr. Trevelyan, Mr. Stephen, and Mr. O'Kinealy for other Defendants.

Mr. Palit took the preliminary objection that the suit could not proceed as no leave to sue had been granted under s. 30 of Act X of 1877. He contended that such a suit as the present one was analogous to a suit under the Religious Endowments Act XX of 1863, under which it had been held that the leave of the Court was necessary in order to the institution of a suit regarding endowed property by some of the persons interested in it—Dhurrum Singh v. Kissen Singh (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 767); Jan Ali v. Ram Nath Mundul (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 32). He also referred to Powell v. Wright (7 Beav., 444).

Mr. Pugh, for the plaintiffs, contended that the cases under the Religious Endowment Act could not apply to a creditor's suit; that the word "parties" in s. 30 meant not persons in the position of creditors, but persons without whose presence on the record the suit would be defective, Story on Eq. Pleading, p. 107 ; and that leave could be given nunc pro tunc.

Norris, J.—The facts of this case are shortly as follows :—One Heera Lall Seal died intestate on 17th March 1876, and his estate is now being administered by the Court. The accounts taken in the administration suit do not disclose assets sufficient to pay all the creditors in full, and this suit has been brought by the plaintiff Banks, in the nature of a supplemental suit to the original administration suit, with the view of obtaining a declaration that Heera Lall Seal was at the date of his death entitled to a one-fifth share in the property comprised in a certain Indenture of Settlement made by his father Mutty Lall Seal, and dated 21st February 1848, and that his (Heera Lall's) representatives in estate are now, as such and subject to the liquidation of Heera Lall's debts, entitled to the said one-fifth share, thus seeking to make available a very considerable estate for distribution amongst the general body of creditors.

The suit purports to be brought by the plaintiffs "on behalf of themselves and all the other unsatisfied creditors of Heera Lall Seal, deceased."

[606] It is contended by Mr. Palit, who appears for the first defendant, that the suit cannot be entertained, inasmuch as the provisions of s. 30 of the Civil Procedure Code have not been complied with.

That section reads thus : "Where there are numerous parties having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such parties may, with the permission of the Court, sue or be sued, or may defend in such suit, on behalf of all parties so interested, but the Court shall in such case give, at the plaintiff's expense, notice of the institution of such suit to all such parties either by personal service or (if from the number of parties or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable) then by public advertisement, as the Court in each case may direct."

Mr. Pugh for the plaintiffs admits that no such permission has been obtained, and argues that it was unnecessary. "Parties," says Mr. Pugh, "does not mean persons in the position of creditors, but means only parties necessary to the suit, without whose presence on the record the suit would be defective."

I am unable to put so limited a construction upon the word "parties." I think it means "persons." It appears to me that the provisions of the section would be unintelligible unless the word received that meaning.

The section appears to be taken from Rule 9, Order XVI of the rules and orders made under the provisions of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1875. That rule says : "Where there are numerous parties having the same interest in one action, one or more of such parties may sue or be sued, or may be authorised by the Court to defend in such action, on behalf or for the benefit of all parties so interested." The result of this rule was to give legislative sanction to the practice which had long obtained in the Court of Chancery ; but there is this distinction between the rule and s. 30: the former contains no provision requiring the permission of the Court, nor any provision as to notice. The provision requiring the authority of the Court for such proceeding, and the clause "but the Court shall give, etc.," to "may direct" are important amendments and certainly necessary in this country, without them many a man [607] might be concluded by a suit of which he never may have heard (Broughton's Civil Procedure Code, 133).

Mr. Palit in support of his argument referred to the case of Jan Ali v. Ram Nath Mundul (1. L. R., 8 Cal., 32) decided by an Appellate Bench of this Court, and though I am not prepared to say that I should consider every judgment of an Appellate Bench binding upon me when sitting on the Original Side, yet every such judgment should receive respectful consideration and careful attention, and should be followed unless I am very clearly of opinion that the conclusion arrived at is an erroneous one.

In that case a deed of wuqf had been executed making an endowment of certain land, the profits whereof were to be appropriated to the maintenance of a mosque. The defendant No. 1 was appointed Mutawalli under the deed of wuqf; he borrowed Rs. 575 from defendant No. 2, giving, by way of security, a mortgage of part of the endowed property; he subsequently borrowed Rs. 650 from defendant No. 3, and concluded an ijara settlement with him; defendant No. 2 brought a suit upon the mortgage bond, obtained a decree, took out execution, and brought to sale the endowed property comprised in the mortgage which defendant No. 3 purchased. The plaintiffs, who were followers of the Mussulman religion living in the village where the mosque was situated, alleging a right and interest in protecting the masjid, filed a plaint asking for declarations that the property mortgaged to defendant No. 2 was wuqf property, that the auction-purchase thereof made by defendant No. 3 and the ijara and mortgage were invalid; and that another mutawalli might be appointed. PRINSEP, J., after dealing with various points, which it is not necessary here to notice, says at page 40: "We now come to deal with the other prayers in the plaint, which do not fall within the provisions of s. 14 of the Religious Endowments Act. These prayers are that the property mentioned in the schedule to the plaint may be declared to be wuqf; that the mortgage and the ijara and the sale under the mortgage may be set aside; and that a competent person may be appointed by the Court as mutawalli. Now, so far as regards these prayers we think that the plaintiffs were not authorized to institute this suit by reason of their having an interest created [608] by their being followers of the Moslem religion, and living in the vicinity of the mosque, and being in the habit of attending the masjid. That interest is common to them with all the Mahomedan residents in the vicinity, and we think that this is a case which falls within the provisions of s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It may be quite possible that if these plaintiffs had applied to the Court under the provisions of s. 30, they would have obtained permission to institute this suit, but not having obtained that permission, they certainly were not entitled to institute this suit."

I cannot see any distinction between the position of the plaintiffs in that case and that of the plaintiffs in this suit. "The other unsatisfied creditors of Heeralal deceased" appear to me to correspond with "all the Mahomedan residents in the vicinity" mentioned by PRINSEP, J.

I am therefore of opinion that Mr. Palit's objection is a valid one, and that the suit cannot proceed.

I have now to consider what I ought to do—whether to dismiss the suit or to yield to Mr. Pugh's application to grant permission for its institution nunc pro tunc, and to adjourn the hearing until the requisite notices have been given. I am anxious not to dismiss the suit after so much expense has been incurred, but I do not think I have the power to grant permission at this stage. I would do so if I thought I had the power. I must therefore dismiss the suit with costs to be based on scale No. 2. Mr. Pugh applies for leave to bring a fresh suit on the same subject-matter which I readily grant.

Suit dismissed.

The 14th December, 1882.

Landlord and Tenant—Cultivation—Changing character of lands— Forfeiture—Mandatory injunction.

Where a tenant has been guilty of a breach of duty in the use of his land, such as making a tank in it, building on it improperly, or changing the character of the cultivation, such conduct does not necessarily operate as a forfeiture so as to render the tenant liable to ejectment.

The tenant of an agricultural holding planted his jote with mango trees to the knowledge, but without the consent, of his landlord, thus changing the character of the land. More than three years afterwards the landlord sued for a mandatory injunction to have the mango trees removed.

Held, that having stood by for more than three years and allowed the tenant to spend his labour and capital upon the land without taking any action in the matter, the landlord was not entitled to a mandatory injunction.

THIS was an action for a mandatory injunction and for ejectment. The plaintiffs stated that in 1281 F. S. (1874-1875) they lot to the defendants certain lands for the purpose of tillage and cultivation of crops; that the defendants, without the permission of the plaintiffs, enclosed the land and planted mango grafts thereon; "that the planting of the grafts has altered the nature of the land, and in future when the grafts will be fully grown and shady, the lands in the vicinity surrounding will suffer loss in their produce, and the plaintiffs will sustain injury." They then prayed for a mandatory injunction to have the trees uprooted and for possession of the land. The defendants denied that they had been served with any notice to quit—Rajendronath Mukhopadhyaya v. Bassider Ruhman Khondkhar (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 146); they alleged that the garden had [610] been planted more than twelve years previous to the institution of the suit; and they also insisted that any relief based on the footing of breach of contract was barred by the three years rule of limitation.

The Court of First Instance decreed the plaintiffs' claim in full, citing Lal Sahoo v. Deo Narain Singh (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 781). On appeal the Subordinate Judge disallowed the prayer for ejectment on the ground that no notice to quit had been given. He found that the mango trees had, to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, but without their consent, been planted more than three years before the institution of the suit; and he held that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by limitation, under the provisions of s. 27, Beng. Act VIII of 1869—Kali Komul Mozumdar v. Shib Sahai Sukul (3 B. L. R. ap. 47; 11 W. R., 452); Mahi Sahu v. Forbes (B. L. R., Sup. Vol. 500: 6 W. R., Act X Rul., 61). He, therefore, reversed the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court on the grounds that: (1) no notice to quit was required; (2) that s. 27 of Beng. Act VIII of 1869 did not apply to the case; (3) that at any rate the injunction should have been granted.

Baboo Abinash Chunder Banerjee for the Appellants.

Baboo Saligram Singh for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by

Wilson, J.—We think that this appeal should be dismissed. Two points have been discussed before us: First, whether the Judge in the lower Appellate Court was right or not in overruling so much of the decree of the Court of First Instance as granted to the plaintiffs a decree evicting the defendants. As to that we feel no hesitation; no authority has been cited to us, nor any reasoning satisfactory to our minds tending to show that where a tenant has been guilty of a breach of duty in the use of his land, such as making a tank in it, building on it improperly, or changing the character of the cultivation, this operates necessarily as a forfeiture and renders him liable to be evicted. On this point, therefore, we [611] fully agree with the lower Appellate Court. The second question is one of much greater difficulty, and that is whether the lower court, ought not at the same time to have given them a decree granting an injunction against the future use of the land by the defendants in the way objected to by the plaintiffs. Now it appears to us quite clear that the learned pleader for the plaintiffs (appellants) has established the proposition that what was done by the defendants was a wrong for which a remedy is to be found in law. A tenant has not the right to alter the character of the land which he holds in such a way as to permanently injure the interest of the landlord in that land; and on the finding in this case it must be taken that the tenants, the defendants in this case, have done so. A suit for damages would, therefore, undoubtedly lie, but this is not what is asked for in this case. What is asked for is an injunction to compel the defendants to uproot the trees they have planted upon the land. Now, a remedy by injunction is no doubt a useful, but it is at the same time a very strong remedy, and one not ordinarily granted where any other remedy is fairly open to the applicant, or where the conduct of the the parties has been such as to make it a harsh remedy to give in a particular case. The Legislature have expressed their view upon the matter in s. 56 of the Specific Relief Act, which is one of those dealing specifically with injunctions, and among the conditions there laid down it is enacted that an injunction cannot be granted when equally "efficacious relief can certainly be obtained by any other usual mode of proceeding," and "when the conduct of the applicant or his agents has been such as to disentitle him to the assistance of the Court." Now, one way in which an applicant may disentitle himself to the assistance of the Court, is, if he has stood by for a considerable time and allowed the person, against whom he applies, to go on with his work, and lay out his money and labour upon the land without any objection, and only applies to the Court after allowing all this to go on for some time. We think it has been sufficiently found that that is what has taken place here. The plaintiffs allege in their plaint that the cause of action arose in Kartick 1286, when the plaintiffs were informed that the land had been used as complained of by the defendants. An issue was framed upon this point, the second [612] the issue on the merits, viz., "whether or not the plaintiffs had knowledge and cognizance of the planting of the grafts when they were so planted." Now what the lower Appellate Court while reversing so much of the decree of the Court of First Instance as declared the plaintiffs' title to evict, has found is this: the Subordinate Judge says, first:—

"The Munsiff, believing the plaintiffs and his putwary, has held that the mango trees were planted in 1285 and 1286 Fasli but I do not believe them. The Munsif has made a local enquiry and has himself found that the disputed trees are from 4½ cubits to 6 cubits in height, and I think that according to the natural law they must have been planted more than three years before the suit, if not before;" and he says: "I cannot agree with the Munsif in thinking that they were planted in 1285 and 1286;" and later on he says: "The plaintiffs state that their cause of action arose in Kartick 1286 Fasli, when they became aware of the wrongful acts of the defendants, but I do not believe that story, and it was obviously made to avoid limitation. It is contended that the uprooting of the trees may be done legally, although the prayer of ejectment be not granted; but I think that when the plaintiffs and their putwary acquiesced in the defendants' planting the trees and allowed their claim of ejectment to be barred, they should not be now allowed to have the trees uprooted. I do not believe, however, that the trees were planted with the zamindar's consent." This appears to us to amount to a finding that the plaintiffs, at the time when the trees were planted, were aware of the fact, and that they stood by for more than three years—how much more does not appear—and allowed the defendants to spend their labour and capital upon the land without taking any action in the matter. That appears to us to be a sufficient reason why no injunction should issue in the case. These are the only two points discussed before us. There is no claim for damages in the suit. For these reasons this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 32, cl. 6—Horoscope.

In a suit to recover possession of immoveable property the plaintiff tendered in evidence horoscope which he said had been given to him by his mother and had been seen by members of his family and used on the occasion of his marriage. He was unable to say by whom the horoscope, or an endorsement on it, which purported to state what his name was, had been written. Held, that the horoscope was not admissible under s. 32, cl. 6 of the Evidence Act.

THESE two suits were instituted by the plaintiff to recover possession of certain immoveable property. The defence was, that the plaintiff was illegitimate. At the hearing the plaintiff tendered in evidence a horoscope. He stated that the horoscope had been given to him by his mother, Sibsoondery Dasee; that it had been used at the time of his marriage; and that it had been seen by certain members of his family. He was unable to say by whom the horoscope, or by whom an endorsement on it, which purported to state what his name was, had been written.

Mr. Kennedy (for the Plaintiff).—The horoscope was brought to the notice of the family, and acted on at the time of the plaintiff's marriage. This comes within the class of cases, where entries in family bibles, and so forth, are admitted in evidence in questions of pedigree, Evidence Act, s. 32, cl. 6. The statement is that he is the legitimate son of Sibsoondery. [NORRIS, J.—There is no evidence to show by whose instructions the horoscope was prepared; it might have been under the directions of the mother anxious to prove the legitimacy of her child.] So might an entry in a family bible. This document was seen by, and acted on by other members of the family, who had an interest in proving that the plaintiff was illegitimate, and it has come out of proper custody.

Mr. Phillips (for the Defendants).—The document does not come within s. 32, cl. 6 of the Evidence Act. "Other thing" must be of [614] the same kind, as a family pedigree, tombstone, or family portrait. It must be something which is palpable and open to all the world. This is not a document public to all the family. It is a private document. Entries in a family bible are open to all the family. The horoscope does not relate to family affairs. The documents which are admissible in questions of pedigree are admitted because of the security derived from the general knowledge of the family. The section is not intended to relieve a person who is alive from producing the best evidence.

Norris, J.—I am of opinion that this document is not admissible in evidence. It is tendered as being admissible under s. 32, cl. 6 of the Evidence Act. That sub-section makes a statement admissible when it "relates to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption between persons deceased, and is made in any will or deed relating to the affairs of the family to which any such deceased person belonged, or in any family pedigree, or upon any tombstone, family portrait, or other thing on which such statements are usually made, and when such statement was made before the question in dispute was raised." The document tendered is not a statement relating "to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption, between persons deceased." It only purports on the face of it to be a statement of relationship between a deceased person and a living person. I do not think that s. 32 embraces such a case. It is not suggested that the document is a will or deed relating to the affairs of the family. It is tendered as a statement relating to the parentage of a person who is alive. Then it is said it is a statement in the nature of a family pedigree. But I am of opinion that it does not come within those words in the sub-section. But there is another objection to the admissibility of the document which is fatal. Section 32 says that "statements written or verbal, of relevant facts made by a person who is dead, or who cannot be found, or who has become incapable of giving evidence, or whose attendance cannot be procured without an amount of delay or expense, which, under the circumstances of the case, appears to the Court unreasonable," may be admitted in certain cases. On the plaintiff's evidence it appears that he does not know who wrote the horoscope, or the endorsement on it, and therefore cannot say whether the [615] writer "is dead, or cannot be found, or became incapable of giving evidence." I am therefore of opinion that the document is inadmissible."

Interest—Penal clause in contract—Increased interest on default of payment—Contract Act IX of 1872 s. 74.

A mortgage bond contained a proviso that in case of default in payment of the principal sum, with interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem on a certain day, interest should be paid at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 2925 of 1881, against the Decree of Baboo Ram Persad Roy, Subordinate Judge of Shahabad, dated the 21st September 1881, modifying the decree of Baboo Lal Gopal Sen, second Munsif of Arrah, dated the 9th January 1880.

Held, that the stipulation to pay increased interest must be construed as a penal clause.

Baboo AUBINASH CHUNDER BANERJEE for the Appellants.

Baboo HURI MOHAN CHUCKERBUTTY and Baboo PRAN NATH PUNDIT for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (WILSON and FIELD, JJ.) which was delivered by

Wilson, J.—We think that the Subordinate Judge has decided this case rightly. He says: "I am of opinion that the stipulation made as to the payment of interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from the time of the execution of the bond, in case of default of repayment of the loan in time, was laid down in the deed as a check upon the debtor, and it should undoubtedly be held as a penal clause."

Several cases were cited to us in which full effect has been [616] given to an agreement, that if money is not paid at the due date it shall from that time bear an increased rate of interest—Boolakkee Lall v. Radha Singh (22 W. R., 223); Mackintosh v. Wingrove (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 137).

The former of these cases probably dealt with a document executed before the Contract Act; but however that may be such cases differ materially from the present. In them the agreement to pay an increased rate of interest from a future day may well be regarded as a substantive part of the contract, not as penalty for its breach; but, where, as here, an increased rate of interest from the date of the bond is made payable on default, we cannot regard it in any other light than as a sum named in the contract to be paid in case of breach within the meaning of s. 74* of the Contract Act.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

—Acknowledgment of title of mortgagor or of his right to redeem.*

An acknowledgment to be within the meaning of Art. 148, | Sch. II, Act IX of 1871 must be an acknowledgment of a present existing title in the mortgagor.

An acknowledgment of the original making of the mortgage deed and of possession having been taken under it, coupled with the allegation of the subsequent execution of two other deeds practically superseding the mortgage and altering the relation of the parties, contained in a written statement filed previous to the expiry of the 60 years allowed, is not a sufficient acknowledgment within the meaning of that Article, so as to prevent limitation from operating.

IN this suit the plaintiff sought to redeem a mortgage of immoveable property which was executed on July 15th, 1815. The [617] suit was instituted on December 18th, 1879, and the first Court dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation. the case out of the provisions of Art. 148,* Sch. II of Act IX of 1871 (the Limitation Act), and the sole question argued was, whether that acknowledgment was sufficient to prevent the suit from being barred.

Baboo Aubinash Chunder Banerjee for the Appellant.

Baboo Taruck Nath Palit for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by

Wilson, J.—We entertain no doubt about this case, and we agree with the view taken by the Court below. The suit is a suit to redeem a mortgage, and the question is whether the suit is barred by limitation. There is no question that this depends upon the terms of the Limitation Act of 1871. Now, under Art. 148 of the second schedule to that Act, a suit must be brought within “sixty years from the date of the mortgage, unless where an acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagor or of his right of redemption has, before the expiration of the prescribed period, been made in writing, signed by the mortgagee, or some person claiming under him, and in such case, the date of the acknowledgment.” In this case, the sixty years elapsed while the Act of 1871 was the governing Act, and the suit is therefore barred unless there is a sufficient acknowledgment to save it from the operation of limitation. The acknowledgment relied upon is contained in the written statement filed by the present defendants in August 1872, within sixty years from the making of the mortgage in the suit by the present plaintiff or those under whom he claims, and the acknowledgment runs in these words: “The land in dispute, according to the deed of zuripeshgi, dated 15th July 1815, for Rs. 425, executed by Ramrutton Das, devolved into the possession of Baboo Gokool Chund. Baboo Gokool Chund [618] all along used to pay Rs. 2 as the right of the lessor. After the death of Ramrutton Das Gosain, Gopal Das, the guddi nishin, in consideration of Rs. 665 (including both) former and present (debts), executed a zuripeshgi deed, dated 21st October 1824, respecting the land under claim, as well as the garden named Khatri containing two beeghas of land, in favour of Baboo Gokool Chund, an ancestor of the defendants. Subsequently he executed an ekrarnama, dated 11th August 1831, in lieu of the sum of Rs. 901 (by virtue of) which Baboo Gokool Chund till his lifetime was, and after his demise the defendants are, all along in possession of the same.” Now that is an acknowledgment of the original making of the mortgage-deed and of possession being taken under it, but the statement goes on to allege the execution subsequently of two other deeds, practically superseding the mortgage and altering the relation of the parties. Under the terms of Art. 148 we do not think that this is a sufficient acknowledgment to save the case from limitation. We think that “acknowledgment” in that Article means acknowledgment of a present existing title in the mortgagor.

We were referred to the decision in the case of Daia Chand v. Sarfraz (I. L. R., 1 All., 117) as an authority against this view of the case. The question there was, whether a certain record of right signed by the parties in question did or did not amount to an acknowledgment. The document was no doubt very scanty in its terms, and the case was relied on as shewing that we ought to interpret the Act very liberally in deciding what constitutes an acknowledgment; but the difference between the two cases is clear. In that case, there was an acknowledgment of a title existing at the time of the acknowledgment, which is not the case in the appeal now under consideration. At page 122 in the Judgment of Justices TURNER and OLDFIELD it is said: “The terms of the law, an acknowledgment of the mortgagor’s title, or an acknowledgment of his right to redeem, were not, it may be presumed, intended to be mere tautology. An acknowledgment that a certain person, or his representative, is the proprietor of the estate is an acknowledgment of his title. An acknowledgment that the mortgage is a [619] subsisting mortgage would be an acknowledgment of his right to redeem if he established his title." Those Judges, therefore, regard the acknowledgment required as an acknowledgment of an existing right to redeem, or of an existing title in the mortgagor. Neither of these are to be found in the present case.

* [2. v. supra 9 Cal., 616]

We, therefore, agree with the Court below that this suit is barred, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 23rd November, 1882.

PRESENT :

LORD FITZGERALD, SIR B. PEACOCK, SIR R. COUCH, AND SIR A. HOBHOUSE.

Maharajah of Burdwan.....Defendant

versus

Tarasundari Debi.....Plaintiff.

[On appeal from the High Court at Fort William in Bengal.]

Sale for arrears of rent—Regulation VIII of 1819, s. 8, cl. 2—Proof of publication of notice before sale of patni taluk for arrears of rent.

The due publication of the notices prescribed by Regulation VIII of 1819, s. 8, cl. 2 form an essential part of the foundation on which the summary power to sell a patni taluk for non-payment of rent is exercised by the zamindar, who, when instituting this proceeding is exclusively responsible for such publication being regularly conducted.

Although objection to the form of the receipt, and the absence of the receipt itself, need not be regarded, if the fact of the due publication of the notices having been made is not a matter of controversy (as held in Sona Bebee v. Lalchand Chowdhry, (9 W. R., 242) ; yet where that fact was in doubt owing to the evidence of its not having been secured according to the provisions of the Regulation—a result due to the neglect of those representing the zamindar,—the finding of the High Court that due publication had not been established by such proofs as were forthcoming, was maintained by the Judicial Committee.

APPEAL from a decree of the High Court (22nd March 1880) reversing a decree of the Judge of the District of East Burdwan (2nd May 1878).

The question raised on this appeal was whether or not before the sale of the respondent's patni taluk, for arrears of rent due [620] to the zamindar, there had been sufficient notification, according to Regulation VIII of 1819, s. 8, cl. 2 of the intended sale.

The patni tenure sold under that Regulation was lot Salmula in the East Burdwan district, formerly held by Brojomohun Banerji as patnidar. It was sold for default in payment of rent due to the zamindar for the half-year ending 1284 B. S., by public auction on the 8th Aughran 1284 (November 22nd, 1877) and was bought by Rash Behari Ghose, the highest bidder, for Rs. 2,000.

The present suit was afterwards instituted in the Court of the Judge of East Burdwan, alleging absence of the notice of the intended sale required by Regulation VIII of 1819 on Salmula. The defence was that the notice required had been duly published upon the land of the defaulter. At the hearing it appeared that notifications had been duly made at the Collector's kutchery, and in the Sadr kutchery of the zamindar; but the question was whether the notice required to be published on the land belonging to the defaulter had been duly given; and the judge, upon the evidence, found that it had, although the serving peon had not brought back the receipt required. On this point the Judge was of opinion that the sale was not void and useless merely on account of this omission, although the Regulation required the receipt to be taken and filed. In this respect he considered the provisions of the Regulation to be merely directory. The suit was accordingly dismissed. On appeal to the High Court, that judgment was reversed. The Judges of a Division Bench (WHITE, J., and MACLEAN, J.), there being no independent evidence that the peon had been entrusted with service of the notice in question, and none, except his own, to show that he even went to Salmula, found that the due publication of the notice had not been proved.

The facts, and the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819 are stated in their Lordships' Judgment.

On this appeal—

Mr. T. H. Cowie, Q.C., and Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the Appellant.

The Respondent did not appear.

[621] For the appellant it was argued that the weight of the evidence was in favour of the conclusion at which the District Judge had arrived. A substantial compliance with the requirements of Regulation VIII of 1819 had been shown. Reference was made to Sona Beebee v. Lalchand Chowdhry (9 W. R., 242), Ram Sabuk Bose v. Monmohuni Dossee (L. R., 2 I. A., 71; S.C. 14 B. L. R., 394; 23 W. R., 113), and Pitambar Panda v. Damoodur Dass (24 W. R., 129).

The Judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Lord Fitzgerald.—This case comes before us ex parte. The suit was to set aside a sale of a patni taluk, which took place by auction for non-payment of rent, the allegation of the respondent, who was the plaintiff in the suit being that the sale was illegal in consequence of the non-observance of Regulation VIII of 1819. By that regulation it is provided, with reference to cases where sales are to take place in certain districts and under certain circumstances for non-payment of rent, "that before the first day of Baisakh of the following year from that of which the rent is due, the zamindar shall present a petition to the Civil Court of the district, and a similar one to the Collector containing a specification of any balances that may be due to him on account of the expired year, from all or any of the talukdars or other holders of an interest of the nature described in the preceding clause of this section." Having presented this petition both to the Civil Court and to the Collector, "the same shall then be stuck up in some conspicuous part of the kutchery with a notice that, if the amounts claimed be not paid before the first of Jeyt following, the tenures of the defaulters will on that day be sold by public sale in liquidation." Then it provides that "a similar notice shall be stuck up at the Sadr kutchery of the zamindar himself and a copy or extract of such part of the notice as may apply to the individual case shall be by him sent to be similarly published at the kutchery, or at the principal town or village upon the land of the defaulter." It is admitted that there was a compliance with the two earlier provisions, but the [622] question arises whether a copy or extract of the notice applying to the individual case was sent by the zamindar to be published "at the kutchery of the principal town or village upon the land of the defaulter." The Regulation goes on: "The zamindar shall be exclusively answerable for the observation of the forms above prescribed, and the notice required to be sent into the mofussil shall be served by a single peon, who shall bring back the receipt of the defaulter or of his manager for the same; or in the event of inability to procure this, the signatures of three substantial persons residing in the neighbourhood, in attestation of the notice having been brought and published on the spot. If it shall appear from the tenor of the receipt or attestation in question that the notice has been published at any time previous to the 15th of the month of Baisakh, it shall be a sufficient warrant for the sale to proceed upon the day appointed. In case the people of the village should object or refuse to sign their names in attestation, the peon shall go to the kutchery of the nearest Munsif, or, if there should be no Munsif, to the nearest thana, and there make voluntary oath of the same having been duly published, a certificate to which effect shall be signed and sealed by the said officers and delivered to the peon." That is a very important Regulation and no doubt it was enacted for a certain and defined policy, and ought, as a rule, to be strictly observed. Their Lordships desire to point out that the due publication of the notices prescribed by the Regulation forms an essential portion of the foundation on which the summary power of sale is exercised, and makes the zamindar, who institutes the proceeding, exclusively responsible for its regularity. Their Lordships do not, however, intend at all to controvert a decision to which their attention was called, of Sir BARNES PEACOCK, when he filled the office of Chief Justice of the High Court of Bengal, to the effect that if the notice itself has been duly published, if it is not matter of controversy, if the fact was ascertained that it was published, then one would not regard any objection either to the form of the receipt or the absence of the receipt itself. That decision was alluded to in a case before this tribunal, in which their Lordships say they are disposed to agree with the judgment of the High Court confined as it is to cases where there is proof that the notice [623] was duly served. That, again, is where there is no controversy as to the fact of the service. It seems to their Lordships that the object of the Regulation was that due service or publication should not be left matter of controversy. The evidence should be secured immediately afterwards, and exist in writing, and be referred to by the proper officer as part of the foundation of the sale. Accordingly, if, immediately upon posting the notice, the peon posting it can find the defaulter or his manager, he is bound to ask for a receipt from the defaulter or his manager, signed under his hand, and if he gets such a receipt there is an end to all question as to the service. If he does not find the defaulter or his manager, or if that person will not sign a receipt, then he is to call in three substantial people of the village to attest the fact, which will be apparent to their eyes, that the notices in question have been published. If they object, as very likely villagers would object, to be parties to the proceedings for the enforcement of a sale, then he is obliged to go to the nearest Munsiff, and make a voluntary oath of the fact of service, which act is immediately recorded, and forms the foundation upon which the officer afterwards proceeds in carrying out his sale. Thus the evidence that the notice has been given is immediately preserved, and the fact is not left to be matter of controversy afterwards.

The issue in this case is as to whether the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819 have been complied with. The case before us differs from that before the Chief Justice of Bengal, and equally from that case which was before this tribunal, in this, that the fact of service here is matter of controversy. We should be obliged to assume, in order to arrive at a conclusion one way or the other, either that there was a conspiracy to cheat and deceive upon the part of the plaintiff Charoo and the two chowkidars who are represented to have assisted in the fraud, or that there was a conspiracy on the part of the peon sent to effect this publication, who, having, it is said, neglected his duty, conspired afterwards with a confederate to make a false statement and forge a receipt.

The Judge in the primary Court delivered his judgment in favour of the appellant. He had the advantage of seeing and [624] hearing the witnesses, and he has expressed his decision in vigorous language. But there was an appeal on the question of fact, and upon that question of fact two Judges of the High Court have concurred in thinking that the Judge of the Court below was wrong, and have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff and her witnesses have told the truth. It shows that not alone is the fact of publication in controversy, but that the matter is so involved that it is difficult to come to a safe conclusion upon it. Their Lordships do not propose to say upon this controverted question of publication on which side the weight of evidence lies.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decision of the High Court, and upon this ground: The doubt or difficulty in the case is one that would not have existed save by the neglect of those representing the Maharajah. There is no evidence save the statement of the peon Khetu that the notice was ever entrusted to him; but supposing it was entrusted to him for publication, his duty, and that of the officers of the Maharajah, would have been clear and plain. He should have ascertained when he went to make the service that the person whom he represents to be Charoo, to whom he says he delivered the notice, was the defaulter or the agent of the defaulter. He should then have obtained his receipt, a receipt proper in form. If he could not obtain it he should have followed the course prescribed by the Regulation, and should at once have returned the documents to the proper officer of the Maharajah. It would then have been the duty of that officer to examine the receipt and see that it was in all respects complete and regular as part of the foundation of the title afterwards to be given by sale. Their Lordships have before them a copy of the supposed receipt, which appears to be enveloped in mystery from the time it was alleged to have been signed. The peon gives no history of it. What did he do with it? To whom did he give it? Where has it been? All that is left in obscurity, and no confirmatory proof is produced from amongst the servants of the Maharajah that the peon, having effected what he alleged to be service, brought in this receipt with him, and filed it in the Collectorate or with the proper officer of the district. What [625] is the document itself when we come to look at it? The professed signatures are at the top. The first is that of Brojomohun Banerji. That purports to be the name, not quite the correct name, of the registered proprietor of the taluk, who has been dead many years, and if this had been brought to and examined by the servants of the Maharajah, they must have soon that the dead man could not have signed it; there is no doubt that they knew that this registered proprietor was not alive. The next signature is that of Redoynath Banerji, who is put down as the karpurdaz, meaning the karpurdaz of the dead man, Brojomohun Banerji. This turns out to be a non-existing individual; there is no such person. Then we come to the attesting witnesses at the foot, and they are Goburdhun Chowkidar and Gopal Chowkidar, residents of Salmula. The inference from that would be that they were the chowkidars of Salmula. If there are such persons in existence, there are no such chowkidars at Salmula, and neither of the chowkidars of Salmula have been produced on either one side or the other. This document or receipt so produced by the peon is by no means a compliance with the provision of Regulation VIII. Their Lordships think that the absence of that care and attention which ought to have been shown with reference to this document, and the absence of any contemporaneous inquiry whether there had or had not been a publication of this notice, as required by the regulation, has created the very difficulty which the Regulation was intended to prevent; and as the regulation makes the zamindar exclusively answerable for the observance of its provisions, their Lordships are of opinion that the issue as to the Regulation ought to be found in favour of the respondent; and will therefore humbly report to Her Majesty, as their opinion, that the decree of the High Court of Judicature ought to be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Sale in execution of decree—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 313.

Section 313 of the Civil Procedure Code only applies to cases in which the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the property sold. It does not apply to cases where the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in a portion only of the property.

THE facts of this case and the question raised in argument are stated in the following judgment of the lower Court:—"The auction-purchaser applies for the setting aside of the sale, on the ground that the judgment-debtor really owned an eight annas share of the property sold, and the sale professes to be of sixteen annas. The question is whether under s. 313 of the Civil Procedure Code the sale is liable to be set aside on that ground.

"I think the provisions of the section are clear, and under them a sale can be annulled only where the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold. Here that is not the case. I am referred to s. 287, and the High Court Rules governing the settlement of the sale proclamation: these are undoubtedly authorities, and in the light of which the regularity of the publication of the sale proclamation should be determined.

"But regularity of a proclamation, or no regularity, does not in any way concern the purchaser, and it does not lie within his capability to raise a question of irregularity as vitiating the sale.

"I am told that in regard to the eight annas, in which judgment-debtor has no right, it might be designated as property in which no saleable interest belonged to him within the meaning of the [627] Statute, but it should be borne in mind that the property was not sold in halves, and the purchaser has no right to draw an imaginary line of separation between them. The sale will be confirmed, and the auction-purchaser's application should be disallowed with costs."

The purchaser appealed to the High Court.

The Judgment of the Court (CUNNINGHAM and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Cunningham, J.—We think that the construction put by the Court below upon s. 313 of the Code of Civil Procedure was correct, and that the case of Naharmul Marwari v. Sadul Ali (8 C. L. R., 468), does not bind us, because in that case the learned Judges considered that a state of things had come about in which the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest. In the present instance it is admitted that he has a saleable interest to the extent of eight annas. That being so we think we cannot hold that the case falls within the scope of s. 313. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal—Dismissal of Suit—Summons not served—Civil Procedure Code (Act X of 1877), ss. 97, 588.

An order under s. 97 of the Civil Procedure Code dismissing a suit on it being found that the summons has not been served on the defendant in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the Court-fee leviable for such service, is not appealable.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 682 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Mothoora Nath Gupto, Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 27th January 1881, affirming the decree of Baboo Hurro Chunder Dass, Munsif of South Roajan, dated the 30th April 1880.

[628] Baboo Aukhil Chunder Sen for the Appellant.

Munshi Serajul Islam for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgment of the Court (WILSON and FIELD, JJ.), which was delivered by Wilson, J.—We are disposed to think that this appeal will not lie. The order that is sought to be appealed against is one under s. 97 of the Civil Procedure Code, which says: "If, on the day so fixed for the defendant to appear and answer, it be found that the summons has not been served upon him, in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the Court-fee leviable for such service, the Court may order that the case be dismissed." The question is whether there is an appeal against such dismissal when no appeal is expressly given either in s. 588 or elsewhere. Section 588 says that an appeal will lie against a decree. A decree is defined in the interpretation clause as "the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed, or defence set up, in a Civil Court when such adjudication, so far as regards the Court expressing it, decides the suit or appeal." A decree, therefore, must be an expression of opinion upon the rights of the parties; but this was a dismissal on a ground wholly apart from the merits of the case. We are, therefore, disposed to think that this is not a decree, but an order only. That view is confirmed by the latter part of the definition of a decree which expressly says that a certain class of orders, more or less analogous to those made under s. 97, shall be decrees, but says nothing of orders made under s. 97. Then again a large number of orders analogous to those made under s. 97 are expressly made appealable under s. 588, whereas orders under s. 97 are not mentioned. But however that may be, there are certainly no grounds on the merits of the case to lead us to interfere.

The decision of the Subordinate Judge was right, and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

NOTES.

[The present C. P. C. 1908 in its definition of 'decree' excludes orders of dismissal for default, sec. 2 (b). Upon a dismissal as in this case (sch. I, O. 9, r. 2) the plaintiff under r. 4 of the same order, may bring a fresh suit or may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside. For the views under the previous Code, see:—19 Bom. 307; (1907) P. R. 121; 2 All. 318.]

VERSUS
Sree Ram Paul.....Defendant.*

Practice - Plaintiff - Infant plaintiff - Next friend - Form of plaintiff - Title of plaintiff.

A suit was brought by a minor, who appeared by her next friend, and a decree was given in her favour. The defendant appealed, making the next friend alone respondent, and had the decree of the Court of First Instance modified in his favour. The next friend appealed to the High Court, where the respondent objected to the next friend being heard, on the ground that she was no party to the suit.

Held, that the Court would not entertain the objection at the instance of the party through whose fault the error occurred, but that the judgment of the Court below should be set aside, and that of the Court of First Instance restored.

ON the 9th of December 1878, the plaint in this case was filed in the Munsif's Court at Ranaghat. The title of the plaint is as follows: "Suttobali Debi, minor, represented by her guardian, Bhobotarini Debi of Santipur, Station Santipur, by profession zamindar, Plaintiff v. Sree Ram Paul, son of the late Ram Mohun Paul, of Santipur, by profession a service-holder, defendant." The plaintiff's claim was decreed by the Court of First Instance, and the defendant appealed. In the appeal the defendant dropped the name of the minor, and entered on the record as respondent the name of Bhobotarini Debi. The Subordinate Judge struck off a sum of Rs. 208 from the amount decreed by the Munsif in favour of the plaintiff, and gave a proportionate amount of costs to the respondent. From this decision Bhobotarini Debi appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Jussoda Nundun Paramanick for the Respondent objected that the appellant had no locus standi.

Baboo Nil Madhub Bose for the Appellant.

[630] The Judgment of the Court (MACLEAN and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by

Maclean, J.— The respondent's pleader objects to our hearing this appeal on the ground that the plaintiff, appellant, Bhobotarini Debi, was not the plaintiff in the original suit, and that therefore she has no locus standi in this Court. It is a matter of surprise that this objection should have been raised here, because we find that the person who is now appellant before us was alone placed upon the record in the lower Appellate Court as respondent. We cannot, therefore, allow the objection to bar the hearing of this appeal. The appellant's vakeel recognizes his situation and asks us to set aside the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, which is adverse to her in saddling her with costs, on the ground that she was not liable under the Munsif's decree and was in fact improperly made respondent in the Court below. We think there is no way out of the respondent's dilemma. Having omitted to make

*Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 843 of 1881, against the decree of Baboo Amrito Lal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Nuddea, dated the 25th February 1881, modifying the decree of Baboo Rajendro Coomar Bose, Munsif of Ranaghat, dated the 31st March 1879.

Suttobali Debi, the real plaintiff, respondent in the lower Appellate Court, he has lost his opportunity of questioning the Munsif's decree in her favour. The decree of the lower Appellate Court, modifying the Munsif's decree, is valueless and should be set aside. As the ground upon which we set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court was not taken by the appellant before us in the memorandum of appeal, we cannot allow her any costs. The appeal is decreed without costs, the decree of the Subordinate Judge is set aside, and the decree of the Munsif is restored.

Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, s. 561—Limitation Act XV of 1877, s. 5—Cross Appeal—Notice of objection.

A notice of objection under s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Act XIV of 1882, must be filed not less than seven days before the date (if any) fixed for the hearing of the appeal in the notice served upon the respondent.

Section 5 of Act XV of 1877 does not apply to an objection under s. 561 of the Procedure Code.

THIS was a suit for possession of certain lands claimed by the plaintiffs to be portion of their ancestral property. On the 10th of February 1881, the Court of First Instance decreed a portion of the plaintiffs' claim only, and against this decision the plaintiffs appealed. The day fixed for the hearing of the appeal, under s. 552 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was the 11th of June 1881. One of the respondents filed a memorandum of objections, under s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the 14th of June 1881, more than seven days before the appeal was actually heard.

In reference to this the Judge of the lower Appellate Court said :—

“The respondent Dwarka Nath has made a cross appeal. It is objected that notice of it was not given to the appellant in proper time, but s. 561 does not require notice to be given to the appellant, but it merely provides that it is to be filed at least seven days before the hearing. In the present case the cross appeal was filed before that time, and it was tantamount to filing notice of the cross appeal." The Judge dismissed the appeal and decreed the cross appeal with costs. The plaintiffs appealed to the High Court, on the ground that the Judge was wrong in entertaining the cross appeal.

[632] Baboo Bordo Nath Dutt for the Appellants.

Baboo Rashbehary Ghose for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered :

Prinsep, J.—It seems clear from the record that the lower Appellate Court has wrongly admitted what has been termed a cross appeal, but what, strictly speaking, is an objection taken by the respondent under s. 561 of the Code. The day fixed for the hearing of the appeal in the lower Appellate Court was, according to the notice served on the respondent, the 11th of June 1881. Therefore, according to the terms of s. 561, as interpreted by a Division Bench of this Court, the notice of the objection, that is, the written petition of objection itself, should have been filed in the lower Appellate Court not less than seven days before the day fixed for the hearing of the appeal, namely, the 11th June. It was not filed till the 14th June. The only provision made by the Legislature for extending the period of limitation is to be found in the second clause of s. 5 of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877) ; and as has already been pointed out in the case of Degamber Mozumdar v. Kallynath Roy (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 654), that provision does not apply to anything, except an appeal or application for review of judgment, and therefore does not apply to an objection under s. 561.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court must accordingly be amended so far only as it relates to the cross appeal.

The appellant will receive his costs in this Court.

O'Kinealy, J.—I understand that the interpretation just put by Mr. Justice PRINSEP on s. 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure, has been adopted by several Benches of this Court. I am not prepared to dissent, but were I unfettered by any previous decision I should have considerable difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the seven days referred to in s. 561 mean seven days before the date fixed in the notice of appeal.

Appeal allowed.

NOTES.

[TIME FOR FILING OBJECTIONS—

Sec. 561 of the C.P.C. 1882, as originally enacted was amended by VI of 1888 ; see, 48 thereof gave " one month from the date of the service on him or his pleader under section 553 of notice of the day fixed for hearing the appeal, or within such further time as the Appellate Court may see fit to allow." Denonath Chuckerbutty.....Judgment-debtor

Lallit Coomar Gangopadhya.....decree-holder.*

Limitation (Act XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 179, cl. 4--Application for execution of decree by benamidar.

An application for execution of a decree by a mere benamidar is not an application in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 179, cl. 4 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act (XV of 1877), such as to afford a fresh starting point for limitation.

THE application out of which this appeal arose was made on the 9th December 1880 by Lallit Coomar Gangopadhya, who held a decree against Koilash Nath Dutt Rai, and was for execution of a decree, dated the 7th June 1877, which Koilash Nath Dutt Rai had obtained against Denonath Chuckerbutty.

The only previous application for execution of the latter decree had been made on the 1st of June 1880 by one Nobin Chunder Bhattacharjya, who alleged that he had purchased the decree from Koilash Nath Dutt Rai. Lallit Coomar Gangopadhya had opposed that application on the ground that he had attached the decree, and that Nobin Chunder Bhattacharjya was merely a benamidar for Koilash Nath Dutt Rai; and on the 4th of December 1880 Nobin Chunder Bhattacharjya withdrew his application.

In the present application it was *found as a fact that Nobin Chunder Bhattacharjya had applied for execution merely as benamidar for Koilash Nath Dutt Rai.

The first Court held that the present application was barred by limitation, and accordingly rejected it.

The lower Appellate Court reversed this order, and allowed the application, citing Syud Nadir Hossein v. Baboo Pearoo Thovildarnee (11 B. L. R., 425 : 19 W. R., 255), and Purna Chandra Roy v. Abhaya Chandra Roy (4 B. L. R., Ap., 40) [634] as authority for its decision, and holding that Abdul Kueem v. Chukhun (5 C. L. R., 253) did not apply in the present case.

Denonath Chuckerbutty, the judgment-debtor, appealed to the High Court.

Baboo Grija Sunkur Mozoomdar for the Appellant.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Roy for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and FIELD, JJ.), was delivered by

Wilson, J.—This is an appeal against an order allowing an application for execution of a decree. The decree bears date the 7th of June 1877, and was in favour of Koilash Nath Dutt Rai. On the 1st of June 1880 one Nobin Chunder Bhattacharjya applied for execution claiming it as assignee of the decree. It is found as a fact that he was a mere benamidar for the original decree-holder. The present application, which is made by a person who has attached the decree, was made on the 9th of December 1880. The question raised is, whether this application is barred by limitation. If the period of limitation runs from the date of the decree there is no doubt that the application is too late. If the period runs from the former application for execution there is no doubt that it is in time. We have, therefore, to say whether an application for execution by a mere benamidar is an application "in accordance with law" within the meaning of Art. 179, cl. 4 of Sch. II, of the Limitation Act. It has already been held in Abdul Kureem v. Chukhun (5 C. L. R., 253), that where a decree is held in the name of benamidar the proper person to apply for execution is the real decree-holder, and in that view we fully concur. It follows that an application by the benamidar is not an application in accordance with law.

* Appeal from Appellate Order No. 107 of 1882, against the order of T. M. Kirkwood, Esq., Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 25th February 1882, reversing the order of Baboo Nobin Chunder Ghose, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 6th August 1881.

The appeal will, therefore, be allowed, and the order for execution set aside with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

[APPLICATION BY BENAMIDAR STEP IN AID OF EXECUTION—

This case which was followed in (1883) 16 Cal. 355 was explained in (1892) 20 Cal. 388 as having proceeded on the footing of the transferee not having been recognised. If recognised, the application would be in proper form. See (1907) 10 O.C., 263 (265) where such an application as in this case was held valid.]

The 30th November, 1882.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE PRINSEP AND MR. JUSTICE WILSON.

Rughu Nath Singh Manku.....Decree-holder

versus

Pareshram Mahata and another.....Judgment-debtors.

Limitation Act XV of 1877, s. 4 Appeal—Cross appeal—Jurisdiction of Appellate Court—Question of limitation not raised in cross appeal.

On an application for execution of decree, the application was granted, but the interest claimed by the decree-holder on the amount of the decree was disallowed. The decree-holder appealed from the order, but the judgment-debtor filed no cross appeal. On the hearing of the appeal the application for execution was dismissed, on the ground that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation.

Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the Appellate Court was not competent to take the question of limitation into consideration.

Almanissa Khatoon v. Syed Hossein Ali (6 C. L. R., 267) followed.

THIS was an application for execution of decree. The application was granted by the Court of First Instance, but the rate of interest claimed by the decree-holder was disallowed. The decree-holder then appealed. The judgment of the Appellate Court, so far as material, was as follows:—

"The appeal in this case relates to the question of interest. The respondents have not cross appealed; but their pleader raises an objection in bar which must be first considered. He urges that the decree was barred by limitation. This point was raised in the Court below, and decided in the appellant's favour. The question is, can the Appellate Court interfere with the Munsiff's judgment on a point decided by that Judge in that judgment and not appealed against? Ordinarily, no doubt, it cannot, but the point of limitation must, it seems to me, be considered, even though it be not pleaded— See s. 4, Act XV of 1877. I think, therefore, that the argument must be admitted and disposed of."

* Appeal from Appellate Order No. 173 of 1882, against the order of A. L. Clay, Esq., Officiating Deputy Commissioner of Manbhoom, dated the 14th March 1882, modifying the order of Baboo Krishnadhan Chowdhuri, Munsif of Chowkee Burabazar, dated the 21st May 1881.

The lower Appellate Court then decided that the application [636] for execution was barred by limitation, and he dismissed it with costs.

The decree-holder appealed to the High Court on the ground, amongst others irrelevant to this report, "That the judgment-debtors not having appealed from the decree of the Munsiff overruling the plea of limitation and allowing execution to issue, the Court of appeal was not competent to interfere with such an order on the appeal of the judgment-creditor, who was dissatisfied with only a part of the Munsiff's order."

Baboo Rash Behary Ghose and Baboo Surender Nath Mutty Lal for the Appellant.

Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dey for the Respondents.

The following Judgments were delivered by the Court (PRINSEP and WILSON, JJ.)—

Prinsep, J.—The first Court in this case held that the decree was not barred by limitation, and on another point decided in favour of the judgment-debtors.

The decree-holder alone appealed against the latter finding. No objection under s. 561 was taken by the judgment-debtors against the finding as regards limitation which was adverse to him. At the hearing of the appeal, in the course of the argument, the point of limitation was raised, and the lower Appellate Court held that execution was barred.

We are of opinion that the lower Appellate Court was, under the circumstances, not competent to consider this point; and in this respect we concur in the judgment delivered by another Division Bench of this Court in the case of Alimannussa Khatoun v. Syed Hossein Ali (6 C. L. R., 267). The District Judge has gone beyond the law in stating that "the point of limitation must be considered, even though it be not pleaded." The terms of s. 4 of the Limitation Act declare that a Court has this power although limitation has not been set up as a defence; and we think that this has been rightly interpreted, in the judgment already cited, to mean so far as regards the particular suit, or appeal, then under decision before the Court is concerned. The present case differs from the [637] precedent cited only in this respect, that in that case the appellant had not made the question of limitation one of the grounds of appeal. In the case before us the judgment-debtors, against whom the judgment of the first Court on this point was pressed, did not appeal against it, nor did they, when the decree-holder appealed, make any objection in writing within the terms of s. 561. Under these circumstances the lower Appellate Court was not competent to re-open the point. The order of the lower Appellate Court must therefore be reversed, and that of the first Court restored. The decree-holder will be entitled to costs, both in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Wilson, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. The effect of s. 4 of the Limitation Act, as I understand it, is simply this: Whenever a case is properly before a Court, whether it is a Court of appeal or a Court of First Instance, it is bound to take notice of the question of limitation; but in order to enable the Appellate Court to do that the case must be before it. In the present case the order objected to was not before the Court below at all in its entirety, but only a portion of it. The whole might have been brought before the Court by appeal, or by cross appeal only on objection under s. 561 of the Code. That was not done. The lower Appellate Court therefore had no right to enter into the question of limitation, affecting that part of the order which was not before it.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882), s. 133—Nuisance—Erection of buildings—Unconditional order.

Every order made under s. 133 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act X of 1882, must appoint a time within which, and a place where, the person to whom it is directed may appear before the Magistrate, and move to have the order set aside or modified.

No unconditional order can be made under that section.

[638] THIS was a reference to the High Court by the Sessions Judge of Backergunge, to set aside an order made by the Deputy Magistrate of Putuakhali. The facts of the case are thus stated by the Sessions Judge: "On the 5th of January last the Deputy Magistrate addressed to the applicant for revision, an order, which after reciting that last year the official residence of the Subdivisional Officers of Putuakhali with its out-offices was destroyed by fire, that he apprehended a recurrence of such a calamity, and that the propriety of directing the applicant to remove his bazar to a distance from the Subdivisional Officers' abode was under consideration, forbade the applicant (1), to erect or cause or permit to be erected within his bazar (he is the proprietor of the soil on which stand the shops and other buildings that constitute the bazar) or within the prostitute's quarter, any thatched buildings, or buildings constructed of easily combustible materials; (2), to repair and cause or permit to be repaired within the aforesaid limits, any such buildings, and enjoined him to put a stop to the creation of such buildings, which had been undertaken within such limits prior to the issue of the Deputy Magistrate's order.

"The order served on the applicant is annexed to the application for revision. It purports to have been promulgated under s. 133 Criminal Procedure Code, but in lieu of being conditional peremptorily requires compliance therewith in ten days, and threatens the applicant with pains and penalties in the event of disregard thereof. It appoints no time or place for showing cause against it, nor does it intimate that the applicant will have an opportunity of moving a Magistrate to set it aside or modify it." The Sessions Judge then went on to say that the Deputy Magistrate had given an explanation of his proceedings but that in such explanation he had "overlooked the one irregularity which is fatal to the validity of his order, namely, its unconditional character."

No one appeared to argue the case.

The Judgment of the Court (MITTER and FIELD, JJ.) was delivered by Mitter, J.—We agree with the Sessions Judge that the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Putuakhali, purporting to have been passed under s. 133, Criminal Procedure Code, is illegal, and [639] should be set aside on the ground that it is unconditional. As required by the section, it does not appoint any time or place within which and where the person to whom it is directed may appear before the Deputy Magistrate himself, or some other Magistrate of the first or second class, and move to have the order set aside or modified. We accordingly set aside the order, which the Sessions Judge recommends to be set aside.

Order set aside.

Unlawful assembly—Penal Code, Act XLV of 1860, s. 143

On the trial of certain persons charged with being members of an unlawful assembly, it was proved that there was a dispute of long standing between the accused and certain other parties regarding the possession of certain land ; that neither of the parties was in undisturbed possession of the land ; that the accused went to sow the land with indigo, accompanied by a body of men armed with latties ; that they were prepared to use force if necessary : and that the lattials kept off the opposite party by brandishing their weapons while the land was sowed.

Held, that the accused were rightly convicted of being members of an unlawful assembly, under s. 143 of the Penal Code.

Sunker Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R. Cr., 25) distinguished.

IN this case the prisoners were convicted by the Joint Magistrate of Rajshahye of being members of an unlawful assembly and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment under s. 143 of the Indian Penal Code. The prisoners appealed to the Sessions Judge of Rajshahye, the material portion of whose judgment was as follows :—

It does not seem to be seriously denied in this case that the retainers of Messrs. Watson & Co. went in a large body to sow down indigo on the lands which are referred to by the witnesses, and that many of these retainers were armed. This fact is proved by the clearest evidence, and the evidence of the constable Pormeshwar Singh shews that while the lattials were brandishing their latties, some fifty persons sowed down the lands in indigo. The pleader for Messrs. Robert Watson & Co., relying upon the [640] case of Shunkur Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R., Cr., 25), contends that the charge in this case cannot be sustained, as the intention of the defendants was not to enforce a right, but to maintain, undisturbed, the subsisting enjoyment of their rights. It seems to me, however, that the ruling above quoted is not applicable to the present case. It referred to the enjoyment of water actually flowing, and to the protection of the then subsisting enjoyment of this right, under circumstances where there was no time to have recourse to the Police authorities. In the case now under appeal it is clear that the land, of which the enjoyment is claimed, is disputed land, and was so in April and May 1882, as well as in the following November, when it reappeared from the bed of Padma river. [The District Judge, went on to say that he agreed] with the Joint Magistrate that the evidence on the record is not sufficient to prove conclusively that either party was in bona fide possession. It is clear, however, that both parties claimed the right of possession, and that these claims arose as soon as the disputed land reappeared from the bed of the river. It is the forcible assertion of this claim on the part of the appellants, which is the subject of the present charge against them..... From a review of the whole evidence I concur with the Joint Magistrate in the opinion that the appellants are guilty of the offences of which they have been convicted, and I accordingly dismiss this appeal.

* Criminal Motion, No. 32 of 1883, against the order of L. Hare, Esq., Joint Magistrate of Rajshahye, dated the 4th January 1883.

The prisoners moved the High Court for a rule to show cause why the conviction should not be set aside as bad in law.

Mr. Evans for the Petitioners.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and MACLEAN, JJ.) was delivered by Wilson, J.—This was a rule granted to show cause why a conviction should not be set aside on the ground that, assuming the facts found to be correct, the conviction was bad in law. We have had the advantage of hearing the arguments of the petitioner's Counsel, and it appears to us that, assuming the facts found to be correct, the conviction is good in law. The facts found are these: that there was no one in undisputed possession of the land in question, but that a dispute of some considerable standing existed between the two parties as to who was entitled to the land and who was in possession of it; that a number of persons of the petitioner's party went to sow the land, together with a body of men armed with latties; that they were prepared to use force, if [641] necessary; and that they stationed these lattials to keep off the opposite party and these were brandishing their weapons, while the land was sowed. That falls within the definition of the offence, because there was an assembly for the purpose of enforcing a right by criminal force, or shew of criminal force.

It was contended that this case was governed by the case of Shunker Singh v. Burmah Mahto (23 W. R., Cr., 25); but as was pointed out by the Judge in the appeal Court in this case that case is distinguishable. It was decided on this ground that what was done there was an act justified by the sections relating to private defence, and it was expressly pointed out that it did not fall under cl. 3 of s. 99 of the Penal Code. There is no right of private defence in cases in which there is time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities. In this case it appears that there was plenty of time to have recourse to the public authorities, therefore the law as to private defence does not apply.

This rule will be discharged.

Rule discharged.

Sale for arrears of rent—Beng. Act VIII of 1869, ss. 59, 60—Sale Certificate —Proclamation of sale—Under-tenure.

Held, on the construction of a sale certificate and a proclamation of sale purporting to be made under ss. 59 and 60 of the Rent Act, Beng. Act VIII of 1869, that what passed by the sale was not an under-tenure, but merely the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor therein.

The declaratory portion of a sale proclamation is not by itself sufficient to override the description of the property in the body of the document.

THIS was a suit for possession of a howla which the plaintiffs claimed to have purchased in 1871 at a sale held under the pro-[642]visions of ss. 59 and 60 Beng. Act VIII of 1869, in execution of a rent-decree. The defence was, amongst other things, that the tenure did not pass by the sale, but only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors. On this point the Judge of the Court of First Instance said: "It is manifest, as appears from the sale certificate, that the property was sold under ss. 59 and 60 of the Rent Act, and as such, the plaintiffs would be entitled to obtain the property free from incumbrances of the defaulting tenant. On appeal the Subordinate Judge said: "I find that the sale certificate, which was filed by the plaintiffs, and the certified copy of the sale proclamation, which has been now filed by the respondents, show that the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors were sold, although in the heading of the sale proclamation it was mentioned that the tenure would be sold, but it is clearly mentioned below that 'dahaner bhog dakhli sathva', that is the rights which are in possession and enjoyment of the judgment-debtors, would be sold. Such being the case the purchaser in such a sale did not purchase the tenure free from incumbrances --Dular Chand Sahu v. Lal Chabil Chand (3 C. L. R., 561)." The Subordinate Judge then reversed the decision of the Munsif, and the plaintiff appealed to the High Court.

The Judgment of the Court (MACLEAN and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was delivered by

Maclean, J.—In this case the question to be decided is whether the sale, on the basis of which the plaintiffs sue as purchasers, passed the tenure or only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors. It appears that in 1870, the plaintiffs' mother brought a suit for arrears of rent of a howla for the years 1274, 1275 and 1276, and obtained a decree on the 19th July. In execution of that decree, the property, on account of which the suit for arrears had been brought, was sold. What was sold is the present dispute. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that since the certificate purports to have been issued under ss. 59 and 60 of the Rent Act and the Court admittedly had no power to [643] sell under that Act anything but the tenure itself, there arises an irrebuttable presumption in favour of the tenure being sold. But when we turn to the notification, under which the sale is declared to have taken place, and the sale certificate, we find that they contain a clear and precise statement showing that what was proclaimed for sale and what was actually sold was not the tenure, but the right, title and interest of the defendants. This too appears to be consonant with the fact that the decree-holders purchased the property for a very small sum. Following the decisions of a Division Bench of this Court, in special appeal No. 2752 of 1875, we are of opinion that the declaratory portion of a proclamation is not by itself sufficient to override the description of the property in the body of the document, and that it is not the tenure, but the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor that was sold in the former suit and purchased. In this view of the case, we uphold the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

by way of conditional sale of certain lands. They subsequently granted a mourasi mokurari patta of the same land to the defendant. The plaintiff took foreclosure proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806, and notice was served upon the mortgagors, but not upon the defendant, and the plaintiff subsequently obtained a decree for possession against the mortgagors. He now sues to set aside the defendant's patta.

The Subordinate Judge, reversing the decision of the Munsif, has held that the plaintiff's case fails on the ground that the defendant was entitled to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage and therefore ought to have been served with notice of foreclosure under s. 8 of the Regulation.

We do not agree in this view. It was held by a Division Bench of this Court, consisting of MACPHERSON and GLOVER, JJ., in Lalla Doorga Pershad v. Lalla Luchmun Sahoy (17 W. Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 179—Execution of decree—

Application for—Step in aid of execution.

On the 28th September 1877 an application was made for execution of a decree. On the 8th July 1878 the decree holder deposited Rs. 2 as Nilamce fees, that is to say, costs for bringing certain property to sale in execution of the decree. On the 28th March 1881 a further application for execution of the decree was made. Held that the deposit of Rs. 2 as Nilamce fees on the 8th July 1878 was a step in aid of execution of the decree, and that the application of the 28th March 1881, being within three years from the date of the deposit was not barred by limitation.

Quere—Whether, inasmuch as Act IX of 1871 is repealed by Act XV [645] of 1877 and the later Act contains no provision similar to that contained in s. 1 of Act IX of 1871, Act XIV of 1859 can be said to have been repealed in respect of suits instituted before the 1st of April 1873.

* Appeal from Original Order, No. 236 of 1882, against the order of J. F. Stevens, Esq., Officiating Judge of Sarun, dated the 5th of May 1882.

Baboo Chunder Madhub Ghose and Baboo Rughoo Nundun Pershad for the Appellant.

Baboo Anundo Gopal Palit for the Respondents.

THE facts of this case sufficiently appear from the Judgments of the Court (MITTER and FIELD, JJ.)

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal against the decision of the District Judge of Sarun, dismissing a petition for execution of decree, dated the 4th August 1870, upon two grounds: (1st), that the application for execution is barred by limitation; and (2ndly), that as regards one of the judgment-debtors, viz., the defendant No. 2, he is liable only to the extent of the property hypothecated in a certain bond executed in favour of the plaintiff, decree-holder, and that that property having been sold he is not any further liable for the balance of the decree. It appears that the application next preceding the one now under our consideration for execution was filed on the 26th September 1877. It was followed by the sale of certain property on the 1st of April 1878. Then it further appears that on the 8th July 1878, the decree-holder deposited Rs. 2 as Nilamnee fees, that is, costs of bringing certain property to sale in execution of the decree in question. The present application was made on the 28th of March 1881.

Upon these facts the District Judge was of opinion that, under the Limitation Act of 1877, the present application, having been made more than three years after the application of the 26th September 1877, is barred by limitation. In appeal it is contended that the present Limitation Act does not apply to this case because the decree in question was passed on the 4th of August 1870, when the Limitation Act of 1859 was in force, and in support of this contention the well-known case of Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Gria Kant Lahiri (I. L. R., 8 I. A., 123; I. L. R., 8 Cal., 51), decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the 10th June 1881, has been cited. There is a very essential difference between the facts of the case cited before us and of the present case,—that difference being that in Mungul Pershad Dichit [646] v. Gria Kant Lahiri the application for execution, which was under the consideration of the Judicial Committee, was filed when the Limitation Act of 1871 was in force, and the decision of the Privy Council was based upon the provisions of s. 1 of the Limitation Act of 1871. There is no such corresponding provision in the present Limitation Act. It is, therefore, doubtful whether the ruling referred to will apply to a case like the present in which the application for execution was filed after the Limitation Act of 1871 had been repealed; but it is not necessary to decide that question in this case, because it seems to us that, conceding in favour of the judgment-debtors that the present Limitation Act applies to this execution case, we are of opinion that the District Judge was in error in holding that the application of the 28th of March 1881 is barred by limitation. Under Art. 179. Sch. II of the Limitation Act, the decree-holder is entitled to apply for execution within three years from any date when he takes some step in aid of execution of the decree. The deposit of Rs. 2 as Nilamnee fees on the 8th July 1878, is certainly a step in aid of execution of the decree, and the application under our consideration, viz., the application of the 23rd March 1881, being within three years from the 8th July 1878, is within time. We are, therefore, of opinion that the District Judge was in error in throwing out the application for execution on the ground that it is barred by limitation. As regards the second ground upon which the District Judge has rejected the application in so far as the defendant No. 2 is concerned, it appears to us that the decree which is sought to be executed made both the defendants viz., the defendant No. 1 and the defendant No. 2, personally liable. The last portion of the decree contains only a declaration of lien upon the property hypothecated for the realization of the amount decreed. That being so, the defendant No. 2 is as much personally liable for the balance of the decree as the defendant No. 1.

We, therefore, reverse the decision of the lower Court, and decree this appeal with costs.

Field, J.—Three points have been argued before us in this appeal. The first point relates to the application to this case of the principle laid down in the Privy Council decision of [647] Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (L. R. 8 I. A., 123; I. L. R. 8 Cal., 51). Now the present case is to be governed by the Limitation Act of 1877, and that Act contains no provision similar to those contained in s. 1, Act IX of 1871. This being so the question arises whether Act XIV of 1859 can be said to have been repealed in respect of suits instituted before the 1st of April 1873. Now it may be argued that s. 2, Act IX of 1871 is a complete and absolute repeal of the Acts therein referred to, and to be found in the first schedule; one of these Acts being Act XIV of 1859, except a portion of s. 15 with which we have no concern, and it may then be contended that the effect of s. 1, Act IX of 1871 was to stay the applicability of the general repeal in respect of the suits in question, that is, suits instituted before the 1st day of April 1873. Then it may be argued that, when Act IX of 1871 was repealed by the present Act XV of 1877, the effect of that repeal was to do away with the stay of the repeal contained in s. 2, Act IX of 1871, and that the immediate result was that the complete and absolute repeal of Act XIV of 1859, which but for s. 1, Act IX of 1871, would have had effect upon the class of suits specified immediately, had that effect and operation which before were stayed or delayed. I agree with my learned colleague that in the present case it is not necessary for us to decide this point. It may perhaps arise hereafter, and other cases and other considerations may be laid before us which may assist us in forming a conclusion. I, therefore, think that it will be better to abstain from a definite determination of a question, the decision of which is not absolutely necessary for the disposal of this case.

The second point is, whether the payment of Rs. 2 as Nilameo fees in July 1878 was, within the meaning of the present law, a step in aid of the execution of the decree. I am of opinion that it was such a step.

The third point relates to the construction of the decree as regards the liability of the defendant No. 2, and in the view taken by my learned colleague upon that point I entirely concur.

Appeal allowed.

Right of occupancy -- Ejectment—Transfer—Effect of asserting a right to transfer land by a ryot having a right of occupancy, who remains in possession.

A ryot having a right of occupancy is not liable to ejectment by his superior landlord merely because he has asserted a transferable right in the lands, and sold that right to a stranger without giving up possession of the land.

Narendra Narain Roy Chowdhry v. Ishan Chandra Sen (13 B. L. R., 274; S.C., 22 W. R., 22; and Ram Chandra Roy Chowdhry v. Bholanath Lushkhar (22 W. R., 200) distinguished.

Dwarka Nath Misser v. Hurrish Chundra (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 925) referred to.

IN this case the principal defendants, Nos. 2, 3, and 4, held a jama under the plaintiff, which they had transferred to the first defendant. The plaintiff sued to eject the defendants, alleging that the jama was not transferable. The only defendant who appeared to the suit was defendant No. 3, and he pleaded that his jama was kaemi, and transferable according to the custom of the country, and that as no notice to quit had been served upon him the suit could not be maintained. The following issues were accordingly framed :—

First.—Whether the suit could proceed, unless notice to quit was served upon the defendants ?

Second.—Whether the jama of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 was transferable or not ; and whether the sale of the jama by those defendants to defendant No. 1 was void ; and whether the plaintiff was entitled to the khas possession of the land by evicting the defendants ?

The Court of First Instance held with regard to the first issue, on the allegation of the plaintiff, that the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 [649] were no longer his tenants, but trespassers along with the first defendant, that no notice to quit was necessary.

With regard to the second issue the Court held, as regards the transferable character of the holding, that the defendants having failed to adduce any evidence, the sale of the jama to the first defendant was void, and that the plaintiff was entitled to khas possession.

The suit was accordingly decreed with costs.

The third defendant then appealed.

The lower Appellate Court, however, found as a fact that the appellant, with others, being tenants with certain occupancy rights under the plaintiff, had transferred their rights to the first defendant, from whom they again took a sub-lease and so remained throughout in possession, and that consequently the only question at issue, and the only one that was urged in appeal, was whether the transfer having been set aside as invalid, the plaintiff could eject his former tenants.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1379 of 1881, against the decree of H. Beverley, Esq., Additional Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 13th May 1881, modifying the decree of Baboo Roma Nath Seal, First Munsif of Satkheera, dated the 13th September 1880.

In the plaint there was also an allegation that the tenants had denied the plaintiff's title, but this allegation was traversed, and no evidence was given in support of it, and in the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff's right to eject was based solely on the attempt, on the part of the tenants, to transfer their rights.

The lower Appellate Court held that this was not a sufficient ground to entitle the plaintiff to eject them and obtain khas possession, and accordingly varied the decree of the Court below by declaring that the tenure in question was not transferable, and disallowing the prayer of the plaintiff for ejectment of the defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

Against this decree the plaintiff now preferred a special appeal to the High Court, on the ground that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 could occupy the land after they had sold their right of occupancy to the defendant No. 1: that the third defendant having admitted, in this written statement and also in his deposition, that the tenants had sold their occupancy right and made over possession to defendant No. 1, and that they were not holding possession under the plaintiff on their occupancy right, but had completely severed their connection [650] with the landlord, the lower Appellate Court should not have disturbed the decree of the first Court for ejectment. It was contended, in support of this view, that the case was within the ruling in the case of Narendra Narain Roy Chowdhry v. Ishan Chandra Sen (13 B. L. R., 274: s. c., 22 W. R., 22).

Baboo Umbica Churn Bose appeared on behalf of the Appellant.

Baboo Boyd Nath Dutt for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and MACLEAN, JJ.), was delivered by Wilson, J.—The question for decision here is, shortly, whether occupant cultivators who have asserted a transferable right in their lands and sold that right to a stranger without giving up their occupation, are liable to ejectment by the superior landlord, whom they may have repudiated in a suit brought against them for arrears of rent, and set themselves up as tenants of the purchaser.

Fortunately this question has been considered on several occasions by this Court.

In Narendra Narain Roy Chowdhry v. Ishan Chandra Sen (13 B. L. R., 274; s. c., 22 W. R. 22), it was ruled that the transferee of occupant rights, illegally sold, could be ejected if he had entered into actual possession of the land. The principle involved in that case was the abandonment by the tenant of his connection with the land, and the landlord's consequent right to re-enter. This principle is re-asserted in Ram Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Bholanath Lushkur (22 W. R., 200), and is also referred to in a recent judgment delivered on 17th January 1883 (appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1655 of 1881, MITTER and O'KINEALY, JJ.).

In Dwarka Nath Misser v. Hurrish Chandra (1. L. R., 4 Cal., 925) there is a remark which seems to indicate that occupant ryots who after sale remain upon the land by permission of the transferee, as his tenants, do so under circumstances amounting to an abandonment of their right of occupancy, and the result of that case shows that neither they nor the transferee can resist an [651] action to eject them; but it must be remarked that in that case the ryots did not question the decree for their ejection by appeal to this Court, and therefore we need not consider the judgment as deciding anything contrary to the other cases quoted above.

We accordingly follow those decisions and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 7th March, 1883.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE WILSON AND MR. JUSTICE MACLEAN.

Cally Nath Bundopadhyas..... Plaintiff
versus

Koonjo Behary Shaha and others.....Defendants.*

'Mortgage—Money decree on mortgage bond—Mortgagee's lien—Registration Act (XX of 1866), s. 53—Frame of suit—Parties.

A and B, co-mortgagees, obtained a summary decree under the Registration Act XX of 1866, s. 53, on the 6th May 1868, in respect of certain property which was again mortgaged by the owner to C and D in March 1869. C and D having also obtained a decree on their mortgage brought the property to sale in execution of their decree and purchased it themselves in December 1874.

A not having had the whole of his mortgage debt satisfied instituted a suit on the 13th December 1879 against C and D, and the representatives of B (B having meanwhile died and his representatives not joining in the suit), to enforce his lien against the mortgaged property in the hands of C and D, and to recover the share of the mortgage debt still due to himself alone.

Held, that A did not acquire a better right to proceed against the property by reason of its having come into the hands of C and D, nor did C and D take subject to a greater burden than the mortgagor himself, and that as A had allowed his decree against the mortgagor to be barred by limitation, he had lost all right to proceed against the property by execution were it in the hands of the mortgagor, and consequently he could not be allowed to proceed against it by suit, merely because it was in the hands of third parties.

Quere.—Whether the suit being one for only a portion of the debt due on the mortgage (B's representatives not having joined and claimed the share due to them) was not properly framed, assuming it would lie.

* Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1484 of 1881, against the decree of F. McLaughlin, Esq., Judge of Backergunge, dated the 28th May 1881, affirming the decree of Baboo Bani Madhub Mitter, First Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 24th April 1880.

THE plaintiff in this suit, instituted on the 13th December 1879, sought to have his right to a prior lien on certain properties declared, and to obtain the amount due to him upon a mortgage bond by the sale of those properties.

He alleged in his plaint that one Koylash Nath Bhattacharji borrowed Rs. 1,500 from him and a like sum from Jugul Kishore Gupta, the father of the defendants 4 and 5, on a mortgage-bond, dated the 4th Pous 1273 (18th December 1866); that he and Jugul Kishore Gupta obtained a decree against Koylash Nath Bhattacharji under Act XX of 1866 on the 6th May 1868; that a part of the mortgaged property lying within the jurisdiction of the Dacca Court was sold under it, and that he and his co-mortgagee then brought a suit in the Second Subordinate Judge's Court at Backergunge against the mortgagor to establish their lien over the properties in dispute, and obtained a decree on the 13th September 1873; that subsequently to the mortgage in favour of himself and Jugul Kishore, Koylash Nath Bhattacharji again mortgaged the properties to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the 24th Falgoun 1275 (6th March 1869); that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 instituted a suit on their mortgage against Koylash Nath Bhattacharji, and obtained a decree on the 12th July 1870, and in execution of that decree brought the disputed properties to sale on the 3rd December 1874 and purchased them themselves in the name of defendant No. 3; that in the meantime the plaintiff had brought the properties to sale under his decree, and they were purchased by his wife, Nityakali Dabi, on the 3rd February 1875, but on her trying to get possession she was resisted by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2; that she thereupon instituted a suit to obtain possession, but being unsuccessful in such suit the plaintiff had to return her the purchase money. The plaintiff, therefore, now brought the present suit to have his right to a lien over the disputed properties declared and to obtain the amount of the debt due to him satisfied by the sale of those properties, and he joined the defendants Nos. 4 and 5, who were [653] the representatives of their deceased father, Jugul Kishore, his co-mortgagee.

The defendants pleaded, amongst other things, that the suit would not lie for want of parties, inasmuch as the representatives of the co-mortgagee had not been made plaintiffs, and that the plaintiff had only sued for his share of the mortgage debt; that the plaintiff having once obtained a decree for the recovery of the money due on the mortgage bond, a second suit to recover the money and enforce his lien would not lie; and that the suit was barred by limitation and also under s. 13 of Act X of 1877.

The Court of First Instance held that the plaintiff having once taken a money-decree upon the mortgage, under s. 53 of Act XX of 1866, could not again obtain a decree for the money due on the mortgage; that the debt due to the plaintiff on the mortgage had been changed from a contract-debt into a judgment-debt, and that he could therefore only sue to establish his right to sell the mortgaged properties for the satisfaction of the judgment-debt due to him; and that as the decree which the plaintiff had obtained under Act XX of 1866 was barred by limitation and the debt had ceased to exist, the plaintiff had no cause of action.

The Court also found that the suit being brought to enforce the payment of only a part of the mortgage-debt, it was badly framed and would not lie, and that the plaintiff, instead of suing only for his share of the debt, should have sued for the whole debt, and if his co-mortgagee, or in this case the representatives of his co-mortgagee, declined to join in the suit, he should have made them co-defendants and asked that the Court should make them co-plaintiffs in the suit.

The suit was accordingly dismissed with costs.

The lower Appellate Court, on appeal, confirmed the decree of the Court of First Instance both on the ground that a suit for only a portion of a mortgage-debt would not lie, and also on the ground that the plaintiff had exhausted his remedies in the former suit and consequently could not maintain the present suit.

Against this decree the plaintiff now preferred a special appeal to the High Court.

[634] Baboo Rash Behary Ghose appeared on behalf of the Appellant.

Baboo Durga Mohun Dass for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court (WILSON and MACLEAN, JJ.), was delivered by Wilson, J.—The facts found in this case are as follows:—

The disputed property was mortgaged to the plaintiff and the father of defendants 4 and 5 in Pous 1273 (December 1866). They obtained a summary decree under the Registration Act XX of 1866 in May 1868.

The property was again mortgaged to defendants 1 and 2 in March 1869. They sued on their mortgage-bond, obtained a decree, sold the property in execution, and bought it themselves in December 1874.

The plaintiff now sues the first and second defendants to enforce his share of the mortgage-debt against the property in their hands, joining the fourth and fifth defendants as the representatives of his co-mortgagee.

The District Judge affirming the Munsif has dismissed the suit on two grounds:

First, he has held that the plaintiff's suit is improperly framed, and that he cannot sue for his share of the mortgage-debt. We think it very doubtful whether, on the construction of the mortgage-deed, this is so, whether the transaction was not several rather than joint; but it is not necessary to decide this.

The District Judge has held, secondly, that the plaintiff had exhausted his remedies in the former suit, and cannot sue again. This proposition is, we think, too broadly stated. The law applicable to the matter depends upon the effect of two Full Bench decisions, both of which are binding upon us.
